formed of the existence of this security. It was also adopted by them. The mortgage security was dated the 19th March, 1825. The first payment of interest was made on the 28th September, 1825. On the 26th September, 1825, Mrs. Coomer applied by letter to W. Bromley for half a year's interest, then about to become "due from Mr. Lewis." On the 22nd March, 1826, there was a receipt from Mrs. Trott for a half-year's interest, described as received from W. Bromley on account of Mr. Lewis. On the 27th of September, 1826, Mrs. Coomer wrote to William Bromley, calling his attention to the fact that Lewis was a bankrupt, and that she was anxious about it, and begging that Mr. Whybrow should be communicated with and the mortgage-deeds given to him. There was evidence from Whybrow that some deeds relating to the security, and among others, leases of some houses, were placed in his hands, in accordance with the request of Mrs. Coomer, and, whether he ever had the mortgage-deed or not, he had seen it and commented upon the power it contained. Therefore, as long as Lewis's mortgage remained unrealized the declaration of trust might have served as a mortgage, and might have attached upon it. The parties appeared to have been satisfied with it and adopted it, as far as their acts could do so. Before October 1827, Lewis having become bankrupt, 2,000*l.* part of the money, had been realised, and laid out on securities from other persons, named Bell and Louden. In that state of things, on the 15th October, 1827, William Bromley executed a declaration of trust, which recited that it was agreed at the request and with the approbation of the plaintiffs, that the sum of 3,250*l.* sterling should be invested and laid out upon mortgage of good freehold and long leasehold messuages, and so forth, and that the security should be taken by William Bromley alone, to prevent the difficulty that might otherwise arise in making the plaintiffs' husbands parties to the mortgage-deeds, and reciting the indenture of the 19th of March, 1825, and that the 3,250*l.* thereby secured was the same sum as the sum in question, and that it was lent on that security with the full approbation of the plaintiffs, and that 2,000*l.* had been paid off and invested as before mentioned, and 1,250*l.* still remained on the security of the mortgage of the 19th of March, 1825. Thus there was again a declaration of trust of the remaining part. His Honour had heard nothing to impress his mind with the least suspicion that these investments, from 1825 downwards, were fictitious. In 1828 the securities were realised, and the whole money was paid to William Bromley. There was no suggestion that the money when paid off was received by the partnership or came to their hands. If, therefore, the money having been received by William Bromley, the parties having agreed that it should be under his sole control, it were afterwards lost, it was by a breach of duty on the part of William Bromley, and not of the partnership. After this time, William Bromley made an untrue representation as before, that the money was invested on property at Holloway. The only excuse was, that he had or might have the means of making these representations good. But, however that might be, these parties appeared to have been dealing with him as a trustee entirely in consequence of the arrangement they had come to as to the means of investing this fund. For these reasons, it appeared to his Honour that the case as regarded the liability of solicitors was different from Blair v. Bromley: there, solicitors had money in their hands which they undertook to invest and never did invest; here, there was money to be invested in a particular way, which was so invested and afterwards miscarried, but not from any breach of duty on the part of these persons as solicitors. It was said, again, that this was a trust fund, which, coming to the hands of this firm of solicitors, with notice that it was a trust fund, they could only discharge themselves of their liability in respect of it by shewing that it was duly applied according to the trust. That had nothing to do with their profession as solicitors; if they had been bankers it would have been the same, and it appeared that the answer was that it was applied by the desire and with the consent of the parties who now came to the Court seeking to make the defendant liable for the application of the fund. If the partners were liable to make it good, à fortiori, the plaintiffs by whose wishes they did so apply it, are liable. Two of these were married women, but they were suing together with their husbands, and Mrs. Newcomb, one of these two, was unmarried at the time when the money was first sold out, and therefore these plaintiffs at all events could not come to complain as a breach of trust of the very thing they meant to have done, and the doing of which led to the loss of the fund. His Honour had thought it much more satisfactory not to rest his judgment on the pleadings in the suit: the facts were all before the Court, and, he thought, did not sustain the plaintiffs' case. There were many objections on the pleadings which had not been displayed. His Honour thought it more satisfactory not to rest it on the lapse of time or on the laches of the parties, though those materials would not have been wanting. After the year 1834, they knew quite enough to put them on such inquiry as would have led to the knowledge of the state of the fund, if they had inquired. His Honour, therefore, on the grounds he had stated, did not think he could discharge his duty otherwise than by dismissing the bill with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

Reported by W. H. Benner, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

April 21 and May 8.

Gray v. Gray.

Implied trust—What constitutes a binding trust.

The rule as to what constitutes a binding trust is this—if the founder of the trust has not only distinctly expressed the object and purpose of his act, but has done all that is necessary to complete the design expressed, the Court will hold the trust completely imposed.

Where, therefore, a testatrix gave to executors a sum of stock in trust for H. her sister, and afterwards expressed to one of the executors, who was also one of the trustees, an intention that her sister H. should have a further sum of stock, but she did not alter her will; and after the death of the testatrix the executrix and trustee sold that amount of stock belonging to the testatrix, and invested the produce in her own name, in addition to the first sum of stock given by the will to H. and had declared frequently her intention of carrying out the intention of the testatrix:

Held, that the second sum of stock was duly impressed with the same trusts in favour of H. as the first sum of stock.

Mary Margaret Cave, by her will, dated the 21st November, 1843, after bequeathing to her brother, David Cave, a sum of 2,000*l.* Three per Cent. Consols, part of a larger sum then standing in her name, gave and bequeathed another sum of 2,000*l.* Consols to her said brother, David Cave, and her sister, Cecilia Cave, upon trust during the joint lives of her sister Harriet and of George Gray, her husband, to pay the interest, dividends, and annual or other produce of the said sum of 2,000*l.* Consols as her said sister Harriet should appoint, but not by way of anticipation; in default of appointment for her said sister for her separate use, and after the death of George Gray, the husband, in case his wife should survive him, upon trust, to transfer the said sum of 2,000*l.* Consols to her sister Harriet absolutely to and for her own proper use and benefit, or otherwise as she should direct or appoint; but if her sister Harriet should die in the lifetime of her husband, then the same 2,000*l.* Consols were immediately after the decease of her said sister, in the lifetime of her husband, to sink into and become part and parcel of and enjoyed with the rest and residue of her estate and effects thereinafter given and bequeathed to her said sister, Cecilia Cave; and the 2,000*l.* Consols was, on the decease of Harriet, in the lifetime of her husband, to be paid and transferred according to the events aforesaid and the residuary bequest thereinafter contained. And as to the rest, residue, and remainder of the funded property of the testatrix, and all other her property, estate, and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of whatsoever nature, kind, or quality the same might be, and not thereby otherwise given, bequeathed, or disposed of, but including the said last-mentioned sum of 2,000*l.* Consols, and accrued interest thereon, in the event of the same becoming part of such residue, upon the contingency abovementioned of her sister Harriet dying in the lifetime of her said husband, the testatrix gave and bequeathed the said rest, residue, and remainder, and every part and parcel thereof, respectively unto and to the use of her said sister, Cecilia Cave, to hold the same to her and her executors, administrators, and assigns, absolutely for ever for her and their own use and benefit.

The testatrix died in June 1845, and the will was proved by the residuary legatee, Cecilia Cave, alone, on the 27th June, 1845. David Cave died in the lifetime of the testatrix, whereby the legacy to him became lapsed in the residue. She made no alteration to her will, but she intimated to her sister Cecilia a wish to alter her will, and have the 2,000*l.* Consols intended for her brother David given to her sister, Harriet Gray, in addition to the 2,000*l.* Consols given to her by her will; but the health of the testatrix gradually declining until her decease, she died without having been able to carry her intentions formally into effect.

The bill was filed by the sister, Harriet Gray, stating the above facts, and also that very shortly previous to her sister's decease she exacted from Cecilia Cave a promise which was given to her by Cecilia that the 2,000*l.* Consols given by her will to her brother David should be given by Cecilia (the residuary legatee) to her, the plaintiff, Harriet Gray, in addition to the 2,000*l.* already bequeathed to her, making in all 4,000*l.* Consols.

The question in the cause was, whether the second sum of 2,000*l.* Consols so intended to be given by the testatrix to her sister Harriet, was sufficiently impressed with a trust for the benefit of her said sister.

The only evidence which was given in the cause was by William Woodward, a nephew to the several parties, and who had no interest in the question one way or the other. The effect of this evidence is sufficiently given in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Walker and Terrell, for the plaintiff Harriet Gray, contended that the intentions of the testatrix for the benefit of her sister Harriet, as to the additional sum of 2,000*l.* stock, had been carried out as far as under the circumstances they could have been, and that that additional sum of stock was impressed with the same trusts as the other sum of 2,000*l.* Consols given to her by the will of the testatrix.

Willcock and J. H. Taylor for the residuary legatee, Cecilia Cave.

JUDGMENT.

The Vice-Chancellor.—The question which arises in this case is, whether a sum of 2,000*l.* Reduced Annuities originally 2,000*l.* Consolidated Annuities, is so completely impressed with a trust in favour of Harriet Gray, the sister of the testatrix, and the plaintiff in this cause, that it is capable of being enforced in a Court of Equity. When the cause was argued I confess I had some doubts, but I have, after much consideration, come to the conclusion that a complete trust has been impressed upon this sum of stock. The circumstances are short and simple, although somewhat peculiar. There were there sisters—Mary Margaret Cave, the testatrix; the plaintiff, Harriet Gray, the wife of a Mr. Gray; and the defendant, Cecilia Cave, who was one of the executors and residuary legatee of the testatrix. They had a brother, David Cave. The testatrix was possessed of considerable property, and it principally consisted of investments in the Three per Cent. Consols. By her will, of the 21st November, 1843, she gave 2,000*l.* Three per Cent. Consols, part of her stock standing in her name, to her brother David Cave absolutely. A similar sum was also given to David Cave and Cecilia Cave, as trustees for the benefit of Harriet, the plaintiff, and the trusts were during the joint lives of her and her husband, to her for her separate use,—if she survived him, then the stock was to be for her own absolute use; if she died in his lifetime it was to fall into the general residuary personal estate. This residue she gave to her sister Cecilia, so that there was a legacy of 2,000*l.* Consols for the absolute benefit of David, and 2,000*l.* for the benefit of the sister Mrs. Gray, on such trusts that if she should die in the lifetime of her husband she would not have the absolute benefit. David, one of the trustees of the 2,000*l.* given for the benefit of Mrs. Gray, died in the lifetime of the testatrix. There is no doubt that the testatrix, during her life, expressed an intention to the residuary legatee, Cecilia, to give the 2,000*l.* Consols, so originally intended for her brother David, for the benefit of Mrs. Gray, the plaintiff, and it is also clear upon the evidence that the defendant Cecilia represented that such was the desire of the testatrix. After the death of the testatrix, the will was proved by Cecilia Cave alone, on the 27th June, 1845. On the 29th July, the defendant Cecilia Cave, the surviving executrix and residuary legatee, accompanied by her sister Harriet Gray, the plaintiff, and a nephew, a Mr. Woodward, went to the bank, and with the assistance of Mr. Chant, a stock-broker, for the purpose of executing a transfer of the 2,000*l.* stock given for the benefit of Mrs. Gray. Mr. Chant, it would appear, suggested that as the testatrix had a considerable sum in Consols, which would have to be transferred to the executrix Cecilia Cave, if the 2,000*l.* were transferred into the name of Cecilia Cave, as trustee for Mrs. Gray, there would be nothing to distinguish that from the rest of the stock, and that it would be better in order to distinguish the stock held in trust for Mrs. Gray, that the 2,000*l.* Consols should be converted into Three per Cent. Reduced. This suggestion was adopted by Cecilia Cave, and the stock bequeathed for Mrs. Gray was sold out, and with the proceeds she bought 2,000*l.* Reduced, which were transferred into her name to ensure the 2,000*l.* stock given for the benefit of Mrs. Gray. Now there is no doubt that the sum of 2,000*l.* Reduced Annuities bought and transferred on the 29th July into the name of Cecilia Cave was a complete appropriation of the stock to satisfy the legacy to Mrs. Gray, for it was transferred into her name as the sole surviving trustee. If the brother, David Cave, had been living, it must have been transferred into their joint names; there is no doubt, then, that the stock was duly defined and appropriated as Mrs. Gray's legacy. On the occa-

and if you do not know he has not authority you are perfectly safe; he shall be deemed the owner of the property, and you may deal with him as such, provided you are acting bonâ fide; though you know he is the agent, you may deal with him as owner. Then comes this proviso in sect. 3, upon which everything turns:—"Provided always, and be it enacted, that this Act and every matter and thing contained in it shall be deemed and construed to give validity to such contracts and agreements only, and to protect only such loans, advances, and exchanges as shall be made bonâ fide and without notice, that the agent making such contracts or agreements as aforesaid, has not authority to make the same, or is acting malâ fide in respect thereof against the owner of such goods and merchandise; and nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to or protect any lien or pledge for or in respect of any antecedent debt owing from any agent to any person with or to whom such lien or pledge shall be given, nor to authorise any agent intrusted as aforesaid in deviating from any express orders or authority received from the owner, but that for the purpose and to the intent of protecting all such bonâ-fide loans, advances, and exchanges as aforesaid (though made with notice of such agent not being the owner, but without any notice of the agent acting without authority), and to no further or other intent or purpose, such contract or agreement as aforesaid shall be binding on the owner, and all other persons interested in such goods." You may, therefore, by this Act, treat any agent, whom you know to be so, as owner, in accepting any pledge of goods from him which you know to have been deposited with or transmitted to him as agent, if you are acting bonâ fide, and have not notice that he is making the contract, either malâ fide or beyond his authority. It is assumed it will be in the ordinary course of business. There is a different provision as regards the misdemeanor; the misdemeanor still continues, but with a very important alteration, to which I shall presently refer. Nothing, then, can be plainer than the Act of Parliament, but the question which must arise is, what is the notice which is to bind the person accepting the pledge? Lord Tenterden, in Evans v. Truman, 3 Mood. and R. 10, referring to the statute 6 Geo. 4, lays it down very generally. He says, "The expression of the statute is, that a party to be entitled to its protection must not have notice by the documents or otherwise that the pledger was not the actual and bonâ fide owner of the goods pledged. A person may have knowledge of a fact either by direct communication or by being aware of circumstances which must lead a reasonable man applying his mind to them and judging from them to the conclusion that the fact is so; knowledge acquired in either of these ways is enough, I think, to exclude a party from the benefit of the provisions of this statute; slight suspicion, I think, will not." Now that is laid down, I confess, a little too much at large; because "slight suspicion" is out of the question in this Act. I do not say that some circumstances may not be equivalent to an actual notice, because some may be stronger than any words can express. Lord Tenterden says "slight suspicion will not affect it." I should say that no suspicion will affect it. This was an Act intended to enable general dealings between man and man in the city of London, and it would never do to say you may deal with a man who is an agent, and who, as regards you, is considered as the owner, provided you will not notice he goes beyond his authority, and are acting bonâ fide; if there is not any malâ fides there is an end of the case. It is impossible to say that a mere suspicion—slight suspicion of notice—can take from you the protection with which you are surrounded by this Act; I think, therefore, that that is put not so strongly as it should be in favour of the plaintiff. Now in this case the goods were sent by the plaintiff to Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. for sale; and it was argued, and properly argued, that by the common law the power of transmission for sale would not authorise a pledge: that was the very thing intended to be struck out by the Act; unless you can bring it within the proviso, it was the very thing intended to be remedied. Mr. Navulshaw almost immediately drew bills upon Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. as against his consignment for a sum exceeding by 400*l.* what the pearls were really worth. There is no doubt that that act, under the old law, would have given the pledgee, no right, even if he had paid the bills, to have retained the goods; yet, under the clause to which I have just referred, it is impossible not to see that the very act of drawing rendered a pledge almost necessary, unless you are to suppose that the Liverpool house could do without it: you have no right to look at the insolvency, that must be considered a matter of accident or misfortune; it bears very hard on Mr. Navulshaw, but it has nothing to do with the law of the case. In drawing, therefore, for that great amount, he did give a colour to the very right to pledge in order to meet those very bills; and he drove the house, no doubt, to the necessity of pledging in order to obtain funds to meet them. If you are dealing with an agent, you must take for granted that he has a power to sell in every case. The Act says, it has become a usual course of business to pledge;—not that it was legal; on the contrary, it says it was not legal;—but it has become the usual course of business, and it means to give legal effect to that usual course of business. When, therefore, you are dealing for pledge with an agent who has a consignment, the knowledge that he has the power to sell appears to me to amount to nothing, for every agent must be supposed to have a power to sell who has the disposition of goods. What were these pearls sent over to the plaintiff for? Not that he was to cast them into the Mersey, but to dispose of them. He has then the power of sale; and having such a power, this Act of Parliament means to give him the power of pledging in the clearest and strongest terms. Assuming even that Messrs. Collett and Co. knew (the way in which they knew is another question), by express intimation, and before they accepted the bills, and took the pledge, that Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. had a power of sale only, even that would not alter the right; because if they had not been informed of it, they would have been considered to have known it, inasmuch as they were dealing with an agent. If you are dealing with an agent who is in possession of property, either he has the right to pledge, when cadet questio, or he must have the right to sell, because he must have it as an object of merchandise to somebody. But it wants something more than not merely the right positively to sell; it wants a prohibition from the owner not to pledge. If when Mr. Navulshaw had sent over these goods, he had said, "I send these goods to you for sale, but I direct you not to pledge them: I will not authorise you to pledge them; I direct only a sale;" if that had been communicated to Messrs. Collett and Co. I am perfectly clear that in that case they could not safely have advanced their money by way of pledge; because although they might have known that the Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. were only agents, yet they would have had notice that they were making a contract for which they not only had no authority, but from the making of which they were expressly prohibited. In any other view I do not see where the safety of the Act lies. When an agent is in possession of goods, and he is affecting to dispose of them by pledge, it must be assumed that he has the power, at least, of sale, and it must not be assumed that he has not the power to pledge; of that you are not bound under the Act to inquire. In order, therefore, to endanger you in taking a pledge, it would be necessary that you should know he was prohibited from pledging. Now, if we are to speak of probabilities in dealings in a great city like this, where there are ten thousand of these transactions occurring constantly, what presumption can be more reasonable than this,—if a man is in possession of goods, like these, of value, and is known to possess them as agent, that he should come to your house (which are the circumstances of this case), and say, "We have received these pearls from India" (and I will suppose he had received them for sale), "and we desire you to have them valued with a view to a sale." Now the actual deposit, you will observe, was in clear furtherance of the directions of the plaintiff himself. It was not supposed that Messrs. Brownrigg and Co themselves were going to sell these pearls; and as it must be supposed that they were to be sold in London, it was only in furtherance, and not in disobedience, of the instructions or a breach of their authority. They were accordingly valued, and at 2,050*l.* Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. the consignees, go to Messrs. Collett and Co. who had had these goods then for nearly a month, and ask for an advance. These being fancy articles and the times bad, they would not meet with a ready or good sale; they therefore ask for an advance—2,000*l.* Now that very application was as good a security as a man could have under this Act of the whole being bonâ fide. This transaction was in the ordinary course of business. There was nothing to lead to suspicion; although Messrs. Collett and Co. did not know it, Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. had accepted bills to the amount of 2,400*l.* in favour of Mr. Navulshaw, for which, of course, they would have held and been entitled to hold the pearls as a security. I consider, therefore, the very application for the loan as an assurance on the part of Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. that they had the right to pledge; and I think, therefore, that in that view the Messrs. Collett had a right to deal with them as if they were the owners of the property; dealing, too, as they were (for the whole turns upon that), with perfect bonâ fide. Now, independently of that, the only admission as to knowledge or notice is that read from the answer of Jacob Collett, in these words: "They believe that shortly before the pearls arrived in England, Mr. Brownrigg verbally informed defendant's firm that they expected to receive from India parcels of pearls for sale." Now, in construing this Act of Parliament, it would be a very strong thing to say, that that general statement before the pearls arrived should be carried down to bring to those parties knowledge that this was the identical parcel of pearls which were to be sent for sale; it does not say that they were sent for sale and for no other purpose; and again, what was there to have prevented Mr. Navulshaw when he was drawing those 2,400*l.* worth of bills (of which Messrs. Collett and Co. had no notice, but which must have been a large proportion even in his view of the value of these pearls), from saying, "I shall not object to your pledging them for that sum in case you find it inconvenient to make the advance?" Mr. Navulshaw did not desire that the goods should be sold at once, but he was desirous of having not so much a ready as a beneficial sale. I think, therefore, even taking them to have full knowledge that the goods were transmitted for sale, that there is nothing to lead them to see that there might not have been subsequently an authority to pledge. Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. took upon themselves the disposition of the property in a bonâ fide transaction; in a transaction in the ordinary course of business, and I am of opinion that this cannot be considered a case in which a notice to those gentlemen could be deemed to be a notice to Messrs. Collett and Co. Now, in regard to the advances, and the renewal of the bills that have been drawn, both Acts of Parliament provide that an agent exceeding his authority by pledging, is guilty of a misdemeanor; and in the Act of the 6 Geo. 4, where it is called a misdemeanor to do so, it is provided expressly, "that the acceptance of bills of exchange by such person or persons drawn by or on account of such principal or principals, shall not be considered as constituting any part of such debt so due and owing from such principal or principals within the true intent and meaning of this Act, so as to excuse the consequence of such a deposit or pledge, unless such bills shall be paid when the same respectively shall become due." If an agent had accepted bills in favour of the owner, he could not have escaped the penalty of the misdemeanor, unless he paid them. Now, the later Act of Parliament took a very different form, for it says expressly, that "no such agent shall be liable to any prosecution for depositing goods," and so on, "in case the same shall not be made a security for or subject to the payment of any greater sum of money than the amount which, at the time of such consignment, deposit, transfer, or delivery, was justly due and owing to such agent from his principal, together with the amount of any bills of exchange drawn by or on account of such principal, and accepted by such agent." So that there you are allowed to bring into the amount, in order to save you from punishment, any bills of exchange drawn by or on account of such principal, and accepted by an agent; not clogging it with the condition that the bills are actually paid by the agent; so that the drawing of bills, as in this case by Messrs. Brownrigg and Co. amounting to more than the value of the goods, would yet save them from being indicted for a misdemeanor. That, I think, puts an end to the case as regards the renewal of the bill. I am very clear, that the second bill was merely in substance a continuance of the original transaction, which was one loan, an advance of 2,000*l.* on this pledge: of this, 320*l.* were paid off by means of the sale of part of the pearls. The fact of a new bill being drawn, and discounted when the 320*l.* were paid off, was a matter of form, and not of substance; there was nothing to alter the original advance. A portion of the pearls had been sold, and that portion went in liquidation of the advance. Nothing could be more fair or more right, and that of itself shews that it was part of the original transaction; for the pearls which were sold went in part liquidation of the sum advanced, and the security was not for any new, but for the balance of the old sum; I certainly am of opinion that that was a transaction covered by the original transaction. I see no necessity for this bill; this is, no doubt, a single transaction, and the party might, if he had been entitled, have recovered upon that transaction, in an action, without coming here. The foundation of coming here is the allegation of fraud, and contrivance, and malice, and so on; all that having entirely failed, I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

SCRIVENER v. SMITH.

Will—Construction.

A testator, by a codicil, gave a life interest in a fund to his wife, and at her death one-half of the fund to his son, and the other to his daughters, and at their deaths to their respective children in equal shares. At the date of the codicil both of the daughters had children, but the son was unmarried:

Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that the son took his moiety of the fund absolutely.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Vice-Chancellor Lord Cranworth on the construction of a codicil to the will of the late Major-general Fast.

The clause upon which the question arose was in these words: "In consequence of the demise of my eldest daughter Mary Ann, I now give the interest of my property in the Government Funds of Calcutta to my wife, Ann Fast, for her life; at her death, one-half of the said property I give to my son George Mainwaring Fast, the remaining half to be equally divided between my two daughters, Louisa Catherine, the wife of Captain Howarth, &c. and Charlotte Elizabeth Rhods, widow of the late Lieutenant Francis Scrivener, and at their deaths such shares to be equally divided among their children respectively. The executors and trustees to be the same as enumerated in my will, which I signed on the 19th of February, 1849." At the date of the codicil each of the daughters had children: The son was unmarried. The question was, whether the son took his share of the fund absolutely, or for a life interest only.

The Vice-Chancellor held that the bequest to the son and daughters being an entire clause, the restriction had the effect of limiting the interest of the son as well as of the daughters to a life estate.

From that decision the son appealed.

Rolt and Daniel appeared for the appellant.

Bethell, Green, and Horsey for the serveral parties who supported the decree of the Vice-Chancellor.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, at the conclusion of the argument, said, that although the question was not free from doubt, he must reverse the order of the Court below. The testator had given a life estate to his wife in the fund in question, and therefore he knew how to create such an interest when he wished it. He could only take the will of the testator into account for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the testator at the date of the codicil. The half given to the daughters was directed after their deaths to go to their children, and his lordship was not at all certain as to the channel in which the share of the son would go were his interest to be restricted to a life estate. The safer construction would be to declare that the son took his moiety of the fund absolutely; but in order to give full weight to the opinion of the learned Vice-Chancellor, his lordship took until the following morning to consider the question, when his lordship confirmed his opinion.

Appeal allowed; the costs to come out of the fund.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIS TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

IN BANKRUPTCY.

March 10 and July 24.

Ex parte JOHN BOWER, re JOHN BOWERS, against whom a petition in bankruptcy has been filed.

Trader debtor — Summons—Particulars of demand.

A fruit-merchant served particulars of demand on a grocer, together with a summons, under the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, and the word "goods" was held to communicate a reasonably sufficient degree of information to the alleged debtor as to the particulars of the demand or articles furnished, so as to prevent an adjudication from being annulled on the ground of uncertainty in the particulars.

The certainty of particulars depends in a great measure upon the relative situation of the alleged debtor and creditor. Particulars are not vitiated legally because they contain one claim which is not sustainable, either because the debt claimed is not due at all, or because it was not actually due at the time of the demand, whatever effect such an error ought to have in the exercise of the discretion of the Court upon an application not grantable ex debito justitiæ.

In this case several objections were taken to the validity of an adjudication of bankruptcy, and amongst other grounds, that the particulars of demand served by the petitioning creditor upon the bankrupt did not describe the goods supplied with sufficient certainty according to the exigencies of the 22nd Order of November 12, 1842.

The particulars of the demand were as follow:—

"The Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849.

"Particulars of demand, and notice requiring payment.

"To John Bowers, of the city of Worcester, in the county of Worcester, grocer, dealer, and chapman.

"The following are the particulars of the demand of the undersigned John Bower, of No. 8, Botolph-lane, in the city of London, fruit-merchant, against you, the said John Bowers, amounting to the sum of sixty-six pounds, nine shillings, and one penny.

"Dated this second day of December, in the year of our Lord 1851.

(Signed) "JOHN BOWER,

"Carrying on business at No. 8, Botolph-lane, in the city of London."

The debtor was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 2nd of December, 1851; the adjudication was, however, disputed, and after several adjournments the matter was heard before the commissioner on the 2nd of February, 1852, who ordered that the adjudication of bankruptcy made against John Bowers should be reversed, but upon different grounds to those upon which their lordships' judgment is given.

It appeared that when the trader attended to shew cause against the adjudication, he was examined, and deposed that he purchased the goods from the petitioning creditor at two months' credit, and received an invoice which had at the top of it the words "Cash in two months;" and that he had given the petitioning creditor a bill, which he had received from a customer, for 29*l.* 17*s.* and paid the 7*l.* balance, and that two months' credit had not expired when the notice of demand was served upon him. Against the decision of the commissioner, reversing the adjudication, the petitioning creditor now appealed.

Sir W. P. Wood and Baggallay, for the petitioning creditor, proceeded to argue against the grounds upon which the commissioner's judgment proceeded, when their lordships intimated their wish, before hearing any further the argument in support of the appeal, to hear the counsel for the respondent.

Swanston, for the respondent, thereupon took the objection that the particulars of demand were not reasonably certain, so as to shew what were the items of the account, in respect of which the alleged debt was claimed, and so as to enable him (if it was in his power), to disprove that such items were really owing. He then cited and commented on Ex parte Greenstock, 1 De Gex, 230. [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Has the bankrupt made an affidavit that he was misled by the particulars, or prevented from setting up any defence to any part of the demand? Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—Can any general rule be laid down à priori, applicable to every case? Or may not particulars which would give sufficient information to one debtor be insufficient as against another? Take, for instance, the debtor himself and his executor. May not a bill be sufficient for one which would not give full information enough to the other? The words "convenient certainty" must (as it seems) be construed with reference to the information already possessed by the person addressed.] That may be so; but in this case the demand is utterly vague, general, and indefinite; the alleged debtor has no means whatever of setting up any defence, and it is difficult to believe that these particulars are framed with that reasonable and convenient certainty required by the orders. Another objection taken was, that the term of credit had not expired, so that when the appellant made an affidavit of a debt being due to him, there was in reality nothing due in this respect; therefore the summons was irregular. Another objection was, that the 28th of the rules made by the commissioners under the Act required that the residence of the attorney should be indorsed upon the summons, whereas in this case his place of business only was given.

Sir W. P. Wood and Baggallay, for the petitioning creditor, were not further called upon by the Court.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said, that as observations had been made during the argument upon Ex parte Greenstock, it might not be out of place to observe, that whether all the reasons given for the judgment in that case were sustainable or not, the conclusion appeared to have been correct, namely, that it would have been better that there should not have been an adjudication upon the materials which there existed. The amount of the demand was 132*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* Now it was requisite, with reference to what had been sworn upon the affidavit, that the whole of this should appear to be due for goods sold and delivered. But upon the amount set out in the particulars of demand, as much as 122*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* of the total amount was due for bills returned, and interest upon those bills, which (however the truth might have been) were not shewn upon the particulars of demand to have been given for goods sold and delivered. Therefore, out of 132*l.* 15*s.* the particulars were, as to so large a portion as 122*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.* plainly defective with reference to the affidavit. With regard to the small remaining portion of the debt, being 10*l.* 5*s.* 8*d.* only, it was doubtful whether the dates were sufficiently set forth. His lordship agreed that the date 1845 was set at the head of the particulars; but when the separate items were looked at, if all of them belonged to the year 1845, they were not chronologically arranged, and that gave rise to a doubt as to what debts were meant. There were items in September and October, and then one in August. His lordship said he was not persuaded that it was a necessary inference from an account so prepared, that the month of August, 1845, so placed below and separated from September and October, was the month meant. If that were so, the adjudication would on that ground have been insufficiently supported. But if it could have been legally supported, still this jurisdiction was not bound to suffer every adjudication which might be legally valid to remain; and he was of opinion that the Court there rightly exercised its jurisdiction in declining to give effect to the proceeding relied upon as the foundation of an act of bankruptcy. All the reasons there assigned for the decision might possibly not be sustainable; upon that point he gave no opinion. But he adhered to the conclusion. In the present case, several objections had been made to the proceedings relied upon as the foundation of an act of bankruptcy. The most serious objection appeared to be that founded on the form of the particulars of demand, which was a point on which the decision of the commissioner did not proceed, or was not expressed to proceed. It appeared to his lordship that a set of particulars of demand sent out by a trader to one individual might be sufficient, which would have been insufficient if sent to another, although the demand were the same. The question in each case must be whether the particulars communicate a reasonably sufficient degree of information to the alleged debtor as to the demand. Now, in Ex parte Greenstock, the information might or might not have been sufficient. But in this case, considering what goods had been furnished, considering the stations in life of the alleged debtor and creditor, and the words of the particulars of demand, his impression was that they were sufficient in the particular circumstances of this case. And he was of opinion that the particulars were not vitiated legally because they contained one claim which was not sustainable, either because the debt claimed was not due at all, or because it was not actually due at the time of the demand, whatever effect such an error ought to have in the exercise of the discretion of the Court upon an application not made ex debito justitiæ. His lordship said that this was the result he had arrived at upon the legal points in the case, on which the inclination of his opinion was against the objection made to the adjudication. The commissioner, however, was here executing a jurisdiction given or conferred by the 104th section of the recent Act of Parliament, which provides thus. [His lordship read it.] Now suppose this case to arise (which occurred frequently in former states of the bankrupt laws), that the validity of the bankruptcy being in question before a Court having jurisdiction to annul it, the legal validity was doubtful. In such a case, under the former law, the Court having this jurisdiction was not in the habit of annulling, unless there were some circumstances to induce the Court so to exercise its discretion beyond the legal doubt. If there were no such circumstances, the legal doubt was not sufficient ground for annulling, for this reason, that the mischief arising from the continuance of the bankruptcy, if unsupported by legal requisites, was remediable; whereas, that arising from annulling the proceedings, if it was valid, was irremediable. His lordship said he considered that the Court was at least in the position which he had described, in the present case. There was an arguable objection against the validity of the adjudication in point of law. But he was not only not satisfied that the objection was sustainable, but the inclination of his opinion was against its sufficiency. Therefore, as he apprehended, it was not the duty of the Court to annul the adjudication, but the proper course was to leave the bankrupt to question the adjudication as he might think fit, giving him every facility to proceed at law for that purpose. Here every consideration as to the consequences of annulling the bankruptcy seemed to be against taking that step. The result was that, in his opinion, so far as that objection was concerned, the adjudication must stand unreversed, and if so, with reference to the objection, must those with reference to others which had been taken, and which were much less deserving of attention.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH concurred.

The order was, that the order of reversal of the 2nd of February should be reversed, and that the appellant should be at liberty, within three weeks from the date of the drawing up of the order of their lordships, to bring an action to try the validity of the adjudication, and that the advertisement should be stayed in the meantime.

The appellant afterwards obtained an extension of the term for bringing an action on the ground of special circumstances relative to a change of his solicitor.

On the 1st of May, the commissioner made an order adjudging the appellant a bankrupt under the arrangement clauses of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act. The appellant presented a petition appealing from this order, and also seeking a further extension of time.

Saturday, July 24.—On this day the last-mentioned petition came on to be heard, and was ordered to stand over with the other petition till further order, except that the stay upon the advertisement was to be removed.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Wednesday, March 3.

Ex parte ROBERT HESLOP, re JAMES ATKINSON, a Bankrupt.

Reputed ownership of goods—Retrospective order to sell goods already sold.

A person having a bill of sale of goods to secure a debt due to him as mortgagee, allowed the goods to remain in the order and disposition of the mortgagor until the latter committed an act of bankruptcy, but took possession before any petition of adjudication was filed. The messenger, on the mortgagor being found bankrupt, took the goods out of the mortgagee's possession and sold them. The latter thereupon brought an action of trover and recovered, on the ground that, under the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, the assignees had no power to sell without an express order of the commissioner. The assignees applied to the commissioner, who made an order retrospectively confirming the sale, and resting as a fact that the goods were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy, with the permission of the true owner:

Held, that the mortgagee was not entitled to have the order discharged on appeal, as being invalid on the face of it; and on the appellant declining to enter into the question of notice of the act of bankruptcy when he took possession, his appeal was dismissed with costs.

Held, also, that the time of the commissioner signing and delivering out an order, and not the time of his pronouncing it, is its proper date, from which the time within which appeals are allowed by the Act begins to run.

This was an appeal from an order made by Mr. Commissioner Ellison, under the following circumstances:—

The bankrupt, up to the time of his bankruptcy, was an innkeeper at Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and he committed the act of bankruptcy by departing from home on the 30th of August, 1850. On the 9th of September, 1850, the petition for adjudication was filed, and he was on the same day adjudged a bankrupt, and official and creditors' assignees were appointed.

The bankrupt, four years before his bankruptcy, gave the appellant a bill of sale of his property, furniture, and stock in trade, as a security for a debt due to him for wine and spirits. The appellant, however, permitted the bankrupt to retain possession as apparent owner of the goods. The appellant afterwards took possession of them on the 4th of September under his mortgage security, but before effecting a sale was displaced by the messenger under the adjudication. The assignees then sold the goods in the house, and placed the proceeds to the credit of the bankrupt's estate.

The appellant, thereupon, brought an action of trover against the assignees, which was tried before Cresswell, J. at Newcastle, at the Spring Assizes for the year 1851, when the jury found that the goods in question were in the reputed ownership of the bankrupt at the time of his bankruptcy, and found a verdict for the assignees. An objection was, however, taken by the appellant's counsel, that under the "Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849," sec. 125, the assignees could not, without an order of the commissioner, take property in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, and that it did not vest in them nor could they deal with it except by means of such an order. The point was reserved, and after an argument before the full Court of Ex. on a motion for a new trial, Parke, B. in July 1851, delivered the judgment of the Court (see Heslop v. Baker, 6 Ex. 740, Platt B. dissentiente), which in effect decided that there ought to have been an order under the 125th section for the sale and disposal of the goods by the assignees before the property therein could pass, and a new trial was accordingly granted, but which has not yet been had.

The assignees thereupon made an application to the commissioner for an order for the sale of the goods in question, for the purpose of giving validity to the sale already made, by its retrospective effect. The commissioner made an order, which was dated the 9th of December, 1851, whereby upon consideration of the matters, he found and adjudged that the bankrupt committed an act of bankruptcy, and became bankrupt on the 30th of August, 1850, and that, at the time when he so became bankrupt, he had, by the consent and permission of the appellant, who then and still claimed to be the true owner thereof, in his (the bankrupt's) possession, order, and disposition, the goods and chattels in the order particularly mentioned and set forth, whereof he the said bankrupt was reputed owner, and he thereby, according to the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849, and in exercise of the power thereby in that behalf given, ordered the goods and chattels which the bankrupt at the time when he became bankrupt, by the consent and permission of the petitioner, as owner thereof, had in his, the bankrupt's, possession, order, or disposition, or whereof he the bankrupt was reputed owner as aforesaid, to be sold and disposed of by Thomas Baker, John Hall, and Richard Attree Johnson, the assignees, for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt under the bankruptcy: and also so far as the Court could and lawfully might, but not further or otherwise, the Court thereby ordered and directed that the goods and chattels thereinbefore specified, should be vested in Thomas Baker, John Hall, and Richard Attree Johnson, as such assignees as aforesaid; and the Court thereby ratified and confirmed all acts theretofore done by the assignees in and about the seizure, sale, and disposition of the goods and chattels thereinbefore specified, so far as such seizure, sale, and disposition had been well and properly conducted, and ordered and directed that the proceeds of such goods and chattels, so sold and disposed of, should be held and applied by the assignees for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt under the bankruptcy.

The commissioner delayed signing the order, dated the 9th of December, till the 28th of January following, in order to give time to appeal against it. The appellant, however, conceiving that the date of the order would, if unexplained, defeat the appeal, got the commissioner to make another order, dated the 13th of February, 1852, reciting, among other things, that on the 9th of December, 1851, when the commissioner gave his judgment, he directed that his order should be drawn up, and considering that it would necessarily occupy a considerable time to reduce the same into writing, he further directed that in order to give time to the appellant to appeal against his order, if he should be advised so to do, the date of the order should be considered to be the day when the order of the 9th of December should be signed and delivered to the appellant's solicitor, and reciting that his order was not drawn up and signed and delivered to the petitioner's solicitors until the 28th of January, 1852, the Commissioner, upon the application of the appellant's agent, so far as he could and lawfully might, did thereby order and direct that, for the purpose of enabling the appellant to present such petition of appeal, the date of the former order should be deemed and taken to be the 28th of January, 1852.

Swanston and Bichner, in support of the appeal from the order dated the 9th of December.

Bacon and Tripp, for the respondents, took the objection that the appeal was too late, and that the date of the order must be taken to be the correct date. They moreover contended that the commissioner had no jurisdiction to prolong the period for appealing beyond the time fixed by the Act of Parliament, by delaying the signature of his judgment.

Their lordships, however, held, that the day on which the order was signed by the commissioner must be considered to be its proper date.

Swanston and Bichner, for the appellant, contended that as the Court of Ex. had decided that the act of the assignees, in selling the goods belonging to the appellant under his bill of sale, was wrongful; the Court of Bankruptcy could not, by a subsequent order, give the sale a retrospective validity. That the appellant was entitled to have the order moved out of his way, as being bad upon the face of it. That the finding of the jury and the state of facts appearing upon the order were insufficient to make out a title in the respondents, independently of the point which was decided against them by the Court of Ex. That if the true owner, without notice of the act of bankruptcy, takes possession of his goods before the filing of a petition for adjudication, he could be deprived of them by the operation of the reputed ownership clause of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 133; and Ex parte Styan, 2 M. D. & D. 219; Pariente v. Pennell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 517; and Young v. Hope, 2 Ex. 105, decided upon 2 & 3 Vict. c. 22, were cited and commented upon. [Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE asked whether the appellant wished the case to be argued upon the questions of notice of the Act of Bankruptcy, and the time when possession was taken.] They declined going into those questions, and desired the Court to decide as to the validity of the order with reference to the facts stated upon the face of it.

Their LORDSHIPS, without calling on the counsel for the respondents, were clearly of opinion that the facts appearing on the face of the order did not invalidate it, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, June 4.

Ex parte THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER.

Railway company—Compensation—Episcopal lease—Reversion.

Lands held of a see were leased. The bishop sold his reversion to a railway company. The lands were renewable on the dropping in of lives, and, as to some, at stated intervals. The Court held that the bishop of the see for the time being was not entitled to the dividends of the compensation money, but that they must be accumulated, the bishop to have liberty to apply as the leases would, by dropping of lives or otherwise, become renewable, to have the deficiency of his fine paid out of the fund.

This was a petition presented by the Bishop of Winchester, praying that the sum of 1,034*l.* 10s. cash, might be invested in Three per Cents. and the dividends might, from time to time, be paid to him or his successors. The facts were as follow:—Under the provisions of the Act incorporating the London and South-Western Railway, and the Extension Act, 1846, with which the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, were incorporated, the company had purchased for the sum of 1,034*l.* 10s. the reversionary estate of the bishop in certain lands, which were, together with other hereditaments, demised by a lease, dated 21st June, 1831, to John Portal for three lives, at the yearly rent of 20*l.*; and also the reversionary interest of the bishop in certain other lands, demised by a lease, dated 8th April, 1844, to William Portal for twenty-one years, at a rent of 9*l.* 6s. 8d. The lands were all belonging to the see. The purchase money had been paid into the bank, and the bishop had duly conveyed his estate in the lands in question to the company, but the cash had never been invested. The whole lands comprised in the indenture of 21st June, 1831, amounted to about 1,100 acres, and the lease was renewable by custom. The fine paid in 1831 was 2,800*l.* for adding two new lives. The whole lands comprised in the lease of 8th April, 1844, amounted to 937 acres; this lease was also renewable by custom at the end of every four years, but the lease had not been renewed until October 1851, when a fine of 1,140*l.* had been paid for renewal. This lease was not renewable till October 1855. The compensation money agreed upon of 1,034*l.* 10s. was composed of 500*l.* as the purchase money, and 534*l.* 10s. for consequential loss and damage.

Speed, for the petition, stated that unless the dividends of the money, when invested, were directed to be paid to the bishop and his successors, they would receive no compensation for the loss of fines on the dropping in of lives or other rights on renewal.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am of opinion that until one of the leases becomes renewable, the bishop is not entitled to anything. I shall, therefore, make an order for the investment of the money in Consols, and direct that the dividends be accumulated. When any lease becomes renewable, the petitioner will have liberty to apply to have the deficiency of his fine paid out of the fund. The costs of this application will be paid by the company in the usual way.

BENNETT v. SMITH.

Specific performance—Vendor and purchaser—Bidding—Evidence—Jurisdiction of the Court for a claim for 50l.

B. bid for a lot at an auction, and signed the contract, but refused to complete, although he had signed an order for payment of the money. A. filed a claim for specific performance, and B. was examined. His answer and his deposition were wholly contradictory, and the Court decreed specific performance, with costs. The discretion of the Court to entertain a claim is judicially discretionary, and a claim for 50l. is not too small for the jurisdiction of the Court.

This was a claim for specific performance of an agreement for the purchase of lot 3 at a public sale by auction, and the question raised for the decision of the Court was whether the defendant had purchased or bought in, as agent for the vendor or as a purchaser on his own account. The defendant signed the agreement for the purchase in his own name, and unconditionally. Great difficulty was caused in the conduct of the case by the very material discrepancy of the evidence as to the minute circumstances under which the signature to the agreement was made. The case made by the defendant in his answer was that he went into the auction-room out of curiosity, without any intention of buying. That after lot 2 had been bid for up to 200*l.* a man named Fream came into the room, and the plaintiff then whispered to him, the defendant, that Fream was a buyer, and asked to have some few words of conversation with him, the defendant, in private; that they went accordingly into the lobby, and the plaintiff then asked him to bid for lot 2, saying, he did not wish it to go under 220*l.* That they then returned, and defendant bid twice accordingly, and the lot was purchased by Fream at 225*l.* That lot 3 was then put up; but that for a short time there was no bidding; that the plaintiff then said to him in a whisper, "Put it in at something;" to which he, the defendant, replied, that he knew nothing about the property, and the plaintiff then said,

"Put it in," or "Set it going at 50*l.*;" and said that he had spent considerable sums of money upon it in repairs. That the auctioneer, hearing this whispered conversation, stated that the two cottages in this lot were let at 7*l.* or 8*l.* per annum, which was not dissented from by the plaintiff. That the defendant, under these circumstances, made a first bidding of 50*l.* upon which no advance was ever made, and the lot was knocked down to him; that he was then asked to sign the agreement, and signed accordingly; "and thought that, after the representations of the auctioneer and the plaintiff, he could do himself no harm, and that it was better to sign than to avow publicly the circumstances under which he had bid." This was the case on the answer; but the defendant was also examined as a witness, and in his depositions he said that he bid solely to oblige the plaintiff, and without the slightest notion of purchasing, being wholly ignorant of the state of the property; and that when the memorandum of agreement was placed before him to be signed, he withdrew from signing it, and said he had nothing to do with purchasing the property on his own account. There was, however, nothing in the answer as to this. The defendant then in his deposition proceeded to say, that the plaintiff urged him to sign, and said he would make it all right to him. There was in the answer nothing as to this; and it was relied on by the plaintiff not to be true, because the defendant was proved not only to have signed the contract, but to have signed an order on his attorney to pay the deposit on the purchase-money.

Russell and Terrell, for the plaintiff, argued that, as the defendant had found he had made a bad bargain, he attempted, by prevarication and falsehood, to shuffle out of it, and to say that he bought for the plaintiff, and not for himself. His conduct in inducing the buyer of lot 2 to bid up was sufficient to shew his utter want of fair dealing, and therefore, that no reliance could be placed on his word. If he bought for another, why did he sign the contract and give an order for payment of the purchase-money? If his answer was true, his deposition was false; and as both were on oath, the only safe course for the Court to follow would be to disbelieve him altogether, and to act up to the agreement as signed, and decree specific performance.

Rolt and Nalson, for the defendant, contended that the purchase had been made solely for the vendor and not by the defendant for himself. Independently, however, of that, the Court had not any jurisdiction to entertain such a question for such an amount. The question was one for a Court of Law either in County or other Courts, and no jury would give, in such a case, 10*l.* damages. The claim ought to be at once dismissed with costs.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after stating in detail the facts as before set forth, said, that the representation of the defendant that he refused to sign the contract must be false, for he not only signed it, but signed an order for the purchase-money, and such a course of conduct would have been entirely out of place if he had not then considered it as his own purchase. His Honour then proceeded thus:—Taking into consideration the signature by the defendant of the memorandum of agreement, the contradiction between his answer and his examination, and his having given in his own name, it is impossible to contend that he purchased as the agent of the plaintiff. It only remains to consider the objection which was attempted to be taken to the jurisdiction of the Court. It was said that as the purchase-money was only 50*l.* the vendor was not entitled to come here, because a jury would not have given him 10*l.* damages. But it is impossible for this Court to say what a jury might have done, or what damage might be caused by a failure of the sale of the property, which may be damaged in a way that cannot be estimated. It was said that the exercise of this jurisdiction in the Court is discretionary—that is so; but it is not an arbitrary discretion, but one which is to be exercised according to the circumstances of the case. If there be fraud or imposition or surprise on the purchaser, the Court will not interfere to enforce the agreement; but here I cannot say that there are any such circumstances; and I am therefore of opinion that there must be a specific performance of this agreement—and believing the defendant to have made representations which are not true, I shall make the decree against him with costs. There must be the usual reference to the Master.

KENNERLEY v. KENNERLEY.

Will—Construction—"Power to settle" upon "children."

A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his widow to bring up his children, and when they came of age to "settle" on them what she should deem "prudence," and to reserve maintenance for herself. If she married again, he appointed a trustee for his children. At the wife's death what property remained was to be divided among his, the testator's, children: Held, that an appointment of part of the property on one of the children and her issue was bad, and that the children, who all survived the testator, and their representatives, were entitled equally.

The first question in this case arose on an ill-worded will of Andrew Kennerley, who devised and bequeathed as follows:—"I hereby give to my wife Olivia the whole of my real and personal estate, to bring up my children, and when they come of age 'to settle' on them what shall be deemed by her prudence, reserving to herself sufficient maintenance; but if my wife shall marry again, my will is, that Mr. Thos. Page, shall, in that case, become trustee for my children, so that, in that case, my property may not be subject to the control of such husband. And I hereby appoint my wife whole and sole executrix so long as she remains unmarried, what property remaining at my said wife's decease to be equally divided among my children."

The testator left his widow and five children surviving. Two of these children died under twenty-one. The other three attained twenty-one; they were, the plaintiff, Sarah Ann Kennerley, Mrs. Birch, and Mrs. Boyes. Mrs. Boyes died in the lifetime of her mother, the widow of the testator; the remaining two children of the testator, Miss Kennerley and Mrs. Birch, survived their mother. By an instrument, purporting to be in pursuance of the power in the testator's will, Mrs. Kennerley gave the bulk of the property to Sarah Ann, the present plaintiff, and after making a certain provision for Mrs. Birch, gave the residue to Mrs. Boyes for life, with remainder to her children. Mrs. Kennerley, the testator's widow died, and the suit was instituted by her executor, and who was also the administrator of the two deceased children, on behalf of the surviving children.

Sir W. P. Wood and Bushell, for the plaintiffs, stated that there were two questions before the Court: first, whether, under the power to "settle" on children, Mrs. Kennerley, the widow, had power to give benefits to grandchildren of the testator; and, secondly, in the event of that part of the appointment being held bad, who were the parties entitled, under the residuary clause of the testator's will; all the children living at the testator's death, or at the decease of his widow, Mrs. Kennerley? It was contended that the words "to settle" meant to dispose in such manner as she might think a proper way of providing for the parents and their children; and that any other construction would leave a difficulty as to what share could be appointed, and at what time any appointment could be made; whether the coming of age of all the children must be waited for, or whether an appointment might be made to each as he attained twenty-one. The following cases were cited:—

Johnstone v. Wolfe, 5 Bell's House of Lords Cases, 593; Wood v. Wordsworth, 2 Jarman, 253, and the cases there collected.

Anderson, Neale, Schomberg, Ellis, and Hughes, for the other parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after adverting to a difficulty in the plaintiff's counsel representing the surviving children and also the representatives of deceased children, proceeded with his judgment thus:—First, let us look at the will. The widow takes only for life. There is a direction to pay when the children come of age,—she is to settle what she deems "prudence," reserving for herself maintenance. She was only to have maintenance out of the whole property. As to whether there could be an appointment in favour of grandchildren, I am of opinion the testator throughout his will contemplated children and children only. What is decisive in this obscure will is this—suppose she died leaving all the children under age, to whom would all the property go? It was to go to the trustee, and upon trust for "children," not for grandchildren. It is clear that if the widow married again, all the children being under age, the property was to go to the trustees, and they were only to hold it for the children, and not the grandchildren. The cases cited from Jarman contained larger expressions. The question is not what is the meaning of the word "settlement" generally, but what is the meaning of the word "settled" in this will? It means, in truth, a gift to the children. It is not very clearly stated, but I think the shares vested in all the children living at the death of the testator, and then the limitations are, taken altogether, equivalent to a gift to the widow for life, with remainder to the children, with a power to the widow to appoint among such children as she may select. The answer to the first question in the case will therefore be negativing the power to give benefits to the grandchildren; and to the second question, that the shares vested in the children at the testator's death, are liable to be divested by Mrs. Kennerley's appointment; and therefore, of course, such part as was not well appointed vested in all the children equally.

HEDGES v. HEDGES.

Transfer of mortgage—Adoption of debt by owner of estate.

Three persons became entitled in unequal shares, to real estate, subject to a mortgage debt. The mortgagee having required payment of the debt, a transfer of the mortgage was made. By the deed of transfer it was recited that payment of the debt had been required of A. B., C. D. and E. F. (the persons entitled to the equity of redemption), according to their respective proportions thereof, and that they had applied to the transferee to advance the money, which he had consented to do upon having the repayment thereof secured as thereinafter mentioned. There was a fresh proviso for redemption, on payment by A. B., C. D. and E. F. of the money, in proportion to their shares in the estate; and the deed contained a covenant by A. B., C. D. and E. F. with the transferee, for payment of their proportions of the debt. A bond for payment of the money, according to the covenant in the deed of transfer, was also executed by A. B., C. D. and E. F. E. F. afterwards died, and it was Held, that the personal estate of E. F. was not the primary fund for the discharge of her proportion of the debt.

By indentures of lease and release of the 4th and 5th of April, 1800, James Sutton conveyed a messuage and land, situate at Draycott Folliott, in the county of Wilts, to Hannah Clarke, in fee, subject to a proviso for conveyance of the premises to T. Jeffries in fee, on payment to Hannah Clarke of 3,000*l.* and interest. T. Jeffries by his will, dated the 21st of March, 1801, devised the said messuage and land, in trust for the benefit of his wife until his son Thomas should attain twenty-one, and then to the said Thomas and the testator's two other sons, Richard and George, or such of them as should be then living, and their respective heirs and assigns, as tenants in common, subject to the payment of so much of the mortgage debt as should be due thereon at the time of his death. In March 1803, T. Jeffries died. By indentures of the 4th and 5th of April, 1808, Richard Jeffries conveyed his one-third share in the premises, subject as aforesaid, as to one moiety thereof to Sarah Jeffries, the widow, in fee, and as to the other moiety thereof, to Jemima Jeffries in fee. Thomas Jeffries, the son, by his will, dated the 29th January, 1818, devised and bequeathed all his residuary real and personal estate to the said George Jeffries absolutely, and appointed him sole executor. Upon the death of Thomas Jeffries in 1821, George Jeffries proved his will. By indenture of release, dated the 25th of January, 1826, after reciting the said mortgage; that Hannah Clarke died intestate as to the legal estate in the mortgaged premises, leaving John Clarke her heir-at-law, but having by her will bequeathed her residuary personal property to the said John Clarke, and appointed him and John Crook her executors; that they had proved the will, and assigned the said mortgage debt and securities to John Ward and Thomas Merriman, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns; that J. Ward and T. Merriman had called in and required payment of the said mortgage debt from George Jeffries, Sarah Jeffries, and Jemima Jeffries, according to their respective proportions thereof; and that G. Jeffries, S. Jeffries, and J. Jeffries, being unable to comply with such request, had applied to Thomas Neale and Philip Neale to lend and advance to them the said sum of 3,000*l.* to enable them to do so, which they had consented to do in manner thereinafter mentioned, upon having the repayment thereof with interest secured to them in such manner as was also thereinafter expressed; it was witnessed that, in consideration of 2,000*l.* to J. Ward and T. Merriman, paid by T. Neale and P. Neale, at the request of Geo. Jeffries, and of 1,000*l.* similarly paid at the request of Sarah Jeffries and J. Jeffries, in equal moieties of 500*l.* each, making together the sum of 3,000*l.* J. Ward and T. Merriman conveyed the said premises to T. Neale and P. Neale, their heirs and assigns, subject to the proviso for redemption therein contained. The proviso was, that if George Jeffries, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, should pay, or cause to be paid, unto T. Neale and P. Neale, their executors, administrators, or assigns, the sum of 2,000*l.* with lawful interest, upon the 25th of July next ensuing, and if S. Jeffries and J. Jeffries, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, or either of them, should in like manner pay, or cause to be paid, unto T. Neale and P. Neale the sum of 1,000*l.* in equal moieties, with lawful interest, upon the 25th of July next ensuing, without making any deduction, &c. then and immediately after such payments should be made as aforesaid the said T. Neale and

P. Neale, their heirs or assigns, should and would, at the request, costs, and charges of Geo. Jeffries, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, reconvey and reassure two undivided third parts, the whole into three equal parts or shares to be divided, of and in the said messuage, &c. unto the said Geo. Jeffries and his heirs, or unto such other person or persons as he should direct or appoint; and should and would, at the request, costs, and charges of the said S. Jeffries and J. Jeffries, their heirs or assigns, reconvey and reassure one other undivided third part, the whole into three equal parts to be divided, of and in the said messuage, &c. unto the said S. Jeffries and J. Jeffries, and their heirs respectively, by equal moieties, or unto such other person or persons as they respectively should direct or appoint, freed and discharged of and from all incumbrances made or committed by the said T. Neale and P. Neale, their heirs or assigns, in the meantime. The indenture contained a covenant by Geo. Jeffries, S. Jeffries, and J. Jeffries to pay their proportions of the said sum and interest. There was also a bond dated the 26th of January, 1826, and under the hands and seals of G. Jeffries, S. Jeffries, and J. Jeffries, for securing the payment of the said sum of 3,000*l.* and interest, in the proportions before mentioned. In April 1839, Jemima Jeffries was married to William Hedges, and in 1843 she died. The before-mentioned estate, subject to the mortgage, became afterwards entirely vested in T. H. Jeffries. In 1845 William Hedges took out letters of administration of the estate of his deceased wife, and in June, 1846, he died, having, by his will, appointed T. Hedges and J. Brown his executors, of whom the former alone proved. Henry Hedges, a residuary legatee under the will of William Hedges, instituted the present administration suit against the executor. A reference having been made to the Master, he, by his report, dated the 2nd of June, 1851, found that the estate of the said William Hedges was not liable in respect of his dealings with the estate of his late wife Jemima Hedges, as her administrator, except that the estate of the said W. Hedges was at law liable to the covenant entered into by Jemima Hedges for payment of the sum of 500*l.* contained in the indenture of the 25th of January, 1826, and to the bond of the 26th of January, 1826, executed by the said Jemima Hedges, as a collateral security for the said sum of 500*l.* To this report exceptions were taken by T. H. Jeffries, and now came on to be heard.

The following cases were cited:—Barham v. The Earl of Thanet, 3 Myl. & K. 607; The Earl of Oxford v. Lady Rodney, 14 Ves. 417; Lushington v. Sewell, 1 Sim. 435; Donisthorpe v. Parker, 2 Eden. 162; Bruce v. Morrice, 2 De G. & Sma. 389; Evelyn v. Evelyn, 2 P. Wms. 222; Shafto v. Shafto (in note to Evelyn v. Evelyn); Lord Tankerville v. Fawcett, 2 Bro. Ch. Ca. 57; 1 Cox, 237; and Lord Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 688.

The Vice-Chancellor said that there was no doubt as to the rule applicable to such cases as the present. Here was a person who was mistress of both funds, and the question was upon her acts or contracts which fund was primarily liable. The rule of law was, that the intention of a person in that position was to govern the liability. The question of the application of that rule depended on the particular circumstances. The cases cited were no more material in the present case than as they illustrated the existence of that rule. It was the settled law that the mere transfer of a mortgage by one mortgagee to another, although accompanied by a covenant of the owners of the estate, making their personal estate liable to the transferee, would not, of itself, make their personal estate the primary fund for payment of the mortgage-debt. The law was laid down with great precision by Lord Alvanley in Woods v. Huntingford, 3 Ves. 131, where he said—"If a person succeeding to an estate of that kind has done no act to adopt the debt and make it his personal debt, his personal estate is not liable; but if by his acts he has put himself so far in the place of his ancestor as to make the debt his own, that is understood to be the same as if he were the original mortgagor; but the Court has been extremely anxious not to make that inference unless where it is perfectly clear and obvious; therefore though, the mortgagee pressing for his money, the heir is obliged to have a transfer of the mortgage, and, as every one knows, no assignee will take it without some personal covenant, upon that transaction he executes a bond to the new mortgagee, if he does it only for that purpose, not meaning to make himself more liable, it has been determined not to make it the personal debt of the party whose original debt it was not." What were the circumstances of this case? In 1826, three persons were owners of the equity of redemption in different shares as tenants in common. The recital in the deed of that date, as to the mortgagees having requested George Jeffries and the other part owners to pay off and discharge the mortgage-debt was, that they had called in and required payment of the said mortgage debt from the said George Jeffries, S. Jeffries, and J. Jeffries, according to their respective proportions thereof; and that the said G. Jeffries, S. Jeffries, and J. Jeffries being unable to comply with such request, had applied to Thomas Neale and P. Neale to lend and advance to them the said sum of 3,000*l.* to enable them to do so, which they had consented to do in manner thereinafter mentioned, upon having the repayment thereof, with interest, secured to them in such manner as was thereinafter expressed. The only object in that was to effect a transfer of the mortgage on the mortgagee pressing for payment. There was no object whatever apparent on the deed, except merely to transfer the mortgage debt and the estate from one person who was pressing for payment of the debt, to another who was contented to advance it. So far the case was precisely within the rule stated by Lord Alvanley, and also laid down by Sir J. Leach in Shafto v. Shafto. What did the deed do more than that? There was a proviso for redemption, which was in a special form, stipulating what clearly the law would have done if it had not been there stipulated. The shares were according to the interest of the parties in the estate: so far from intending to make themselves personally liable by that, it shewed that the liability to pay the debt was to follow the interest each had in the estate. There was a covenant which, it was admitted on all hands, did not change the character of the debt. It appeared to his Honour, therefore, that there was nothing in this case except a simple transfer of the mortgage debt from one person to another. In Barham v. The Earl of Thanet, Sir John Leach did not dispute the rule, but came to the conclusion on the construction of the deed; in that case there was an apparent intention to change the nature of the debt: no such intention was apparent in the present deed. Something had been said about the form of the proviso for redemption; but his Honour thought that it would be losing sight of the substance on a mere question of form, if anything were made to turn upon that. If the mortgage were transferred, there should be a new proviso for redemption, as the hand to receive and the hand to pay the money would both be altered, and accordingly that was expressed in the deed. His Honour considered that the exceptions must fail.

TURNER v. TURNER.

Will—Execution of power—Construction.

Power of appointment of property by deed or other instrument:

Held, to be well executed by will.

Leasehold ground rents and shares in an insurance company:

Held, not to pass under the words "real estate, money, and securities for money."

J. H. Green by his will gave to his wife a life interest in certain property, and empowered her "by any deed or deeds, instrument or instruments, in writing, to be by her signed, sealed, and delivered, in the presence of and attested by two or more witnesses, to appoint, &c. the said property, and by the same or any other instrument or instruments, executed as aforesaid," to require and authorise the trustees to pay or transfer the same to the appointees. The testator died on the 7th of November, 1830. Mrs. Green made a will, dated since the 1st January, 1838, whereby she gave all her real estate, and such part of her personal estate as consisted of money and securities for money, in five shares, and she gave the residue of her estate to another person. From the evidence of the attesting witnesses to this will it appeared that after the will had been signed and sealed, Mrs. Green put her hand upon the wax and gave or delivered the will to one of the witnesses, at the same time saying, "I publish and declare this as my last will and testament." At the death of Mrs. Green there was no real estate, but the property consisted of a sum of Consols, leasehold ground rents, and shares in an insurance company. At the date of Mrs. Green's will there was a small balance of cash at the banker's, which was afterwards laid out in Consols. The present suit was instituted, by claim, by one of the legatees under Mrs. Green's will, and the questions were, whether the will of Mrs. Green was a valid execution of the power given by her husband; and, secondly, whether the description in Mrs. Green's will was sufficient to include the ground rents and shares.

Follett and Kinglake, for the plaintiff, cited Doe v. Holloway, 1 Stark. 431; Kibbet v. Lee, Hob. 312; and other cases referred to in 1 Sugden on Powers, 276, 6th ed.; and Francombe v. Hayward, 9 Jur. 344.

Headlam and W. M. James for a defendant in the same interest.

Bacon and Bazalgette, for Mrs. Green's residuary legatee, referred to Curtis v. Kendrick, 3 Mees. & Wels. 461.

Russell, Pitman, Wigram, and Wigglesworth for other defendants.

The Vice-Chancellor said that the authorities, independently of the Wills Act (1 Vict. c. 26), established the fact of this will's being a good execution of the power. The next question was upon the construction of the will, whether the bequests by the will came within the 27th section of the Act, as a bequest of personal estate described in a general manner. It appeared to his Honour, that in both parts of the will it was a bequest of personal property described in a general manner, and therefore, under one part or another, the legatees under the will were entitled to the whole personal property described in a general manner. Now the Consols passed under the words "securities for money," but as to the ground-rents and insurance shares, his Honour desired to hear a reply.

Follett in reply.

The Vice-Chancellor said that the shares in the insurance company did not pass under the bequest, and that the leasehold ground-rents could not pass as "real estate." All, therefore, that the plaintiff and those in the same interest would take would be the Consols, and the rest would go to the residuary legatee of Mrs. Green.

BELL v. MORRALL.

JONES v. MORRALL.

Pleading—Executors—Wilful default · Liability of executors to pay interest on their balances.

If a case is not made by the pleadings (such as wilful default against executors), the point cannot be raised either at the original hearing, or on further directions; and if the plaintiff cannot make a sufficient case for an immediate decree, it is his duty to get inquiries of such a character, that on the result of them the Court may on further directions make a declaration upon the point.

In order to give a claim for interest on balances in the hands of executors, there must be a clear case of improper retention of balances to a considerable or substantial amount.

Where, therefore, there were only small balances remaining in the hands of the executors, and there was no decree on the hearing, declaring them chargeable with wilful default, nor liable to interest on balances, the Court will not on further directions declare the plaintiff entitled to either of such declarations.

This case came on for further directions on the Master's report on the common reference to take the accounts of a testatrix's personal estate. The cause was heard in July, 1845, and the decree contained the usual references to take the accounts—to inquire whether any, and if any, what part of the personal estate remained outstanding or undisposed of; the usual inquiry as to debts, and to ascertain the clear residue of the testatrix's estate; and liberty to state special circumstances with reference to the matters aforesaid. There was no declaration to inquire what might have come to the hands of the defendants, the executors, but for their wilful default; nor any inquiry or declaration as to interest on balances in the defendant's hands.

The finding of the Master, and the other facts so far as they are material to the report of the decision upon the points in the case, are fully stated in the judgment.

Stuart and Haddon for the plaintiffs.

Malins and Piggott for the principal defendants, the executors.

Kenyon Parker for another defendant.

The principal cases referred to were Law v. Hunter, 1 Russ. 100; Tomlin v. Tomlin, 1 Hare, 236; Tebbs v. Carpenter, 1 Mad. 290, and the cases there cited.

JUDGMENT.

Wednesday, May 5.—The Vice-Chancellor.—This is a suit to administer the estate of a lady who died in the year 1823. The questions raised on the cause coming on on further directions are these:—First, it is contended by the plaintiff, who represents the interest of a residuary legatee, that one of the defendants, who is the surviving executor, and others, who represent the estate of a deceased executor, ought to be declared liable for the value of certain furniture and other effects remaining at the death of the testatrix in the mansion-house at Plas Yallen; secondly, that those defendants are liable to pay interest on balances in their hands from time to time, and for an account of the rents and profits of certain leasehold property; and, thirdly, that the defendants ought to pay the costs of this suit, first, because of a refusal to account; and, secondly, because they have disputed the plaintiff's claim. Now, the facts, so far as they are material, are as follow:—The testatrix, Mrs. Morrall, in the lifetime of her husband, made, under a power so to do, a will, and appointed certain property, as to which bequest no question arises. Then her husband died, and she made a codicil, by which she disposed of certain leasehold estates; she by this codicil directed "that the household goods, farm horses, cattle, farming implements, and other effects (except money and plate) being in and about the manor-house of Plas Yallen, should remain there for the use of her son William Morrall during his life, and after his decease should be equally divided amongst all her children that should be then living," &c. That is, the furniture and effects as to which the first point is raised. Now, according to the terms of the will, W. Morrall, the eldest son, was entitled to the benefit of the furniture and effects during his life, and after his death the testatrix disposed of her residuary personal estate "equally to be divided among all her children," and she appointed Charles Morrall, the defendant, and R. Morrall, and the plaintiff Jones executors of her will. The plaintiff Jones married a daughter of the testatrix. After the death of the testatrix, which took place in December 1823, the will and codicil were proved by the three executors, the plaintiff proving as well as the others. In May 1829 Jones became a bankrupt. It must be observed that at that time he was entitled in right of his wife to one equal share of the testatrix's residuary estate. The testatrix left eight children, so that the plaintiff, in right of his wife was entitled to one-eighth of the residuary personal estate. And as to the furniture and other effects at the house called Plas Yallen, at the death of W. Morrall, if Mrs. Jones survived W. Morrall, she was entitled to one share of the furniture and effects, &c. Now, shortly after the death of the testatrix, the plaintiff became bankrupt, and on the bankruptcy of the plaintiff his share of the residuary personal estate of course passed to his assignees. The plaintiff Jones obtained his certificate in September 1829. From his bankruptcy till the time which I shall next mention, viz. till 1834, he had no interest in the testatrix's residuary personal estate. It appears that a person named Chattock was, in the lifetime of the testatrix, employed as bailiff to receive the rents of her leasehold estate, and he continued so to act after her death. In December 1831, the share of Mrs. Jones of the testatrix's residuary estate was assigned by Jones's assignees, and by Jones to one Edwards, who was in fact merely a trustee for Jones himself. In March 1835, W. Morrall died, and then the furniture and other effects in and about Plas Yallen became divisable amongst the children then living, and there were then seven living, so that the plaintiff Jones was entitled to one-seventh of the furniture and effects, &c. On the death of W. Morrall, or shortly afterwards, that is, on the 7th of April, 1835, Edwards, to whom the plaintiff's share was assigned, executed a deed declaring that he was a trustee for the plaintiff, and on the 25th of April Jones and his wife filed a bill against the other children, including the two who were the legal personal representatives of the testatrix, for an account of her personal estate, and of course, W. Morrall being dead, that bill must have sought, and did seek, an account of the furniture and effects which were then divisable into seven parts, as well as of the general personal estate which was divisable among the eight children. That bill was not actively prosecuted, but lingered for some years, that is, from 1835 to 1840. In the meantime C. Morrall, one of the executors, died, and his daughter, Mrs. Gooch, whom he appointed his executrix, proved his will, and then the suit was revived, and a bill of revivor and supplement was filed to seek an account of what C. Morrall had received. So matters stood till August 1840; answers were put in, and in the answers put in by R. Morrall and by C. Morrall an account of the personal estate come to their hands, in fact, all the accounts asked for, had been furnished, but no decree was taken. In August, 1840, the defendants in that suit moved to dismiss for want of prosecution; and by an order, dated 3rd of August, 1840, that bill, which had been pending for about five years and a quarter, was dismissed with costs, for want of prosecution. The Master taxed the costs, and on the 23rd December, 1840, he certified the amount; and the general costs of the suit, and certain other costs of proceedings in the suit were directed to be paid by the plaintiffs. They were not, and are not, to this day paid. So matters remained till November 1842, when Jones and his wife filed the present bill. A decree was made in July 1845. These are the facts, so far as they are material. The first point is this: the plaintiffs say that Robert Morrall, the surviving executor, as well as the estate of C. Morrall, is responsible for the value of the furniture, &c. which the testatrix directed should remain at the house at Plas Yallen, that is, ought to be held liable to the plaintiff for one-seventh of the value of that furniture, &c. Now this point, as to the furniture, is raised by the pleadings, and was before the Court on the hearing; the decree, however, not only declared nothing respecting it, but gave no directions for any inquiry as to it, on the result of which the Court could, on further directions, proceed. But what the decree did direct, was an account of the personal estate; that is, of what had been received by the executors, and it directed an account of the furniture and other things no further than as to what part thereof had been received. The direction in the decree is: "It was referred to the Master to take an account of the personal estate of the testatrix not specifically bequeathed by the codicil including the household furniture, goods, horses, cattle, and farming implements, by the codicil directed to remain at Plas Yallen for the use of Wm. Morrall, for his life, and of the rents and profits of the leasehold estate, and of the moneys produced by sales of timber, &c. come to the hands of the plaintiff since his bankruptcy, if any, or to the hands of R. Morrall, C. Morrall, and the defendants Nugent and wife, or of any of them, or to the hands of any other person or persons, by their or either of their orders, or for their or any of their use. And the Master was to inquire whether any, and if any part, what part of such personal estate remained outstanding or undisposed of. Then there was the usual inquiry as to debts; and to ascertain the clear residue of the testatrix's estate, and liberty to state special circumstances relating to the matters aforesaid." There is no direction for any inquiry on which to charge them with what, without wilful default, they might have received. If it had been intended to raise that point, the Court ought at the hearing to have been induced to make some declaration, or to direct some inquiry, on the result of which, on further directions, it might act. The rule on this subject, I conceive, is this, if the pleadings do not raise the point, it cannot be raised either at the original hearing or on further directions; but if the plaintiff's pleadings do, as in this case, raise the point whether the defendants are liable for wilful default, it is the duty of the plaintiff, if he can make a case for it, to get a declaration by the decree; or if he cannot make a sufficient case for an immediate decree, to get an inquiry of such a character that on the result of it the Court may, on further directions, make a declaration. But if the point is raised on the pleadings, and the Court, by its decree, passes it by, and neither makes any declaration nor directs an inquiry, it must be taken that the Court did not mean to give any such relief; either that it was passed by by the plaintiff, or that being urged by the plaintiff, the Court did not think fit to give it. Now, here the Court has not only made no declaration, and directed no special inquiry, but in directing the common account of the general personal estate, has said, "Take that account also as to the furniture and effects," &c.; that is, an account of what has been received, not of what might have been received. But further, the decree directs an inquiry as to what is outstanding. Now, if any part of this furniture, &c. which might have been received has not been received, it would be outstanding estate. But the Master finds there is no outstanding estate, and no exception has been taken to this finding, so that the question is concluded. But if it were now open, I think the plaintiff could not have the relief now asked. Jones was himself one of the executors; he proved the will, and thereby took upon himself the execution of the trusts as much as his co-executors. And if a party thus under the obligation to perform a trust, does not choose to perform it, but leaves it to his co-executors, he cannot then say to his co-executors, "Because neither you nor I have realised this furniture and effects and divided them, I am entitled to call on you to account, not for what you have actually received, but for what you and I might have received." I am of opinion that, for all these reasons, there is no ground for making the defendants liable for the value of the furniture and other effects which ought to have been realised and divided. The next point is this, the plaintiff says the defendants ought to be held liable for interest on the balances from time to time in their hands. Now, the Master's report says the balance of the personal estate is 767*l.* 18s. 5d. of which the plaintiff's share is 95*l.* 19s. 9d.; R. Morrall, the surviving executor, is found liable for 88*l.* 11s.; and the plaintiff's share of the rents of the testatrix's leasehold estate as against C. Morrall, the deceased executor, or his personal representative, is 158*l.* 5s. 9d. out of which 15*l.* 3s. 9d. have been paid into court. Except these small sums, then, every part of the plaintiff's share, as well of the general personal estate as of the leasehold rents, has been duly paid to the plaintiff. Now the defendants sought to be charged insist that, applying the rule to which I have referred, the plaintiff cannot now claim interest on balances, because there was no declaration or inquiry as to the balances at the hearing. But it appears to me that, correctly applying the rule, the plaintiff has a right to raise the question. It is true there was no declaration at the hearing, but there was that which is the first step towards such a declaration, there was a direction to take the common account of what had been received. The Court was not able at the original hearing to say whether there were any balances; but the direction to take an account of the personal estate, if properly answered by the Master, ought to shew what personal estate has been received from time to time, and the state of the receipts and of the payments should be shewn upon the schedule, and then on that report, with the schedule, the Court may hear it argued whether there are any balances in respect of which the Court may either make an immediate declaration, or direct further inquiry. It is still competent, therefore, to the plaintiff under a decree directing a reference, the result of which affords the Court the materials on which to form an opinion to raise the question. In this case, then, are the circumstances such that if there are balances there ought to be interest on those balances? Now I have said, that in 1829, viz. twenty-one years ago, the plaintiff Jones, who now claims interest, was a bankrupt, and all his interest passed out of him to other persons, and not only could he not then ask for payment, but no payment could properly have been offered to him. Now it does not appear that he ever asked for payment, but in 1834 he procured his assignees to assign his share to a trustee for him. In effect, he bought it back in December 1834. Then he was again in a position to ask for accounts in respect of the personal estate of the testatrix; and directly afterwards, that is, in April in 1835, after the death of W. Morrall, he filed his bill, but he let it linger, and ultimately he dismissed with costs for want of prosecution. He files a fresh bill in 1842, and the testatrix having died in 1823, he now claims to have interest on the balances in the hands of the executors. In order to give a claim for interest there must be a clear case of improper retention of balances to a considerable and substantial amount; but here the total balance retained arising from the personal estate amounts to less than 96*l.* and the total share of the rents of the leasehold estate is a little more than 88*l.*; as to the latter balance in an early stage of the proceedings after the testatrix's decease, it was erroneously considered that the leasehold was freehold. If it had been so W. Morrall would have been entitled to the rents; however he, in fact, received them, and the executors have been made liable to repay what was so received; and under these circumstances the plaintiff claims interest on the balances. There is in my opinion no ground under all these circumstances for decreeing interest on the balances. The remaining point is as to the costs, and it is said that the plaintiff ought to have them on the ground of a refusal by the defendants to account. Now on that point the circumstances to be attended to are these: on the 10th of April, 1835, three days after the execution of the deed by which Edwards became trustee of the plaintiff's share for him, a solicitor for the plaintiff wrote to Robert and Charles Morrall, the other executors, the two acting executors as they have been called, as if for Edwards (who was a mere trustee), asking, on behalf of Edwards, for an account. Within fourteen days an answer was returned, that an account should be rendered. Within fifteen days after the first application the bill was filed. In the answers to that bill the accounts were set out, and then that bill was dismissed. In 1842, two years after the dismissal, another solicitor for the plaintiff, called for the accounts and proposed an arbitration. The answer was:—"You have had the accounts; you have them on oath." It was not suggested that the accounts were not fully given. This, then, does not amount to a refusal, the accounts having been already given. Then it is said that the defendants have resisted by their answer the plaintiff's claim. Now the defendants have by their answer suggested that the purchase by Jones from his assignees was without a sufficient concurrence by the creditors. If this suggestion had led to any expense, I should so far have directed that to be borne by the defendants; but it has caused no expense beyond, perhaps, the few lines stating it adding to the length of the answer. Even that I would make the defendants pay if the expense to the plaintiff of the inquiry into the amount would not be more than he could have to receive; for I accede to the principle that if a defendant questions the title of the plaintiff and fails, and by that course puts the plaintiff to any costs, the defendant should pay so much of the costs as has been caused by the objection. But I do not act upon it, because here no perceptible increase of costs has been occasioned. The costs must go, therefore, according to the usual course in administration suits.

Order on further directions accordingly.

Ex parte PUGH.

Wife—Right to settlement—Bankrupt husband. Two-thirds of a sum which had been paid into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and to which the husband was entitled in right of his wife, but who had become bankrupt, ordered to be settled on the wife and her children.

This was a petition by the assignees of a bankrupt praying that, after payment of the costs, a sum of 681*l.* standing to the account of "Clara Carter and the assignees of Charles Joseph Carter, her husband," might be divided as the Court should think fit, and after a settlement of a portion on the wife and children of the bankrupt in the usual way, the remainder might be paid to the petitioners, the assignees.

Teed, Simpson, J. H. Palmer, and Brett, for the several parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said: I think that the circumstance that this lady, who at the time of her marriage was in easy circumstances, is now left with eleven children reduced in the world by her husband's bankruptcy, must be taken into consideration to some extent. The course which I propose to adopt is,—there are 681*l.* Reduced Annuities; the assignees will of course have their costs of the petition and consequent thereon, and I do not think I shall be exceeding any rule—if there is any rule—by directing that 400*l.* should be allotted to the wife and children, and that the remainder should be paid to the assignees. I do not think I should give her less. It is alleged that there is a rule which gives one half of the fund in similar circumstances. I think, however, that is to be governed by circumstances, and that the position of the wife, past and present, ought to be taken into consideration. Suppose that the wife should be very advanced in years and had no children, I should not, of course, make so large a provision for her; but for this lady and her eleven children, the 400*l.* will still be a very small sum. Order accordingly.

KERNOT v. PITTIS.

*Insolvent—Discharge by default without adjudication—Vesting order—*1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 44.

An insolvent discharged after the vesting order, by default of the execution creditor, and with the consent also of the detaining ones, cannot sue a party acting as the servant of the provisional assignee, for the recovery of property passing under the vesting order, before an order of the Court under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 44, for the re-delivery to the insolvent of such property.

Detinue, for surgical preparations.

Plea.—Before the accruing of the causes of action, the plaintiff then a prisoner in actual custody at the suit of J. P. &c. and also detained at the suit of T. M. C. &c. petitioned the Insolvent Debtors' Court, under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, for his discharge; that the said Court made the usual order vesting the estate of the petitioner in the provisional assignee; by virtue of which said order, and the said statute, the goods and chattels in the declaration mentioned, and all rights of action in respect thereof, &c. became and were vested in the provisional assignee; that the vesting order still remains in full force, and that the defendant, as the servant and by the authority of the provisional assignee, after the making of the vesting order, detained the goods, &c.

Replication.—That after the making of the vesting order, and before the detention in the declaration mentioned, to wit, on, &c. the plaintiff was discharged out of the said custody by the default of the said J. P. and by the consent of the said T. M. C. the detaining creditors, without any adjudication being made in that behalf upon the plaintiff's petition by the said Court. That the defendant detained the goods after the plaintiff had been so discharged, and not by virtue of any order, authority, or command of said provisional assignee made or given to defendant before plaintiff was so discharged.

Demurrer.—The causes stated in the margin were, that the replication admits the vesting order and does not shew that the goods were revested in the plaintiff; that it shews no right in the plaintiff to sue, and no liability in the defendant to be sued.

Plaintiff's points.—That by the discharge of the plaintiff from custody, the title of the provisional assignee was determined; and the goods revested in the plaintiff. The other points were technical only.

JUDGMENT.

Friday, June 18.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In this case of Kernot v. Pittis, we are all agreed that there must be judgment for the defendant, but we do not agree in our reasons, therefore we must give separate judgments. I do not think I am in this case called upon to review our decision in Grange v. Trickett, as the defendant is entitled to our judgment, whether the property in the goods mentioned in the declaration did or did not revest in the plaintiff, on his discharge from custody. If the property still remained in the provisional assignee, of course the action is not maintainable; but if it revested in the plaintiff, still I think there is a good defence under sect. 11 of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, which enacts that in case any prisoner as to whose estate and effects any vesting order shall have been made, shall by the consent or default of the detaining creditor, be discharged out of custody, without any adjudication being made in such case, no action or suit shall be commenced against such provisional assignee, or against any assignee or assignees appointed under this Act, nor against any person duly acting under his or their authority, except to recover any property, estate, money, or effects of such prisoner detained after an order made by the said court for the delivery thereof and demand made thereupon. The defendant, in his plea, after setting out the proceedings of the Insolvent Court down to the recording and publishing of the vesting order, whereby the goods in the declaration mentioned became vested in Samuel Sturges, the provisional assignee, further says that he, the defendant, as the servant of, and by the authority and command of the said Samuel Sturges, as and so being such provisional assignee, as aforesaid, after the making of the said vesting order, detained the said goods in the said declaration mentioned as he lawfully might for the cause aforesaid. The replication does not allege that any order had been made by the Insolvent Court for the delivery of the goods to the plaintiff, or that they had been demanded from the provisional assignee or from the defendant; but, after stating the plaintiff's discharge out of custody without any adjudication, with the consent of Cattlin, the detaining creditor, concludes with merely averring that he did not detain, nor does he detain, the said goods by virtue of any order, authority, or command of the said Samuel Sturges, made or given to the defendant before the plaintiff was so discharged as aforesaid. The plaintiff thus admits that the goods were detained by the defendant under the authority and command of Sturges, the provisional assignee, after the plaintiff's discharge from custody, but before any order of Court for the delivery of the goods or demand made thereupon. Must not the defendant be taken to have detained the goods under the authority of Sturges, within the meaning of the enactment referred to? It seems quite clear that Sturges himself would not have been liable to the action if he had detained the goods in his own hands, after the plaintiff's discharge from custody, until the order for delivery and demand. Can if be contended that a warehouseman, agent, or servant, employed by him to keep them safely, is liable to this action? I think that the same protection was extended to them as to the provisional assignee. We are now arguing upon the supposition that the discharge of a debtor before adjudication revests in him the property in his effects which had vested in his provisional assignee. To protect the provisional assignee, and those acting under his authority, from an action for detaining goods until they know authentically the debtor is entitled to them, and they have an opportunity of delivering them up, it seems to me that this very reasonable provision is introduced, which is quite consistent with the title being in the debtor, and with his having such a right to call upon the Court to make an order for restoring the goods as suggested by my brother Patteson in Grange v. Trickett. Objections were made to the allegation in the plea of a detainer by authority of the provisional assignee, on the ground that it was premature, and therefore that there was no occasion to traverse it. But I am of opinion that this allegation might be introduced into the plea, and that on the demurrer to the replication as it is framed, there ought to be judgment for the defendant.

COLERIDGE, J.—I agree with Lord Crmpbell in thinking that it is not necessary in this case we should review our former decision in the case that has been mentioned. If ever that should be necessary, I hope we shall come to the consideration of it with a proper degree of impartiality. It is unnecessary for me to say more, than that up to the present time I have not read nor have I heard anything which satisfies me that that decision was wrong. I agree also in the conclusion to which Lord Campbell has come upon the present pleadings, and also in the reasons upon which he has founded that conclusion.

ERLE, J.—I am of opinion that the vesting order mentioned in the plea continues in force, notwithstanding the discharge of the plaintiff from custody with consent mentioned in the replication. The vesting order under sec. 37 transferred the property to the assignee, and there is no provision for defeating that title, or making the vesting order void, or its power to cease by the discharge from custody. The pernicious effect of such a result in enabling the insolvent to collude with the detaining creditor for the purpose of defeating the rights of other creditors is obvious, and that effect would be prevented by holding the vesting order valid until adjudication under sec. 37 has rendered it void. With respect to sec. 44, although the provisions for the protection of assignees are superfluous, unless the vesting order is rendered void; still I think it the right construction to hold them to be superfluous, rather than create by conjecture a defeasance to an important title, for the purpose of finding an application for them. It is unnecessary for me to say more as the reasons for this construction are fully and clearly given in the judgment of Mr. Commissioner Law, in the matter of Henry Charles Mander. The 44th section has been construed by my lord and my learned brother, to protect assignees from any action, until an order for a delivery of the property by the Court, although the vesting order may be rendered void by such discharge from custody, and so have defeated the present plaintiff. But if the vesting order were intended to be made void, it was anomolous to suppose it should have force after the avoidance, to protect the person who was assignee under it, for the taking and keeping of the property of the person who was insolvent subsequent to such avoidance, and to debar the alleged insolvent from the common remedies for the protection of the property, until he should have obtained an order of the Court authorising him to take such remedies. By this construction the Legislature would have made the vesting order void, and at the same time for many purposes valid, until the order of the Court for insolvent debtors had been made, which seems an inconsistency and an anomaly in respect of title to property to be introduced; and as all the advantages of this construction may be obtained without inconsistency or anomaly, by holding the vesting order valid until made null by that Court. I think the construction holding it void, and the assignee after its voidance to be protected thereby erroneous.

Judgment for the defendant.

BANKRUPTCY.

BANKRUPTCY COURT, DUBLIN.

Reported by J. LEVY, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

August, 1852.

Re FOXHALLS.

Partnership—Final examination—Reckless trading—Partial payments.

Where partners trade recklessly, and where the managing partner of a firm deposits goods and makes payments to particular creditors, although he swears that at the time of doing so he did not apprehended bankruptcy or insolvency, his examination will be adjourned sine die, although the assignees are satisfied that he had made a full and true disclosure; and although the examination of the other partner may be passed, he will not be allowed to apply for his certificate for twelve months.

The bankrupts, James and Meredith Foxhall, were extensive West India merchants in Dublin, and carried on trade in partnership. Their liabilities, which were chiefly to English creditors, amounted to upwards of 76,000*l.* whilst their assets were of a very trifling character, scarcely amounting to one shilling in the pound. They came before the Court on several successive days with a view to pass their final examination, which was opposed by Maher, on the part of the English creditors.

Fitzgibbon, Q.C. was for the bankrupts.

The principal ground of opposition was reckless trading, having contracted the debts when in a state of hopeless insolvency, and having made partial payments to their Irish creditors to whom comparatively little was due. It appeared from the examination of the bankrupts, and from other evidence produced, that Meredith Foxhall was the managing partner, who principally conducted the out business, whilst the other attended to the office and the books. Some months before their stoppage they owed Irish creditors large sums of money, which were principally liquidated by handing over to them goods purchased from English creditors, and by payments made under pressure, as they alleged. Counsel for the English creditors complained of this, and sought to draw the inference that these partial payments were designedly made to the prejudice of English creditors, and that, at all events, the system of purchasing goods and then pledging them to raise money was unmercantile; and traders guilty of such misconduct ought not to get their certificate, or be allowed to get into trade again. It appeared that James Foxhall had little to do with the pledging of goods or raising of money in the way complained of, although he knew that these things were done, and such a system pursued in order to keep up the credit of the house. It was also stated as ground of complaint that the books had not been regularly kept, and that they contained erasures, and that a bottle containing acid had been kept in the office for the purpose of making those erasures. The bankrupts admitted that such bottle was kept for the purpose of removing blots from the books, but not for making erasures, and it did not appear that any erasure of a fraudulent character had actually been made. It was urged as a further ground of complaint, that a few days before their failure, and when they knew that failure was inevitable, Mr. Meredith Foxhall borrowed 600*l.* from a Mr. Wight, to take up a bill, for 300*l.* of which Wight was now a creditor on their estate. On all these grounds it was contended that they were not entitled to pass their examination, or ever get into trade again. It was not alleged that there was any concealment or suppression of property.

Fitzgibbon, Q.C. said, the question for the Court was, did the bankrupts make a full and true disclosure of their estate and effects, and was there any reasonable ground to doubt the truth and fullness of that discovery? It was not even suggested that there was any suppression of property. And under these circumstances he contended that they were clearly entitled to pass their examination and get into business again; and what was still more favourable, both the trade and official assignees were satisfied with the account the bankrupts had given.

His Honour delivered judgment.—He said it had been the uniform course, since the establishment of that court, in every case of doubt against the insolvent trader, for the commissioner to take the opinion of the trade and official assignees, and he (the commissioner) had not departed from that practice on the present occasion. He did not recollect any case except that of the Scotts, of Belfast, in which such a lengthened and laborious examination had taken place. In the balance-sheet of the bankrupts they charged themselves with debts for value amounting to upwards of 72,000*l.* and it was an important question what residue of that large amount had the Court been able to lay its hands on? The answer was, nothing. Not a single sixpence of that property would be distributed amongst the unpaid creditors, who were nearly all English merchants; upwards of 30,000*l.* worth of it having been deposited amongst some nineteen or twenty Irish creditors. It might be said that if those transfers of property amounted to a fraudulent preference, the assignees might recover back this property. If the assignee was inclined to recover back that property, and that he depended on the evidence of Mr. Meredith Foxhall, who appeared to be the only person who was fully cognizant of those transactions, he would most certainly fail, for the bankrupt took care, in the evidence he gave, to give those deposits such a character as to leave it impossible for the assignee to recover them back. He would refer to the case of Mr. Wight, who had been induced to lend his money to the bankrupts on the very eve of their failure. He lent them a sum of 600*l.* to assist in the taking up their bills upon that good faith and integrity that should exist between traders, and which it was the duty of that Court to inculcate. That money was obtained on the 27th of Jan. when the bankrupts knew they were hopelessly insolvent, for their total stoppage took place on the 6th or 8th of the following month. How was that money obtained? The bankrupts send for 300*l* to assist in taking up a bill, which was given at once. Another demand was made in a few minutes afterwards, which was refused by Mr. Wight until he should have seen one of the partners, who subsequently gave him a bill of lading fully indorsed, but that bill of lading was afterwards got back by Messrs. Foxhall. The accounts given by Mr. Wight and Mr. Meredith Foxhall were at direct variance with regard to that transaction. Mr. Wight swore positively that the bill of lading had been obtained by the bankrupts under a promise of returning it when they copied it, and had shewn it to some person whom they alleged wanted to see it. Well, they got it, but never returned it; and he (the commissioner) was bound to say that, notwithstanding such conduct on the part of the bankrupts, Mr. Wight had not throughout the whole investigation manifested those angry feelings that might naturally be expected to result from the gross injustice that had been done to him. There had been tea transferred in lieu of the bill of lading, but from that Mr. Wight received no advantage whatever. It was not disputed that when Mr. Wight was applied to for the second 300, he refused to give it unless he got the bill of lading as his security. It was not then credible that the man who refused to give the second loan without the bill of lading would, in a few hours afterwards, hand it back, unless there was a distinct promise to return it. Then a transfer order had been given for the teas, but these teas were, as it turned out, not available as a security, and the transaction with regard to them was as bad as the affair connected with the bill of lading. Mr. James Foxhall did not appear to be cognizant of the transaction about the teas, and it would be well if the same could be said of his brother. The explanation given by the bankrupts with regard to the preferences given to certain creditors was most unsatisfactory. The explanations given with regard to the dealings with Wilson and Company and Bowly and Company were most unsatisfactory; and the circumstances connected with Sinclair and Boyd were equally so. The bankrupts had been but the mere factors of these latter gentlemen, to whom they were bound to hand over every shilling received for their goods. No one could find fault with that; but the complaint of the creditors was, that the bankrupts had applied the moneys received for their goods in discharge of what they owed to Sinclair and Boyd as agents, and that when difficulties pressed upon them they paid to those gentlemen within a very short period a sum of no less than 11,000*l.* As regarded the case of Wilson and Co. he was of opinion that the security given to them was a voluntary deposit, because he did not find that there was any pressure at the time. With reference to the bankrupts' dealings with Mr. Lyons, in his opinion the manner in which the accounts were kept of them in the bankrupts' books were not only discreditable, but disgraceful. With regard to the transactions with Foxhall and Barrington, on account of which credit was taken by the bankrupts for upwards of 7,000*l.* instead of being regularly entered in their books in the course of trade, they were entered in a bulk sum at the end of the year, as if to close their accounts. The explanation given was that I O U's had been held by the bankrupts without any entry having been made of the cash or consideration given for them, in the expectation that Foxhall and Barrington would have been able to take them up; now, it was almost impossible to believe such a story, or that that was a true account even, as related to these transactions. Then, when he saw that 30,000*l.* worth of goods had been deposited with particular creditors, and that there was nothing left for other creditors,—even suppose it were true that those deposits had been made under pressure,—that Court could never sanction such conduct, for at best they were made when the bankrupts were in a state of utter insolvency, and if they wished to have acted fairly by all their creditors they should have stopped payment some time previously. He did not believe the statement of Mr. Meredith Foxhall that up to the 7th of February the firm had reason to believe that they would have been able to go on. If he were obliged to find a motive for that extraordinary statement, he could have no difficulty in finding it, because if Mr. Foxhall had made the deposits and payments with any other impression on his mind, every one of these deposits would have been fraudulent as against creditors. If he had admitted in that court during his examination that he knew (as he ought to have known) he could not go in trade, the entire amount of those deposits would, by the verdict of a jury, be brought back to the estate for the benefit of the general creditors. He was bound to say that he should separate the conduct of the two bankrupts, although neither of them could receive the full approbation of the Court; but inasmuch as it was Meredith Foxhall who managed the out business, and was particularly conversant with the transactions relating to the deposits, and as the account given by him was far from being satisfactory, a distinction should be drawn between them. He was further bound to say, his opinion differed from the assignees, and it was therefore the more painful to him to pronounce an adverse decision as regarded either of the bankrupts. But, after the most anxious reflection, he was bound to say it was a case in which he could not grant Mr. Meredith Foxhall his certificate at all, and where he could not grant the other bankrupt an immediate certificate, although none of the suspicious circumstances of the case had been brought directly home to him. He believed, as regarded Mr. James Foxhall, he had to the best of his ability made a full and true disclosure of his estate and effects. But even if he were satisfied that both had made a full and true discovery, he was bound to look to their conduct as traders, and when he found that they had contracted debts for value to the extent of upwards of 72,000*l.* and that they made payments and deposits to favoured creditors, and traded on with the most reckless indifference, he could not give them a free certificate. He would pass the examination of Mr. James Foxhall, but with a condition that he could not apply for his certificate till after the expiration of twelve months; and would adjourn the examination of Mr. Meredith Foxhall sine die.

(Before Mr. Commissioner Plunket.)

Re Burke.

Trader debtors' summons—Petition for arrangement with creditors.

A trader, who files a petition for arrangement with his creditors under the protection sections of the Bankrupt Act, and obtains protection de bene esse, and who is subsequently summoned under the trader debtors' sections of the Act, must appear and admit or deny the debt, the summons not being avoided by the petition for arrangement with his creditors. Distinction between the English and Irish sections.

In this case Burke, who was a trader resident in Tipperary, filed a petition under the protection clauses of the Bankrupt Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 107, s. 90 (English analogous 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 211), and obtained an order de bene esse. After obtaining that order, he was served with a trader debtors summons by another creditor, who was no party to the arrangement petition, and called upon to admit or deny the debt. On the case coming before the Court on the trader debtors' summons,

Levy, for the debtor, contended that the petition for protection and the order de bene esse put an end to the trader debtor summons (Fonblanque, 48); and that, according to the 23rd section of the Bankrupt Act, no commission of bankruptcy could issue until after such petition for arrangement had been dismissed; and the debtor ought not to be called on to commit an act of bankruptcy.

Creighton, for the petitioning creditor, contended that filing a petition for arrangement did not bar the right of any creditor bringing the debtor into court upon a trader debtors' summons, and suing out a commission upon any other act of bankruptcy than the dismissal of the petition, which was the act contemplated by the 23rd section.

Levy, in reply.—The 23rd section did not limit the act of bankruptcy to the dismissal of the petition; it said that no commission should issue until after such petition for arrangement shall have been dismissed. The 76th section of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, was the English analagous section, and there it was stated that no such adjudication shall be made on any such act of bankruptcy (meaning the dismissal of the petition) until after such petition for arrangement shall have been dismissed. There the Legislature made the distinction as to the act of bankruptcy, but under the Irish section it was clear that no commission upon any act of bankruptcy was to issue until after the petition for arrangement had been dismissed.

His Honour said he was struck with the difference between the corresponding sections of the two Acts, and he thought the construction put upon them by counsel was deserving of some consideration, but it was not by the English Act he was to be guided. The 23rd section of the Irish Act provided that "the filing of a petition by any trader for an arrangement between such trader and his creditors, with the concurrence of a certain number thereof, under the provisions of this Act, shall be accounted and adjudged conclusive evidence of an act of bankruptcy committed by such trader at the time of filing such petition, provided a commission of bankruptcy shall be issued against him within two months after notice of such petition having been filed shall have appeared in the Dublin Gazette. Provided also, that no commission of bankruptcy shall issue, unless and until after such petition for arrangement shall have been dismissed." Now, he thought it was clear that the commission here alluded to was a commission founded upon an act of bankruptcy committed by the dismissal of the petition for arrangement, and that there was nothing in the section prohibiting a creditor, who was not a party to such an arrangement, from issuing a commission upon any other act of bankruptcy. It had been argued that this would be defeating the objects for which those protection sections had been enacted—he could not help that—he should administer the Act as he found it. The creditor had a statuteable right to bring his debtor there, and call upon him to admit or deny the debt, and he (the commissioner) did not think he could prevent the creditor from doing so, because the debtor thought proper to file a petition for arrangement under other sections of the Act. There was no doubt a distinction between the Irish and English Acts, and it was contended that where the act of bankruptcy was intended to be limitted to the dismissal of the petition the Legislature pointed it out, and that inasmuch as that limit did not appear in the Irish section, no commission at all was to issue upon any act until after the dismissal of the petition for arrangement. He thought he could not put that construction on it—that he was bound under the statute to call upon the trader to admit or deny the debt. An admission of the debt was accordingly filed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by Owen Davies Tudor, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Hickling v. Boyer.

Administration of assets—Dilapidations of leaseholds—Indemnity of executors—Legatee taking cum onere—A. by her will gave to B. certain leaseholds absolutely during the residue of her term therein, subject to the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants reserved and contained in the lease, under which she held the same premises. And as to her residuary real personal estate, subject to the payment of his debts, funeral, testamentary, and other expenses, she gave, devised, and bequeathed the same to C. his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely. The lease contained a covenant to keep the premises in repair. At A.'s death there were dilapidations, but it did not appear whether they had taken place before she took possession of the premises under a will, by which they were bequeathed to her. By an order of the Court below, B. was let into possession, and a sum of stock was set aside out of the testatrix's estate to indemnify the executors:

Held, that, according to the true construction of the will, B. took the leaseholds cum onere, and was liable as between herself and the executors, and C. the residuary legatee, for all the dilapidations at the death of A.

Held, also, that the executors of A. being liable as between themselves, and the lessor for such dilapidations, were entitled to an indemnity from B. before he was let into possession.

Distinction between testamentary dispositions of mortgages and leaseholds, when they are bequeathed subject to debts or rents, and covenants respectively, as to whether the legatee takes cum onere or not.

This was an appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, under the following circumstances:—Zillah Taylor, by her will dated the 27th October, 1837, bequeathed certain leasehold property to Richard Ashby, his executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely, during the residue of her term to come therein, subject to the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants reserved and contained in the lease under which she held the same premises; and, as to her residuary real and personal estate, subject to the payment of her debts, funeral, testamentary, and other expenses, she gave, devised, and bequeathed the same to James Boyer, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely. In September 1839 Zillah Taylor died, and soon after two of her executors filed a bill for the administration of her personal estate, their co-executors and R. Ashby being parties, as defendants, to the suit. By a decree dated the 28th May, 1842, it was referred to the Master to take the usual accounts, and to make certain inquiries as to liabilities. The Master by his report, dated the 26th April, 1844, certified that by an indenture of lease of the 7th April, 1803, a piece of ground and seventeen messuages were granted to George Taylor for ninety-nine years, from the 25th March then last; and that such indenture contained a covenant on the part of the said George Taylor, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to keep the said messuages and premises, and all buildings that might thereafter be erected on the said piece of ground, in proper repair and condition during the continuance of the said term; that the said George Taylor made three under-leases of different parts of the premises comprised in the lease, with similar covenants to repair; that the said George Taylor bequeathed the premises comprised in the lease to his cousin George Taylor a brother of Zillah Taylor, the testatrix, and that the said testatrix, became entitled to the same under the will of her said brother; that at the time of her death dilapidations had taken place (but whether any of the dilapidations had taken place before she became possessed of the premises, he could not state); and that in November, 1839, it would have required 1,849*l.* to be laid out for the purpose of putting the premises in repair; but that in April, 1843, 1369*l.* only would have been required for that purpose.

By an order on further directions, dated 12th July, 1844, by Vice-Chancellor Sir James Wigram, it was amongst other things ordered, that 1,500*l.* Bank Three per Cent. Annuities should be carried over to an account to be entitled "The Executors Indemnity Account," and that the dividends should be laid out in the purchase of like stock, in trust in the cause to the like account. And it was ordered that Richard Ashby should be let into possession, that the deeds should be delivered up to him, and the names would wish to him; and it was ordered that J. Boyer should be at liberty to take legal proceedings to compel the under-lessees or occupying tenants to make good the dilapidations, and that he should be at liberty to make use of the names of the executors of the testatrix, who were to be indemnified therein out of the indemnity fund.

J. Boyer died in the month of April, 1845, and on a petition being presented by the executors, it was ordered that they should be at liberty to take proceedings to compel the under-lessees or occupying tenants to make good the dilapidations, and that they should be at liberty to use the names of the surviving executors of the testatrix. By another order, dated the 30th May, 1846, on the petition of the surviving executors of the executrix, it was ordered that the legacy duty on the residue of the testatrix's estate, with certain costs, should be paid partly out of the executors' indemnity fund, and that the dividends of the fund should be paid to the executors of J. Boyer, and that the deficiency in the indemnity fund caused by such payments thereto should be made up out of certain other funds.

Richard Ashby died in 1847, whereupon William Cherrington the younger, as one of the surviving executors of J. Boyer, appealed from so much of the order of Vice-Chancellor Wigram, dated the 12th July, 1844, as directed that the sum of 1,500*l.* Bank Three per Cent. Annuities should be set aside to indemnify the executors of Zillah Taylor, being carried over to an account, to be entitled "The Executors' Indemnity Account," and the dividends invested in trust to the like account, and the executors of the testatrix to be indemnified thereout; and from so much of the order of the 30th May, 1846, as directed the deficiency in the trustees' indemnity fund to be made good, and the appellant insisted that what remained of the indemnity fund, after the payments directed by the order of the 30th May, 1846, with the dividends thereof, ought to be paid to himself.

The Attorney-General and Shapter, for the appellant, contended that, as the testatrix took the leasehold premises as assignee, and had not created any liabilities with respect to them, the executors could at any rate only require R. Ashby, to whom the testatrix had bequeathed such leaseholds, to indemnify them from all the liabilities attaching to them. That the decree on further directions, therefore, was wrong, which impounded part of the testatrix's residuary estate, for the purpose of indemnifying the executors. The Attorney-General, in reply, cited Lockhart v. Hardy, 9 Beav. 379; Cox v. King, 9 Beav. 530; Burch v. Couey, 14 Jur. 1009.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, after stating the facts of the case, said, that the appellant insisted that the effect of the bequest of the lease was such that the legatee took subject to all the liabilities which attached to the lease, and that the legatee, and not the testatrix's estate, was bound to pay the expense of the repairs, or the consequences of any action for the breach of the covenant to repair. He was of opinion that, by the express terms of the will of Zillah Taylor, Richard Ashby was to take the leasehold property cum onere. Upon the part of the respondents, Cochrane v. Robinson, 11 Sim. 378, and Fletcher v. Stevenson, 3 Hare, 360, were cited at the Bar, but it did not appear that the wills in those cases contained any expressions similar to those found in the will of Zillah Taylor. There were, however, two cases in which words occurred similar to those which the testatrix had used. In Serle v. St. Eloy, 2 P. W. 386, the testator devised land in D. to A. an infant, at her age of twenty-one years, subject, nevertheless, to the incumbrances thereon, the rents in the meantime to be paid to her father for her maintenance, and devised his other land to trustees for payment of his debts; the land in D. being in mortgage, this mortgage was ordered to be discharged by money arising from the sale of his other estate. It was objected that the lands in D. were devised subject to the incumbrances thereon, and that for such reason the devisee ought to take them cum onere; but the Master of the Rolls said, that the devise of the estate subject to the incumbrances was no more than what was implied, for the testator could not do otherwise; but when the testator devised other land to pay his debts, this must be intended all his debts, and that this was the stronger by reason of the disposition of the interim rents, which was as much as to say, that they should not go in discharge of the mortgage. In Graves v. Hicks, 6 Sim. 398, a testator devised real estate, subject, nevertheless, to such charges and incumbrances as should, at the time of his decease, be existing thereon by virtue of any marriage settlement or otherwise; and he bequeathed his residuary personal estate, subject and charged with the payment of all his debts: at the time of his decease, the real estate was in mortgage to secure a sum settled on his daughter on her marriage, and in the mortgage-deed there was the usual covenant for payment of the money. The Vice-Chancellor held that the mortgaged premises were charged with and subject and liable, in the first instance, to the payment of that sum; and he grounded his decision partly on the words "subject nevertheless," &c. and partly on the distinction between an ordinary mortgage and a provision in a settlement, and he quoted the words of Lord Hardwicke in Lanoy v. The Duke and Duchess of Athol, 2 Atk. 445, where his lordship remarked:—"There being a borrowing and a lending in the case of a mortgage, the real estate is considered only as a pledge, and the personal estate which is the natural fund, is liable in the first place." There was this distinction between testamentary dispositions of mortgages and of leaseholds; the words "subject," &c. when used in reference to mortgages, were not mere useless surplusage, even when they were not construed to import that the party was to take cum onere, for they might be intended to prevent disappointment, and perhaps disputes or doubts, by shewing at once that the estate was in mortgage, which might not otherwise be known to be so; but the words "subject," &c. when used with reference to property which had already been described as leasehold, were mere useless surplusage, unless they were used to signify that the bequest was to be subject to the performance of the covenants to repair in respect of dilapidations existing at the time of the testator's death; and the Court ought not without some special reason to construe words as mere surplusage, which might fairly be held to be employed for some useful purpose. His lordship also said that, independently of any direction in the will, it appeared to him to be only natural, and in accordance with the presumable intention of a testator who made a specific bequest of leaseholds, that the legatee should take them subject to the burden of putting them in repair. It was true that, except in special cases, the general personal estate was the natural fund for the payment of debts, and other kinds of property were commonly exonerated; but the doctrine of exoneration had in reality no application to such a case as the present. Lord Hardwicke, in the passage quoted by the Vice-Chancellor in Serle v. St. Eloy, had pointed out the distinction between ordinary mortgages and provisions in a settlement; and even in reference to a mortgage, the cases of Scott v. Beecher, 5 Madd. 96; The Earl of Ilchester v. The Earl of Carnarvon, 1 Beav. 209; and The Earl of Clarendon v. Barham, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 688, shewed that when the mortgage debt was not the original debt of the person whose estate was to be administered, and he had not made it his own otherwise than by receiving for his own benefit from the original debtor assets sufficient to pay all the debts of such original debtor, the estate ought to bear the burden, even though the person whose estate was to be administered had charged other parts of his property with the payment of all his debts, and though by receiving such assets he had made himself in one sense personally liable to pay the mortgage. Then, if there was a distinction between an ordinary mortgage and a provision in a settlement as regarded exoneration, there was at least an equal distinction between mortgages and the present case. The general personal estate of the testatrix never received anything which it was under a natural obligation, as it were, to return or replace, as in the case of a mortgage debt, nor as the liability in respect of the dilapidations in existence an actual debt of the testatrix for non feasance, but that as soon as the lessor should require repairs to be done the under-lessees would do them. On both these grounds, therefore, namely, the language of the will and general principles, or on either of them singly, his lordship said he was of opinion that Richard Ashby was liable, as between himself on the one hand, and the executors of the testatrix and her residuary legatees on the other hand, to do the repairs in respect of dilapidations existing at the time of the testatrix's decease, and he thought that he had been sufficiently represented by the executors of the testatrix and their counsel to authorise him to express that opinion; but still he thought that Richard Ashby was properly made a party to the suit in respect of that question, and that his personal representative ought to have been served with the petition of rehearing. His lordship then observed that whatever might be the case with regard to the liability in respect of the dilapidations as between the residuary and specific legatees, no disposition made by the testatrix, and no expression of intention on her part could alter the right of the lessor. The testatrix was an assignee of the lease, and the rule was that the assignee could not avoid passing over, get rid of his liabilities for any breach of covenant committed during the period of his occupation. (2 Platt on Leases, 417.) The executors of the testatrix, therefore, were liable in respect of the dilapidations as between themselves and the lessor, and they were entitled to indemnity in respect of such liability. That might be uncertain, inasmuch as the under-lessees might get in repairs in fulfilment of their covenant with Richard Taylor, or the personal representatives of the direct liability, might do them in accordance with the will; and the fact that the executors were uncertain was a sufficient reason why they did not and could not discharge that liability, and they paid the general debts of the testatrix, and, not being able to discharge the liability, they should have retained a fund to indemnify them against it. His lordship did not consider the executors to be barred by not having come in before the Master, for in that case the liability was known, and yet at the same time it was uncertain whether it would not be removed by the repair of the premises, as, in fact, it had been partially removed by a considerable expenditure since the death of the testatrix. His lordship said that it had been objected, that the right, if any, of the appellant had been waived by the petition of May 1846, and the order obtained thereon. He considered, however, that such objection was not tenable; for the executors of James Boyer were entitled to the residuary estate, and the residuary estate was liable to the lessor, and the under-lessees were liable to those claiming under George Taylor and the testatrix: the executors of James Boyer were therefore justified in endeavouring to compel the under-lessees to repair for the purpose of removing the liability of the residuary estate to the lessor; but this did not affect their right, as between Richard Ashby and themselves, to require that the expense of the repairs should be borne by Richard Ashby rather than by the residuary estate. In Shadbolt v. Woodfall, 2 Coll. 30, it was held, that an executor who had assented unconditionally to a specific bequest of the testator's personal estate, was not entitled to an indemnity out of the testator's general estate in respect of his covenant contained in the lease; but in the present case it did not appear that such an assent was given. His lordship thought, therefore, that the order of the 12th July, 1844, was wrong in directing the possession of the leaseholds to be given up to Richard Ashby: that he ought to have been required to give an indemnity to the executors of the testatrix against the liability before being let into possession, and then there would be no need of impounding any part of the residuary estate for the purpose of indemnifying the executors. That it was not an easy matter to make a decree which would be consistent with the rights and equities of the various parties interested, namely, the executors of the testatrix, the executors of James Boyer, the representative of Richard Ashby, and the lessor; but for the reasons before given, he thought he should be accomplishing that, as far as might be, by declaring that Richard Ashby took the premises subject to the liability of performing the covenant to repair contained in the lease under which the testatrix held the premises, and by directing the personal representative of Richard Ashby to deliver up possession to the executors of the testatrix, until he should either do the repairs or cause them to be done by the under-lessees, or should otherwise indemnify the executors of the testatrix against their liability, and that the present indemnity fund be made up as directed by the order of the 30th May, 1846; and that when the executors of the testatrix should have been so indemnified by the personal representative of Richard Ashby, then the fund retained as an indemnity out of the original fund be paid to the executors of James Boyer, and the dividends be paid to them in the meantime, and that the personal representative of Richard Ashby should be at liberty to take proceedings against the under-lessees, and for that purpose to use the names of the executors of the testatrix, they being indemnified therein out of the fund retained by them. His lordship concluded by observing that he thought it right that the personal representative of Richard Ashby should have an opportunity of contesting that order, if she thought she could, after his lordship's observations, successfully contend that it should not be made, or that it ought to be varied in any respect; the before-mentioned order would therefore be made, unless she should, within one month, present a petition to have the matter reheard before his lordship, or the Lord Chancellor for the time being. Dean and Chapter of Ely v. Bliss.

Tithes—Statute of Limitations—Interpretation clauses.

To a bill by a dean and chapter for tithes accrued within twenty years, and stating a decree in 1813, establishing the right, but not alleging that tithes had been accounted for under it, and stating that the plaintiffs had in 1831 granted a lease of the tithes of the rectory, which existed till 1837, but not alleging that the lease was granted with a view to the tithes in question, or that the lessee paid anything on account of them; a plea of the statute of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, averring that the right of suit did not first accrue within twenty years, and that the plaintiffs had not been in possession within twenty years, was (overruling the decision of the late Master of the Rolls) disallowed.

The right to tithes as against an ecclesiastical corporation aggregate is not barred under the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, by non-payment for twenty years.

This was a plea to a bill for tithes.

The plaintiffs were grantees under letters patent granted in the 33rd year of Henry 8, of the rectory or parsonage of Lakenheath, and of the tithes therein arising. Within the titheable places of the parish of Lakenheath there was a district called Lakenheath Fen, which was formerly uninclosed and unproductive; but the lands therein were afterwards drained, and subsequently brought into a state of cultivation, and had since been used and cultivated as arable, meadow, and pasture land, and produced titheable matters of considerable value, the tithes of which since the year 1837 ought to have been rendered to the plaintiffs; that the defendant, among others, was an occupier of land within the district, and had in every year since that time taken titheable matters without setting out any tithes to the plaintiffs; the bill charged that the lands were not exempted from payment; that in former times they were frequently under water, and were not till about fifty years ago brought into regular cultivation, and did not produce any corn or grain, or not any considerable quantity; that the tithes of lamb and wool of sheep fed thereon were paid to the plaintiffs or their lessees, and other tithes were paid to the vicar; and by way of evidence that the land was not exempt from payment of tithes; that in the year 1808 the lessees of the plaintiffs filed their bill against certain occupiers of land stated to be within the district for an account of tithes; that the defendants to that bill alleged an exemption, but that on the 16th of December, 1813, an account of tithes was decreed; and it further charged that under an indenture dated the 4th of March, 1831, the rectory and tithes of Lakenheath were demised to a lessee for a term of years, which was surrendered on the 21st of December, 1837, from which day the account of tithes was claimed.

To this bill the defendant pleaded the statute of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, and that neither the plaintiffs nor any person through whom they claimed had been in possession or receipt of the profits of the tithes of Lakenheath Fen, or any of them, within twenty years next before the institution of the suit, and that no acknowledgment of the titles (if any) of the plaintiffs to the tithes, or any of them, had ever been given to the plaintiffs or their agent in writing, signed by the defendant, nor to his knowledge or belief by any other person in possession or receipt of the profits of the tithes within twenty years next before the institution of the suit.

The question, therefore, was, whether the plaintiffs' right (if any they had) was extinguished, or whether they were barred of their right or remedy by the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27.

Lord Langdale, M.R. in 1842, allowed the plea, but gave the plaintiffs leave to amend their bill. (5 Bea. 574.) The matter was subsequently brought, on appeal, before Lord Lyndhurst, L.C. who sent a case for the opinion of the Court of Ex. The judges of that Court certified in favour of the plaintiffs, but on the certificate coming before Lord Cottenham, L.C. his lordship sent a case for the opinion of the Court of C.P. The judges of that Court also certified in favour of the plaintiffs, who now appealed against the decision of the Master of the Rolls, and prayed that the plea might be overruled.

Bethell (Lloyd and Fleming with him) argued the case for the appellant; and Rolt (with him Eagle) for the respondents.

His lordship refused to hear more than one counsel on each side on the argument of a mere point of law.

The following cases were cited: Grant v. Ellis, 9 M. & W. 113; Cholmondeley v. Clinton, T. & R. 107; Doe v. Knight, 2 M. & W. 911; Culley v. Taylornon, 11 Ad. & E. 1008; James v. Salter, 3 Bing. N.C. 553; Governors of Luton School v. Smith, 3 Eag. & Y. 1117. The several sections of the statutes, 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 100, and 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, which (so far as is material) are set out in the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, were referred to and commented on.

Bethell in reply.

The Lord Chancellor.—I think that in this case all the difficulties have arisen from the way in which the legislation, as regards tithes and real property, has been carried on. Lord Tenterden had his plan, and the Real Property Commissioners theirs; both plans were carried on at the same time; and as no proper communication existed between them, nor sufficient attention paid to the several Acts of Parliament, which were leading to the same conclusion, the difficulties have arisen with which the Courts have had to contend. As regards tithes two things were intended to be provided for; the estate in tithes,—tithes in lay hands being just as much a subject of conveyance, of enjoyment, of transfer, and of disposition as the land or any other property, and capable of being, not perhaps strictly divested, but diverted from the right owner into other channels, and in respect to which the right owner himself would have a remedy under the Acts of Parliament, as they stood before those which are now before me were passed;—and the common render of tithes: that was of course a distinct subject, being simply the render of a chattel, and having nothing whatever to do with the inheritance or the persons to whom it belonged. The Acts of Parliament intended to provide in different ways for both those rights; the right as between adverse claimants to tithes,—that is, not the parson, or layman, for example, claiming tithes as against the landholder, but the two persons claiming one adversely against the other, the right to the inheritance and the estate in the tithes. The first Act of Parliament (Lord Tenterden's Act), certainly only intended to apply to the case of tithes as a render, and not to an estate in tithes as between adverse claimants; it was intended only to apply to moduses and to compositions real and the like, and there has therefore been a very great contest, which is now at an end, in the case of Salkeld v. Johnston, whether or not you could set up, under that Act of Parliament, a mere non-payment, in discharge of tithes, without shewing a foundation to which you were to refer that nonpayment, that is, shewing a composition real, for example, or a conveyance to yourself which would account for their nonpayment. That point now seems to be settled.

Rolt.—That case is under appeal.

The Lord Chancellor.—Of that I was not aware; but it has by considerable authority been decided that a mere nonpayment is within this Act of Parliament. Now, this Act of Parliament, although it provides for rights to tithes, and shortens the time for making out a claim in discharge of them, and as against the claim to the tithe is a statute of limitations, yet it does not provide strictly for the mere recovery of tithes, as tithe in the ordinary case of a render of tithes: and it was not necessary to do so, for the Acts of Parliament which had already passed had provided sufficient remedies for the tithe owner as against the tithe payer, and the time had been limited for which arrears could be recovered, to six years; therefore there was no necessity for any legislation on that head. The construction which has been put on this Act of Parliament would certainly place the law of tithes on a very satisfactory footing, if that be the true construction. Now, after this Act of Parliament had passed, but before it came into operation as regards its enactments, the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, was passed, and the question is, whether that latter Act of Parliament has or not repealed a portion of the former, and lessened the time imposed by that Act, and created a less bar in the case of a claim to tithes as a chattel. Now, without looking at the Act of Parliament, it would certainly require a very strong case to enable this Court to say that an Act of Parliament passed so recently after the former one (upon the occasion of which it is impossible to suppose that there was not some knowledge of the former Act of Parliament, creating as it did a great sensation, being a very great movement as regarded the rights of the church), which does not profess to repeal a leading enactment in it, should, by construction, have that effect. What one would naturally have expected to have found upon the face of the later Act would have been a statement of what had been done the year before; an intention to diminish the time limited by that Act, and to make a new enactment; that is not to be found, but still, if by the later Act of Parliament the Legislature has really effected that which is represented, I must of course give effect to that later Act, though the operation would be to abrogate a portion of the earlier. I have, then, first to consider what the real operation of the statute 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, is. The meaning of the words is doubtful. You are told (what you would have supplied if you had not been told) that the words are not to have that meaning attached to them if a contrary intention appears, and therefore if the contrary intention should appear, you are not to apply to the words the meaning you find. It has been very much doubted, and I am afraid I concur in that doubt, whether the interpretation clauses of the Acts of Parliament have not introduced more mischief than they have avoided, for they have attempted to put a general construction on words which do not admit, in the different senses in which the clauses are introduced, of that construction. Under the old mode of drawing Acts of Parliament a man in framing different clauses had to consider the sense in which he used the words, and to apply it according to the provisions which he was making; whereas, in giving them general sense the framer must now go on thinking he has provided or will provide for every sense in which he has used or will use the word, and if words are introduced which are equivalent to the word or question which is wanted, when you come to introduce the word in its proper place you find it has nothing there properly applicable to it. However, it is perfectly clear that "Tithes, other than those belonging to spiritual or eleemosynary corporations sole, and any share, estate, or interest in them or any of them, whether the same shall be a freehold or chattel interest, and whether freehold, or copyhold, or held according to any other tenure," are included, the word "land" shall extend to that; and the word "rent" is made to extend "to all periodical payments, except moduses or compositions belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole." The word "land" is said to include "tithes," and "rent," "periodical payments," but as neither was intended to include either tithe, or what represented tithe,—modus, or composition belonging to a spiritual or eleemosynary corporation sole,—in each case the exception was introduced. We have, therefore, to find out in what sense the word is used when we come to the particular provision. Assuming that the word "land" means "tithes," and that "rent" means modus in lieu of tithes, except in the particular case, we come to what is admitted to be the section which is to govern this case (sec. 2.) It must be borne in mind, that an estate in tithes was for this purpose precisely the same as an estate in land. It might be lost; it might be recovered; it might be the subject of disposition in every way just the same as the land. Now, that clause declares that after such a day "no person shall make an entry or distress, or bring an action, or suit, to recover any land or rent, but within twenty years next, after the time at which the right to make such entry, or distress, or to bring such action or suit, shall have first accrued to some person through whom he claims; or if such right shall not have accrued to any person through whom he claims, then within twenty years next after the time at which the right to make such entry, or distress, or to bring such action or suit, shall have first accrued to the person making or bringing the same." Now, it is admitted that these words do properly apply to the estate in a rent, and to the estate in tithes. Nobody denies or can deny that; and it is supposed, even if that is to be the sole construction, yet that the defendant can maintain his plea. But what is the real intent and meaning of this Act of Parliament? I think it clear, from repeated consideration, that the word "rent" as here spoken of, means "rent of inheritance," and not rent, reserved by a lease for example, or rent in the common and ordinary form of a render of rent for property. That, by some analogy, may be applied to land; land means the inheritance of land—the freehold of land; it does not deal with land in any other sense than in that of a person who has the right to the land itself. Now, "land" includes "tithe," and tithe being represented by land, it must be subject to the same rule, and open to the same interpretation as land itself: must not, therefore, tithe mean primâ facie the very same thing? There is the same subject for it to operate upon; there was the same intention as regards the barring of any adverse claim. It has clearly that operation; but has it any more extensive operation? If it has, it would then interfere with the former Act of Parliament. If I give to the word "tithe" as extensive an operation as the word "land," in which I find it in company, I do no violence to anything,—I leave the former Act of Parliament to operate in the very case which is now before me, independently of the provision of the other Act of Parliament as regards the arrears to be recovered, the penalties for non-setting out of tithes, and so on; but if I do give to "tithes" a greater operation than I do to "land" or "rent," I then interfere with the former Act of Parliament which has not been repealed. These Acts of Parliament are in pari materia, and I ought to make them consistent; I ought to make them provide for the different cases which they were intended to remedy. I do not intend to set up the one against the other, and to give the one an enlarged construction for the mere purpose of repealing the other. This is not a casus omissus; it is not a case which requires to be provided for. I do not intend to cut down a clear, precise provision in a former Act of Parliament, just recently passed for this very case; I am desired to cut it down as to this particular case, but leaving it to operate in every other; I am asked to repeal an Act of Parliament, in order to provide for a case which is already sufficiently provided for. Is there anything to justify me in doing that? Is there anything in the farther provisions of the Act of Parliament to compel me to do so? Assuming that the Act has a consistent operation, I will postpone considering whether it admits of the construction which has been contended for. But to ascertain whether it has a consistent operation or not, let us pass on to the 24th section. That section is, I must say, very much against the plea. Remembering, then, that "rent" means "all periodical payments," and "land" "tithe," the section declares "no person claiming any land, or tithe, or rent in equity, shall bring any suit to recover the same but within the period during which, by virtue of the provisions hereinbefore contained, he might have made an entry or distress, or brought an action to recover the same respectively if he had been entitled at law to such estate, interest, or right in or to the same as he shall claim therein in equity." Speaking as a real property lawyer, there is hardly a word in this clause but what militates against the claim set up by the defendant: it as clearly confines it to the estate as almost any words can do. When they are speaking of entry and distress (and I am proceeding on those words), that entry or distress is referred properly to rent, and the action or suit is referred properly to land, and so to tithes. The proper words would be confined to land; but the words are, when any person "brings a suit to recover tithes under the provisions hereinbefore contained." We have already seen that those provisions, according to sec. 2, would only enable you to recover them in respect of an estate in the tithes, and not to recover them quâ tithes from the person who was bound to render them; then looking at it in that view, this clause is perfectly clear, that no person can in equity go beyond the time which is before limited for the recovery of the estate in the tithes,—and the construction I have now adopted gives to every word in this clause its proper operation, without doing the slightest violence. I apprehend, therefore, that that clause tells very much against the claim, and very much in favour of the plaintiff. Then the 43rd clause enacts that, after a given period, "no person claiming any tithes, legacy, or other property, for the recovery of which he might bring an action or suit at law or in equity, shall bring a suit or other proceeding in any Spiritual Court to recover the same, but within the period during which he might bring such action or suit at law or in equity." Now, it was insisted that that section proved clearly that tithes were being dealt with as a chattel, even though it might be admitted that they were also being dealt with as an inheritance; but there is this difference between the 24th and the 43rd clause; you will see that when they are speaking of a remedy in equity being only co-extensive with the right at law, in the 24th clause, they are speaking of the right to recover "by virtue of the provision hereinbefore contained;" but when they are speaking of the 43rd clause, in which they mean to bind the proceedings in Spiritual Courts, a general provision is put in that "no person claiming any tithes, legacy, or other property, for the recovery of which he might bring an action or suit at law or in equity," shall bring a suit or other proceeding in the spiritual or any other court, but within the period. Now, if that be the construction, it leads to no difficulty; and when I find one clause in the Act of Parliament where, by analogy, it meant to confine the proceedings in a court of equity to the remedy at law, and to confine that to the provisions before contained; and when I find another limiting proceedings in another court by the remedies at law or in equity, but not referring to the provisions contained in this particular Act of Parliament, I am bound to consider that the Legislature was there dealing generally with any right of action or any suit, and meant that nobody should go into the Spiritual Court to recover tithes or moduses unless he could within the same time have recovered at law or in equity. My opinion, therefore, is, that the second section of this Act of Parliament, governed and regulated by the other sections, does not embrace the case of a render of tithes. It was then argued, with great ingenuity and force, that, if that be so, still the defendant was perfectly right; for that, if it be confined to the estate, yet in the first place there was the doctrine of non adverse possession. Now, it is perfectly settled that "adverse possession" is no longer used in the sense in which it was formally. Mere possession may be and is sufficient, under many circumstances, to give a title adversely, and after all, no better expression than "adverse possession" can be used; now, because it is "adverse," but not adverse in the sense in which that phrase was used before these Acts of Parliament were passed, it is said, and said truly, that by the 34th clause, where the remedy is gone, the right also is extinguished. The former Act of Parliament left the right in the party, but barred the remedy. This Act of Parliament more wisely intended, when the remedy was barred, to extinguish the right: the words are, when the remedy is gone, "that the right and title of the person shall be extinguished." Now, it is first said, could that be extinguished on a mere duty of rendering the tithes? That question really need not embarrass the Court, because the Act of Parliament says "the right shall be extinguished." It is not necessary to shew that it was transferred to somebody else, but extinguishment would be sufficient. It is then said, that if it be extinguished, any claim between two persons who were proceeding adversely for the estate in the tithes, the extinguishment must take place to all intents; and that therefore the person liable to render the tithes—the landowner subject to tithes—would have the benefit of that extinguishment. They say if A. and B. are disputing, and A. brings an action of ejectment, or a suit against B. for the tithes of a particular place, it is sufficient for B. to say in answer to A. "You have been so many years out of possession, and your right is extinguished, and thereupon it is extinguished." Then the learned counsel says that extinguishment will operate and enure to the benefit of B.; for an extinguishment takes place for the benefit of the whole world; and that B. therefore, who is liable to render the tithe (the right of the person who claims the tithes being extinguished), is wholly discharged of tithe. Now, the fallacy of that is of course this, that in the case supposed it is a case, from the very nature of which, the landholder is rendering the tithe without dispute; but here there is a dispute as to the liability of the landholder to pay tithe, and not a dispute as to his rendering tithe; the dispute is between a person who has been receiving the tithe for a certain number of years, without, as another person alleges, having a title to that tithe; and then the man who claims that tithe brings an action or institutes a suit against the man who has been receiving the tithe, insisting that the estate and the title in the tithes is in him the claimant. Well, the statute being set up, the claimant is defeated; and, as regards him, his right is extinguished if he had any right. But then, what is the consequence? There is no dispute or doubt raised as to the person who was not present, and not a particle of proceeding as regards the person who is to render the tithe; but the primâ facie result is, that the person who has succeeded in defeating the claimant is himself in possession of the tithe; the tithe has been rendered to him, and he will maintain, if he can, his title against the person liable to pay the tithe. It is a question, therefore, to whom the tithe has been rendered. It is a question of extinguishing the title of one of two adverse claimants, but it does not involve in any manner the question of the liability to render the tithe itself; that question could only arise on a claim by one of those persons against the tithe claimer, and never can be effected by a contest or litigation between persons claiming the estate in the tithe. Whether the case might arise in which one claimant would be barred by the statute set up by the other, and on which the person who set up the statute could not afterwards maintain an action against the person claiming the tithe; I have nothing to do with that. I am looking to the Act of Parliament to see whether in this particular case I could apply that doctrine of extinguishment so as to give a title to the defendant; but what possible ground is there for it,—on what foundation is it to rest? Here the person is claiming the tithe and there is no contest about the title to it. There are not two claimants to the tithe: there is but one claimant, and if his title be not good, nobody else can claim it. There has been no plea set up that another person has been receiving the tithe as claimant; it is a simple question whether this corporation aggregate is or is not entitled to the tithes in kind; it is a question of render, not involving a question of title as between two adverse claimants to the estate in the tithe, and therefore this portion of the Act of Parliament, in my clear opinion, has no bearing on the real merits of the case in point of law. I believe full justice has been done to both parties: nothing could have been added, and it would be a waste of time for me to discuss it further. The result, in my very clear opinion is, that this Act of Parliament does not take away the right of the plaintiff as against the defendant. I do not go into the minor point, as to the difficulties which might arise as to the length of time—taking the leading provisions of the Act, I am of opinion that the Courts have properly made the two Acts stand consistently with each other—standing both together, and each having its own operation, they appear to form a very convenient and useful body of law, and I am not at all disposed, nor have I a right to break in upon it in the way I should do were I to agree in the defence set up. The consequence, therefore, is, that the plea must be overruled, and the case must then proceed in the ordinary way.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Wednesday, March 3.

Ex parte THOMAS ORFORD and JOHN ORFORD; and Re PHILIP RUFFORD, FRANCIS RUFFORD, and CHARLES JOHN WRAGGE.

The rules of a Friendly Society provided that there should be appointed a treasurer or treasurers, in whose hands should be deposited all the cash belonging to the society, till the same could be placed out at interest; and that, as soon as a sufficient sum should be collected, it should (after leaving in the club-box a sufficient sum to pay the sick, and other expenses of the society), be deposited in the hands of the treasurer or treasurers of the society, and that the clerk and two stewards should take the same to the bank. The moneys of the society were paid into a banker's, who were not, however, appointed treasurers of the society.

Held, that the bankers were not "employed" as officers of the society, so as to enable the society upon their bankruptcy to obtain payment in full.

COURT OF APPEAL.

This was an appeal from the refusal of the commissioner to order payment in full out of the estate of the bankrupts to the appellants, who were the stewards of a friendly society, whose rules had been duly allowed, certified, confirmed, and enrolled under the Acts relating to Friendly Societies.

By rule 2, it was provided, "That there shall be a book or books of account kept by a clerk to be appointed by a majority of the members, who shall be allowed a yearly salary, and if he shall neglect to attend to the business of this society after he shall be so appointed, or wilfully, designedly, or negligently defraud, or attempt to defraud this society, or any member thereof, he shall make good any loss, damage, or deficiency that may be occasioned by such neglect or attempt to defraud, and be expelled the society."

By rule 3 it was provided, "That there shall be a treasurer or treasurers appointed in like manner as the clerk, but who must not be a member or members of this society, in whose hands shall be deposited all the cash belonging to this society, till the same can be placed out at interest upon satisfactory security to be obtained for that purpose."

By rule 21 it was provided, "That as soon as a sufficient sum of money shall be collected, the same shall (after leaving a sufficient sum in the club box to pay the sick and other expenses of the society) be deposited in the hands of the treasurer or treasurers of this society, and that the clerk and two stewards shall take the same to the bank, for which they shall be allowed one quart of ale each; and if any member shall, on any pretence whatever, draw any money from the bank, except the clerk and two stewards are present, he shall be expelled, and make good what he has drawn therefrom."

The bankrupts were bankers, carrying on business under the style or firm of Rufford and Wragge, at Stourbridge, in Worcestershire.

It was not alleged by the appellants that the bankrupts had been appointed to be treasurers or officers of the society; but they alleged by their petition and affidavit that the bankrupts were employed in the office as treasurers of and in the society, and had in their hands and possession at the time of the adjudication of bankruptcy, by virtue of their office and employment, certain moneys belonging to such society amounting to the sum of 132*l.* 0s. 11d. and that this money was in the hands of Philip Rufford, Francis Rufford, and Charles John Wragge, not as bankers of the society, and in the ordinary way of their banking business, but wholly as treasurers of the society.

Bacon and Renshaw, in support of the appeal, cited the 167th section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, which enacts,—"That if any person already appointed or employed, or who may be hereafter appointed to or employed in any office in any society, established under any of the Acts relating to friendly societies, and being intrusted with the keeping of the accounts or having in his hands or possession, by virtue of his office or employment, any moneys or effects belonging to such society, or any deeds or securities relating to the same, shall have been or shall become bankrupt, the Court shall, upon application made by the order of any such society, or any committee thereof, or the major part of them, assembled at any meeting thereof, order payment and delivery over to be made to such society, or to such person as such society or committee may appoint, of all moneys and other things belonging to such society, and shall also order payment out of the estate and effects of the bankrupt of all sums of money remaining due which the bankrupt received by virtue of his said office or employment before any other of his debts are paid or satisfied." They contended that it could not but be observed that this section was very materially different from the language employed in former statutes, which required that the bankrupt should have been "appointed" to an office in the society to enable the society to obtain payment in full of their money in his hands. But the new Act only required that he should be "appointed or employed" in any office in any society. This case was therefore distinguishable from Ex parte Harris, 1 De G. 162. They also cited and commented on Ex parte Riddell, 3 M. D. & D. 80.

Swanston and J. V. Prior, for the respondents, were not called upon by the Court.

Their Lordships said, they considered it to be clear that the bankrupts were not officers within the provisions of the Act, and that the appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Thursday, March 11.

Ex parte Samuel Bean, Re John Wilkinson, a Bankrupt.

A creditor may present a petition to annul an adjudication to the commissioner, and the appeal from the commissioner's decision will be within due time, if it be presented within twenty-one days from the time it was delivered, although much more time may have elapsed since the adjudication.

It is not a sufficient ground for refusing to annul an adjudication, supported by legal requisites, that the order to annul will leave unimpeached, an assignment of all the bankrupt's effects to the creditor applying for the annulling order.

In this case a creditor appealed from the decision of the commissioner, dismissing the appellant's petition of the 30th of June, 1851, to have the adjudication annulled, for want of an act of bankruptcy, or of a sufficient petitioning creditor's debt. The bankrupt, it appeared, had made an assignment of all his property in August, 1847, to the appellant Bean. The adjudications took place on the 12th of May, 1851, upon the petition of Thomas Bittleston and John Watson, the assignees of another bankrupt named Wakefield. The day appointed for hearing his petition was the 11th of July, when he attended the district Court. A sitting took place on the same day for the proof of debts, and the petitioning creditors who were opposed by the assignees, tendered proof of their alleged debts, but the commissioner, after hearing evidence and examining witnesses thereon, ordered the proof to be admitted for 1,291*l.* 14s. 3d.; moreover, he directed the appellant's petition to stand over until the 15th of August. On that day, the petition came on for hearing, but was further adjourned in consequence of an appeal having been presented by the assignees from the admission of the proof of the petitioning creditor's alleged debt. On the 11th of December the appeal was heard by the Lords Justices, who made an order declaring that no evidence had been brought before the Court on which the proof of the sum of 1,291*l.* 14s. 3d. could be sustained, and directed that the proof should be expunged from the proceedings, and that the costs of the appeal should be paid out of the estate of the bankrupt, Thomas Wakefield. The appellant's petition again came on before the commissioner, on the 20th of February, 1852, whereupon it was dismissed with costs. The learned commissioner, as it appeared from his judgment, arrived at this conclusion on the authority of Ex parte Maxwell, 3 M. D. & D. 708, from which it appeared that the Court had the discretion to accede to or refuse the application. That the assignment which had been made in the month of August 1847, to Bean, of all the bankrupt's property, would operate certainly to the prejudice of all the other creditors except the appellant, as the effect of annulling the proceedings would be immediately to give the appellant the benefit of that transaction. Upon these grounds, therefore, the commissioner held that he should exercise his discretion improperly if he did not decide against the application of the appellant to annul the proceedings. The commissioner considered it proved that an act of bankruptcy had been committed. The commissioner said the case of Ex parte Jones, 3 Deac. & Ch. 697, showed that applications of this kind, although the interest of the creditor was adverse to that of the creditors at large, were sometimes successful, but still there must be a grievance on the part of the creditor, something of which he had a personal right to complain. There must be merits on his part; so that if his application were not acceded to, he would have a right to say he was aggrieved. This, in his opinion, could not be said in the present case, as the application was intended to give the appellant the advantage of what he could not but consider a fraudulent act as regarded the creditors namely, a secret conveyance, when the bankrupt was permitted to remain apparently the owner after his ownership had terminated. Upon this account he therefore refused to annul the bankruptcy, and directed the costs to be paid by the appellant.

Swanston and Daniel, in support of the appeal.

Glasse and Hardy, for the petitioning creditor, took a preliminary objection that this was an appeal from the adjudication made after the expiration of twenty-one days, as the time for appeal ought to be reckoned from the day on which the adjudication was made. They cited Ex parte Carter, 1 De G. Mac. & G. 212.

By an arrangement between the parties it was agreed that the whole case should be argued together, but the petitioning creditor's counsel not being in a position to shew the existence of the legal requisites, they asked the Court to decide upon the preliminary objection, and the grounds upon which the commissioner, in the exercise of his discretion, had refused the application.

During the argument of counsel,

Lord Justice Knight Bruce said, he agreed that the statutory provision with regard to reputed ownership, so far as it went beyond the common law, had been probably productive of more injustice than justice, although in some instances it had, no doubt, done good.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth said, that there appeared to have been nothing deceptive in the transaction in question as to the assignment. The creditor had left the debtor in possession, and had, when he thought the property in jeopardy, taken possession himself. It might be that he had done so too late, but the proceeding did not appear to be fraudulent.

COURT OF APPEAL.

Bacon and Terrell, for the assignees, argued in opposition to the appeal.

Swanston replied.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce said, that the petition for adjudication appeared, so far as the evidence before the Court went, to be unsupported by the legal requisites. The case, therefore, failed at law. That, however, was not decisive. Still, when a bankruptcy was insufficient at law, it lay upon those who attempted to support it to shew equitable grounds for sustaining it. There appeared in this case to be no such grounds shewn. With respect to the time of the application, it was made to the commissioner at the end of seventeen days, and if there was any delay it took place by reason of the pendency of an application by the bankrupt for the same purpose. It was contended that the learned commissioner had no jurisdiction to annul the adjudication upon the application of Mr. Bean, because the adjudication took place on the 12th of May, and Mr. Bean's petition of appeal to this Court was not presented till the 20th of June, after an interval much beyond twenty-one days. That their lordships were, therefore, of opinion that it was not a case of appeal within the 12th section of the Act, from the order of the adjudication, but that the appellant's original application to have the adjudication annulled was properly made to the commissioner under the general jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Act of Parliament, and that it was not until he had adjudicated upon that application of Mr. Bean that a case for appeal arose. So far as Mr. Bean was concerned, from the moment when Mr. Bean's application to the commissioner was rejected, and not before, it became a case for an appeal as regarded Mr. Bean. He had appealed within twenty-one days after the decision. That was the way in which their lordships viewed the case.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth concurred.

The adjudication was accordingly annulled.

IN LUNACY.

Friday, April 2.

Re Cumming.

Traverse of inquisition—Care of lunatic's person and estate pending traverse—Appointment of committees of person and estate.

Pending a traverse of an inquisition under a commission of lunacy whereby a lady was found a lunatic the Master's report was confirmed, appointing committees of her person and estate, but the Court considered that under the circumstances of the case, the committee of the estate should pay the income thereof to the supposed lunatic, and that the system of personal care already established and subsisting under former orders, should not be interfered with until further order.

In this case a commission having issued in pursuance of an order made by their lordships, dated the 22nd of December, 1851, at the instance of the daughters of Mrs. Catherine Cumming, an inquisition was taken in January, 1852, by which it was found that she was a person of unsound mind, and had been of unsound mind from the 1st of May, 1846.

On the 28th January, 1852, Mrs. Catherine Cumming presented a petition to the Lord Chancellor, stating the facts above mentioned, and further stating that she, the petitioner, was and always had been of sound mind, and that she was aggrieved by such inquisition, and was desirous to traverse the same: the petition prayed that she might be at liberty to traverse the inquisition, and that, in the meantime, all further proceedings before the Masters in lunacy in the matter might be stayed, or that such further or other order in the premises might be made as should seem meet.

The petition was first brought on before their lordships, but was afterwards heard before the full Court of Appeal, viz.—the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices. The principal question discussed was, whether Mrs. Cumming was entitled as of right to traverse the inquisition. Upon the petition coming on to be heard, Mrs. Catherine Cumming having, in pursuance of the Lord Chancellor's order in that behalf, personally attended him, and been examined by him as to her wish to traverse the aforesaid inquisition, and having expressed her wish so to do, and it appearing to him upon such examination that the said Catherine Cumming was mentally competent to form and express such wish as aforesaid, the Court declared, under the circumstances, that the said Catherine Cumming was entitled as of right to traverse the aforesaid inquisition; and they thereby ordered that she was to be at liberty to traverse the same accordingly. [Directions are then given as to the mode of the trial of the traverse.] And it was thereby further ordered, that so much of the said petition, as prayed for stay of proceedings in the matter should stand over.

On the 2nd of April, 1852, so much of the petition as was undisposed of by the full Court of Appeal, came on to be heard before the Lords Justices. At the same time a petition presented by the next of kin of Mrs. Cumming (who was also the co-heiress-at-law) came on to be heard, and it prayed a confirmation of the Master's report, approving of Miss Louisa Baker to be the committee of the person, and Mr. James Sharp to be the committee of the estate of Mrs. Cumming; it also prayed for taxation and payment out of the lunatic's estate, of the costs of the original application for a commission in aid of the proceedings thereon.

Bethell, Roundell Palmer, and Southgate, for Mrs. Cumming, contended that pending a traverse, the stay of proceedings, before the passing of 6 Geo. 4, c. 53, would have been a matter of course. That it was not the object of the Legislature by that statute to make it imperative upon the Court to take proceedings as if the right to traverse the inquisition was not conceded, and as if the validity of the commission was not called in question. That statute was merely passed in order to give jurisdiction to the Court in matters wherein it was defective. That with regard to this particular case, it was of the utmost importance that no change should be made in the establishment of the lunatic pending the traverse. That if the Master's report was confirmed, appointing a committee of the person, and Mrs. Cumming was placed in the hands of the friends of those who sued out the commission, and deprived in consequence, either wholly or to a great extent, of intercourse with those friends in whose good wishes and upon whose advice she relied and was now proceeding, she would not have it in her power to contest in a fair and proper manner the validity of those proceedings by which she was declared a lunatic and unfit for the management of her own affairs. It was not shewn that the person who resided with Mrs. Cumming was not in any way a proper and fit person to be with her. With regard to the appointment of a committee of the estate, the property was not of such a nature as to render such an appointment at the present time a matter of immediate necessity or expediency. That in such cases the Court had full power to act according to its own discretion; and in this particular case the evidence shews that if the proceedings are not stayed according to the prayer of the petition of Mrs. Cumming, not only will her comforts and health be most materially affected, but even the administration of justice in a fair and impartial manner will be endangered.

Sir W. Page Wood and Morris, for the next of kin, said, that they were only desirous of providing for the safety of the lunatic and her property pending the traverse. That as the commission still existed under which Mrs. Cumming had been found lunatic, her lunacy must be assumed to exist, and all proceedings ought to go on, unless, as they contended was not done in the present case, some good cause was shewn for the Court interposing to stay them. Moreover, as the lunatic had not been served with the petition for the confirmation of the report, she was not entitled to appear or to be heard on the petition. With regard to costs, their payment ought to be directed, for if the traverse were successful, the Court might not have it in its power to give them, although it might be most just and equitable that it should do so. Re Loveday, 1 De G. Mac. & Gord. 275.

Roundell Palmer in reply.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said, that he was of opinion that the benefit of Mrs. Cumming would be best consulted by interposing not at all, or as little as possible, with the system of personal care of her which existed at this present time. But that no sufficient reason had been shewn why the committees should not be appointed, or why the grant should not take place, care being taken that the income of the property should be received by her as if the grant were not made, and that the present system of personal care should not be interfered with till further order. His lordship thought, therefore, that the petition should stand over so far as related to costs.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH concurred.

The order was in the following terms:—

"Whereas the said Catherine Cumming did, on the 28th day of January last, prefer her petition, whereby she prayed, &c. And whereas the said petition having come on to be heard, &c. And whereas Benjamin Bailey Hooper, and Thomasine Catherine, his wife, and John Ince, and Catherine Elizabeth, his wife, did, on the 4th day of February last, prefer their petition, &c. Whereupon all parties, &c. And the said petition, and so much of the petition of the said Catherine Cumming as was ordered to stand over as aforesaid, coming on to be heard before us on this day, in the presence of Sir William Page Wood and Mr. Morris, of counsel for the said Benjamin Bailey Hooper and Thomasine Catherine his wife, and John Ince and Catherine Elizabeth, his wife; and of Mr. Bethell and Mr. Roundell Palmer and Mr. Southgate, of counsel for the said Catherine Cumming, and upon hearing the said petition and the said report read, and what was alleged by the counsel aforesaid, we do think fit, and hereby order that the said report be confirmed. And we do hereby further order, that the custody of the person of the said Catherine Cumming be granted to the said Louisa Baker; and the care and management of the estate of the said Catherine Cumming to the said James Sharp respectively, for the time to come until further order, he, the said James Sharp, first giving such security as her Majesty's Attorney-General," &c. [Here come the general directions.] "And after the said Masters or Master shall in that case have made their or his report, such further order shall be made as shall be just. And we do hereby further order, that the clear yearly income of the estates of the said Catherine Cumming, as and when the same shall be received by the said James Sharp as committee of the estate, be paid by him to the said Catherine Cumming until further order, and that such payment be allowed him on passing his account in this matter. And we do think fit, and hereby further order, that the system of personal care of the said Catherine Cumming's estates hereby and now subsisting under the orders in this matter, dated respectively the 20th day of November, 1851, and the 22nd day of December, 1851, be not in any way interfered with by the said Louisa Baker, as the committee of the person or otherwise, and be continued until further order, excepting that Sarah Wonham, the nurse of Effra Hall Asylum, be discharged. And we do hereby further order that the rest of the matters prayed by the said secondly mentioned petition do stand over."

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

March 17 and April 1.

DUBERLY v. DAY.

Chose in action—Chattel real—Reversionary interest—Husband and wife.

A renewable leasehold belonging to the wife was, by her marriage settlement, vested in trustees, upon trust for her separate use, during the joint lives of husband and wife; and if the wife survived, then subject to a trust for raising portions for her absolutely; but if the husband survived, then, subject to a tithe trust, for him for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage absolutely. The husband and wife executed various deeds, charging, or purporting to charge, the whole property settled, with certain incumbrances. The wife survived:

Held, that the charges were invalid as against the wife surviving, and that the husband could not effectually charge the reversionary interest of his wife in the leasehold, as it could not by possibility vest in possession during his life, being limited to his wife only, if she survived.

By the marriage-settlement of James Golborne and Mary his wife, bearing date the 21st of April, 1812, certain freehold, the property of the wife, together with the rectory of Whitcham, in the Isle of Ely, held by her under a lease from the dean and chapter of Ely for a term of years, were conveyed to trustees upon trust, subject to the payment of the rents, taxes, and other outgoings, and subject to the retaining and laying up an annual sum for payment of the renewal fines for renewing the lease, "from time to time during the joint lives of the said James Golborne and Mary Golborne, to pay the net residue and remainder of the rents and profits of the said freehold and leasehold lands, rectory, and hereditaments unto such person or persons, and for such uses and purposes, as she the said Mary Golborne from time to time, notwithstanding her coverture, should by any note or writing under her hand direct or appoint; and for want of such direction or appointment, then into the proper hands of the said Mary Golborne, or otherwise permit and suffer her to receive the same for her own sole and separate use and benefit and her receipt alone, notwithstanding her coverture, to be a full and sufficient discharge to the person or persons paying the same." And in case there should be issue by the marriage there was a trust, after the decease of either husband or wife, to raise 5,000*l.* for portions. And if there should be issue, and the said James Golborne should die in the lifetime of the said Mary Golborne, then upon trust to "pay the said residue and remainder of the rents and profits of the said freehold and leasehold lands, rectory, and hereditaments (subject nevertheless to the trust for raising the 5,000*l.* for portions) unto the said Mary Golborne, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely; and in case there should be issue, and the said Mary Golborne should die in the lifetime of the said James Golborne, then upon trust to pay the residue and remainder of the rents and profits of the said freehold and leasehold lands, rectory, and hereditaments, unto the said James Golborne and his assigns during the term of his natural life (subject to the portions), and from and immediately after his decease to convey and assure the said freehold and leasehold lands, rectory, and hereditaments, unto or for the benefit of the children of the said marriage in manner therein mentioned." There were other provisions in case there should be no issue. There were five children of the marriage. Mr. and Mrs. Golborne executed sundry deeds charging or purporting to charge the settled property with sums advanced on loan to Mr. Golborne.

On the 24th of November, 1843, the plaintiff, an incumbrancer, filed his bill for an account of what was due, and for payment or foreclosure by the mortgage. Afterwards and before the hearing of the cause James Golborne died, leaving his wife him surviving. A decree being made in the cause, a reference was directed to the Master, who found, among other things, that certain of the indentures so executed by Mr. and Mrs. Golborne did not constitute valid and effectual charges and incumbrances on the estate, right, and interest of the said Mary Golborne of and in the freehold, copyhold, and leasehold hereditaments and premises comprised in or subject to the said indenture of settlement of the 21st of April, 1812. To this report exceptions were taken by the incumbrancers, which now came on to be heard.

Stuart, K. Parker, and Hardy, in support of the exceptions.—The Master, in his report, has gone upon the principle that the assignment of the leasehold was invalid, and that, on the death of the husband, in 1847, the wife became absolutely entitled to it. It is contended by the other side that if it be a reversionary interest limited to the wife on a contingency, the husband's assignment cannot affect it; but this objection to the assignment would never have been taken but for the blending of chattels real with choses in action, and applying to the former the rule of law which is only applicable to the latter. Over a chattel real the husband has an absolute power of disposition, but he can only dispose of a chose in action after he has reduced it into possession. (Mitford v. Mitford, 9 Ves. 970; Purdew v. Jackson, 1 Russ. 50.) It is argued, also, that a possibility can never be made the subject of assignment, and it is so laid down in Co. Litt. 351 a, Butler's note, citing Lampet's case; but he applies that doctrine both to a chattel real and a chose in action; and the same note, in a later edition of Co. Litt. is modified. The case of Lyde v. Mynn, 1 Myl. & K. 683, shews that a possibility or expectancy may be assigned in equity. Then, though the life estate is to the separate use of the wife, the reversionary interest is absolute; and as to its being an equitable interest, there is no distinction between that and a legal interest. (Donne v. Hart, 2 Russ. & M. 360.) But, secondly, the great argument on the other side is before the Master, and the point that was most strongly pressed was, that it was a stipulation in the marriage contract that the property should go to the wife absolutely, in the events that have happened, and therefore that the settlement operates as a bargain by the husband not to assign the term; and if, instead of being an executed settlement, it had been merely articles for a settlement, the Court might have looked to the intention, and might have directed that the property should be so settled as to put it out of the power of the husband. But this is an executed settlement, in which there are various legal limitations of a leasehold, and the Court must give effect to them; and when it is said you must look to the intention of the settlement, that is true, but you must read that intention in the executed settlement, and not in any other document. The recital in the settlement is that the property shall be settled on the trusts thereinafter mentioned, and therefore you must go to the operative part of the deed and find what the trusts there mentioned are. (Davies v. Thornycroft, 6 Sim. 420.) The law only recognises one way of securing a wife against the marital rights of her husband, and that is by limiting the property to her separate use. (Massey v. Parker, 2 Myl. & K. 181.) But this is said to be a marriage settlement, to which argument the answer is, that if it be a deed executed there is no difference between it and any other executed deed.

Shapter for James Golborne and Mary his wife.

Lloyd and Fuller, contrà, in support of the Master's report. The reversionary interest of the wife could have been assigned by a fine, but the husband could not by a release affect her interest.

Stuart, in reply. There is a distinction between this case and that of Donne v. Hart, inasmuch as the contingency in the latter case might have happened in the lifetime of the husband; not so here. So also in the case of Doe dem. Shaw v. Steward, 1 Ad. & Ell. 34; and in Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. 122. See also the observations of the Vice-Chancellor of England in May v. Roper, 4 Sim. 363.

Thursday, April 1.—The MASTER of the ROLLS. —This case comes on upon exceptions to the Master's report, who has found that certain indentures of the 10th and 11th of January, 1838, the 13th of February, 1838, the 15th of November, 1839, and the 9th of February, 1842, do not constitute a good and effectual incumbrance upon the estate and interest of Mrs. Golborne in certain hereditaments comprised in a settlement of the 21st of April, 1812, executed upon the marriage of Mrs. Golborne with her late husband. The question to be determined is whether having regard to the terms of settlement of 1812, and the subject-matter of the settlement, the husband can dispose of the reversion of his wife in a chattel real, which is the subject of the settlement. The facts are very simple. It appears that, in the year 1812, prior to the marriage, Mrs. Golborne was possessed of the rectory and rectorial tithes of the parish of Whitcham, held of the Dean and Chapter of Ely, for the term of twenty-one years, renewable from time to time, on certain terms and conditions, which do not affect the question in this case. This property was, in consideration of her marriage, and before its solemnization, settled by an indenture bearing date the 21st of April, 1812, in the following manner, namely, to the separate use of the wife during the joint lives of herself and her husband; and in case there was issue of the marriage—which was the event which occurred—in the following manner, viz. in case she survived her husband, an absolute interest in reversion was vested in her and her executors, administrators, and assigns; and in case she died before her husband, the property was to go to the husband for life, with remainder to the issue of the marriage. All the limitations were subject to a mortgage of 5,000*l.* which, however, does not affect the question at issue. The marriage took effect, and there was issue of the marriage. By the indentures in question, that is, by the indenture bearing date the 9th of February, 1838; the 15th of February, 1839; the 9th of February, 1842, the husband, Mr. Golborne, professed to convey the reversion in this property to secure various sums of money advanced to him in consideration of such charge. The wife joined in this conveyance; and so far as she could, in the absence of all the statutory acknowledgment, professed to create and give effect to these charges. This circumstance is admitted to be immaterial, as she could not bind her interest by merely joining in such a conveyance; and accordingly her concurrence must wholly be disregarded in the determination of this question. There were issue of the marriage; the husband died in 1847; the wife survived him, and if these deeds do not create a valid and effectual charge, she is absolutely entitled to the property comprised in the term, which was the subject of the settlement. The Master has reported that these deeds do not create effectual charges upon the property; exceptions have been taken to this finding, and the question before me is whether the Master is right. In other words, the question is, whether the husband could dispose of the wife's reversionary term in her real estate, under an instrument containing limitations to the effect I have above stated. At common law, the husband, who is bound to support the wife and pay all her debts, whether contracted before or during the coverture, acquires an absolute interest in all the personal chattels and estate of which the wife is actually possessed, or to which she is entitled at any time during her coverture; with this condition, that so far as regards her choses in action, they must be reduced into possession, in order to enable him to dispose of them. With respect to the real estate of the wife, the husband has no power over it, except as he is entitled to the sums due to the wife for rent during the coverture, and he has a contingent interest as tenant by the curtesy during his life. And this may be said to belong properly to the former class; that is, personal property of the wife. It is quite settled that at law the husband may dispose of the wife's term which is vested in him, and of the wife's interest beneficially, so as to convey the same hereafter or immediately. In Donne v. Hart, reported in 2 Russ. & M. the Master of the Rolls decided that there is no difference between the legal interest in and the trusts of a term. He held that the assignment by the husband of the reversion of the wife in a chattel real was a good and effectual disposition so as to bind the wife who survived the husband. This has always been since considered as good law, and has been followed, it appears, in numerous cases which have been cited to me, and to which I do not consider it necessary more particularly to refer. In these, and indeed in most of the modern cases which have been referred to upon this subject, this distinction between the wife's reversion in chattels personal, that is, in the wife's choses in action, and her reversion in choses real, or in terms of years, has been carefully maintained; and I think it ought certainly to be borne in mind in considering cases of this description; and if this were a case resembling in its circumstances the case of Donne v. Hart, I certainly should follow that case. A distinction, however, is taken in this case, arising from the limitations of the settlement, which is a great principle, although somewhat refined. It is this: although the general law as stated above is not disputed, it is contended that the power of the husband to dispose of the reversionary term of the wife is confined to those cases where the reversion is so limited that it might by possibility vest in the wife during the coverture, but that in this case where the term is so limited that the wife could not by possibility take any interest in it during the coverture; as, for instance, where a term is limited to the husband during the joint lives of the husband and wife, and then to the survivor of them, or if the term be limited to the wife, in case she survived her husband, on his death, then, it is argued, that as this is an interest which the husband could not enjoy, so it is one that he cannot dispose of. There is no question in the case that the limitation of the reversion to the wife is, in fact, a term of the settlement; that it is such that it could not by possibility take effect during the life of the husband. This is the main point urged on the part of the wife. In addition, and to some extent auxiliary to it, it is further contended that in this individual case the form and scope of the settlement, or what in some cases has been called "the truth and honour of the settlement," forbid the husband disposing of the reversion of his wife in this term. It is in truth obvious, on the first perusal of the settlement, that if the doctrine contended for on behalf of the husband and those claiming under him, can be sustained, the whole scope and object of the settlement is defeated. The husband has contracted, in case of there being no issue of the marriage, and he should survive his wife, he is to take no more than a life estate in the term, with remainder to the issue of the marriage after his decease; and he has further contracted that in case there be issue of the marriage, and his wife shall survive him, she shall take an absolute interest in the hereditaments comprised in the term. And yet if the doctrine urged on his behalf is to prevail he must take an absolute interest in the term if the wife be the survivor, although he has contracted that he is in that event to take nothing; and if he be the survivor he will only take a life interest. The cases of Richardson v. Chambers and Seaman v. Duill, both in the 10 Ves. Rep.—the judgment is given in the two cases together—are cited in support of this view of the case; and the decision of the Master of the Rolls in those cases shews that if an application be made to this Court to transfer property so settled to the husband, by consent of the wife, the Court will, notwithstanding such consent, refuse to make any such order. I do not, however, consider it necessary to decide this question, inasmuch as I am of opinion that the distinction which is above taken is the correct one, and that the power of the husband to dispose of the reversionary interest of the wife in chattels real depends upon the circumstance whether such interest could have vested in possession during the coverture. I have come to this conclusion, not upon the grounds that this reversion was a mere possibility in the wife, and that as such could not be assigned, which is the doctrine asserted by some of the earlier cases, and countenanced by considerable authority of a later period, but which doctrine has undoubtedly been exploded by the later decisions; but I have arrived at the conclusion upon the ground that it is a possibility of such a nature that it could not vest in the husband during the coverture, and that a possibility which cannot so vest is not assignable by the husband. In Gage v. Acton, reported in 1 Salkeld, 325, and which is reported in a great many other contemporaneous reports, Lord Holt held this, that where the wife had any right or interest which by possibility might accrue to her during the coverture, the husband might by release discharge it; but where the wife has a right or interest which by no possibility can accrue to her during the coverture, the husband cannot release it. It is true that his opinion was overruled by the other judges; but the subsequent authorities enforce and confirm his views of the case. I may state here, by way of a parenthetical remark, that the case of Gage v. Acton, seems to have been considered by Lord Kenyon in the case of Milbourn v. Ewart, 5 T. Rep. and though the passage to which I have referred, and which gave it some weight, is not commented upon, yet he makes this observation, which it is fit and right that I should mention, because it shews that Lord Kenyon's authority, which was very high, was not favourable to Lord Holt's general view of that case, though he does not refer to this particular point. The passage in Milbourn v. Ewart, which I will read, is to this effect: "In Gage v. Acton, Lord Holt had recourse to some technical arguments." The case of Milbourn v. Ewart, was this:—"A bond conditioned for the payment of money after the obligor's death, made to a woman in contemplation of the obligor's marrying her, and intended for her benefit if she should survive, is not released by their marriage. And if the marriage be pleaded in bar to an action of debt on the bond against the heir of the obligor, a replication stating the purposes for which the bond was made will be good, for they are consistent with the bond and condition." I read that for the purpose of shewing that the point which I am now deciding, did not exist in Milbourn v. Ewart; and, therefore, the observations of the judge must have regard simply to the point before him. It is fitting that I should state that Lord Kenyon says, "In that case Lord Holt had recourse to some technical arguments, which are not applicable here; one of them was, that it was a present debt to be paid when he should be required, and therefore the wife might have required him to pay it during his lifetime, and yet that she could not maintain an action against him. But that objection does not arise here, for the bond was not payable during the lifetime of the obligor, nor until twelve months after his death. I am glad to find that even in that case the opinions of the other judges occasioned a majority against that of Lord Holt; and if those two judges had been of less eminence than Mr. Justice Gould and Mr. Justice Tirston were, I should not have thought that much difference ought to be paid to the opinion of Lord Holt there delivered, which was as repugnant to the rules of law as of equity." Now, undoubtedly, that is expressed in the forcible manner in which Lord Kenyon frequently expressed his opinion, but it does not apply to this particular point. Lord Kenyon, however, does not appear to have entertained a favourable opinion of Lord Holt's decision in that case; and as I have arrived at an opposite conclusion with respect to the matter immediately before me, I have thought it but right to call attention to that circumstance. Now, the opinion expressed by Lord Holt in this case is the effect of a decision of Sir William Grant in Dalbiac v. Dalbiac, 16 Ves. The case, however, which most plainly admits and acts upon this distinction is the case cited to me of Doe dem. Shew v. Steward, 1 Adol. & Ell. In that case the assignee in bankruptcy of the husband claimed the reversion in a term which was given to the wife after the decease of the husband, or in case he should give up the house, or in case he should mortgage it. It was argued for the wife that this was a mere possibility, and was not assignable by the husband; but on behalf of the assignee it was contended that, inasmuch as it was a possibility which might vest in the wife during coverture, it was assignable by the husband, and that consequently it passed to the assignees in bankruptcy. And it was upon this ground, and on this distinction, as it appears to me, that the decision was founded, although it is to be regretted that the grounds of the decision are not so clear and distinct upon this subject as might be desired; but as I collect the grounds of that decision, it was upon this principle that the assignees were held entitled to recover. It appears to me also that there is a clear and intelligible principle to be discovered from this doctrine, although at first sight it appears somewhat vague. As far also as I can collect from the cases, and from such experience as I possess in these matters, it appears to have been the practice of conveyancers to recognise and act upon the distinction. In addition to which considerations, I am confirmed in the view I take of this case by reflecting that, in acting upon this distinction, I shall be carrying into effect the plain and obvious meaning of the contract which was entered into upon the marriage of the parties. I am of opinion, therefore, that the Master's report is right, and that the exception to his report must be overruled.

BOODLE v. PARTINGTON.

Will—Construction—Legacy—Gift over.

A testatrix by her will gave to her trustees a sum of money upon trust, to pay out of the interest an annuity to A. and an annuity to B. and to pay the remainder of the interest to her two nieces, but if either niece died without issue before both A. and B. were dead, then to pay the whole fund on the decease of the survivor of A. and B. to the survivor of the two nieces, and the testatrix declared that the legacies given to her nieces should not lapse on the death of either of them without issue in the life-time of the testatrix. One of the nieces died a spinster, then one of the annuitants died:

Held, that on the death of the annuitant her annuity did not fall into the residue, but belonged to the surviving niece, and that the surviving niece took the share of the deceased niece in the capital absolutely, and not subject to the trusts of her own original share, the rule being that when a separate legacy is given, and a new gift is made of that separate legacy to a legatee who takes another legacy, the intention must be clearly expressed to subject the new gift of the separate legacy to the trusts of the original share.

Sarah Milton, by her will, bequeathed to her trustees a sum of 4,000*l.* then out upon mortgage, upon trust to call in and invest it, and out of the interest or dividends to pay to Elizabeth H. an annuity of 60*l.* for her life, and to Harriet A. an annuity of 30*l.* for her life, and subject thereto to pay the residue of the same interest or dividends to her nieces, Mary Ann Partington and Henrietta Partington, and then the will proceeded thus:—

"And in case one or both of them (the said Mary Ann and Henrietta) should die without leaving issue in the life-time of the said Elizabeth H. and Harriet A. or the surviver of them, then to pay the part or parts, share or shares of the said dividends and interest of her or them so dying, for and towards the maintenance, education, or other benfit of her or their children respectively. But in case of the death of either of them, the said Mary Ann or Henrietta, unmarried, and without issue living in the life-time of the said Elizabeth H. and Harriet A. or the survivor of them, then to pay the said residue and remainder of the said interest or dividends unto the survivor of them the said Mary Ann Partington and Henrietta Partington, her executors and administrators, and immediately after the decease of them the said Elizabeth H. and Harriet A. in trust to pay the said sum of 4,000*l.* to the said Mary Ann and Henrietta, in equal shares, or if one of them the said Mary Ann or Henrietta shall die leaving issue in the lifetime of the said Elizabeth H. and Harriet A. or the survivor of them, then immediately after the decease of the survivor of them, the said Elizabeth H. and Harriet A. upon trust to pay or transfer the part or share of her or them so dying of and in the said principal sum of 4,000*l.* and the interest or dividends then due thereon for and towards the maintenance, education, or other benefit of her or their child or children respectively. But in case of the death of either of them the said Mary Ann or Henrietta unmarried, and without leaving issue living in the lifetime of the said Elizabeth H. and Harriet A. or the survivor of them, then immediately after the decease of the survivor of them the said Elizabeth H. and Harriet A. to pay or transfer the whole of the said 4,000*l.* and the interest or dividends then due thereon unto the survivor of the said Mary Ann and Henrietta, her executors, administrators, and assigns; and I declare my will to be that the respective legacies thereinbefore given to my said nieces Mary Ann and Henrietta shall not lapse in the event of their or either of them dying without having been married or leaving issue in my lifetime."

The testatrix died in April 1841; Henrietta Partington died, without ever having been married in June 1849; and in January 1850, Harriet A. one of the annuitants died. A special case was stated for the opinion of the Court to ascertain whether the annuity of Harriet A. belonged to the surviving niece Mary Ann Partington, or fell into the residue, and whether the share of Henrietta passed to her sister Mary Ann or fell into the residue; and if it passed to her, whether it was subject to the trusts of her own moiety, or belonged to her absolutely.

Stuart, Bacon, Bailey, Boyle, Welford, Austen, and Rawlinson, for the several parties. The following cases were cited:—Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463; Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swan. 566; Packham v. Gregory, 4 Hare, 398; and Yates v. Madden, 16 Jur. 45.

Friday, June 4.—The Vice-Chancellor.—As to the first point there can be no doubt. On the decease of Harriet A. the portion of the 4,000*l.* let loose, accrued for the benefit of those entitled to the residue of the dividends and annual produce of the 4,000*l.* The other point arises on the dispositions in favour of the nieces, and is this,—who is entitled to the capital of the share of deceased's sister Henrietta Partington? This depends on the wording of the clauses, and in reading them the last clause of all of the will is material. I mean that concerning the non-lapse of the legacies there spoken of as "respective legacies." Now, by this last clause, it is clear that the testatrix contemplated separate legacies of a moiety of the sum of 4,000*l.* to each of her nieces, Mary Ann and Henrietta; and this view agrees with the limitations contained in the prior part of the will, and also with the disposition of the capital to the nieces on the death of the survivor of the annuitants. The effect, therefore, of these two separate legacies (for so they may be called in consequence of the intention manifested by this clause) is this, that in the event of the death of Mary Ann and Henrietta, or either of them, there is a new gift of the income and capital which had belonged to the one or both of them so dying,—that is, in the events which have happened, on the death of Henrietta without issue, there is a new gift of Henrietta's share to Mary Ann. And I take the rule to be that where you have a separate legacy, and a new gift of that separate legacy, you must have either express words or a very clear indication of intention that the additional or new legacy should be intended to be included in the gift of the original share, and to be subject to all the provisions which affect that share. In this case there is a plain and obvious construction to be put on the words "parts and shares," they may be satisfied by applying them to the shares severally as well as by applying them to the shares accumulatively. If Mary Ann or Henrietta leave issue then her interest is to go to such issue; if both Mary Ann and Henrietta leave issue, then both their separate legacies are to go to their respective issue. I am, therefore, of opinion (doubting very much, as every body must doubt, upon reading this will, that on the death of Henrietta, without issue, Mary Ann took absolutely the share previously given to Henrietta.

Hinder v. Streeter.

Vendor and purchaser—Delay of conveyance—Costs of suit.

Where a suit is rendered necessary by the death of the vendor who had sold, but delayed the conveyance at the request of the purchaser, the costs of such suit are not to be borne by the estate of the vendor, but must be paid by the purchaser.

This was a suit for specific performance, but the only question contested was as to the costs. The owner of land, Mr. J. Streeter, entered into a contract to sell to Mr. Hinder a part of it to be used for building purposes. The purchase-money of part was paid, but not for the remainder. By arrangement, at the instance of the purchaser, no conveyance was, or was to be, executed to him, but as he completed the buildings the conveyances were to be made by his direction to the several purchasers from him. Before any conveyance whatever was made, Mr. Streeter, the vendor, died intestate, and the purchaser, Mr. Hinder, filed the bill against the widow and children of the vendor for specific performance of the contract.

Campbell, for the plaintiff, argued that had the purchaser made a will, as under such circumstances he ought, and devised the estate in such manner as would have enabled a conveyance without the intervention of the Court, the costs would properly have fallen upon the purchaser; but under the existing state of things these costs ought to be paid out of the vendor's estate. In The Midland Counties Railway Company v. Westcomb, 11 Sim. 57, the late Vice-Chancellor of England held that where a man has entered into a contract he is bound to take care that no person with whom he has contracted shall suffer extra trouble or expense from any act or neglect of his, and gave the costs to a plaintiff in circumstances similar to the present.

Sir W. P. Wood and De Gex relied upon a later case, in which a former was cited, namely Hanson v. Lake, 2 Yo. & Col. C.C. 328, where Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce declined to give costs on either side.

The Vice-Chancellor.—The only question for consideration is, who shall bear the costs, for of the specific performance there is no doubt. The cases on the subject stand thus: Sir Lancelot Shadwell has decided, that if a vendor dies, not having devised the legal estate to trustees to complete the sale, his estate must bear the costs of a suit by the purchaser to obtain a conveyance. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, on the other hand, has decided that if there be no default on either side, there ought to be no costs given. In this difference of opinion, I prefer to follow the latter decision, especially as in this case the noncompletion and the nonexecution of a conveyance was for the convenience of the purchaser himself. I cannot make the estate of a party pay costs, merely because he has, by the act of God, become unable to execute the conveyance. There must be a decree for specific performance, without costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR PARKER'S COURT.

Reported by Geo. S. Allnutt, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

June 30 and July 2.

Waite v. Combes.

Will—Construction—"Moneys."

Stock in the public funds held to pass under the word "moneys."

In this case a question arose upon the construction of the following will, dated the 19th of August, 1844:—"I, Thomas Staning, of, &c. being at this time of sound mind and good understanding, and desirous of making a settlement of my affairs, do accordingly declare the contents of this paper to be those of my last will, putting aside and totally doing away with any previous will or wills made by me, and therefore appoint William Combes and George Clode, my executors, to take and receive all moneys that may be in my possession or due to me at the time of my decease, and to prosecute for the recovery of the same, if it be found necessary, to be by them placed in the British funds, or otherwise laid out upon such security as they shall deem sufficient, the interest arising from which to be received and paid by them yearly, or oftener, as appears best, unto my dear wife, Caroline Staning, at this time living with me, for her sole use and benefit, but that only during her life, she having but a life interest in it; and, at her death, or as soon afterwards as it can be done, it is my wish (for very sufficient reason), and do therefore authorise my executors to divide equally between my two nieces, daughters of my sister, Mrs. Ann Combes, of Dorking, or to their children, or the child or children of either, supposing one of them not to have any family surviving, all such moneys held in trust by them," &c.

The testator's property, at his death, consisted of 1,200*l.* Three per Cent. Consols, furniture worth about 30*l.* and a balance of a few shillings at his banker's. On the death of the widow, the testator's two nieces instituted, by claim, the present suit against the personal representatives, to establish their right to the sum of stock.

E. Webster, for the plaintiffs, cited Dicks v. Lambert, 4 Ves. 725; Kendall v. Kendall, 4 Russ. 360; Legge v. Asgill, T. & R. 265; and Glendinning v. Glendinning, 9 Ben. 324.

Drewry, for one of the next of kin, contended that as to the stock there was an intestacy, and referred to Gouden v. Dotterill, 1 M. & K. 56; Ommaney v. Butcher, T. & Russ. 272; and Hastings v. Hune, 6 Sim. 67.

H. Cadman Jones, for another of the next of kin, also argued that the stock was not disposed of by the will, and cited Rogers v. Thomas, 2 Keen, 8; and Dowson v. Gaskoin, 2 Keen, 14.

Elderton, for the personal representative.

E. Webster, in reply.

Friday, July 2.—The Vice-Chancellor (after stating the case) said, on the whole will the intention of the testator to dispose of all his property was so clear, that supposing the words used had not pointed specifically to anything but "money" properly so called, it would not be an unsound construction to consider that the testator had passed his whole personalty which was to be held upon the trusts of the will. The language used throughout the will was that of a man disposing of his whole property. The cases which had been cited (and to which his Honour would add Boys v. Morgan, 3 Myl. and Cr. 661), shewed how unwilling the Court was to leave any part of a testator's property undisposed of. There was, however, no doubt upon the authorities that the word "moneys" would pass stock, but it was a question of intention to be collected upon the construction of the whole will, and upon this will his Honour considered there was sufficient evidence of intention to include it. It was, however, said that the testator having directed his executors to receive all moneys, he could not have meant to include stock, as he goes on to direct the same to be laid out in the public funds; but his Honour considered that this would be taking advantage of a mere slip in the testator's language, where his meaning was sufficiently obvious, to give effect to that argument.

Will—Construction—Charge of debts on realty—Conversion of residue.

Tenant for life of residue held entitled to enjoy leasehold property in specie, but not any other personal estate of the testator.

Thomas Blann, by his will, after desiring that all his just debts, funeral expenses, and the charges of proving his will, might be fully paid and satisfied, and after making certain pecuniary bequests, gave all the residue of his estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, whether consisting of freehold, leasehold, or copyhold estates, money in the public stock or funds, and all other moneys and securities for money, to trustees, upon trust, to pay the dividends of 1,500*l.* Three per Cent. Reduced Bank Annuities to Sarah Twitchin for her life, independently of her husband, and free from his debts, &c.; and at her death he directed the dividends arising from the said sum of 1,500*l.* to be equally divided between his wife Edith Blann, and his niece Frances Rayner, and the survivor of them; and as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of his freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates, and all other his estate and effects, subject to such power of appointment as was thereby vested in his said wife, upon trust to pay the interest, rents, dividends, and annual produce thereof, to his said wife for her life, and after her decease, as to the sum of 10,000*l.* part of the said residue, to such person or persons and in such manner as his said wife should by will appoint, and after her decease upon trust as to such residue of his estate and effects, subject to such power of appointment as aforesaid, to pay the interest, dividends, and annual produce thereof, to his niece Frances Rayner, for life, free from the debts, &c. of any husband, and for which her receipts were alone to be good discharges, and after the decease of the survivor of them, the said Edith Blann and Frances Rayner, then upon trust to divide such residue of his estate and effects unto and amongst all and every the child and children of his said niece Frances Rayner, equally between them, share and share alike, on attaining twenty-one, with power of applying the interest for their maintenance in the meantime; and in case Frances Rayner should die without issue who should attain twenty-one, then upon trust, from and after the decease of the survivor of them, the said Edith Blann and Frances Rayner, to pay certain legacies to several persons therein named; and as to the residue and remainder of his estate, in the event of Frances Rayner dying without issue lawfully begotten, who should live to attain the age of twenty-one years, then from and after the decease of the survivor of them, the said Edith Blann and Frances Rayner, the testator directed his said trustees to divide such residue into two equal moieties, or half parts, upon trust, as to one moiety thereof for the infirmary at Hertford, to whom he gave and bequeathed the same, and as to the other moiety for the Bath infirmary, to whom he gave and bequeathed the same. In 1846 the testator died. This suit was instituted by the testator's widow against the trustees and the parties beneficially interested; and upon a reference to the Master to inquire of what property, real and personal, the testator died possessed, the Master reported that he died possessed of certain freehold and leasehold estates, also of certain Dutch Bonds, Insurance Shares, and pure personalty. Frances Rayner died without issue. The cause now came on for further directions, and on these several questions arose. Of these questions the principal were:—Whether Edith Blann, having survived Frances Rayner, was entitled to the capital sum of 1,500*l.* stock or only to a life interest in it: whether the real and leasehold estates of the testator were liable, pari passu, with the pure personalty to the payment of the testator's debts: and whether the tenant for life was entitled to enjoy the leaseholds and other personal estate in specie.

Malins and Collins appeared for the plaintiff.

Bacon and Little for William Arnould, the husband of Frances Rayner, deceased, who was the heiress-at-law and sole next of kin of the testator.

Russell and Younge for the executors.

Walker, Willcock, Giffard, E. F. Smith, and Elderton, for other parties.

The following cases were cited:—Howe v. Lord Dartmouth, 7 Ves. 137; Collins v. Collins, 2 My. & Keen, 703; Pickering v. Pickering, 4 My. & Cr. 289; Alcock v. Sloper, 2 My. & Keen, 699; Hinves v. Hinves, 3 Hare, 609; Daniel v. Warren, 2 You. & Coll. The Vice-Chancellor said, that upon the first question he was of opinion that the gift to Edith Blann, the testator's widow, was merely a gift of a life-interest in the dividends of the sum of 1,500*l.* stock. It would be observed that the gifts as to enjoyment were gifts in succession, and a life-interest only was given. The next question related to the course of administration of the real and personal estate. The ordinary rule of administration must apply: the personal estate must be first applicable to the payment of the debts, &c. and the real estate must be subsidiary. His Honour did not consider that the case of Young v. Hassard, was applicable to the present. The real estate, therefore, though charged, would not be applicable until the personal estate was exhausted. Another question was, how the personalty was to be applied, and were the leaseholds to be converted. Where a residue was given to one person for life, with remainder to another person absolutely, the general rule was to melt down all into a common fund, but the case of Pickering v. Pickering, and others, shewed that the applicability of this rule must be obtained from the intention of the whole will. The will might shew an intention to allow part of the residue to be enjoyed in specie, and part to be converted. His Honour thought here that the intention of the testator sufficiently indicated that the leaseholds should be enjoyed by his widow in specie. As to the Insurance shares, the Dutch Bonds, and the other personalty, it was different. He should, therefore, declare that the plaintiff was entitled to a life-interest only in the 1,500*l.* stock; that the realty was not to be called on for payment of the debts, &c. until the personalty was exhausted; that the leaseholds were not to be converted, but to be enjoyed in specie; and that the Insurance shares, Dutch Bonds, and other personalty, were to be converted.

MOORES v. WHITTLE.

Will—Construction—Charge of debts on real estate.

A testator devised to his daughter A. B. so long as she continued unmarried, certain copyhold estates held for lives for all his interest therein to come at his decease, and also all his personal estate after the payment of his debts, &c. and the testator desired that if after his death A. B. should be married, the whole of the said estates, with the live and dead stock, &c. should be sold, and the proceeds divided as therein mentioned, &c. There were debts due from the testator at the time of his decease:

Held, that the copyhold estates were by the will charged with the debts.

This was a special case under Sir George Turner's Act. Mr. James Young made his will, dated the 9th of February, 1849, in the following terms:—"I hereby give, devise, and bequeath unto my daughter, Caroline Young, for her sole use and benefit, as long as she may continue unmarried all my copyhold estates, lands, and hereditaments, in Piddletrenthide, held under the College of Winchester, and known as 'Coles's No. 14,' 'B No. 1, and No. 80,' for lives, for all my term, estate, and interest in them respectively, to come at my decease, which I intend to surrender to the use of this my will, and also all my live and dead stock, household furniture, moneys, and securities for money, and farming gear of every description after the payment of my just debts, funeral expenses, and the costs of proving this my will; and it is also my will and desire that if, after my death, my daughter Caroline should be married, that then the whole of the estates above described, together with the live and dead stock, household furniture, farming implements, and goods whatsoever, shall immediately be sold, and all the proceeds arising therefrom be equally divided, share and share alike, between my daughter, at present named Caroline Young; my daughter Jane, the wife of Robert Damon; my daughter Mary, the wife of Charles Phippen; and my daughter Ellen, the wife of Thos. Keetch, for their several use and benefit; or if my daughter Caroline Young should die unmarried, it is my will that then all the aforementioned property whatsoever shall be sold, and the proceeds thereof be equally divided amongst my remaining surviving daughters abovenamed." The testator then appointed George Moores and George Shepherd his executors.

The testator died on the 12th of August, 1851, and his will was proved on the 18th of February, 1852. There were debts due from the testator at the time of his decease. Caroline Young, to enable the executors to sell the copyhold hereditaments, released to them her interest in the same. On the 13th of May, 1852, the executors were admitted to the copyholds, and they afterwards entered into a contract with Mr. Whittle for the sale of the copyholds, but he objected to the title of the executors to sell, upon the ground that the testator's debts were not charged upon the copyholds. The question was, therefore, submitted to the Court by this special case.

W. D. Lewis appeared for the plaintiffs, and referred to Withers v. Kennedy, 2 Myl. & Keen, 607.

E. N. Ayrton for the defendant.

The Vice-Chancellor said, that although there was some ambiguity in this will, yet the rule of the Court was so to construe the will as to enlarge rather than narrow the charge of debts. Besides, in the present case it appeared that the testator, in the subsequent parts of the will, dealt with the whole property as one mass, and it was quite clear that he intended to throw the whole into one mass. His Honour must, therefore, answer the question by a declaration that there was a charge of debts on the real estate.

VICE-CHANCELLOR KINDERSLEY'S COURT.

MILES v. DURNFORD.

DURNFORD v. MILES.

Executor—Power of, to mortgage assets of testator for executorship purposes—Parties—Misjoinder.

The principle of this Court is to allow an executor to deal with the assets of his testator to raise moneys for purposes of the estate; but this does not apply where, having obtained money without security, he afterwards gives security on the testator's property for antecedent loans.

Where a party is applied to to advance money on the representation of an executor that it is for purposes of the estate, and he advances money on the mere personal security of the executor—if the lender afterwards takes a security on the assets, the onus of proof is on the person advancing the money to shew that the moneys advanced were applied to the purposes of the testator's estate.

The Court will not assume that such a loan was for the purposes of the administration of the estate, but direct an inquiry whether it was so applied.

This was a suit and cross suit. The first suit was filed by the plaintiff as surviving executor of John Punter the elder to restrain the sale of some premises which had formed part of the testator's estate in mortgage to the defendant Durnford, and to set aside the mortgage, or to redeem it.

A cross-bill was filed by the defendant seeking to establish the deed, and for other purposes.

On the part of the defendant it was attempted to be established that the mortgage had been made to Mrs. Durnford by John Punter the younger, the deceased executor of J. Punter the elder, to raise moneys for the purposes of the testator's estate. On the part of the plaintiff, who was the administrator of J. Punter the younger, as well as the surviving executor of J. Punter the elder, it was contended that J. Punter the younger had obtained the loan of the moneys from the defendant Mrs. Durnford for his own private use, and that the mortgage on the testator's assets was subsequent to this loan, and therefore the mortgagee, Mrs. Durnford, should have been put upon her guard before taking the mortgage, and ascertained that the money lent was for the purposes of the testator J. Punter the elder's estate.

It was admitted by Mrs. Durnford's answer that after the advance had been made by her, and before the formal execution of the mortgage-deed, an equitable mortgage had been made to her by J. Punter the younger, and in respect of which she had formerly filed a bill in this court to establish that equitable mortgage and for a sale.

The other facts appear in the Vice-Chancellor's judgment.

Stuart and Nalder for the plaintiff.

Willcock and Gifford, for the defendant Durnford, said the bill ought to be dismissed at once, and that it ought to be presumed that what J. Punter the younger had done, was so done in the execution of his duty as executor, and that there was nothing to shew that the loans had been made to him in his private capacity. They also contended that the present form of the bill was wrong, for that Miles, the plaintiff, being the administrator of J. Punter the younger, the mortgagor could not be allowed to file a bill in this court to set aside his own testator's deed.

Bacon, Geo. L. Russell, and Pole for other parties.

Stuart, in reply.

The cases relied upon were Scott v. Tyler, 2 Bro. C. C. 431; M'Leod v. Drummond, 14 Ves. 353; Eland v. Eland, 1 Beav. 235; S. JUDGMENT.

The Vice-Chancellor.—The testator, J. Punter, died in 1847; his son, J. Punter the younger, proved the will alone. At different periods between October 1846 and February 1848, J. Punter the younger, applied to Mrs. Durnford, the defendant, to lend him several sums of money, representing that he wanted it for purposes connected with the estate; she lent him the sums. It was represented that the testator owed to a person named Smart, 250*l.* that Smart required payment, and 50*l.* were paid by Punter the younger, in 1847, and that 200*l.* more were paid on the 2nd February, 1841. When the advances were made by the defendant to Punter, there was no undertaking or agreement to give any security for the advance, and the effect at the time of making the advance was, that they were made on the personal security of Punter, and gave no lien whatever on the testator's property, and any remedies for the defendant would have been only against Puntor personally. The loans to him, although stated to be for executorship purposes, were not made to him in his character of executor, but were made to him personally, there being no agreement for giving any security on the testator's assets. Now, some months after the last of the advances, viz. on the 30th of October, 1848, Punter deposited certain deeds relating to the testator's leasehold property with the defendant, by way of security for the money advanced to him, and thus an equitable mortgage was created for the whole of the advances amounting to 600*l.* That equitable mortgage having been given in February, 1849, the defenant attempted to enforce it by a bill in this court, to compel payment or sale of the estate. It was a common equitable mortgagee's bill, and in that suit the transaction was treated as the private transaction of Punter, and not as the executorship account; that, however, was not necessary as between the defendant and Punter. In a proceeding to obtain payment or sale, it was not necessary to make such a case, and therefore, perhaps, no weight can be attached to that circumstance, or to the debt having been treated in that suit as the personal debt of Punter. But in consequence of the filing that bill shortly afterwards, viz. on the 14th April, 1849, Punter executed an actual mortgage deed to the defendant, for the purpose of securing not the 600*l.* but the 370*l.* and the recital puts it in this shape. Now, this recital, after stating the devolution of title, was to the following effect: — It states, "that on the application and request of the said J. Punter the younger, the said Elizabeth Durnford had at divers times, between the months of October, 1846, and February, 1848, advanced and lent to the said John Punter the younger, several sums of money amounting together to the sum of 600*l.* and that the sum of 300*l.* part of the said sum of 600*l.* was so advanced and lent to the said J. Punter the younger, for the purpose of enabling him as such executor of the said John Punter the elder, as aforesaid, for the purpose of enabling him as such executor as aforesaid, to pay off or discharge a certain mortgage debt of 250*l.* and interest, to Henry Smart, thereunder charged upon the three houses in Earl-street aforesaid, and also to pay certain charges which the said J. Punter the younger had incurred as such executor as aforesaid, in and about the said testator's estate; and that the said Elizabeth Durnford had taken other security for the remainder of the said sum of 600*l.* and that there was then due from the said J. Punter the younger, as such executor as aforesaid, to the said Elizabeth Durnford, in respect of the said sum of 350*l.* and the interest thereon, the sum of 370*l.* and the mortgage was for 370*l.* only. Now, it is clear that the equitable mortgage of 1848, having been for 600*l.* was a security given for what was an advance to him, partly as executor and partly for money on his private account, and the recitals in the mortgage deed rest only on the statement of the parties, that 350*l.* had been advanced to Punter in his character of executor. Now, the authority of an executor dealing with his testator's assets, rests upon this principle. It is of great importance that there should be no fetter over an executor to deal with the assets for the purpose of raising money for the estate; and, therefore, the law gives him the right of dealing with the assets to raise money for such purposes, and then the onus of shewing that it was wanted for such purposes is not thrown upon the parties advancing the money. It is sufficient for him to shew that he had no fair ground or reason to believe that the money was not wanted for executorship purposes. It is quite true that in such a case as that of the private banker of the executor, to whom he owes a personal debt, if the banker accepts from him assets of the testator, knowing them to be so, then the banker is a party to the devastavit. But although the principle of this Court is to allow an executor to deal with the assets of his testator, the principle does not apply when, having obtained money without security, he afterwards gives security on the testator's property for the antecedent loans. If there is a contract for a security at the time the advances are made, then a subsequent mortgage stands on the same footing as if it had been made at the time of the advance; but when the advance is made on the private security of the executor, his subsequently giving a security on the testator's property is not for the purpose of securing moneys advanced at the time, but is given as a security for amounts previously advanced on the credit of the testator's estate with no obligation to give it, that is, without any legal necessity for giving it. Then, when a party being applied to, to advance money on the representation of an executor that it is for the purposes of the estate, and he advances the money on the mere personal security of the executor, and without taking any security or agreement for security, if he afterwards takes security on the assets, it appears to me that the onus of proof is on the person who advances the money to shew that the moneys so advanced were applied to the purposes of the testator's estate. That rule is just and proper on sound sense and principle. I am not aware of any case in which the contrary has been decided. If here there were no further difficulty I should refer it to the Master to inquire whether any and what sums out of the 600*l.* were applied by Punter the younger in the administration of the testator's estate. But I think I am precluded from making such a reference, because the plaintiff, who seeks to set aside the mortgage, being the representative of the party who executed it, cannot be heard to impeach that deed. He cannot throw off the character of representative to Punter the younger. It is true the bill is filed by Miles wishing to repudiate, for the purpose of this suit, another character which he fills, and he purports to file the bill only as a representative of the testator. If that were the only character filled by him, he would be entitled to sustain it; but unfortunately after proving the will of J. Punter the elder, he took out letters of administration to Punter the younger, and he takes upon himself the character of representative of Punter the younger, and cannot be heard to say that filling two characters, in one of which he could not sue, he has a right to be heard in that character in which, if he filled that only, he might sue; and I think he cannot be heard to say that he wished to repudiate by a short cut that other character. I am of opinion that will not do. It is quite clear that if Punter the younger were living, and Miles, assuming him to be his co-executor, had joined in a bill, such bill could not be sustained. It is clear also that if Punter alone had filed a bill, it could not have been sustained. As the plaintiff in this case has taken upon himself to represent the delinquent party, and appears in the mixed character of a person who could not sue, and of representative of one who could, I think he cannot be allowed to separate them and to sue in one of those characters only. For these reasons I am of opinion that I can make no decree to invalidate the mortgage, and I must dismiss the bill, so far as it seeks to impeach the deed, with costs.

Decree, that so much of plaintiff's bill as seeks to impeach the mortgage, dismissed with costs. On both bills usual reference to take the accounts for redemption or foreclosure.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS COURT, DUBLIN.

Reported by J. Levy, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Re Lazenbys.

Untrue statement in schedule—False credit in balance-sheet.

If an insolvent make an untrue statement in his schedule, and take a false credit in his balance-sheet, although such statement and credit are not any evidence of concealment of property, and that the opposing creditor fails to prove such concealment allunde, the insolvent will not be allowed to swear to his schedule, and his petition will be dismissed.

The insolvents were pickle merchants, and carried on business in Upper Exchange-street, Dublin, and Mancsty's-lane, Liverpool. They were opposed by Levy, for a creditor named Glennon, and supported by Creighton. It appeared that Glennon, who was a creditor, in 1851, for a debt amounting to upwards of 130*l.* issued a commission of bankruptcy against them, but an arrangement was entered into by passing their bond for the debt, payable by monthly instalments; and the commission, upon which no adjudication had taken place, was superseded, and they went on paying monthly instalments under the bond for some five or six months. About that period, another creditor had proceeded against them, and was near obtaining execution, when they applied to Glennon to issue execution under his bond, with a view of saving the property. He issued execution accordingly, which was put into the hands of the sheriff. The other creditor issued his execution soon afterwards, and compelled Glennon to sell, and at that sale the goods were bought in by Glennon for the insolvents, and left in their possession. The other creditor then issued a ca. sa. and had them arrested, when they filed their petition and schedule, and now came before the Court for their discharge. The only tangible ground of opposition that appeared against them was their having taken credit in their balance-sheet for a large loss sustained by the sale under Glennon's execution, although the goods actually sold were bought and paid for by Glennon with his own money, and left in the possession of the insolvents. It was contended that this was a false credit; that if the goods were of the value stated, the insolvents ought to account for them, they having been all left in their possession; that if they were not of that value, the surplus was a false credit, and was introduced for the purpose of covering concealed property. The statement with regard to the whole transaction was untrue.

Creighton, for the insolvents, contended that this was a fallacy, that proof of concealment of property should be given before the petition could be dismissed or the insolvents remanded. It was never held that putting an exaggerated value on an insolvent's property, and then taking credit for that value as a loss, was a ground of dismissal or remand. If evidence had been given that property had been concealed, there might be some ground for the objection raised; but, although that was attempted, the opposing creditor failed in shewing that there was a single shilling's-worth concealed. Besides, that creditor should not be heard at all, inasmuch as he had entered into collusion with the insolvents to shut out the other creditors by his friendly execution; but now, having quarrelled with them, he ought not to be heard in that Court.

Mr. Commissioner Baldwin thought the objection raised to the schedule and balance-sheet was a valid one. The insolvents first procure the attorney of the opposing creditor to go on with the friendly execution, and they induce the creditor to purchase the goods for their account; he is in fact supplied with a list of what he is to purchase, and articles deemed of little value are allowed to be purchased by the public. All the goods purchased by the opposing creditor are left with the insolvents, and yet they state on their schedule that they have been ruined by that sale, and they take credit in their balance-sheet for a loss consequent thereon, far exceeding what the entire property was worth. These were falsehoods which the Court could not tolerate; and although no actual suppression of property had been proved, yet the schedule and balance-sheet should not be contradictory of the admitted facts of the case. The insolvents, under these circumstances, could not be permitted to swear to their schedule; their petition should, therefore, be dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Mortgage—Filing an election—Different rule in bankruptcy.

A mortgagee of an insolvent's estate, who sells the mortgaged premises, will not be allowed to file an election under the 71st section of the Insolvent Act, and come in for a dividend on the general estate, although he offers to lodge to the credit of the matter in the Insolvent Court the amount of the purchase money. The rule in bankruptcy which allows a mortgagee to sell the mortgaged premises for his debt, and prove for the deficiency, does not apply in insolvency.

The insolvent was discharged in the year 1846, and returned in his schedule a certain freehold estate mortgaged to a person named Bate. The mortgagee offered no opposition to the discharge, and took no notice of the proceedings in the Insolvent Court; but he filed a bill in the Court of Chancery for a foreclosure, and subsequently brought the estate into the Incumbered Estates Court, where it was ultimately sold for about one-third of what had been previously offered for it by private contract. Under those circumstances, the mortgagee obtained a reference to the chief clerk of the Insolvent Court, to ascertain what was due on foot of the mortgage, preparatory to his filing an election to abandon his mortgage and come in as a simple contract creditor under the 71st section of the Insolvent Act, which enacts, "that nothing in the Act shall extend or be construed to prevent any mortgage charge or lien upon any estate of such prisoner, or any part thereof, made prior to the making of such vesting-order, from taking place upon the lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or personal estate and effects comprised in, or charged or affected by such mortgage charge or lien, unless the creditor having such mortgage charge or lien shall elect to take and receive any dividend under this Act, or, being an annuity creditor, shall elect to have his annuity valued," &c. On reference to the chief clerk he made his finding and report; to this report exceptions were taken by the mortgagee, which raised the abstract question as to whether he had a right to take what he could on foot of his mortgage by proceedings in equity or a sale in the Incumbered Estates Court, and then come back to the Insolvent Court, and, having filed his election, come in and take a dividend with the simple contract creditors.

Creighton, with whom was Burraught, were for the mortgagee, and in support of the exceptions.

Adair and Phillips contrà.

Mr. Commissioner Curran thought that the case lay within very narrow limits; it came before the Court in the form of exceptions, and the question was, could a mortgagee, after he had sold his pledge, file his election and come in with other creditors, and take a dividend on the general estate of an insolvent. If so, that Court had been in error as regarded the administration of the law under the 71st section since the Insolvent Act came into operation. The simple meaning of the section was, that a creditor having a mortgage on the real estate of an insolvent, must be either content with that security, or, if he thinks it more advantageous, he may make his election between the special security and the general assets, but that election could not be made when the special security was gone, and when, in point of fact, no election could be made. The mortgagee had offered to bring in the balance of the purchase-money and lodge it to the credit of the matter; but he did not think that even that would entitle him to make an election. It appeared that the premises had been valued at 2,000*l.* and that 1,500*l.* was deemed an inadequate price, and they were subsequently sold for 600*l.* Out of that the mortgagee deducted all his costs, leaving a balance of only 310*l.* which he was ready to bring into the general assets, and take a dividend, when he found that his doing so would bring him a much larger sum; but it was then too late; he should be content with the result of his proceedings as a mortgagee, and could not, when the property was sold, interfere with the assets of the general creditors. The 80th section of the English Insolvent Act was in some respects analagous to the 71st section of the Irish Act, and was wholly analogous to the 70th section of that Act, and related to sums payable by way of annuity. That section provided, that "in case any annuity should be chargeable or payable out of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments of any insolvent, the annuitant shall not be entitled to have the annuity valued, or to prove on the estate of the insolvent, or to sue any surety for the payment of such annuity, unless such annuitant shall elect to release the lands, tenements, &c. from all future payments." There an election was to be made by the annuitant having a charge on the insolvent's property, but it could not be made until the lands charged with the payment of it had been released from all future calls or payments on foot of the annuity. After the election had been made and the annuity valued, the lands stood charged with the amount of the valuation and interest, at the rate of five per cent. till paid, but the annuitant could make no election till he released the lands, and in the present case, under the 71st section, the mortgagee could make no election, unless he had the property to offer to the creditors instead of his charge upon it; and it was clearly too late to do so when that property had been sold, even though he offered to give instead of it the balance of the purchase-money, after deducting such costs as he thought proper to incur. On these grounds the exceptions should be overruled, and the mortgagee prevented from coming in on the assets applicable to the payment of the general creditors.

Mr. Commissioner BALDWIN concurred in the judgment of his brother Commissioner. The question at issue, namely, whether a mortgagee could try to make the most he could of his mortgage, and if he did not succeed to his liking come back to the Insolvent Court when the mortgaged premises were sold, and seek to come in upon the general assets, had been fairly raised by the second exception. If that exception were to be allowed, it would overturn the produce of the Insolvent Court on that point, since its first commencement. He thought the rule in bankruptcy did not apply, because it could not be set up in contravention of a plain section in the Insolvent statute, which clearly pointed out what was to be done. It was clear that the mortgagee was now late in making his election, and the exceptions should be overruled.

Stafford Summer Assizes, July 1852.

(NISI PRIUS COURT, before CRESSWELL, J.)

EDWARDS v. LOWNDES.

Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63—Local Board of Health—Provisional order—Appropriation of funds to found right of action—Notice of action.

By a local Market Act the money received under its provisions, after payment of the costs of the Act, were directed to be applied at the discretion of the trustees in payment of the rents and fines due and to become due to the lord of the manor, in respect of the market-house, &c. and in the purchase of such messuages, &c. as should be necessary for the purpose of the Act, and in keeping the market-house, &c. in repair, and in paying the salary to the organist of the church, and in reducing and paying off mortgage debts, annuities, &c.; and in the next place towards such general improvements as the trustees should think proper. By a confirmed order of the Board of Health, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, the local Act was repealed, and the property transferred to the local Board. The order directed that all contracts, debts, &c. made, &c. by the trustees of the local Act should be paid and satisfied by and recovered from the local Board, as the same might have been recovered from the trustees. The plaintiff was appointed organist of the church by the officiating clergyman, and received his salary from the trustees of the Local Act, and after its repeal he received about a quarter's salary from the Local Board of Health. On subsequently applying for a year's salary, he was informed by letter that the Board had determined to resist the demand. In a special action on the case, brought to recover the amount, the plaintiff proved that by the published statement of the Board there was, at the time of the refusal, a balance of exceeding 200*l.* in the hands of the trustees, but in this account a sum of upwards of 7,000*l.* due on mortgage of the market estates, was not included:

Held, that the action was not maintainable, there not having been any appropriation of the funds by the Board to the payment of the organist's salary.

The Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 139, provides that no action shall be commenced against the Local Board of Health, or its officers, "for anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of this Act" until after one month's notice in writing:

Held, that this does not apply to an action brought under the above circumstances.

This was an action on the case against Joseph Lowndes, the duly appointed clerk of the Burslem Local Board of Health, and was brought to recover 30*l.* one year's salary, alleged to be due to the plaintiff as organist of Burslem church. The declaration alleged that the plaintiff, after the passing of the Act 6 Geo. 4, c. 131, for regulating the markets in the town of Burslem, &c. and before the passing of the Public Health Act, 1848, to wit, on the 1st January, A.D. 1845, was, and from thence continually hath been, and still is, organist of and in the parish church of the parish of Burslem, in the first-mentioned Act in that behalf mentioned, in that behalf duly appointed, at and for a certain yearly salary to the plaintiff in that behalf therefore payable, to wit, the yearly salary of 30*l.* payable to the plaintiff on the 29th day of September in each and every year, and which salary was duly paid to the plaintiff by the trustees for the time being of and for the Town Hall and Market-place of the town of Burslem, in the county of Stafford, &c. in the first Act mentioned, &c.; as and after the same salary became due and payable to the plaintiff before and up to the 29th day of September, A.D. 1849, pursuant to the last-mentioned Act; and that the said salary which became due and payable to the plaintiff for the year ending on the 29th day of September, A.D. 1850, was paid to the plaintiff by the said Local Board of Health. [The declaration then proceeded to set out out the provisional order of the General Board of Health, by which Burslem was duly brought within the operation of the Health of Towns Act, and providing for the repeal of the above-mentioned local Act, except certain clauses thereof, and directing (Order 13) that after the confirmation of the order, all bonds, mortgages, contracts, debts, moneys, and securities for money, made, given, &c. by the trustees or commissioners respectively, should be paid and satisfied by the local Board out of such parts of the said transferred property and estate as would or ought to have been charged or chargeable in respect of the same if that order had not been made, and should, as near as circumstances would permit, have the same priority, and be paid and satisfied within the same time, and be recovered from the said local Board, as the same might have been recovered from such trustee or commissioner respectively; and that if such property and estate should be insufficient for that purpose, the deficiency should be charged upon and paid, and satisfied by the said Local Board of Health out of the general district rates levied under the said Public Health Act in the parts and places which would or ought to have been chargeable with such deficiency if that order had not been made, &c.; and also providing (Order 17) that the order and the repeal of the parts of the local Act should not annul, defeat, lessen, or otherwise prejudicially affect any rate, assessment, imposition, composition, charge, purchase, sale, conveyance, grant, demise, lease, mortgage, annuity, assignment, bond, contract, covenant, agreement, security, matter, or thing whatsoever, before the passing of any Act of Parliament confirming that order, made, entered, into, or done, under, or by virtue, or in pursuance of the said local Act with reference to the purposes of the same respectively; but notwithstanding that order, all such acts, deeds, matters, and things should be as good, valid, and effectual to all intents and purposes whatsoever, for, against, and with reference to the said Local Board of Health, as if the same had been made, entered into, or done by, to, or with reference to that Board, instead of the trustees or commissioners of that Act respectively, and might be proceeded on and enforced in the same manner in all respects as if that Board instead of such trustees or commissioners had been party or privy to the same, and been named or referred to therein; and further (sec. 18), that that order and the repeal of the parts of the said local Act mentioned in the schedule thereto, should be subject and without prejudice to any penalties incurred under that Act, and to all estates, rights, interests, claims, and demands whatsoever, at the time of the passing of any Act of Parliament confirming that order, created, confirmed, subsisting, and capable of being recovered, enforced, and enjoyed under, and by virtue or in pursuance of the said local Act, but all such penalties might be enforced and recovered by the said Local Board of Health, according to the provisions of that order; and all such estates, rights, interests, claims, and demands might be had, exercised, and enjoyed as if that order had not been made. The declaration then averred that, after making and publishing of the said order, and after the passing of the Public Health Act, 1850, No. 3, the Local Board of Health was duly elected, and the plaintiff further saith, that af the said first election of the said Local Board of Health for the said parish of Burslem (except as aforesaid), and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 29th day of September, A.D. 1851, a large sum, to wit, 30*l.* for one year of the said salary became due and payable to the plaintiff as such organist as aforesaid; and that on that day, and from thence until the commencement of this suit, there were and still are in the hands of the said Local Board of Health for the said parish of Burslem, funds and moneys applicable to and sufficient for the payment to the plaintiff of the said sum of 30*l.* so due and payable to him for his said salary on the said 29th day of September, A.D. 1851, as aforesaid, out of the moneys raised and received by the said Local Board of Health, by virtue of the said order, and the statutes in that behalf made and provided, by and out of which said funds and moneys it was then the duty of the said Local Board of Health to pay to thy plaintiff the amount of his said salary so due and in arrear to him as aforesaid, of all which premises the said Board of Health and the members thereof respectively, after the said sum of 30*l.* so became due and payable to the plaintiff, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. had notice and were then requested by the plaintiff to pay him the same; yet the said Board of Health and the members thereof, not regarding their duty in that behalf, but contrary and intending to injure and defraud the plaintiff in this behalf, did not nor would, when they were so requested, or at any time before or afterwards, pay to the plaintiff the same sum of money, or any part thereof, but have hitherto wholly neglected and refused so to do contrary to their duty in that behalf, and contrary to the statutes in that behalf made and provided, to the damage of the plaintiff, &c.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded:—

First, Not guilty.

Secondly. A traverse of the allegation that the plaintiff was organist of and in the parish church of Burslem, at the salary mentioned payable on the said 29th of September in each and every year.

Thirdly. That the provisional order did not recite or direct in manner and form as in the declaration alleged.

Fourthly. That there were not on the day when the said sum of 30*l.* so became due and payable to the plaintiff for his said salary as alleged, or at any time afterwards before the commencement in this suit in the hands of the said Local Board of Health, funds or moneys applicable to or sufficient for the payment to the plaintiff of the said sum of 30*l.* or any part thereof out of the moneys raised or received by the said Local Board of Health by virtue of the said order, under the statutes in that behalf made and provided in manner and form, &c.

Fifthly. That the said Local Board of Health never did determine to pay to the plaintiff the money for the non-payment whereof the plaintiff has above complained, or any part thereof, and that before the commencement of this suit, and at a reasonable time in that behalf, to wit, on the 29th day of September, A.D. 1851, the said Local Board of Health did, at a meeting of the said local Board then duly holden, in the reasonable exercise of their discretion in that behalf, reasonably determine not to pay the said money, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff, and to apply the whole of the said funds and moneys in the declaration mentioned to be in their hands to the other purposes to which in and by the said local Act the said trustees were empowered at their discretion to apply the same; and the defendant further says, the said other purposes at the time of the said determination reasonably required the whole of the said funds and moneys to be applied for the last-mentioned purposes, concluding with a verification.

The plaintiff joined issue on the four first pleas, and replied de injuria to the last.

Whateley, Q.C. and Whitmore, for the plaintiff.

Gray and P. Mahon, for the defendant.

The plaintiff sought to establish his claim in the following manner: by the local Act, 6 Geo. 4, s. 131, "An Act for Regulating the Markets in the town of Burslem, in the county of Stafford, and for Lighting, Regulating the Police, and Watching the said town of Burslem, &c." it was enacted (sec. 91), "That out of the first moneys which shall be raised or received by virtue of this Act, the said trustees shall in the first place pay and discharge all the costs, charges, and expenses relative to the procuring and passing of this Act, or so much and such part and parts thereof as the said trustees shall order and direct, with legal interest for such parts thereof as shall have been advanced for that purpose, and the remainder thereof shall be applied, at the discretion of the said trustees, in payment of the rents and fines due and to become due to the lord of the manor for the time being in respect of the said market-house and the waste lands in the possession of the said trustees, and in the purchase of such messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments as shall be necessary for the purposes aforesaid, and in keeping the said town-hall and market-house in repair, and in providing the necessary conveniences for the said market, and otherwise executing the several purposes of this Act as to the said market, and in paying the salary to the organist of Burslem Church, and in reducing, paying off, and discharging the principal sums of money and interest which now are owing, or which shall be borrowed upon any mortgage or mortgages, and in redeeming any annuities to be granted by virtue of this Act, and the same shall in the next place be applied for or towards such general improvements in the said parish of Burslem, or for establishing, promoting, or assisting any public works, institutions, or establishments there, as the said trustees assembled at any meeting to be held in pursuance of and according to the directions of this Act shall think proper. And if any surplus shall then remain, such surplus shall be applied in aid and diminution of the police-rates hereinafter directed to be raised."

A copy of the provisional order of the General Board of Health, by which Burslem was brought within the operation of the Health of Towns Act, and providing for the repeal of the above-mentioned Local Act, except certain clauses, was put in evidence. This order having been subsequently confirmed by the Public Health Act, 1850, No. 3, obtained the force of an Act of Parliament under the provisions of the statute.

The provisional order contained the clauses as set out in the declaration, transferring the liabilities and duties of the trustees under the Local Act to the Local Board of Health. By the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, the clerk of the local board was empowered to sue and be sued on behalf of the board.

The plaintiff was examined on his own behalf. He stated that he was appointed organist of the parish church of Burslem in 1849, by the officiating clergyman. His salary was at first 20*l.* a year, but was subsequently increased on account of extra services to the sum of 30*l.* in the whole. He received this salary from the market trustees down to the year 1850. He subsequently received about a quarter's salary from the Local Board of Health. On afterwards applying by letter to the Board for the balance due, he received the following answer:—

"Burslem, Oct. 22, 1851.

"Re Organist Salary.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Burslem Local Board of Health to inform you, that a special meeting has been this day held for the purpose of considering your application for the payment of 30*l.* for a year's salary as organist of the parish church, when it was determined to resist the demand.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"To Mr. R. J. Edwards." "J. Lowndes."

The defendant was also called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, to produce the published statement of the receipts and expenditure of the Board, drawn up by the defendant as secretary, and duly audited. This statement shewed a balance in hand on the market trust account of upwards of 200*l.* On cross-examination it appeared that a large sum had been borrowed on mortgage of the market estates, and that the principal sum of 7,140*l.* was still due, which was not entered in the account.

Evidence was also given shewing the payment of the organist's salary by the treasurer under the original Market Act down to the establishment of the Board of Health.

At the close of the plaintiff's case—

Gray submitted that the action was not maintainable. 1st. No notice of action was proved. The Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 139, enacts that no writ or process shall be sued out, &c. against the Local Board of Health, &c. or the clerk, &c. "for anything done or intended to be done under the provisions of this Act, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing shall have been delivered to him, &c. clearly and explicitly stating the cause of action, &c. and upon the trial of any such action the plaintiff shall not be permitted to go into evidence of any cause of action which is not stated in the last-mentioned notice; and unless such notice be proved, the jury shall find for the defendant." The board was here charged with a breach of duty. [Cresswell, J.—They are not charged with doing anything, but simply for not doing it.] The cases certainly formerly laid it down, that something must be done in order to render the notice necessary, but that notion has been recently shaken. The object of requiring a notice is, that the party may have an opportunity of making amends. Davis v. Curling, 15 L. J. (N. S.) Q. B. 56.) Another objection—2. The 91st section of the local Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 131, was repealed, and the organist's salary did not come within the provisions of the order of the Board of Health. It was not a contract, nor a debt, nor moneys, within the 13th section or paragraph of that order, which referred to securities. The word moneys must be taken ejusdem generis. Then again, it could not be said to be anything entered into, or done under, or in pursuance of the local Act with reference to the purposes of that Act, so as to fall within the 17th section of the order. Then, was it within the 18th section? That declared that the repeal of the local Act should be without prejudice to any penalties incurred under that Act, and to all estates, rights, interests, claims, and demands whatsoever at the time of the passing of any Act of Parliament confirming that order, created, confirmed, subsisting, and capable of being recovered, enforced, and enjoyed under and by virtue or in pursuance of the said local Act. This proviso, therefore, was simply to keep alive any previously existing liabilities, but did not extend to any liability arising after the repeal of the Act. For example, a penalty, if incurred before, might be recovered afterwards, but not otherwise. 3. Assuming that there was a liability on the part of the board, the liability was not to the organist; there was no duty to him. The organist was not appointed by the trustees. There was not any direct right or claim against the board. If there were no funds, still the organist is to be paid, but not by the trustees. His claim would be probably against the churchwardens. The latter, therefore, are the parties to sue the board for the salary, if there is any liability at all. 4. Another objection is, that the plaintiff has only proved that he acted as organist, and not any appointment; at most only a verbal one by the curate. It is submitted that this is not sufficient in the case of a corporation or quasi corporation. 5. But the substantial point in this case was, that there was no money appropriated by the commissioners or trustees for the purpose of paying the organist's salary, but the whole was, on the contrary, an open fund, and therefore no action would lie. The 91st section directed the money to be laid out in various ways; amongst others, in reducing and paying off the sums due on mortgage; and it appeared that upwards of 7,000*l.* was due on that head alone. The trustees had a discretion, and in its exercise might choose to pay the balance in reduction of that principal, and, in the absence of an express appropriation, no action would lie. (Pardoe v. Price, 14 L.J. (N.S.), Ex. 216.) There the action was for money had and received; but the decision did not turn upon that, but on the fact that there was no appropriation. On this, the substantial ground of defence, he submitted the action would not lie. Some of these objections were on the record, but the first was not. The fourth and fifth pleas were intended to raise the last point. The fifth plea alleged that the Local Board of Health never did determine to pay the plaintiff, and this plea was supported by the letter of the defendant of the 22nd of October, 1851.

It being agreed that the points should not be further argued here, but that the verdict should be entered as the learned judge should decide, with leave to move the Court above, Cresswell, J. said,—It appears to me that there is nothing in the objection as to the want of notice of action. The case cited is not in point. The principal point turns on the 91st section of the original Act, for which the order of the Local Board of Health is substituted. Then the question arises, whether an action lies to recover under the circumstances proved. My impression is, that the board is not liable without an appropriation. On the first plea of not guilty, therefore, I think the defendant is entitled to a verdict. As to the other objections, I differ from Mr. Gray. I do not think any formal appointment of the organist was necessary; and it seems to me, so far as I can form an opinion here, that the same duties as devolved on the trustees, with respect to the organist's salary, under the 91st section, devolve on the trustees under the order. With regard to the fourth plea, I think the meaning of that plea is, simply, that the defendant had not money in hand sufficient to pay the amount, without reference to any question of appropriation; but the facts shew that there was, in point of fact, money in hand. That plea, therefore, must be found for the plaintiff. As to the fifth plea, if it is only an allegation that the board was resolved not to pay, it would be insufficient; but, treating it as a plea alleging that there was no appropriation, I shall direct the jury to find for the defendant. The question, however, arises on the general issue.

Under the direction of the learned judge, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on the second, third, and fourth pleas, and for the defendant on the first and fifth, with leave to either party to move.

DIGEST OF SCOTCH CASES.

COURT OF SESSION—SECOND DIVISION.

Saturday, Jan. 31, 1852.

Dixon v. Ranken.

Master and servant—Liability of master.

A master will be held liable in damages for injuries done to a workman in his service, in the course of his employment, by a fellow-workman, also in the master's service.

This was an appeal from the Sheriff-Court of Glasgow. The action was brought by Mrs. Ranken, the widow of a workman in Dixon's employment, against Dixon for damages, for the injury and loss sustained by her through the death of her husband, caused by the negligence of a follow-workman, also in the employment of the defendant, in working a coal-pit of the defendant. The sheriff-substitute (Skene) found the defendant liable in damages, and to this judgment the sheriff (Alison) adhered.

Patton (with whom Inglis) for appellant, argued, that from the facts brought out in evidence the plaintiff had no claim for damages. But even supposing it proved that the death of her husband had been occasioned by the act of his fellow-workman, Dixon could not be held liable. Hutchison, 22nd May, 1850, 19 L. J. Ex. 296; Wigmore, 22nd May, 1850, 20 L. J.; Priestley v. Fowler, 3 L. & W. 1.

Pattison for respondent. — The liability of the master to his servant for injuries done by his fellow-servant, has never been disputed in Scotland, whatever may be the law in England. Sword v. Cameron and Gellatly, 13th Feb. 1839. There are not many cases which can be cited, just because the rule never has been disputed.

The Lord Justice Clerk, after going over the evidence, which he held to establish that the injuries had been caused by the negligence of the fellow-workman, said,—It is said, entirely on the authority of certain decisions and opinions of the Courts of England, that the master is not responsible—as I understand in any circumstance—to those employed by him for any injuries caused by the carelessness, inattention, and unskilfulness of other servants in his employment. That there are many cases in which the master will not be liable for injuries done by his servants, whether to a third party or to another servant acting at the time in his master's service, is quite true; but such exceptions (for such they are in the law of Scotland) depend on the state of the facts and the nature of the misconduct in the particular case. These exceptions will cover some of the extreme cases put in the English opinions; while others of these cases seem to apply to the master's liability to third parties. I observe, so far as I can follow or understand the English cases, that the judges lay down the doctrine that by the law of the contract of service as fixed in England, the servant runs all risks arising from the misconduct and unskilfulness of other servants of the same master, for the dangers from such are risks incident to the labour he undertakes in that particular service. If this is the law of England, then the decisions referred to follow necessarily. But this forms only another instance, from which it appears how widely different in essential principles are some of the most common contracts of the law of Scotland and England. The law of Scotland as to the contract of service in regard to such matters as are here raised is perfectly fixed. The master's primary obligation in every contract of service in which his workmen are employed in a hazardous and dangerous occupation, for his interest and profit, is to provide for and attend to the safety of the men. That is his first and leading obligation, paramount even to that of paying for their labour. This obligation includes the duty of furnishing good and sufficient machinery and apparatus, and of keeping the same in good condition—and the more rude and cheap the machinery, and the more liable on that account to cause injury, the greater his obligation to make up for its defects by the attention necessary to prevent such injury. In his obligation is equally included, as he cannot do everything himself, the duty to have all acts by others whom he employs, done properly and carefully, in order to avoid risk. This obligation is not less than the obligation to provide for the safety of the lives of his servants by fit machinery. The other servants are employed by him to do acts which, of course, he cannot do himself, but they are acting for him, and instead of himself, as his hands. For their careful and cautious attention to duty, and for their want of vigilance, and for their neglect of precaution by which danger to life may be caused, he is just as much responsible as he would be for such misconduct on his own part, if he were actually working or present. And this particularly holds as to the person he entrusts with the direction and control over any of his workmen, and who represents him in such a matter. The servant, then, in the contract of service in Scotland, undertakes no risk from the dangers caused by other workmen from want of care, attention, prudence, and skill, which the attention and presence of the master, or others acting for him, might have prevented. His master is bound to protect him from such dangers. There have been many cases in Scotland, at all periods, and during the last fifty years, a very large number, which proceeded on this as a fixed principle of the law as to the contract of service. Of course there arise a number of cases in the varied trades of modern society, in which the acts of the servants may be of such a kind that, although not criminal, they yet do not involve the master in liability; and in such cases the law was clearly admitted on all hands, although its application was matter of nicety. The case of Sword is a case which eminently and very strongly brings out the doctrine of the law of Scotland. The injury there was caused by the culpable negligence or rashness of the other workmen employed by the tenant of the quarry, in precipitately firing off a blast, contrary to the plain precautions required for the safety of the men. The law, that the master is liable for injuries done by servants to one another, was not disputed. The sole question was, in truth, whether the plaintiff was not to blame, and was not himself the sole cause of the injury he received. I refer to the full notes of Lord Cockburn, and to the detailed opinions of Lord Gillies, of the late Lord President and Lord M'Kenzie, to shew how perfectly settled and rooted is the doctrine of the law of Scotland as to the contract of service as to this point. It is in vain to attempt to disturb it in this Court; and having heard what is now advanced, I have only to say, that I shall not regard the point as again open for argument. But then it is quite within this doctrine, as settled in our law, to contend that the fault of the man himself occasioned the injury, or that the other workmen were versantes in illicito, or that he and they were misconducting themselves. No attention whatever can be paid to the plea in this case, that the workmen were told to hold on, and that they did not do so, and so violated the instructions given. The master is bound, in such a case, to have such control over the men as will ensure that being done which their safety requires. Every kind of neglect and carelessness on the part of the workmen, is a violation of instructions, direct or implied; and, therefore, to admit this plea, would, in truth, be to protect the master in almost every case from the consequences of the negligence and recklessness of his workmen.

Lord Medwyn gave no opinion on the point of law, as he hold the facts in evidence did not establish the case of the plaintiff.

Lord Cockburn concurred with the Lord Justice Clerk as to the effect of the evidence. The plea that the master is not liable rests solely on the authority of two or three very recent decisions of English Courts. And these decisions certainly do seem to determine, that in England, where a person is injured by the culpable negligence of a servant, that servant's master is liable in reparation, provided the injured person was merely one of the public: but that he is not so responsible, if the person injured happened to be a fellow workman of the delinquent servant. It is said, as an illustration of this, that if a coachman kills a stranger by improper driving, the employer of the coachman is liable; but that he is not liable if the coachman only kills the footman. If this be the law of England, I speak of it with all due respect. But it most certainly is not the law of Scotland. I defy any industry to produce a single decision, or dictum, or institutional indication, or any trace of any authority to this effect, or of this tendency, from the whole range of our law. If such an idea exists in our system, it has as yet lurked undetected. It has never been directly condemned, because it has never been stated. The case of Sword gave the Court a fair opportunity of applying the principle if it existed,—for there it was a workman who had been hurt by the negligence of his fellow workers,—but the employer was found liable. Many similar cases have occurred, and they have all been disposed of without the interference of this conception. The whole course of our practice has proceeded on the assumption that the liability of an employer did not cease, merely because, besides employing the wrong-doer, he also employed him to whom the wrong was done. I am clear for adhering to our own rule, and to our own legal and practical habits. The new rule seemed to be recommended to us not only on account of the respect due to the foreign tribunal—the weight of which we all acknowledge—but also on account of its own inherent justice. This last recommendation falls with me, because I think that the justice of the thing is exactly in the opposite direction. I have rarely come upon any principle that seems less reconcileable to legal reason. I can conceive some reasons for exempting the employer from liability altogether, but not one for exempting him only when those who act for him injure one of themselves. It rather seems to me that these are the very persons who have the strongest claim upon him for reparation; because they incur danger on his account, and certainly are not understood, by our law, to come under any engagement to take these risks on themselves.

Lord Murray.—I do not pretend to know, and have not examined the law of England on the present question. But one point I hold to be clear by the law of Scotland, that a master who carries on a manufacture of any kind in which the lives of those in his employment are exposed to danger, is bound to have all his machinery, &c. in a most sufficient state. Here the evidence shews it was not, and I therefore cannot hesitate to hold the master liable.

The Court adhered.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Owen v. Bryant.

Will—Construction—Illegitimate children taking with legitimate children—Intention.

A testator by his will, after reciting that he had nine children, whom he named and described, devised his real estate upon trust for sale, and upon the death of his wife, the proceeds were to be divided among his children by his wife then living, and the issue of such of them as should be then dead, such issue taking per stirpes, and not per capita, but subject, as to the shares of daughters, to the directions thereinafter contained; and the testator thereby directed his trustees, during the life of each of his said children by his then present wife, who should happen to be a daughter, to pay the dividends of her share of the proceeds of the real estate as such daughter should appoint; and in default of appointment, to such daughter for her life to her separate use; and after the decease of such daughter, upon certain trusts for the benefit of her children; and in default of issue of such daughter, then upon trust as such daughter should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, then upon certain trusts for the benefit of the brothers and sisters of the whole blood of such daughter and their issue; and in default of such brothers and sisters, or their issue, then upon trust for the next of kin of such daughter at her death, according to the Statute of Distributions. The testator died, leaving by his wife the nine children mentioned in his will, one of whom, a married daughter, was illegitimate, having been born before his marriage with his wife:

Held, that according to the intention of the testator, on the face of the will, the illegitimate daughter ought to participate in the gift to his children generally of the proceeds of his real estate. There is no rule to the effect that illegitimate children cannot, under any circumstances, participate with legitimate children in the benefit of a gift or bequest to children generally: in each case the question depends upon the intention appearing in the will.

This was a special case, originally set down to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Turner, but, in order that it might be disposed of before the commencement of the long vacation, it was, by the consent of the parties, and by the permission of their lordships, transferred to the keeper of the Court of Appeal. It is as follows:—R. W. made his bill, dated the 24th September, 1836, whereby, after reciting that his two daughters by his first wife were amply provided for by him on their respective marriages, and reciting that he, the testator, had nine children then living by his present wife, viz. Eliza, the wife of A. B.; Charlotte, the wife of C. D.; Harriet, the wife of E. F.; Mary Ann W.; Maria, the wife of G. H.; Robert W. his eldest son; George B. W. his second son; Caroline W.; and Charles Frederick W. his youngest son; and reciting that, on the respective marriages of his four married daughters by his present wife, he had advanced to them sums of money, amounting together to 560*l.* each, and that it was his intention to make similar provisions for his two unmarried daughters, bequeathed the sum of 1,120*l.* to trustees, upon trust, to divide the same into two equal shares, one of such shares to be allotted to each of his said two unmarried daughters, and to be held upon the like trusts for the benefit of such daughter as were declared thereinafter concerning the share which should be allotted to her in the proceeds of the sale of his real estate and leasehold lands thereinafter devised and bequeathed, and the stocks, funds, and securities thereof, in case she were living on the decease or second marriage of the testator's said wife. The testator then gave certain legacies to his sons, and bequeathed the residue of all his personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever (except leasehold lands and tenements) to his wife absolutely. The testator then devised and bequeathed all his real estate, and all his leasehold messuages or tenements, lands, and hereditaments, to the trustees before named, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns respectively, upon trust, on the decease of his said wife, or in her lifetime with her consent in writing, absolutely to sell the whole or any such real and leasehold estates, and to invest the proceeds of such sale or sales in the parliamentary stocks or public funds of Great Britain, or at interest in Government or real securities in England or Wales; and upon further trust to permit and suffer his said wife Charlotte W. to receive the rents and profits, interest and dividends, and annual produce of his said real estate and leasehold lands, and trust moneys and securities, during such time as she, his said wife, should continue his widow and unmarried; but if his said wife should marry again after his decease, then upon trust, after such marriage, and during the remainder of her life, with and out of such rents, issues, and profits to pay her an annuity of 50*l.* to her separate use, free from anticipation. The will then proceeds as follows:—"And from and after the decease or marriage of my said wife, but subject and without prejudice to the trusts and purposes aforesaid, the said trustees or trustee for the time being do and shall divide the principal of the said trust moneys, stocks, funds, and securities between all and every my children by my said present wife who shall be living at the time of her decease or second marriage, and the issue of such as shall have departed this life leaving issue then living, such issue taking per stirpes, and not per capita, as tenants in common, and their respective executors, administrators, and assigns, subject, nevertheless, as to the shares of daughters, to the directions hereinafter contained. And I do hereby direct that my said trustees or trustee shall, during the life of each of my said children by my present wife who shall happen to be a daughter, pay the dividends, interest, and annual proceeds of her share of the said stocks, funds, and securities, trust-moneys, and premises, unto such person or persons, for such purposes and in such manner only as such daughter, whether covert or sole, shall from time to time, by any writing signed by her, appoint, but not so as to deprive herself, while under coverture, of the benefit thereof by anticipation; and in default of such appointment, and subject thereto, into the hands of such daughter for her sole and separate use, exclusively of any husband with whom she may marry, and so that her receipts shall be sufficient discharges for the same; and from and after the decease of each and every of such daughters, then upon the trusts thereinafter mentioned, for the benefit of the children of such daughter; and in default of issue of such daughters, then in trust for such person or persons and for such purposes as such daughter should by will appoint; and in default of appointment, upon the following trusts, viz. "upon trust for the brothers and sisters of the whole blood of such daughter then living, equally, and the issue of any brother or sister of the whole blood who may have died leaving issue then living (such issue taking per stirpes, and not per capita) as tenants in common, and their respective executors, administrators, and assigns; and in default of any brother or sister of the whole blood, or the issue of any such brother or sister, then upon trust for such person or persons as, at the time of the decease of such daughter, shall be her next of kin, under and according to the statute made for the distribution of intestates' effects."

The testator died, leaving the nine children mentioned in the former part of the will, being his only children by Charlotte his wife, of whom Eliza, the wife of A. B. was illegitimate, being born of the testator's wife before his marriage with her.

The question raised by this special case for the determination of the Court was, whether, upon the death of the testator's widow, which event had taken place, the illegitimate daughter was entitled to a share of the proceeds of the testator's real estate.

W. R. A. Boyle, for the illegitimate daughter Eliza, and her children, contended, that as the testator had described her in the commencement of his will as one of his "children," she ought to take according to the intention of the testator, apparent on the face of the will. The general rule was, that by the term "children" in a will legitimate children only would be considered as meant, but if it appeared on the will itself that the testator intended illegitimate children to take, there was no rule to prevent such intention from being carried into effect. (Beachcroft v. Beachcroft, 1 Madd. 430; Bayley v. Snetham, 1 S. & S. 78; Gill v. Shelley, 2 Russ. & My. 336; Meredith v. Farr, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 525; Evans v. Davies, 7 Hare, 499; Metham v. The Duke of Devon, 1 P. Wms. 529.) [Lord Justice Knight Bruce.—The testator in the commencement of his will in effect says his illegitimate daughter is to be considered as one of his children, and afterwards makes a gift to his children. Where is the difficulty? Transfer the designation from the subject to the object. Suppose a person says in his will a cabinet shall mean a table, and then gives all his tables, would not the cabinet pass?]

Whaley, for the trustees, submitted to the Court that the illegitimate daughter could not take under the gift in the will. That the authorities had clearly established two propositions; first, that illegitimate children could not take as a class, but as persons designate; second, that illegitimate children could not take as a class with legitimate children. He cited Wilkinson v. Adam, 1 V. & B. 422; Fraser v. Pigott, 1 You. 351; and Bagley v. Mollard, 1 Russ. & My. 581.

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—This case has been well argued by the learned counsel, but with all respect to them, I think that a very material passage in the will, to which my attention has been called by my learned brother, has not been touched upon in the argument, nor even set forth in the special case. But for that I was on the point of differing from my learned brother as to the construction to be put upon this will. The grounds of the conclusion I had come to were these: I reject the notion of there being any rule to the effect, that illegitimate children cannot, under any circumstances, participate with legitimate children in the benefit of a gift or bequest to children generally. I think that there is no invariable rule of that sort, but that in each case the question is one which depends upon the circumstances appearing upon the will; and that if, from the whole context of the will, it appears that illegitimate children are to be included with legitimate children in the benefit intended, illegitimate children may take. Primâ facie, the word "children" means legitimate children, and is to be read as if the word "legitimate" were annexed. Therefore, where a will purports to give a benefit amongst children, it is the same thing as if it had said "amongst legitimate children," unless something is disclosed on the face of the will which shews that that is not meant. Now, it was said that in this will, that something is disclosed, inasmuch as the testator begins by saying, "Whereas, I have nine children, viz. Eliza, wife of R. B. O.; Charlotte, wife of," &c.; and among the nine children thus enumerated, one is illegitimate, and consequently, that the testator, when he speaks of his children, means to designate his daughter Eliza O. also, who is not legitimate. The question, however, is, whether this recital must of necessity be coupled with the gift afterwards of the real and leasehold estates; for the rule is, that legitimate children must be taken to be intended by the word "children," unless the context leads necessarily to the inference that something else was meant. Now, the recital here was for a purpose, viz. as an introduction to, and explanation of, the gift made immediately afterwards in favour of the testator's two unmarried daughters. After enumerating his children, and distinguishing those daughters that were married, the testator goes on to recite his intention to make a provision for each of his two unmarried daughters equal to that which he had previously made upon each married daughter upon her marriage. This provision he then makes, and he then proceeds to give and devise his real estate and leasehold estate in the following manner:—[His lordship read from the will the gift of the real estate of the testator.] Now, I must own, that had the will stopped there, I should have thought that legitimate children, and legitimate children only, were intended; for I cannot see that there would, in that case, have been an absolute necessity to construe the word "children," otherwise than according to its natural import. In some of the cases cited, it was thought impossible to construe the word according to its natural import, as in the case of Gill v. Shelley, where the gift was to the children of a deceased person, who had died leaving only two children, of whom one was legitimate, and the other illegitimate. There it was held, that the illegitimate child was intended to be included, otherwise it was impossible to give a meaning to the word "children," which was in the plural. So, also, where the gift is to the "children" of a deceased person, who at his death left none but illegitimate children, and there the illegitimate children are supposed to be intended, for otherwise there would be nothing for the will to operate upon. The principle upon which Sir John Leach, M.R. acted in Bagley v. Mollard, 1 Russ. & M. 586, is, I think, the right one. There the testator bequeathed a leasehold house in trust for Elizabeth Mollard, whom he described as the then only surviving child of his son William Mollard, and concluded his will by a residuary bequest to all and every the children of his sons James Mollard and William Mollard, and of his daughter Sarah Bagley. Elizabeth Mollard, the grandchild, being illegitimate, the question was whether she was entitled to share in the residuary gift. Sir John Leach held she was not, on the principle that whenever it was possible for the general description of children to include legitimate children, it could not also be extended to illegitimate children. Upon that principle I should have come to the same conclusion here, but for a passage in the will to which my attention has been called, viz. the passage in which the testator says, "And I do hereby direct that my said trustees or trustee shall, during the life of each of my said children by my present wife, who shall happen to be a daughter, dispose of the interest of her share," &c. in the way mentioned in the will. Coupling that passage with the passage which precedes it, and in which the testator enumerates by name his children by his present wife, I am of opinion that by the words "children by my present wife," he must be taken to have meant all those whom he had previously enumerated as his children.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The passage upon which so much stress has been laid by my learned brother is not stated in the abstract of the will as set forth in the special case, but was discovered only on my referring to the probate of the will. It will be necessary, therefore, that the probate should be entered. It is important that it should be so, because Lord Cranworth has laid so much stress upon the passage in question. He is, I need not say, probably right; but, for myself, I confess I should have thought the intention of the testator sufficiently apparent without the aid of those words. I think that, consistently with the whole of the authorities cited, except, perhaps, the case of Bagley v. Mollard, this case may be decided according to the plain intention of the testator. The result is, that the illegitimate daughter and her children are entitled to a share in the proceeds of the real estate.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

SIMPSON v. DENISON.

Railway companies—Agreement to apply the funds of one company to purposes not contemplated by Act—Tolls on railway lines—Tolls, what they are. Two railway companies were established by Act of Parliament, each special Act incorporating the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. One railway (A.) agreed with the other (B.) that until an Act could be obtained, the A. company would work the traffic of the B. company, and pay tolls, after the expenses of the B. company, equal to 4l. per cent. on its paid-up capital, and after the Act should be obtained, to guarantee 4l. per cent. to the shareholders of the B. company, and that the A. company should pay all expenses of the Act. Shareholders in the A. company sought an injunction to restrain the carrying into effect the agreement and the application of the funds of the A. company for the purpose of obtaining the Act, and the Court granted the injunction, being of opinion that the payments by the A. company to the B. company were not tolls within the meaning of the 87th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act.

The bill in this case was filed by Mr. Simpson and Mr. Wright, two shareholders in the Great Northern Railway Company, against the directors of that company, praying an injunction to restrain the company and all directors thereof from working the Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston and Eastern Junction Railway Company's line, and for applying the funds of the company to pay a certain per centage to the shareholders of that company, and in payment of certain expenses of an application to Parliament. The arrangement which was sought to be restrained was contained in an agreement by which the Great Northern Company stipulated to bear harmless the Ambergate Company against all liabilities they were under, whether to canal companies or otherwise; and that until a special Act of Parliament could be procured to sanction the working of the Ambergate line by the Great Northern line, the latter should work the former at tolls equal to them, the Ambergate expenses, and to 4 per cent. on the paid-up capital; and that when the Act should be obtained, the Ambergate Company should receive 4 per cent. on such capital; and that the Great Northern Company should pay the expenses of such application to Parliament, and of every subsequent application for such purpose; but the Great Northern Company were to have the power of paying off the Ambergate shareholders at any time at par.

Sir W. Page Wood and Jessell, for the motion, contended that the whole agreement was unlawful. The Act for the formation of the Great Northern Company authorised them to carry on their own line, and the 87th section of the general Act, namely, the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, enabled them to use the Ambergate line for their purposes, or the Ambergate Company to use their line. But as to the Great Northern Company becoming carriers, and leasing or buying the Ambergate line, such a thing could not be. If the lines were interchangeably used, a toll would be payable, but the sums which were stipulated for in their agreement were not tolls at all. Beyond this, the stipulation that the funds of the Great Northern Company should be applied for the purpose of an application to Parliament for such a purpose, a purpose clearly unlawful, was not within the powers of those who entered into the agreement, and could not be sanctioned by the company, and would not be permitted by the Court. (The Attorney-General v. The Corporation of Norwich, 16 Sim. 225; The Attorney-General v. The Guardians of the Poor of Southampton, 17 ib. 7; and The Great Western Railway Company v. Rushout, 16 Jur. 238.)

Bethell, Rolt, and Denison, for the Great Northern Railway Company, argued, that all that was effected by the agreement was provisional and contingent on the sanction of Parliament. Nothing wrong, nothing immoral was intended, and if some part of the arrangement was in fact ultra vires, the Court could not, therefore, interpose and offer an obstruction to the appeal to the wisdom of Parliament. Whatever might be said of the payments technically, no one could deny but that they were essentially tolls; they were payments for the use of the line, and therefore tolls to all intents and purposes. (Beman v. Rufford, 1 Sim. N. S. 550.)

J. Bailey, Erskine, and Hedger, appeared for the Ambergate Company, and submitted to act as the Court should direct, intimating, however, that in the opinion of the company the arrangement was beneficial to both companies. (Ware v. The Grand Junction Water Works Company, 2 Russ. & M. 470; The Great Western Railway Company v. The Birmingham and Oxford Railway Company, 2 Phill. 605; and Mount v. The Shrewsbury Railway Company, 13 Beav. 1.)

Monday, June 28.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The injunction prayed by the bill extends to three heads: first, to restrain the defendants, the directors of the Great Northern Railway Company, from applying any of the funds of the Great Northern Railway Company in payment of any of the liabilities of the Ambergate Railway Company, either in respect to their contracts with canals, or otherwise indemnifying the Ambergate Company against any of their contracts; secondly, to restrain the directors of the Great Northern Company from making any payments to the Ambergate Company, so as to make up a dividend of 4*l.* per cent. on their paid-up capital, or any other sums of money; and, thirdly, from applying any portion of the funds of the Great Northern Company in making application to Parliament for an Act to ratify the arrangement complained of, either with or without modifications, and also from pledging the credit of the Great Northern Company for carrying into effect any of the steps in the arrangement. The first question to be considered upon this motion is, what is the general principle which ought to be applied to cases of this nature? I take that point to be well settled. The principles which are to govern cases of this description between large companies are the principles which regulate the rights of parties in ordinary partnerships. It must be considered, therefore, how this case would have stood if this had been an ordinary limited partnership. Here these companies have been formed for special purposes, that is, for the purpose of making railways between particular places, with power to carry passengers and goods between those places. In the case of an ordinary partnership formed for this purpose, I take it to be quite clear that no majority of the partnership could by any means bind the minority to make a railway, or to carry upon a railway between other and different places. Suppose a contract between a limited number of persons to trade between particular places—say between London and Oporto—in a particular branch of trade, I think it is quite clear that it would not be competent to any majority of partners to bind the minority to trade between London and Lisbon, although embarking in the same kind of trade, and in the same geographical direction. The case might be put of horsing coaches. Suppose a number of persons agreed to horse a coach to run between London and Bath, it is quite clear that a majority of those persons could not bind the minority to horse it between Bath and Exeter. Then, I think, if the case rested there, I should feel little or no doubt on the subject; but it is the duty of the Court in applying these principles, to consider all the terms of this particular partnership. The Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, s. 88, provides "that it shall be lawful for the company, from time to time, to enter into any contract with any other company, being the owners or lessees, or in possession of any other railway, for the passage over or along the railway, by the special Act authorised to be made, of any engines, coaches, waggons, or other carriages of any other company, or which shall pass over any other line of railway, or for the passage over any other line of railway of any engines, coaches, waggons, or other carriage of the company, or which shall pass over their line of railway, upon the payment of such tolls, and under such conditions and restrictions as may be mutually agreed upon; and for the purposes aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the respective parties to enter into any contract for the division or apportionment of the tolls to be taken upon their respective railways." This being a general enactment applicable to all railway companies, I consider that any one who becomes a shareholder in a railway company must be considered as contracting to hold those shares subject to the provisions of that Act. It was argued for the plaintiff, that the general effect of that clause is merely to give a right to contract for passing over the line of another, but that it did not give any right to a company to take up or set down passengers or goods on the line which was to be passed over. This is a narrow construction. The object plainly was to enable the trains of one company to pass to the limits of the railway of another company, so as to avoid the necessity of changing the trains at the point of terminus of each of the railways. Suppose one railway stopped at Grantham, and another proceeded from Grantham to York, it is the precise object of this clause to enable the trains of the company which stop at Grantham, to go on from Grantham to York on the second company's line. There must, therefore, also be held to have been in the contemplation of the Legislature a right to stop at stations, as well as to pass them; and if these words import a right to stop, it is very difficult to say they have no right to take up passengers and goods. "Passing over," in sec. 87, must mean passing over with the ordinary incidents of passing over, that is, with the right of stopping to take up passengers and goods. The clause, therefore, in my opinion, gives a right to agree for leave to pass over another line of railway with the ordinary incidents; but this is not saying that the clause gives a right, under colour of passing over, to acquire the whole trade of the company over whose line such passage takes place. The question, therefore, is, whether this is a bonâ fide agreement for "passing over" the Ambergate line on terms within the meaning of the General Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20; or whether it has been entered into for any other purpose, namely, for the purpose of acquiring the trade of the Ambergate Company; and there is no doubt in my mind, on the agreement itself, but that it was entered into with this latter and more general view. The defendants, feeling some difficulty in their case on the agreement alone, filed an affidavit, stating the mode in which the agreement was intended to be carried into effect, namely, that until a special Act should be obtained, ratifying the agreement, they intended to work the trains of the Ambergate Company over the rails of the Ambergate Company, in conformity with the rules now in force with the Ambergate line; and that they would work the traffic of the Great Northern Company by the same trains, leaving the Ambergate Company in the sole control of their line. Now, this statement might, perhaps, have had some effect in varying the case, so far, at least, as materially to qualify the injunction, if the agreement were in other respects within the powers of the Act. But, in my opinion, it is not, in other respects within the Act. The payment here agreed to be paid is not a toll within the meaning of the Act of Parliament. Tolls are defined to be "dues receivable for the liberty of passing over highways, public or private." They are payments connected with the passing over. It is difficult to know what is the meaning of the word "tolls" as used in the 87th section of the Act. It is not necessary to decide what are tolls, as the word is used in the Act; it is sufficient for my decision in the present case that these payments are not "tolls" within the Act. If I were compelled to give any opinion it would be that tolls should be fixed with reference to the number of carriages passing over this railway, the payment being in consideration of their passing over, both under the Act of Parliament, and from the nature of tolls, being a payment made in reference to their passing over. I do not wish, however, to prejudice the question, whenever it may arise. I do not think it arises here. These payments are, in my opinion, not tolls; and the agreement is one which the defendants had no power to make. I must, therefore, grant the injunction as to the first and second branches; and as to the third branch of the injunction, restrain the defendants from applying the funds of the Great Northern Company in payment of the expense of any applications to Parliament, as mentioned. The case of Ware v. The Grand Junction Waterworks Company makes no distinction between applying to Parliament for the purpose of altering the scheme and object of the company, and defraying the costs of such applications out of the funds of the company. But later cases have established the distinction, and it is clearly a distinction well founded in reason and sense. The injunction, must, therefore, be granted as to this branch also of the application; but it must be limited in some degree; it must be confined to the proceedings on the agreement now before me. That will leave untouched the injunction restraining the defendants from pledging the credit of the company.

HANKIN v. BENNETT.

Bankruptcy—Debt payable on a contingency.

The defendant entered into a bond, conditioned that if he should pay to plaintiff such costs as he should in due course of law be liable to pay, in case a verdict should pass for the defendant in another action, the bond to be void. The last-named action was tried at the Spring Assizes, 1848; in the Easter Term following, a rule nisi for a new trial was obtained; on the 11*th November a fiat issued against the defendant; and in Hilary Term,* 1849, the rule for a new trial was discharged; on the 29*th May the defendant obtained his certificate, and on the* 22*nd August the costs were taxed, and judgment signed against the plaintiff:*

Held, that the action on the bond was not barred by the certificate, and that the liability was not a debt, payable on a contingency, within the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 66. (See now 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 177, 178.)

Action in debt.—The declaration stated that defendant, by his writing obligatory under his seal, bearing date 27th June, 1846, was bound to the plaintiff in 200*l.* subject to a condition thereunder written for making the same void, if one Francis Thomas Gell and the defendant, or either of them, should pay to the plaintiff such costs as the plaintiff should in due course of law be liable to pay, in case a verdict should pass for the defendants in a certain action then pending, which had been brought by one John William Ide Cozens in the name of the now plaintiff, as plaintiff, such costs to be first taxed by one of the Masters in the usual manner. That afterwards, on the 4th day of March, 1848, at the Assizes holden in and for the County of Hertford, a verdict was found for the defendants in the said action; that on the 22nd day of August, 1849, the costs of the said defendants in the said action were duly taxed at 542*l.* 3s.; which sum the plaintiff then became liable to pay to the defendants in the said action; that the said defendant and the said Francis Thomas Gell had not, nor had either of them, paid to the plaintiff the said costs so taxed, whereby the said writing obligatory became forfeited.

Pleas.—1. Non est factum, upon which issue was joined; 2. Fraud and covin; to which plaintiff replied de injuria, and upon that replication issue was joined; and, 3. That on the 29th March, 1849, he, the defendant, became a bankrupt, and that the cause of action in the declaration mentioned accrued to the plaintiff before the defendant so became bankrupt.

The cause came on for trial at the sittings for Middlesex after Hilary Term, 1850, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff for 200*l.* subject to the opinion of the Court upon the following special case:—

In Michaelmas Term 59 Geo. 3, Thos. Hankin entered up judgment in the Court of Common Pleas against Joseph Smith and John Cozens for 6,000*l.* and 5*l.* costs, upon a warrant of attorney, dated 25th June, 1815, given by them to him to secure the payment of 3,000*l.* then due from the said Joseph Smith to the said Thos. Hankin.

The said John Cozens died in the year 1837, and soon after the said Thos. Hankin died, having by his will appointed the plaintiff in this action his executor, who duly proved the same; the said Joseph Smith also died afterwards.

In February 1846, John William Ide Cozens, claiming to be assignee of the judgment debt under an assignment alleged to have been made by the said Thos. Hankin in his lifetime, caused a scire facias to be issued out of the Court of C. P. in the name of the now plaintiff as executor of the said Thos. Hankin, deceased, against the heir and devisees of the said Joseph Smith, for the purpose of enforcing payment of the amount of the said judgment. Whereupon the now plaintiff obtained a judge's order whereby it was ordered that the said John Wm. Ide Cozens should give security to the now plaintiff for the costs which he might be called upon to pay in the event of the defendant's succeeding in the said scire facias.

In June 1846, the now defendant was proposed and accepted, together with one Francis Thos. Gell, as security for the sum of 200*l.* and they thereupon executed the bond upon which this action is brought. The condition of the bond or obligation was, that if the said Francis Thos. Gell and John Bennett, or either of them, their, or either of their heirs, executors, or administrators, should and did well and truly pay or cause to be paid unto the said Daniel Hankin, or his heirs, or executors, or administrators, such costs as the said Daniel Hankin, his heirs, executors, or administrators should in due course of law be liable to pay in case the said John Wm. Ide Cozens should discontinue, become non suit, or a verdict pass for the defendants, or any or either of them, or otherwise, in relation to the said action, such costs to be first taxed by one of the Masters in the usual manner, then the obligation to be void, otherwise to be and remain in full force and effect. Issue was joined on the said scire facias, and the same came on for trial at the Hertford Spring Assizes, in 1848, when a verdict was found for the defendants therein.

In Easter Term, 1848, the said John Wm. Ide Cozens obtained a rule calling upon the defendants to shew cause why the said verdict should not be set aside, and a new trial had, which said rule was, in Hilary Term, 1849, heard and discharged. The defendant's costs in the scire facias were taxed at the sum of 542*l.* 2s. 8d. on the 22nd August, 1849, and judgment was then signed thereon against the now plaintiff. On the 14th November, 1848, a fiat in bankruptcy issued against the now defendant on his own petition, under which he was adjudicated a bankrupt, and he obtained his certificate on the 29th May, 1849. The pleadings formed part of the case, and the question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the plaintiff is entitled to retain the verdict on the issue joined upon the last plea; if the Court shall be of that opinion, then the verdict found for the plaintiff shall stand, but if the Court shall be of the contrary opinion, then the verdict shall be entered for the defendant upon the issue joined on the last plea.

Cleasby, for the plaintiff, contended that the bankruptcy of the defendant at the time, and under the circumstances set forth in the special case, did not discharge him from the cause of action in the declaration mentioned; that the condition of the bond was not forfeited until the costs were taxed by the Master; that such costs could not have been taxed until after the rule nisi was disposed of; and that the bond debt was not proveable under the fiat.

C. E. Pollock, contrà, contended that the condition of the bond was a debt payable on a contingency within the bankrupt laws, and that it was proveable under the fiat.

Cleasby, in reply. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

MARTIN, B.—This was a case for the opinion of the Court. The question was, whether the plaintiff was entitled to retain a verdict which had been taken for him on the trial. The plea was, the bankruptcy of the defendant. The action was on a bond dated 27th June, 1846, the condition of which was, that if the defendant and a co-obligor should pay to the plaintiff such costs as he should in due course of law be liable to pay in case a verdict should pass for the defendants in another action then pending, which had been brought by one Couzens in the name of the plaintiff, the costs to be first taxed by one of the Masters in the usual manner, the bond to be void. The action mentioned in the condition was a scire facias on a judgment obtained by the plaintiff which had been assigned by him to Couzens, which had been assigned by Thomas Hankins, since dead, to William Cousins, of whom the plaintiff was executor. The action was tried at Hertford Spring Assizes in 1848, and a verdict was found for the defendants. In the following Easter Term a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial was obtained. On the 14th November following, the fiat against the defendant issued; and in Hilary Term 1849, the rule for a new trial was discharged. On the 29th May, the defendant obtained his certificate, and on the 22nd of August, the costs were taxed. The question was, whether the action on the bond for the purpose of recovering these costs, was barred by the certificate? We are of opinion that it was not. The bond itself was not forfeited at the time when the fiat issued; if it had been, the question would have arisen whether the demand was proveable under the authority of the case of Hodgson and Bell, 7 Term Rep. 97; but it is quite clear no action whatever could have been maintained on the bond, on the 14th November, 1848, when the fiat issued; the defendant, therefore, could derive no advantage from the principle laid down in the above case. It was urged, that the liability continued, as the condition of the bond was a debt payable on a contingency, within the 6 George 4, c. 16, s. 66, the bankrupt laws which were in force at the time the fiat was issued against the defendant, and that it was proveable under the fiat, and a demand therefore barred. We think, however, this liability was not a debt at all within the meaning of that section. It was a contract to indemnify a nominal plaintiff, whose name was used by a third person against such costs as the plaintiff would become liable to pay, if the defendant obtained judgment in his favour. It seems to us impossible to consider that this is a debt; it is a contingent liability, but not a contingent debt. The case of Bire v. Morson, 4 Bing. 57, decided that costs themselves would not be a contingent debt; à fortiori, we think the contract to indemnify against them could not be one. In —— Ex parte Tindal, 8 Bing. 402, the nature of debts payable on a contingency proveable under a fiat was fully considered by Lord Chancellor Brougham, assisted by the late Lord Chief Justice Tindal and Mr. Justice Littledale, and there is nothing there to be found to support the view that such a liability as the present is proveable under the 66th section of the late Act. In the case of Morrison v. Glover, 4 Ex. 431, decided in 1849, the Court carefully avoided giving any opinion as to the right to prove on a bond of indemnity when the damage was not ascertained at the time of the claim to prove. That was a case arising on a guarantee to pay a certain sum yearly; a very different contract from the present. It is proper to be observed under the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 177, the section in the former statute, as to debts payable on a contingency, is re-enacted, and by the 178th section, there is an extension of the right to claim and prove for a liability to pay the money on a contingency. The judgment will be for the plaintiff.

PREROGATIVE COURT.

Reported by Dr. WADDILOVE, of Doctors' Commons.

March 16 and July 6.

COOMBS v. THE QUEEN'S PROCTOR.

Right to the property of the wife of a convicted felon.

M. C. died intestate whilst her husband was undergoing a sentence of transportation:

Held, that her property accrued to the Crown, and not to her next of kin.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently in the judgment.

Deane appeared for the father, the next of kin of the wife. He cited Bullock v. Dods, 2 B. & Ald. 258; Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & Myl. 754; Ex parte Franks, 1 Moo. & Scott, 11; Weyland's case, Co. Litt. 133, a; Newsome v. Bowyer, 3 P. JUDGMENT.

Sir JOHN DODSON.—In this case of Coombes v. The Queen's Proctor, the question is as to the right to the personal estate of Mary Coombes, deceased. She died on the 6th September, 1850, leaving personal property consisting of about 200*l.* in a savings bank, the produce of her own industry. She died intestate, and without a child; her husband, Robert Coombes, survived her; but it appears that upon the 30th January, 1837, he was convicted of two separate felonies, and was sentenced to seven years' transportation for each offence; that is, until the 30th January, 1851, and consequently till after the death of Mary Coombes, the deceased in this case: hence he was a felon convict at the time of her death. It appears that he had a conditional pardon in the year 1848, not from the Crown, but under an Act of Parliament, from the governor of the colony, that colony being Van Diemen's Land, whereupon he went to Victoria. But, as it will presently be seen, this makes no real difference in the question which the Court has to decide. That conditional pardon does not affect certain cases which must be mentioned. Although the period for which the husband was sentenced has since elapsed, still he is no party to the present proceedings; indeed, some doubt has been suggested on one side whether he is still living or not. However that may be there is no doubt he was alive at the time of the wife's death. The parties before the Court at present are, first, the Queen's proctor asserting the right of her Majesty to the property: and secondly, the father of Mrs. Coombes, who insists upon his right to the personal estate left by his daughter, being, as I stated before, the sum of 200*l.* in a savings bank. Now a claim is asserted on the part of the Crown not merely to the effects belonging to a felon at the time of his conviction, but also to any which may accrue to him afterwards during the time that he remains a felon convict, and consequently it has been argued that her Majesty has a right to the personal estate of Mrs. Coombes to which her husband would have been solely entitled but for his conviction as a felon. On the other hand, it is contended on the part of the father of Mrs. Coombes that whatever effect the conviction of the husband might have upon the property possessed by him at the date of his conviction, it can have no effect whatever on the property since gained by the wife when she continued in this country trading as a feme sole: that she is to be regarded as a widow: or as a wife divorced a vinculo matrimonii; and that her property would go to her next of kin, that is, in this case to himself as her natural and lawful father, she having no children. Cases have been cited in support of the right of the Crown, amongst them Bullock v. Dods, 2 B. & Ald. 258. It appears by the marginal note to that case, there were in it two points; for it says, as to the second point, "By attainder all the personal property and rights of action in respect of property accruing to the party attainted, either before or after attainder, are vested in the Crown without office found, and therefore attainder may be well pleaded in bar to an action on a bill of exchange endorsed to the plaintiff after his attainder." Therefore where a party had been a felon convict, or where he had been attainted, it was held that the Crown was entitled not only to the property which the convict had at the time of his conviction, but that everything which accrued to him afterwards was for the use of the Crown, and not for the benefit of the convict himself. At p. 275 of that case Abbott, C.J. in delivering judgment, is reported to have said, "Upon consideration we are of opinion that the attainder of the plaintiff was perfectly pleadable in bar. An attainted person is considered in law as one 'civiliter mortuus,' and his property does not go to his next of kin, but to the Crown; and this doctrine extends not only to what actually belongs to himself, but also to anything he may afterwards acquire." That case therefore seems very clear and decisive on the point. There was a case cited by Dr. Deane on the other side which he has had the kindness to lend me, and which seems to me to lead very much to the same conclusion, that is, Church's case, reported at page 517 of 16th vol. of the Jurist. It was a decision in Vice-Chancellor Parker's Court, and in that case the marginal note is, "The property of a felon vests, in the Crown notwithstanding conditional free pardon in the penal colonies." Therefore that brings it very near the present case. "A convict sentenced to death for felony, which sentence was commuted to transportation for life, received a conditional free pardon in the penal colony. Held, that such pardon does not alter the effect of the attainder in vesting his property in the Crown." Therefore the question seems to have been precisely similar to the present, with this one exception, that there the felon had been capitally convicted in the first instance, and afterwards his punishment was reduced to transportation, but he was a felon convict. That is the only difference in the two cases, for here we have a conditional pardon by the governor of the colony. Now the case is stated thus—"T. Church, by his will dated in 1821, gave all his real and personal property to trustees upon trust, to sell and to stand possessed of the proceeds, upon trust to invest the same, and subject to certain annuities to pay the dividends and income of such investment to his wife for life; and subject thereto the testator gave half of the trust fund to the children of his brother, W. Church, who should live to attain twenty-one as tenants in common. In 1840 the testator died. All his real and personal property was subsequently converted, and their respective shares were paid to the children of W. Church, except to one who, having attained the age of twenty-one, had been tried for felony in 1833, and sentenced to death, which sentence was commuted to transportation for life—a punishment he was then undergoing. A conditional free pardon, however, had been granted to him in the penal colony." In that case it was precisely the same as in this—conditional pardon in the colony. In that case, "the trustees paid his share into court under the Trustee Relief Act, and the present petition was presented by her Majesty's Attorney-General praying that the costs thereof might be taxed and paid out of the fund in court, and that the residue of such fund might be paid to such person or persons as her Majesty, by sign manual, should appoint to receive the same." Then the decision is this,—"Notwithstanding the conditional free pardon, his Honour, considering that the convict was still under attainder, made the order as prayed." So, because he was still under attainder, still a felon convict, though he had received this conditional pardon from the governor of the colony, his Honour held that the property belonged to the Crown, and directed it to be paid to any one that appeared for the Crown to receive it. It appears to me that case is on all fours with the present, and in conformity with Bullock v. Dods. It makes it, I think, quite clear so far, unless something is shewn to the contrary, that the property does belong to the Crown and no body else. It is true, that in the case of Church, the man had been capitally convicted, that seems the only difference; but it is not the punishment of death that makes the attainder, but being a convicted felon. The learned Sir H. Spelman says, the very term "felony" necessarily implies forfeiture of estate; and this derivation and meaning of Spelman is adopted by Blackstone. That seems to be the meaning, and though other learned lexicographers give a different definition, yet they all come to the same conclusion, that a conviction for felony, whether accompanied by capital punishment, whether there be suspension by the neck, or transportation, or burning in the hand, or whatever it be,—a conviction for felony implies forfeiture of estate, and of goods and chattels—goods and chattel without offices found. Although in the case of Church the party had been capitally convicted, yet it comes to precisely the same thing. It is quite clear on the authority of the cases mentioned, unless there be something to repel it on the other side, that the property of a felon convict becomes the property of the Crown, and not only such as he had at the time of his conviction, but anything that may accrue to him during the period the conviction remains in force till he receives an absolute pardon from the Crown, or the sentence of punishment has been completed. Now a variety of cases have been cited on the other side to shew that Mrs. Coombes was to be considered as a feme sole, as a widow, or as a person who has been divorced, a vinculo matrimonii, and that therefore there was no doubt that her father would be entitled to the property. The cases which have been referred to do not go at all as to the distribution of property on the death of a person so circumstanced—the wife of a convicted felon;—but they go as to points of trading, whether she could trade as a feme sole, whether she was liable to the bankrupt laws, and questions of that description. Certainly there are expressions from which it appears that the wives of persons who are exiled, persons who were banished, persons who had abjured the realm, and the like, are to be considered in the light which the learned counsel pointed out; but there is nothing to shew that on the death of a party so carrying on trade, the property is to go to the next of kin. The first case, I think, in point of date, so referred to was Hatchett and Others v. Baddeley, 2 Bl. 1079. The sole point in that case was, whether a woman who had eloped from her husband, and run into debt, could be sued for such debt. The marginal note is,—"Feme covert eloping from her husband, and running into debt, cannot be sued alone," so that, in point of fact, that authority would go the other way. There is another case in the same volume, mentioned by Dr. Deane, Lean v. Schutz. That is with respect to a feme covert, having a separate maintenance. Though she had a separate maintenance, and was living separate and apart from her husband, still she could not be sued without her husband; but what was referred to was the general question at the end of the case. "The general question was intended by the parties to be decided, but it is not necessary to decide it upon this record, for the whole is totally vicious, as the husband is no party to the record. There is no instance in the books of an action being sustained against the wife, the husband living at the time and under no civil incapacity. Even by the custom of London, though the wife and her effects are alone liable to execution, if she be a sole trader, yet the husband must be a co-defendant; and though a wife may acquire a separate character by the civil death of the husband, as by exile, profession, or abjuration, yet by a voluntary separation she does not acquire such a character which may be called a civil widowhood." Then it was contended by the learned counsel that by abjuration, by exile, or by profession, she did obtain this separate character, and from thence he would infer that her next of kin would be entitled to her property after her death. There is nothing said here about a felon convict. There is profession, exile, abjuration, in none of which is there forfeiture of goods, it is in felony alone that the goods are forfeited. In abjuration, where it is merely voluntary, where the parties abjure the realm out of disgust, as it is said, or where a man abjures it instead of remaining to be punished, and where he makes himself an exile, there is no forfeiture of goods, he departs the kingdom, and then in that case the wife may sue or be sued without the husband being joined with her. Now that does not seem to touch the question, at least not materially. Another case was referred to in Peere Williams, that of Newsome v. Bowyer. That, again, was a case where a party had voluntarily transported himself, he had been convicted, but he had received an absolute pardon from the Crown, not the governor of the colony, which is entitled a conditional pardon, and which the governor is allowed to grant under a special Act of Parliament. So that the party had been convicted of felony, he had received a pardon, but he had transported himself. It was understood that he should do so. Probably at that time, for this was in 1829, there was no such punishment attached to the offence, but he transported himself. His wife remained here, and some property devolved upon her. A share of the orphanage fund, under the custom of the city of London, came to the wife, and there was great difficulty in knowing what to do with it. It was invested, and the wife was allowed to have the interest for her sustenance and maintenance. The husband who had transported himself, afterwards died; the wife married again; and upon an application to the Court of Chancery, the money was transferred to the second husband. The Lord Chancellor much doubted the propriety of doing so, but, however that may be, that does not touch the present case, because the person, though he had been a felon convict, had received an absolute pardon from the Crown, and he was not transported in consequence of his conviction of felony, as a part of his punishment, but he transported himself—was voluntarily absent. In that case it was allowed that the wife, to whom the property passed, under the orphanage custom of the city of London, should have the interest, and afterwards, when her husband was dead, and she married again, the second husband took the property. Another case referred to was that of Roberts v. Walker, 1 Russ. & M. The marginal note is to this effect—"Personal property not belonging to a felon convicted of simple larceny, and sentenced to transportation at the time of his conviction, but accruing due to him afterwards, before his term of transportation has expired, is forfeited to the Crown." So that it goes strongly to support the view taken of the case by the Queen's Advocate. Now, the Master of the Rolls, in deciding this case, said, "In this case two questions are raised, first, whether the personal property not belonging to a felon sentenced to transportation at the time of his conviction, but which accrued to him afterwards, during the term of his transportation, is forfeited to the Crown." That is the first question; then he proceeds to state the second. As to the first, he says, "The first point appears to be settled by the case of Bullock v. Dods, and a felon, until the term of his transportation has expired, is not restored to his civil rights." So that it seems to be pretty conclusive upon the point. Other cases were cited by Dr. Deane, and particularly the case of Ex parte Franks, re Kezia Franks, 1 Moo. & S.; and in that case the only point was this, whether the wife could carry on business as a feme sole, and be liable to the bankrupt laws; her husband had been convicted of felony, and was sent to the hulks, where he was constantly visited by his wife; she had access to him, and so forth. But it was held, notwithstanding, that she was to be considered as a feme sole for the purpose of carrying on the business. The matter was referred to the Court of C. P. and the judges certified to this effect. "We have heard the case argued by counsel at considerable length, and are of opinion that at the date, and suing forth of the commission of bankruptcy against Kezia Franks, to wit, on the 25th day of July, 1827, the said Kezia Franks was a trader, and as such liable to become bankrupt within the true intent and meaning of the Act of Parliament, passed in the 6th year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth." Then the certificate is signed by the judges, and there are the arguments of counsel, in which they go through the various cases I have already referred to, and mention some others; but this is the conclusion to which the learned judges arrive, and this is the certificate which they give. Then I think these cases, especially those of Bullock v. Dods, and Roberts v. Walker, are clearly and directly to the point; and the other cases respecting separate trading, and the wife being considered a feme sole, whether her husband is an exile, or has banished himself, or abjured the realm, cannot affect the law touching the goods of a felon convict, consequently this property must be held to be the property of the Crown. This seems to be the view taken of it by Mr. Justice Williams, in his last edition of the Law of Executors, for at page 1219, he states it thus:—"Where a man is convicted of felony, and sentenced to transportation, not only the personal property which belonged to him at the time of conviction, but also that which accrues due to him afterwards during the term of transportation, such as a legacy bequeathed to him, or a share of a residue devolving on him during that period, is forfeited to the Crown." That, then, is precisely the case that has happened in the present instance; it seems to apply to it most directly. On the death of Mrs. Coombes, this property devolved to her husband, but being a felon convict, he cannot take it for himself; he acquires it for the Crown. This being the result of the cases, this being the opinion expressed by the learned judge in the work to which I have referred, I have no hesitation in deciding that the property in question, the sum of 200*l.* belongs to the Crown, and not to James Coombes, the father of the deceased. The Crown being the party on one side, I say nothing at all as to costs.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. Keene, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

July 12, 13, 14, and 15.

Jones v. Price.

The principle upon which the Court sets aside sales of reversionary interests considered—Purchase by a solicitor from his client—Failure in proof of fraud charged—Costs.

On a bill filed by the assignor of a reversionary interest to set aside the assignment on the ground of inadequacy of consideration and misrepresentation on the part of the purchaser, who was his solicitor, the Vice-Chancellor (on the assignor repaying the purchase-money with interest, at the rate of five per cent.) ordered the deed to be delivered up and cancelled, and this decree was on appeal affirmed.

The Court will not set aside the sale of a reversion on account of inadequacy of price, unless amounting in itself to conclusive and decisive fraud.

The value of a reversion is to be estimated not by the value of actuaries, but at what it will really fetch in the market.

If a solicitor purchase from his client, the purchaser should take care that the vendor has the advice of another solicitor.

When a solicitor enters into a contract with a person, who is or was his client, he ought to be in a position to shew how the contract was entered into, who made the first offer, and what were the general circumstances attending such contract.

A solicitor who conducts the sale of property cannot become the purchaser without full explanation to the vendor, and informing him of his (the solicitor's) intention to purchase.

The Court will not allow the vendor of a reversion to lie by, and, after the reversion shall have fallen into possession, come to the Court to annul the sale merely for want of full consideration.

Where fraud is charged and not proved, the Court will not grant relief on any other ground; except where the relief is granted upon what may be termed a species of fraud. In such a case the Court will not give costs.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. The facts, in addition to those which are mentioned in the judgment, necessary for the purposes of this report, were these:—A Mr. Price bequeathed the residue of his property to his wife and daughter for life, and in the event of his daughter dying without issue, the capital to be divided between such of the issue of his brother and of another sister, as should be living at the death of the surviving tenant for life. In 1837 the plaintiff being entitled to one-fourth part of such residuary property, which amounted to upwards of 40,000*l.* contingently on her outliving the testator's daughter, and being also entitled to a like contingent interest in the other three-fourths respectively, in the event of the parties respectively entitled to them dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life, assigned (and as the bill alleged) under fraud, pressure, and misrepresentation, such several interests to Mr. Price, the manager of the Brecon Bank, and Mr. Thomas, a solicitor, for the sum of 1,325*l.* with a further sum of 250*l.* if her reversion should fall in. At the date of such assignment the testator's daughter, who had married, survived her mother, was fifty-four years of age, and had never had a child. She died in 1845, when the plaintiff instituted the present suit for the purpose of having such sale declared null and void. The grounds alleged in the bill for setting aside the assignment were inadequacy of value, that at the time of the contract for sale, the plaintiff was under pressure and duress, and that as far as the purchaser, Thomas, was concerned, the relationship of solicitor and client existed between them.

A great mass of evidence was gone into, the material parts of which are alluded to in the Lord Chancellor's judgment.

On the hearing of the cause before the Vice-Chancellor, his Honour ordered the assignment to be given up and cancelled, on the plaintiff paying back the purchase-money, with interest at 5*l.* per cent. From this decree the defendants appealed.

Wigram, Malins, and Rogers appeared for the plaintiff in support of the decree.

Russell and Prendergast for the defendant Price.

Bethell, Glasse, and Berrey for Thomas.

The following cases were cited during the argument:—

Coles v. Trecothick, 9 Ves. 234; Evans v. Peacock, 16 Ves. 512; Gowland v. De Faria, 17 Ves. 20; Addis v. Campbell, 4 Bea. 401; Lord Aldborough v. Frye, 7 Cl. & Fi. 456; Hinckman v. Smith, 3 Russ. 433; Davies v. Cooper, 5 M. & C. 270; Edwards v. Meyrick, 2 Hare, 60; Re Bloye's Trust, 1 Mac. & Gor. 488; Edwards v. Brown, 2 Coll. 100; Glascott v. Lang, 2 Ph. 310; Gibson v. D'Este, Ho. of Lords Cases, Sugden, 614.

The Lord Chancellor, in giving judgment, said, that in order to have a clear understanding of the transaction sought to be impeached it would be necessary to go back to the year 1824. In that year the plaintiff and her two sisters, with their husbands, executed a deed to do away with the proviso in the will of Mr. Price respecting survivorship, and to vest their shares in the testator's residuary property in them absolutely, subject only to the life interests of the testator's wife and daughter. Such a deed could not be binding upon either of the married ladies in the event of their surviving their husbands, which they all did, and the plaintiff always protested against its operation as respected herself. In the year 1835, the residue being at that time divisible into fifths, the reversion of one of the daughters was put up to auction, and agreed to be sold, as were also shortly after the shares of the plaintiff and her other sister, the plaintiff's share being agreed to be purchased by the defendant Thomas for 1,800*l.* Certain correspondence ensued respecting the title of the vendors and the deed of 1824, which resulted in the purchases being abandoned. On the 20th of June, 1837, Thomas, with a view of ascertaining the exact value of the reversions, put one of them up for sale at auction, being only a fifth share of the testator's residue, when a sum of 1,810*l.* was bid for it. It was, however, to be remarked that at that sale nothing but the dry contingent interest in one-fifth of the residue was put up, and not the benefit of survivorship in the whole residue, to which the five reversioners were then entitled. By the death of one of her sisters, the interest of the plaintiff was increased to a fourth, and in 1837, the bare reversion, still without the right of survivorship, was offered to a Reversionary Society, who declined to purchase, on the ground that the title was imperfect. The contract which formed the subject-matter of the present suit was then entered into, and it must be borne in mind that the husband of the plaintiff had died insolvent, and indebted to the Brecon Bank in between 300*l.* and 400*l.* The first contract by the defendants to purchase the reversionary interest of the plaintiff, including the benefit of survivorship, for 1,325*l.* was a parol one, and the evidence as to how it first came about, or who first made the offer, was most unsatisfactory, and from the depositions of the witnesses, he (the Lord Chancellor) was inclined to think that it was not until after the contract had been entered into that Thomas suggested that Mrs. Jones should have another solicitor to act for her in the business. From that it was evident that at the time that Thomas first agreed to buy the plaintiff's interest the relationship of solicitor and client was existing between them, and it was consequently his duty to protect her interest, and that if she sold it, it should not go for an undervalue. In no part of the evidence did it appear what was the price that the defendants had offered for the property. The parol offer had virtually been rejected, and the defendants, being anxious to become the purchasers, had planned together to obtain the property at just what price they wished. Thomas was in effect the purchaser at his own price, he being at the very time the solicitor of Mrs. Jones; he acted throughout the transaction, as her solicitor, and although she was ostensibly placed by him into the hands of Mr. Bevan, yet he never acted bonâ fide in the capacity of her solicitor. The property might have been offered to Thomas by Beaven for 2,400*l.* and an additional 500*l.* if it fell into possession. It was not a likely proceeding. That was an absurd proceeding, if it ever took place. It was offered to a Reversionary Society, who declined to purchase until the title was perfected. It was offered to that society with a suppressio veri—it was represented that there was a cloud upon the title; and it must be remembered that, although to the world the title might have been under a cloud, it was well known to Thomas that that cloud was only the invalid deed of 1824, and that the title was as good as any in the world: he did not think fit to enlighten the Reversionary Society on the subject, when they offered 1,800*l.* for it, nor did Mr. Bevan. He was not aware of the defect, and his letters had the very effect of doing that which Mr. Thomas desired; they had the effect of inducing the society to refuse to become the purchasers. These letters, it appeared from the evidence of Bevan himself, were written at the suggestion of Thomas; and they were such as never ought to have been written. That failure induced the plaintiff to fall back upon the parol contract, and as no sum had been specifically offered as the price of the property, and the plaintiff being anxious to sell, they (the defendants) were at liberty to put what price they wished upon it. That Mr. Bevan did: he filled up the consideration in the contract, as if the plaintiff, through her solicitor, had fixed the sum as its value. That could not be relied on as an act on the part of the plaintiff; it was meant to be represented as such, and considering the position that Mr. Bevan occupied towards Mr. Thomas, whose agent in effect he was, it appeared like an intention to mislead the Court, and to let the Court suppose that the plaintiff had arranged her own price. It was Mr. Thomas's duty to have told the plaintiff that he was in treaty for the purchase; he did not do so—she was not likely to know the real value of the property: she was in want of money, and might, therefore, have been induced to take Mr. Thomas's offer, not knowing that, if bonâ fide put up for sale, she could have obtained a much larger amount. His lordship went through all the facts of the case, and had no hesitation in saying that it was utterly impossible that the transaction could stand. In dismissing the appeal he was anxious not to be misunderstood upon what principle he did so; he did not intend in any way to de part from the rule laid down by Lord Cottenham, that the sale of a reversion might be perfectly valid if the market price, or anything fairly approaching that price, had been given. The price was to be estimated, not by the valuation of actuaries, but by what the property would really fetch. His lordship did not intend to break in upon the rule, that a solicitor might purchase from his client, if the client had the advice of another solicitor; but if a solicitor did enter into a contract with a person who is or was his client, he must, at least, be prepared to shew how the contract was entered into, who made the first offer, and what were the circumstances. If this transaction had been a bonâ fide transaction, he would have supported it. His lordship fully concurred in the observations of his predecessors that parties must not lie by, and only come to this court when by the event the transaction had turned out unfavourably. His lordship set aside the present transaction because Thomas was well aware at the time that the offer was made to the Reversionary Society that the supposed imperfections of title were altogether visionary, and he had failed to undeceive the society, who were willing purchasers. The mode, too, in which the purchase-money had been applied, mainly in paying debts of the reversioner's husband, and to which she was not legally responsible, was another reason why she ought not to be bound by the agreement, as, so far from her having received any benefit from the transaction, she was actually left indebted in a sum of 46*l.* for which, together with some costs, she was obliged to give a promissory note. As to the doctrine laid down by Lord Cottenham, that when fraud was charged and not proved there could be no relief on any other ground, to a certain extent he (the Lord Chancellor) adopted it; but not in cases where the relief was given upon what was a species of fraud; though in such cases his lordship begged to be understood as always visiting with costs, the failure to prove fraud when charged. If the reversion in the present case had not fallen into possession, in all probability this suit would not have been heard of; and, therefore, in dismissing the appeal, he should follow what had been done in the court below, and not give the plaintiff any costs.

Appeal dismissed without costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR STUART'S COURT.

Fiott v. Mullins.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 20—Production of documents.

Of a motion under the above Act, which did not come into operation until the 2nd of Nov. notice was previously given for the 2nd of Nov. and it was Held, that such notice was regular.

A defendant in a suit gave notice of motion under the 20th section of the above Act for the production by the plaintiff of all documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the suit. The defendant did not specify the documents required to be produced, and there was no evidence as to what documents were in the plaintiff's possession. The motion was refused with costs.

This was a suit instituted for the purpose of setting aside certain deeds executed by the plaintiff, on the alleged ground of their having been obtained from him by fraud.

Russell and W. W. Cooper now moved on behalf of some of the defendants for the production of all documents in the possession or power of the plaintiff relating to the matters in question in the suit. The motion was made under the 20th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. That section is as follows:—"It shall be lawful for the Court, upon the application of any defendant in any suit, whether commenced by bill or by claim, but as to suits commenced by bill where the defendant is required to answer the plaintiff's bill not until after he has put in a full and sufficient answer to the bill, unless the Court shall make any order to the contrary, to make an order for the production by the plaintiff in such suit, on oath, of such of the documents in his possession or power relating to the matters in question in the suit as the Court shall think right; and the Court may deal with such documents when produced in such manner as shall appear just."

Malins and J. J. Hamilton Humphreys, who appeared for the plaintiff, took a preliminary objection to the hearing of the motion. By the 67th section of the Act it was enacted that "this Act shall commence and take effect from and after the 1st day of November, 1852;" and therefore at the time the notice of this motion was served, the Act was not in operation. It was, however, according to the practice of the Court, that a party who gave notice of a motion should be in a position to make the motion at the time the notice was given. In moving to dismiss a bill for want of prosecution, for instance, the defendant could not give notice of motion before the time had arrived when he could move to dismiss.

The Vice-Chancellor said that he did not think there was anything in the objection.

Russell and W. W. Cooper then proceeded with the motion.

The Vice-Chancellor inquired what were the documents which the plaintiff was to produce?

Russell said that the plaintiff must produce all in his possession or power.

The Vice-Chancellor asked what was the evidence of his having any, and what was the nature of them, that the Court might exercise a discretion?

Russell alluded to the documents mentioned in the plaintiff's own bill, and in the depositions. If a defendant was required to state the documents he desired to have produced, how could the Act be applied?

The Vice-Chancellor did not think that he had any authority under the Act, to make an order in general terms for the production of all documents, analogous to that contained in a decree. He was to consider which of the documents were to be produced; it was, therefore, for the party to state what the documents were, and the nature of them, so that the Court might exercise a discretion. The words of the Act were so very plain, that they would hardly bear argument.

W. W. Cooper referred to the 18th section of the Act. He contended that the Court's discretion as to what documents were to be produced, which the Act required to be exercised, related to those documents which the plaintiff might claim to be exempt from production on account of privilege.

The Vice-Chancellor (without hearing Malins and J. J. H. Humphreys) said that it was perfectly clear that this Act of Parliament could not, according to any reasonable construction of the words of it, be held to sanction an application of this kind. This was a motion for the production of all documents in the possession or power of the plaintiff. The Court could never act upon an application of that kind without some clear and distinct evidence, and some clear and distinct statement of what the documents were. That was the principle and the rule of the Court. But when the terms of the Act of Parliament were looked at, a more obvious misconception of the intention of the Legislature could scarcely occur than was evinced by the terms of this notice of motion. Here was a notice of motion against the plaintiff to produce all documents in general terms; no particular documents were specified, and there was no description to guide the Court as to what was asked. There was not a tittle of evidence to show that the plaintiff had a single document in his possession. There was no pretence for the application, and the motion must be refused with costs.

Practice—Absence of representative of deceased person.

A decree was made on a claim for administration by a residuary legatee against the executors, who were also two of the residuary legatees. One of the executors died intestate, and no administration was taken out to his estate: he had not proved or possessed any of the assets. The Court directed that the suit might proceed without bringing before the Court his personal representative, and that the Master might proceed under the decree in the absence of the legal personal representative.

This was a claim by a residuary legatee for administration of a testator's estate. There were two defendants, Richard Jones and Thomas M'Kiernin, who were the executors and two of the residuary legatees. A decree was made for taking the accounts, and the Master was to be satisfied that all the residuary legatees, or their legal personal representatives, were served. Richard Jones did not prove the will, or possess any of the assets. He died intestate, leaving a widow and four children. The widow refused to take out administration, and would give the plaintiff no information as to the children.

Bird now applied under the 44th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, that the suit might be proceeded with without a representative of Richard Jones.

The Vice-Chancellor said that, as uniformity in decisions under the new practice was necessary, he would take an opportunity of consulting the other judges.

Friday, Nov. 5.—The Vice-Chancellor said that he had conferred with the other judges, who agreed with him, that the suit might be proceeded with without a representative of R. Jones.

Bird then said that as the decree required service of writs of summons upon all the residuary legatees, or their legal personal representatives, it would be necessary that the Court should direct that the Master should proceed under the decree, notwithstanding the absence of the representative of R. Jones, who was also a residuary legatee.

The Vice-Chancellor said that such a direction might be given.

New Orders—Practice—Abatement.

Suits which have become abated before the passing of the late Acts for the regulation of the practice, &c. of the Court of Chancery, may, under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, be revived by order of course, under the 52*nd section; and not by bill of revivor, as heretofore.*

The facts of these two cases were of precisely the same character; and the question for the decision of the Court was, whether, under the 52nd section of the Act for the Improvement of the Jurisdiction in Equity, the suits having become abated before the passing of that Act, they could be revived by an order of course. The following are the words of that section.(a)

Karslake, in the first case.

Elderton, in the second.

The Vice-Chancellor said that it was very desirable that there should be a uniformity of practice upon the subject; he would consult with the other judges.

Wednesday, Nov. 3.—The Vice-Chancellor said that the question in these two causes being whether, the suits having abated before the Chancery Act came into operation, it still applied to them, he had conferred with the other judges upon the point, and they were all of opinion that it did, and that it appeared to him (the Vice-Chancellor) to be the good sense of the matter, and therefore a similar order would be made in both cases.

Order of course to revive.

Bail—Murder—Duelling.

This Court refused to bail the seconds in a duel, though foreigners, where one of the principals was killed, and the seconds had been committed to take their trial for wilful murder, and had confessed to their participation as seconds in a fair duel.

The three things generally speaking to be considered with reference to taking bail are the charge, the evidence, and the punishment for the offence.

M. Chambers (Parry with him) moved for a rule to shew cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not issue to admit these two gentlemen to bail and to bring up the depositions against them, taken before the magistrates and the coroner for Surrey. The coroner's jury had pronounced a verdict of wilful murder against these gentlemen, and they had been committed to take their trial at the next Surrey Assizes. These two gentlemen had acted in a duel as the friends of M. Frederic Cournet, a French Provided also, that if any party so served shall be under any disability other than coverture, such order shall be of no force or effect as against such party until a guardian or guardians ad litem shall have been duly appointed for such party, and such time shall have elapsed thereafter as shall be prescribed by any general order of the Lord Chancellor in that behalf."

naval officer, who had unfortunately lost his life in the contest. Mr. Justice Crompton had been applied to previously to the Term, but he declined to act in this case on his own judgment alone; and after this hesitation on the part of the learned judge, his learned friend Mr. Parry and himself had deemed it proper that the application should be made in the full Court. The circumstances of the case were these. The learned counsel here went into a detail of the circumstances of the duel at Egham, with which the public are already familiar. The circumstances especially referred to were those which went to shew the fairness of the conduct of the parties in the duel, their entire ignorance of the fact that there was anything which would prevent either of the pistols from being discharged, the endeavours of M. Baronnet to prevent the duel, and his own and M. Allaine's attentions to the deceased after the wound was given.

Lord Campbell, C.J. — The purpose of your argument is to shew that bail may be taken because this was a fair duel. This is surely the first time that a court of law has been called on to interfere on any such ground.

Chambers thought he should be able to shew a full justification for this application.

Lord Campbell, C.J.—Do you mean to contend for the proposition, that if a fair duel takes place, and death ensues, that that is not murder by the law of England?

Chambers did not mean to say that; and he should presently come to the principle on which his application was founded; but at present he wished to shew the Court what had been the conduct and the motives of the parties. They were men of high and honourable feeling, and they had acted in ignorance of what was the English law of duelling, and upon the feelings and habits of society in their own country. The learned counsel here read the declaration of Baronnet, already published in the newspapers, in which he declared his previous ignorance of the English law, and his determination, now that he knew it, never to disclose the name of Cournet's adversary, if that adversary did not himself disclose it. The declaration also set forth, that Baronnet had used all his endeavours to prevent the duel, but that the duties of friendship and the laws of honour, and the customs of France, had prevented him from refusing to accompany his friend in that extremity. To this declaration Allaine adhered. The learned counsel said that M. Baronnet was a victim of the extraordinary revolution which during the last year had taken place in France. He had been born in that country, and resided there till January last, since which time he had been in England, engaged in mercantile pursuits. He was exiled, without trial, by a mixed commission, composed of civil and military men, for the part he had taken in opposition to the dictatorship, and for no other offence whatever. Being informed of the decision of the mixed commission he quitted France, and came to England: he had been educated for the legal profession, and for eleven years before 1843, he had been mayor of the town where he resided, and president of the agricultural society there; he had always maintained a high character in his own country; he did not know the laws of this country as to duelling, which, if fairly conducted, was not a criminal offence in France, though it might end in the death of one of the parties. A similar statement was put forward by Allaine. He now came to the principle on which he should contend that this Court ought to interfere. The Court was the protector of those who took refuge here, and lived under the laws of this country. It was unknown to the policy, humanity, and wisdom of the laws of England that before trial the liberty of any one should be taken away, except as a result of necessity, for the purpose of preventing a defeat of justice. The only object of imprisonment before trial was to secure the appearance of the party to take his trial. There was a very recent case in which the principle he mentioned had been acted on, where persons who were charged with a felony had been admitted to bail. That was the case of Reg. v. Scaife, 9 Dowl. 553, and there the principle was stated by Mr. Justice Coleridge, in his manner:—"I conceive that the principle on which parties are committed to prison by a magistrate, previous to trial, is for the purpose of ensuring the certainty of their appearing to take their trial. It seems to me that the same principle is to be adopted on an application for bailing a person committed to take his trial, and it is not a question as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner. It is on that account alone that it becomes necessary to see whether the offence is serious, whether the evidence is strong, and whether the punishment for the offence is heavy." Still more recently there had been a case in which the parties were charged, on the coroner's verdict, with wilful murder, and yet in that case the Court of Q. B. in Ireland had granted a rule for the purpose of admitting the parties thus charged to bail. He referred to the case of the soldiers of the 31st Regiment in the Six-mile-Bridge affair.

Lord Campbell.—In that case did the parties admit that they were guilty of the crime laid to their charge?

Chambers was aware that that was not the case, but submitted that a confession of guilt did not affect the principle of the law. If the Court saw that the appearance of the party to take his trial could be secured, he would be allowed to go out on bail, for the law would not anticipate his punishment. It might not, after all, be a heavy punishment.

Lord Campbell.—If a certain crime is charged, and that crime is confessed, must we not, as judges, give the sentence for that punishment which the letter of the law directs? We cannot anticipate the mercy which the Crown may graciously be pleased to exercise.

Chambers said that the law had always stated the rule as to duelling; but every one knew that the administration of the law had often, not only with reference to duelling but to other offences, adapted itself to the state of feeling in society. There was the case of the Rev. Mr. Allan, recorded in the "Annual Register" for 1782, where it was clear that the prisoner had been at first "committed for trial," and that he afterwards "surrendered to take his trial," the latter fact shewing that he must in the mean time have been admitted to bail. The same spirit had been shewn in various cases, where the rank of the parties led to the impression that they had acted, however wrongly, in accordance with the feelings of the class of society to which they belonged. There were the cases of the duels between the Duke of York and Colonel Lennox, the Duke of Norfolk with Lord Maldon, Mr. Adam with Mr. Fox, Lord Lonsdale with Captain Duff, Mr. Tierney with Mr. Pitt, and Mr. Adolphus with Mr. Alley. Rare had it been in such cases to keep the persons in prison till the time of trial, and rarer still, except there had been unfairness in the duel, had the sentence according to the law been carried into effect. He believed that under circumstances such as existed here, persons in an elevated rank of life had been bailed. The first question was, whether the duel had been fairly conducted; the second was, what was the condition in life of the parties, or were they likely to run away? and if these questions were answered favourably to the accused, as they could be answered here, their application to be admitted to bail had been accustomed to be granted.

Lord Campbell, C.J. said that he was of opinion that no ground had been laid before the Court to justify it in interfering in the way now applied for. For obvious reasons he should abstain as much as possible from observing on the circumstances of the case; but after what had been said on the subject generally, he felt it to be his duty to make some few observations. These two persons were placed in exactly the same situation as if they were native born subjects of this kingdom, and would have the same justice administered to them as would be administered to native born subjects in the highest station in the realm. He was firmly convinced that if any person in the highest station in the realm had been charged by the verdict of a coroner's jury with the crime of murder, and had confessed that he was an accessory in the duel with the deceased in respect of which that verdict had been obtained, there was not any tribunal in this country that would allow him to go at large before trial. The Court had to see, as it had been stated in a most forcible manner by Mr. Justice Coleridge, the seriousness of the charge, the evidence adduced in support of that charge, and the punishment. The Court had to consider the seriousness of the charge—it was murder; the nature of the evidence—there had been a confession; the punishment awarded by the law—death. Under these circumstances could it be supposed that the Court would try by a preliminary investigation whether this duel was a fair or a foul one, and whether there was a certainty of a judgment, and what would be the nature of the sentence? The attempt to do this would be attended with the most injurious consequences. The Court could only look to the case itself. Here was a legal charge, which, on the confession of the accused, must be taken to be established. Was it after that to be said that, under these circumstances, when the confession had been given in evidence, and when, on all the facts before them, and the jurors had given a verdict of guilty, that the sentence of the law would not be pronounced? He hoped that such circumstances might appear that the execution of the sentence might be avoided, but the sentence of death must necessarily be pronounced. The judges of this court could not, at this moment, consider whether there were any circumstances of mitigation, and act as if they were advising the Crown with respect to carrying the sentence into effect, so as to relieve the party from the consequences of the judges doing their duty, which duty was to declare what the law was, and to pronounce judgment according to law. There was no instance cited by Mr. Chambers which formed a precedent for this application. The case in the Annual Register was not an authority. The Court did not know, from the vague statement there, what the charge was, nor what was the form of the finding of the coroner's jury, nor whether the charge found was murder or manslaughter. The Court did not know whether the party was bailed, or, if so, by whom he was allowed to be bailed; and whether it was not by some police magistrate, who had acted in violation of the law. Neither was the Six-mile-bridge case an authority. There the coroner's jury had found a verdict said to be contrary to all the evidence, and the parties accused of wilful murder, instead of admitting their guilt, protested their innocence, and gave evidence to shew that they had only acted in self-defence. That case, therefore, did not apply. He was consequently of opinion that these gentlemen must remain in custody. He did not believe that this case would take anything away from the glory which this country had acquired in affording protection to foreigners. If they came to seek refuge in this country they must obey its laws, and be content to place themselves in the situation of native-born Englishmen. In their trial they would have every fair privilege as foreigners. They would have half the jury composed of foreigners. They would have every opportunity to defend themselves by the most able counsel—perhaps by the learned counsel who had now addressed the Court. But the law must take its course.

Coleridge, J.—I am of the same opinion, and think that this application ought to be refused, because if a rule were granted, and the facts now stated received no answer, this Court would still be bound to remand the accused to prison. It is not necessary for me to say much, but for the reliance placed upon what I said in Reg. v. Scaife. To that judgment I still adhere. A party is not committed for trial on the ground of present guilt, but because there is reasonable ground for presuming him to be guilty. This Court has indeed an unlimited right in all cases to bail the accused; and magistrates, since the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 33, have the right to bail in felony even where the accused has confessed. It is impossible after that to say that guilt alone is a ground on which bail can be refused, but yet guilt may be taken into consideration. The three circumstances generally speaking to be considered are, the nature of the charge, the evidence, and the punishment. Here there is a charge of wilful murder, a confession before the magistrates, and the punishment is by the law a capital punishment. On those grounds there is a probability that no amount of bail will secure the prisoners' attendance to take their trial. Two observations only are made in answer, that these persons are foreigners, and that if they are found guilty, the sentence of the law will never be carried into effect. We are told to lay down a different rule to what we should apply to native born subjects, because these persons are foreigners and ignorant of our law relating to duelling, but we cannot do so. Neither can this Court contemplate that there will be any change in the punishment awarded to the crime by the law. We must assume that the punishment awarded by the law will follow the verdict.

Wightman, J. concurred.

Erle, J. thought it was the duty of the Court to refuse this application. Wherever the crime was of great magnitude, the punishment of a high nature, and the evidence of crime clear, then an application of this sort ought to be refused; but, if any one of these requisites was wanting, the Court might exercise its discretion in the matter. He thought, too, that to make a difference in the case of foreigners would be a most dangerous practice. The law ought to be uniform, and ought to be administered without respect to persons. Rule refused.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

MICHAELMAS TERM.

Tuesday, Nov. 2.

The judges who took their seats upon the bench on the first day of Michaelmas Term, and will generally constitute the Court throughout the Term, are Lord Campbell, C.J. and Coleridge, Wightman, and Erle, JJ.

Doe dem. Flews and Others v. Walters.—Ejectment tried before Wightman, J. at Durham, when a verdict was found for the defendant. Bliss moved for a rule for a new trial, on the ground that there was no evidence to sustain the verdict. The question was whether a deed of the 19th May, 1832, under which the defendant claimed, included the property in question or not.

Curr. adv. vult.

Re an Arbitration between Lord Cardigan and Henderson.—Unthank moved for an attachment for non-payment of money pursuant to an award. Rule nisi.

Mellon v. Clough and Another.—Replevin for a pony; tried at Liverpool before Wightman, J. when a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Jervis now moved on the part of the defendant Clough to enter the verdict for him. Clough was an inspector of police appointed under s. 76 of the Municipal Corporation Act; and in taking the plaintiff's pony he had only acted as a constable upon a charge of felony. Between the plaintiff and the other defendant Leather there was a dispute as to the right to the pony; and the plaintiff having obtained it surreptitiously from Leather's stables, was charged by the latter with felony. Upon that charge the plaintiff was taken into custody and the pony taken possession of by Clough. Upon the hearing the stipendiary magistrate dismissed the charge; but under s. 293 of 5 & 6 Vict. (local Act) he made an order for the delivery of the pony to Leather; in obedience to which order Clough did deliver the pony to Leather. Clough, therefore, had a complete justification, and the only question was, whether under the plea of non cessit, he could give the special matter in evidence. It was now submitted that he was entitled to do so by virtue of ss. 76 and 133, of 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76. Shadwell v. Hall, 10 Mee. & W., was distinguishable from this case; and Haxelding v. Grove, 3 Q. B. 997; and Barnett v. Cox, 9 Q. B. 617, were in point. Another point was, that replevin was not maintainable against Clough at all.

Rule nisi.

Reg. v. The Churchwardens of Islington.

Rule enlarged by consent for a week.

Re Smith.—Gray applied that this rule, which was to strike an attorney off the rolls of this Court, upon an affidavit that he had been struck off the rolls of the Court of Chancery, should stand over until a petition to the Lord Chancellor for a rehearing had been disposed of.

Ordered to stand over accordingly.

Nind v. Dixie.—This was an action for distraining when no rent was due; with a plea of not guilty by statute. The verdict was for the plaintiff, damages, 250*l.*; and a rule had been obtained for a new trial, substantially on the ground that the damages were excessive. Knowles and Pigott shewed cause. J. Brown was heard in support of the rule. The Court thought the damages ought to be reduced to 120*l.*

Rule discharged upon plaintiff consenting to reduce the damages to that amount.

Wednesday, Nov. 3.

Hastings v. Brown.—Action for the infringement of a patent tried in London before Lord Campbell, C.J. and a verdict for the plaintiff. The Attorney-General now moved to set aside the verdict and enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence.

Rule nisi.

Lunell v. Druce.—Case for a collision between two steam vessels in the Avon, tried at Bristol before Platt, B. and the verdict for the plaintiff, damages, 130*l.* Kinglake, Serjt. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence.

Cur. adv. vult.

Farquhar v. Willis.—Action upon bills of exchange, tried at Westminster, before Wightman, J. and the verdict for the plaintiff. The Solicitor-General moved to set aside the verdict, and enter it for the defendant on the issues relating to the notice of dishonour. Furze v. Sharwood, 2 Q.B. 388, and two following cases in same book.

Rule nisi.

Haylock v. Sparke.—Action for false imprisonment, tried at Cambridge, before Pollock, C.B. and the verdict for the defendant, with leave reserved to enter it for the plaintiff with 42*l.* damages. The point turned on the sufficiency of the notice of action. O'Malley now moved to enter the verdict, pursuant to leave.

Rule nisi.

Reg. v. Justices of Middlesex. — Pashley moved to bring up an order made on the treasurer of the County of Middlesex, for the purpose of quashing it.

Rule nisi.

Gregory v. Cotterell.—Action for wrongful levy under fi. fa. tried in Middlesex, before Lord Campbell, C. J. and the verdict for the plaintiff, damages 400*l.* Bramwell (Quain with him), now moved for a new trial on the ground of excessive damages.

Rule refused.

Reg. v. Henson.—Indictment for exposing a glandered horse for sale in a public market, tried at Leicester, before Coleridge, J. and a verdict of guilty. The defendant was now brought up for judgment, and Miller, Serjt. moved in arrest thereof.

Rule refused.

The defendant was then fined 10*l.* and ordered to be imprisoned till the fine was paid.

Adey v. The Deputy-Master of the Trinity-House.—Willes moved for a prohibition to the judge of the Devonshire County Court to stay the above plaint.

Rule nisi.

Harris v. Thompson.

New trial—Privileged communication—Evidence of malice.

This cause was tried before Jervis, C.J. at the last sitting for Middlesex; verdict for the plaintiff.

Byles, Serjt. now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a nonsuit entered, or for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence. The declaration stated that the plaintiff had been secretary to the Brewers' Insurance Company, and that the defendant had said of him "he has been dismissed from the Brewers' Company for gross misconduct in obtaining from the solicitors money under false pretences, and taking up bills of his own with it," meaning thereby that the plaintiff had been guilty of an offence punishable by law—namely, obtaining money under false pretences. The defendant pleaded the general issue. At the trial it appeared that, besides being secretary to the Brewers' Insurance Company, the plaintiff was auditor of the London Necropolis Company, and that the defendant was a director of both companies. The plaintiff had been charged before the directors of the Brewers' Insurance Company with having applied to Messrs. Burnett and Laing for 3*l.* for office purposes, and having applied that sum, when advanced to him, to purposes of his own, and also with having given two of the clerks of the company his I O U for their salaries, and charged the payment of the money to them against the company. The result of an investigation into these charges by the directors was, that the plaintiff was dismissed from his office. The effect of his dismissal was communicated to the Necropolis Company, and at a meeting of the directors of the latter company the defendant moved that he should be dismissed from his office in that company also. The chairman of the Necropolis Company asked what were the grounds of the plaintiff's dismissal by the Brewers' Insurance Company, to which defendant replied, "Obtaining money by false pretences, and giving his I O U for salaries." Ultimately the plaintiff was dismissed by this society also; and he then wrote, threatening proceedings, and demanded to know what charges were made against him. A statement of the grounds of his dismissal was then sent to him, and afterwards he attended a meeting of the directors of the Necropolis Company with his solicitor, and demanded that the charges against him should be repeated in his presence or that of his solicitor. This the defendant refused to do, and therefore the plaintiff brought the present action. It is now contended that—1st. There was no evidence of malice to go to a jury; 2ndly. That if there were, there was no evidence to support the innuendo in the declaration, the evidence adduced being not that the plaintiff was guilty (as the innuendo would shew), but that certain charges had been preferred against him, and that he was dismissed. [Maule, J.—The declaration says he was dismissed for obtaining money under false pretences.] As to the first point, these are the cases: Taylor v. Hawkins and Somerville v. Hawkins, 16 Q.B. 308, which shew the law on the question as to what is evidence of malice. At the trial the impression of the Lord Chief Justice seemed to be that there was no evidence of malice for the jury.

Maule, J.—That also is my impression just now.

Jervis, C. J.—I could not see any evidence of malice, unless the defendant's refusing to make any charge against the plaintiff in his presence and that of his attorney could be so interpreted.

By the Court.—You had better take a rule.

Parker v. The Great Western Railway Company.

If, upon taxation of an attorney's bill of costs before a Master, a party does not object to certain items, expecting the bill to be paid by the other side, he shall not be allowed, after the case has been compromised, and he has himself to pay the costs so taxed, to come and say that they were improperly allowed.

Plaintiff, in person, moved for a rule to shew cause why the Master should not review his taxation of the bill of costs of a Mr. Walker, who had originally been attorney to the plaintiff in this action. During the course of the action the plaintiff became dissatisfied with Mr. Walker, and obtained an order from Wightman, J. to change his attorney, Mr. Walker's costs being taxed by the Master as between attorney and client, and he to have a lien on the papers till the conclusion of the case. The bill was taxed at 970*l.* Afterwards the case was compromised by the plaintiff agreeing to accept 1,000*l.* from the defendants, and they agreeing to pay the costs as between party and party. These were taxed at 1,640*l.* and paid. Mr. Walker now set up his lien on the papers, and an order was made by Wightman, J. with the consent of the parties, that 700*l.* should be paid to Mr. Walker, and that 170*l.* should be paid into court, to be taken out by Mr. Walker unless within four days of the beginning of term the Court should grant the plaintiff a rule to shew cause why the Master's taxation should not be reviewed. The plaintiff made the application on the ground that it had been agreed between himself and Mr. Walker that he should pay to Mr. Walker only costs out of pocket, and that Mr. Walker should look to the defendants for the rest; and, secondly, on the ground that some of the items in Mr. Walker's bill had been improperly charged, as being either unnecessary or not done at all, or done by the plaintiff himself. When the bill was taxed before the Master the latter objections were not made, and the plaintiff now stated that he thought he was bound in honour not to make objections to the items so as to prevent Mr. Walker getting them from the defendants.

Jervis, C.J.—An action was commenced by Mr. Parker against The Great Western Railway Company, through an attorney of the name of Walker; and there appears to have been an agreement between them, though not very distinctly sworn to, that the plaintiff should pay Mr. Walker money out of pocket, and that for the rest Mr. Walker should look to the defendants. The plaintiff becomes dissatisfied with his attorney, and changes him, it being ordered by my brother Wightman that Mr. Walker should have a lien for his costs taxed as between attorney and client. The plaintiff afterwards obtains by award certain moneys from the defendants, and a second order is made by Wightman, J. that 700*l.* should be paid to Mr. Walker, and 170*l.* besides, unless the plaintiff should succeed in obtaining a rule from the Court upon the present motion. The bill of costs of Mr. Walker was taxed by the Master in 1851, under the first order, and it is now objected by the plaintiff that items were charged in it contrary to the agreement between the plaintiff and Mr. Walker. But the Master properly disregarded the agreement, because by the order he was to tax as between attorney and client. If, therefore, he were to retax the bill under that order, he must again disregard the agreement. He could not regard it without that order being set aside. But Mr. Parker has waived the agreement by consenting to the second order. The second ground for the application is, that the Master has allowed certain sums which he ought not, and it is said that some of the items were for work which was unnecessary, or done by the plaintiff himself. But these objections were not made at the time before the Master, and we cannot tell him to review his taxation on grounds which were not pointed out to him, and on which, therefore, he cannot be said to have miscarried. The truth is, that Mr. Walker was allowed to put everything in his bill which it was thought could be got from the Great Western, and it cannot be allowed that Mr. Parker should now come and say that those items should not have been allowed by the Master, when he did not then state to the Master that the items should not have been charged for, as being not done. Mr. Parker says that he felt himself bound in honour not to oppose Mr. Walker in the charges made, and which he expected to get from the defendants. But that is a proposition which we cannot assent to. Moreover, the items which are said to have been unnecessary, are not unnecessary as between attorney and client, though they might have been as between party and party.

The defendant was proved to have become of full age on the 11th of March, 1851. One of the bills for 20*l.* became payable on the 12th of March, 1851; the rest before that time. It was not shewn at the trial when the defendant accepted the bills; and it was objected for the plaintiff that it was incumbent on the defendant to shew that he accepted the bills while he was under age, as he might have accepted them afterwards, and as such acceptance would have been good, although the bills had then become due, the material allegation in the declaration being the promise to pay. Ejectment—Common Law Procedure Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76.)

A declaration in ejectment was served before the 24th October last, the day when the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation:

Held, that the lessor of the plaintiff was entitled to move for judgment against the casual ejector, according to the practice before the Common Law Procedure Act.

The ejectment in this case was served last Trinity vacation, and before the 24th October, that being the day when the Common Law Procedure Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76) was directed should come into operation. By sec. 168 of that Act it is enacted, that "instead of the present proceeding by ejectment, a writ shall be issued directed to the persons in possession by name, and to all persons entitled to defend the possession of the property claimed, which property shall be described in the writ with reasonable certainty." Sec. 177 says: "In case no appearance shall be entered into within the time appointed; or if an appearance be entered but the defence be limited to part only, the plaintiff shall be at liberty to sign a judgment that the person whose title is asserted in the writ shall recover possession of the land or of the part thereof to which the defence does not apply; which judgment, if for all, may be in the form contained in the schedule (A) to the Act annexed, marked No. 14, or to the like effect; and if for part, may be in the form contained in the schedule (A) to this Act annexed, marked No. 15, or to the like effect."

W. R. Cole now moved for judgment against the casual ejector, according to the practice before the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation. The declaration in ejectment was served on the 16th June; the Act of Parliament did not pass until the 30th June, and did not come into operation until the 24th October.

POLLOCK, C.B.—There may have been very good cause for bringing the ejectment at the time stated; as, for instance, to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations, as well as for many other reasons that could be suggested, and I think you are entitled to a rule. Rule granted.

DAVIS v. WALTON and ANOTHER.

County Court jurisdiction—9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 58—Question of right.

The owner of a wharf, brought an action against the owner of the adjoining wharf for obstructing his premises, by permitting barges, &c. to overlap them. The defendants pleaded a custom of the river Thames that the proprietors of wharves may overlap their neighbour's premises for a reasonable time while unloading. This custom the plaintiff traversed; and there was also a new assignment, that the obstruction was for an unreasonable time:

Held, that the action showed no claim to an incorporeal hereditament or franchise, so as to bring the case within 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 58, and that the County Courts have jurisdiction to try matters of disputed right.

Case.—Declaration alleged that plaintiff, before and at the time of committing the grievances, was possessed of a certain wharf, called Ratcliffe Cross Wharf, adjoining to and abutting on the river Thames, upon which he then carried on his trade or business of a wharfinger; and all the liege subjects of our Lady the Queen, before and at the times aforesaid, actually and of right had, and of right ought to have, a free passage and navigation along the said river for their ships, vessels, &c. going to, staying at, and returning from the said quay or wharf upon lawful occasions, and were then accustomed to frequent the same with their ships, &c. to load the same, &c. with goods, wares, &c. for wharfage fees and reward in that behalf payable, &c.; yet defendant wrongfully and injuriously, and without, and otherwise than for the purpose of loading and unloading goods and merchandize, &c. at the said quay or wharf, moored, placed, or fastened divers ships and vessels in the said river, so that the bows and divers parts of the said ships, &c. lay before, across, and alongside of, and overlapped the said quay or wharf in the way and passage aforesaid for an unreasonable and unnecessary length of time, and thereby greatly impeded the navigation to and from the said quay, &c. by means whereof plaintiff was hindered from possessing and enjoying the said quay, and from carrying on his trade and business there in so ample a manner, &c. and was deprived of gain and profits, &c.

Plea, 1st, Not guilty; 2nd, That defendants were occupiers of a quay and wharf next adjoining to the quay and wharf of the plaintiff, and abutting upon and on the banks of the said River Thames. And defendants further averred that by an ancient and laudable custom from time immemorial used and approved of in the said river, and by all persons frequenting and using the same, and the wharfs, &c. and by the possessors, &c. any ship or vessel coming to a quay or wharf on the banks of the said river lawfully may, and any occupier lawfully may, suffer or permit, or cause any ship or vessel coming to his wharf for the purpose of loading or unloading, to overlap the adjoining wharf or quay, such adjoining wharf or quay not being a public wharf or quay, with the bows or rigging of such ship or vessel; and if the space before such adjoining wharf or quay so intended to be overlapped is vacant and unoccupied by any other ship, &c. and defendants at times, &c. being occupiers of the wharf adjoining plaintiff's, suffered the said ships, &c. which then lawfully came to the said wharf and quay of the defendants for the purpose of being loaded and unloaded, &c. to overlap the said wharf, &c. so adjoining to, &c. with the bows, &c. of the said ships, &c. the space before the wharfs of the plaintiff at the said times being unoccupied, &c. and the said wharf and quay of the plaintiff not being at any time a public open wharf, with the bows or rigging, as the defendants lawfully might.

Replication—1, similiter; 2, Traverse of custom; and new assignment. That defendants did the act complained of otherwise than for the proper loading or unloading goods, wares, or merchandise, or other things at the said wharf, &c. moored, placed, and fastened the ships, &c. so that other parts of the said ships than the bows and rigging, to wit, the bodies, prows, stems, and other parts of the said ships lay before, &c. and overlapped, &c. and also that the defendants at other times that when the space was vacant and unoccupied, and not for the purpose of loading or unloading, &c. moored, placed, and fastened, &c. ships, &c.

Rejoinder to the new assignment—Not guilty.

The action was tried before Pollock, C. B. at the sittings after last Michaelmas Term, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, damages 10*s.* The plaintiff's counsel then applied to the learned judge who tried the cause to certify that the cause was a fit one to be tried in a Superior Court, and that it was brought to try a right, which his lordship refused to do.

Lush having obtained a rule to show cause why the Master should not be at liberty to tax the plaintiff's costs, and why the plaintiff should not recover the same pursuant to the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 13.

Hawkins now shewed cause, and contended that the only question was, whether the title to an incorporeal hereditament here came into question? The claim was one over which the County Court had jurisdiction, and there was nothing in the Acts to prevent the cause being tried there; the action was, in fact, for damage done, and not for a breach of any right.

Lush, in support, contended that the cause involved a claim to an incorporeal hereditament or franchise, and that although the 58th section of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, did not actually include the word "custom," yet that the Court might, by giving a liberal interpretation to it, bring a custom within it. The word "franchise" was mentioned in the section, and the action was tried as a right, and not as a matter of damages, as his affidavits would shew.

POLLOCK, C. B.—There is no ground for contending that this was a claim to an incorporeal hereditament or franchise, and I am of opinion that the Legislature intended that the County Court should have power to try a right.

PARK and ALDERSON, BB. concurred.

Rule discharged, with costs.

TODD v. KELLAGE.

Governess—Domestic servant—General hiring.

Is a governess a menial or domestic servant, so that upon a general hiring the service may be determined by a month's warning, or by payment of a month's wages?

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a governess, for that part of a year's salary alleged to be due up to the time of action brought, from the defendant, on an engagement entered into between the parties; the declaration was framed as upon a general hiring for a year: the facts were stated to be, that the plaintiff and defendant agreed, upon the 15th June, 1851, that the plaintiff should enter into the defendant's service as a governess, the salary to be 60*l.* a year; the plaintiff, upon her cross-examination, stating that she understood her engagement would continue until the month of March following. The defendant, on the other hand, proving that the engagement with the plaintiff was monthly only, payable at or after the rate of 60*l.* a year. The sort of instruction by the plaintiff to the defendant's children not being quite approved of on the part of the defendant's family, and for that alone, the plaintiff was dismissed at a month's notice, receiving the month's salary. Subsequently this action was brought for the remainder as for a yearly hiring, and was tried at Guildford, before Jervis, C. J. when the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for 35*l.*

James, Q.C. now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to set aside that verdict and enter a nonsuit, and also that the verdict was against the evidence. [PARKE, B.—Is not this a question of fact, whether there was a hiring for a year or any less period?] The declaration was drawn as upon a general hiring for a year, and it would be contended that the plaintiff could not be dismissed at a month's notice with a month's wages. If a governess is a menial or domestic servant, the custom is that she may be discharged at a month's notice or with a month's wages. The defendant had no character with the plaintiff; and it would be hard in principle if a family were to be obliged to retain a person as governess in their house or pay such a person for a twelve-month who may in no respect suit the situation or expectation of the parties engaging her. The plaintiff lived in the house, in this case; but it was due to her to say there was no fault whatever found with her except as to the tuition. The verdict here was clearly against the evidence; in fact, there was no evidence of a hiring for a year, as the plaintiff herself stated that she understood the engagement was from June, when the arrangement whatever it was, was entered into, until the following month of March; and the defendant contradicted that, and said it was from month to month only. He referred to Nowlan v. Ablett, 2 C. M. & R. 54; and Beeston v. Collyer, 4 Bing. 309. Rule nisi.

STAFF (Town-clerk of Norwich) v. MORRISON.

Building society—Bond by treasurer duly to account—Continuing in operation for one year only.

Does a bond given by the treasurer of a building society to render due accounts, &c. extend over a greater period than the one year for which it is directed to be given according to its form prescribed by the statute 10 Geo. 4, c. 46?

This was an action brought by the plaintiff against the defendant, who was one of the sureties for one Wortley, a treasurer of a building society, and who had entered into a bond (with his sureties, of whom the present defendant was one) for the due performance of the duties required of rendering accounts, &c. In April, 1848, the bond was given; it was according to the form required by the Act of Parliament, and was to continue in force, as the defendant contends, for one year only. Wortley was first appointed in 1845; he duly accounted to the end of the year 1849. At the end of the year Wortley was again re-appointed, and ultimately neglected properly to account for moneys received. The cause was tried at Norwich before the Lord Chief Baron, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff.

Palmer now moved to set aside that verdict for misdirection; or, pursuant to leave, to reduce the verdict to nominal damage. He contended that the treasurer was an annual officer only, the bond on which this action was brought being given in 1848, and all the accounts properly rendered and money paid over to the end of the year 1849, when the treasurer was re-appointed, the defendant, as surety, was bound only for the treasurer Wortley during the year of his office from April 1848 until April 1849, when there was clearly no default. (The 10 Geo. 4, c. 56; 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 40; 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 32; and the rules of the society as certified by the barrister for that purpose, were referred to.) Rule nisi.

CHEW v. HOLROYD and ANOTHER.

County Court—Title to land in question—Prohibition.

Cowling moved, on behalf of the defendants, for a rule to shew cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to the judge of the County Court of Chester. It was an action to recover damages for breaking and entering the apartments of the plaintiff and carrying away goods, and the question was whether the whole cottage had been let or whether two rooms had not been excepted thereout. The judge of the County Court thought it was a mere question of fact and not of law; he determined it therefore himself, and gave a verdict for the plaintiff for 25*l.* The title to the possession of rooms is certainly in question which would therefore terminate the jurisdiction of the County Court judge. He had given time for leave to apply to the Court for a writ of prohibition. Rule nisi.

The LORD CHANCELLOR, however, decided that the calculation should be from the filing of the bill.

HICKLING v. BOYER.
CHERRINGTON v. HICKLING.

Practice—An order made on an appeal against a party who was not before the Court reversed on a rehearing.

Z. T. bequeathed leaseholds to R. A. for the residue of a term, and her residuary personal estate to J. B. The lessee, through whom Z. T. became possessed, was under a covenant to repair, and at her death dilapidations had taken place. On a bill filed by some of her representatives against their co-representatives and R. A. an order was made directing R. A. to be let into possession, and setting aside a sum of stock out of the testatrix's estate to indemnify the executors in respect of the repairs. The leaseholds were subsequently sold, and on the death of R. A. the surviving executor of J. B. appealed against the above order. The representative of R. A. was not served with the petition of appeal. It was held, that R. A. took the leaseholds cum onere, and was liable as between himself on the one hand and the executors of Z. T. and her residuary legatee on the other, to do the repairs in respect of the dilapidations existing at her death, and M. G. the personal representative of R. A. was directed to deliver up possession to her executors until she should either do the repairs or cause them to be done by the under-lessees, or should otherwise indemnify them against their liability: but as M. G. had not been served with the petition of rehearing, and was not before the Court, leave was given her to contest the order if she thought fit.

On an appeal by M. G. so much of the order as sought to make her personally liable, or directed her to do anything, was reversed.

This was a motion, by leave of the Court, to rehear an order made by Lord Chancellor Truro.

Zillah Taylor bequeathed certain leasehold houses to Richard Ashley, his executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely, during the residue of a term subject to the payment of the rent and performance of the covenants reserved and contained in the lease, under which she held the same; and as to her residuary real and personal estate, subject to the payment of her debts, &c. she gave, devised, and bequeathed the same to James Boyer, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns absolutely.

In 1839 Zillah Taylor died, and shortly afterwards two of her executors filed a bill for the administration of her personal estate. By that suit it appeared that George Taylor (the party through whom Zillah Taylor acquired the property in question), by indenture of the 7th April, 1803, covenanted for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, to keep the said leasehold premises in proper repair and condition during the continuance of the term. At the time of her death, dilapidations had taken place, but whether any of the dilapidations had taken place before she became possessed of the premises could not be ascertained.

Sir JAMES WIGRAM, V.C. by an order dated the 12th July, 1844, on further directions, directed that a sum of 1,500*l.* bank Three per Cent. annuities should be carried over to an account, to be entitled "The Executors' Indemnity Account," and that the dividends should be laid out in the purchase of like stock in trust in the cause to the like account: that Richard Ashby should be let into possession; that the deeds should be delivered up to him, and the mesne rents paid to him; that J. Boyer should be at liberty to take legal proceedings to compel the under-lessees or occupying tenants to make good the dilapidations, and that he should be at liberty to make use of the names of the executors of the testatrix, who were to be indemnified therein out of the indemnity fund.

Shortly after that order was made the leaseholds were put up to sale by public auction and sold.

In 1847 Richard Ashby died; and on an appeal by the representatives of James Boyer from the above order, the late Lord Chancellor held, that R. Ashby took the premises subject to the liability of performing the covenant to repair contained in the original lease, and directed the personal representative of Richard Ashby to deliver up possession to the executors of the testatrix until she should either do the repairs or cause them to be done by the under-lessees, or should otherwise indemnify the executors of the testatrix against their liability; that the present indemnity fund should be made up as directed by the order of the 30th of May, 1846; and that when the executors of the testatrix should have been so indemnified by the personal representative of Richard Ashby, that then the fund retained as an indemnity out of the original fund should be paid to the executors of James Boyer, and the dividends be paid to them in the meantime. Mary Griffin, the personal representative of R. Ashby, was not served with the petition of rehearing, and was not, therefore, before the Court. His lordship therefore thought it right that she, as his personal representative, should have an opportunity of contesting the above order, if, after what he had ordered, she should think she could successfully contend that it should not have been made. (20 Law T. Rep. 33.)

This, therefore, was an appeal from so much of the above order as related to Mary Griffin, the personal representative of Richard Ashby.

Hardy, for the appellant, contended that the order was wrong by reason of its having been made in the absence of his client; the leasehold premises in question had never been in her possession, and that therefore so much of the order as directed their delivery up was a nullity; she was liable to the executors of the testatrix to the extent only of the assets which had come to her hands in her representative character.

Teed and Shapter appeared for the several parties interested.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This appeal must be allowed. The party appealing was not present when the late Lord Chancellor made the order which is now sought to be varied: that order was altogether a mistake. This lady is in a representative character only; she is the representative of the representative of the lessee, and is not personally liable; she is liable only to the extent of the assets come to her hands, and of these an account, if necessary, must be taken; so much of the order as directs the delivery up of the deeds cannot possibly be enforced, as they are not and never were in her possession. I must allow this appeal, and so much of the order as directs the appellant to do anything must be discharged. Appeal allowed.

TURNER v. CROSTHWAITE.

Practice—Appeal.

W. Morris applied that a petition of appeal which had been heard before the Lords Justices might be reheard before the full Court. An order had been made by the District Court of Bankruptcy at Liverpool, which had been reversed by the Lords Justices, and who had refused a case to enable his client to appeal to the House of Lords. The point was one of great nicety, and involved property to a very large amount.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—If the Lords Justices will certify to me that they think the case a fit one to be heard before the full court, I will hear it.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Jan. 30 and May 22.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. THE HABERDASHERS' COMPANY.

Charity—Information—Relator—Appearance by solicitor of deceased relator.

In case of the death of all the relators in an information, new relators ought to be appointed before any further proceedings are taken, and the Court will restrain, as irregular and improper, all further proceedings till the new relators are appointed.

A receiver of charity estates was appointed by order on further directions, dated the 22nd November, 1797, the information having been filed several years before. Receivers were afterwards appointed from time to time under various orders of the Court, and several proceedings had taken place in the suit, notwithstanding the relators were all dead. The orders had been made at the instance of, and the proceedings taken by, the solicitors, who from time to time had succeeded to the business of the solicitors of the relators, and who appeared on behalf of the relators and the Attorney-General. A petition was presented by the Attorney-General, complaining of the irregularity; and it was thereupon declared that this appearance by the solicitors was irregular and improper.

In this case two petitions were presented by the Attorney-General, one respecting the Free Grammar School in the county of Salop, and the other respecting the Free Grammar School of William Jones, in Monmouth, and the object of the petitions was to have it declared by the Court that the appearance of solicitors (who were the regular successors in business of the firm who had acted as solicitors for the relators when the information was originally filed), on applications to the Court to obtain orders, and no secondary proceedings in the suit, was irregular and improper, all the relators having long since died. The accounts had been taken, and the business of the charity had been conducted by those parties, and divers sums of money had been laid out and expended by them in repairs and otherwise, and without any authority from the Attorney-General they had taken on themselves to act for him in the matter of the charity, and had received large sums for costs out of the charity estate. The petition prayed a reference to the Master, to inquire as to the orders which had been made, and the proceedings which had been taken, and the moneys paid for costs.

James, for the Attorney-General.

Ronpell, for the respondent.

Saturday, May 22.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—In this case, two petitions were presented by her Majesty's Attorney-General, one in the matter of the Free Grammar School at Newport, in the county of Salop, praying to this effect: that it may be declared, that the appearance of the said John Jones Bateman, and Rowland Nevill Bennett, and Benjamin Field, as solicitors for and on behalf of the Attorney-General and the said charity, and that the services of notices upon them as such solicitors, have been irregular and improper, and that it may be referred to the Master in whose office this cause is, to inquire and state what orders and proceedings have been made and had in the matter of the said charity for the last six years, and who have appeared as solicitors therein for and on behalf of the Attorney-General and of the said charity, and what moneys had been paid for costs, and to whom, in respect of such orders and proceedings, and to state any circumstances specially with respect thereto, and that such further orders may be made on such report as may be just. The other petition is in the matter of the Free Grammar School of William Jones, of Monmouth, praying to the same effect with respect to Messrs. Meredith and Reeve, as was prayed in the former petition with respect to Messrs. Bennett and Field. In this latter case the information had been filed nearly a century and a half ago, and the original decree bore date the 10th of July, 1708, by which a receiver was appointed of the charity estates, and these estates have from that time to the present been managed by a receiver appointed by the Court, a new receiver being appointed whenever a vacancy occurred, and the last receiver having been appointed in May 1849. The relators in the original suit have of course long since departed this life, and no supplemental information has been filed. In fact, the business of the estate has been carried on by solicitors for the time being, who were the successors in business of the solicitors originally employed by the relators when the information was filed. It is not contended that any blame attaches to the solicitors who had so acted; and the counsel on behalf of the Attorney-General have disclaimed any desire to obtain a hostile order against the solicitors who are the respondents, but they seek some declaration by the Court as to the course to be pursued for the future in cases of this description, and also some order which may have the effect of putting a stop to these and similar proceedings. When the matter was first opened to me that the Attorney-General was able to remedy the inconvenience complained of without having recourse to this court, I then referred to various passages to be found in the reports, and particularly to an expression of Lord Thurlow's, to be found in the case of Greenhouse v. The Corporation of Ludlow, 1 Bligh, N.S. which establishes as an indisputable proposition that the Attorney-General possesses entire dominion over every information instituted in his name, whether filed ex officio or at the instance of relators. It was, however, observed on the part of the Attorney-General, that he was never informed and did not practically in most cases become acquainted with the circumstances of the death of the relators, or of the continuance of proceedings in the cause so instituted in his name; that the case before me was an instance of such being the fact, and that the Attorney-General only became acquainted with the circumstances here complained of in consequence of the rule of the Court, which requires the Attorney-General to be served whenever the Master has to consider a scheme for the administration of the charity which had been directed in this case, in consequence of the accumulation of income having arisen, which could be applied only under the direction of the Court. It is manifest that the course which has been adopted in this charity is open to great objection, and, unless checked, may be productive of great abuse. In the first, a permanent office conferring a salary on the person who receives the rent of the charity estates is created, by which, and the expense consequent on the annual passing of his account, the income of the charity is probably diminished to a greater extent than if the trustees, by themselves or by their agents, received the rents, and the officer so constituted, though nominally appointed by the Court, is in reality appointed by the trustees of the charity. Nothing has been brought to my attention in this case to shew that a receiver is necessary, or why in this case more than in the vast number of other charities in the kingdom under the control of this Court, it is essential that the accounts should be annually passed before one of the Masters of the court. Assuming, however, that all this is necessary, it cannot be considered that the accounts are satisfactorily passed when no one properly authorised on behalf of the charity attends to check them. The solicitors in this case are undoubtedly gentlemen of the highest respectability, and watch as carefully, I have no doubt, the interests of the charity as if they were regularly retained for the purpose by the Attorney-General or the existing relator; but the Court must regard this matter wholly apart from any such consideration, and must look at the probability of any irregular or improper conduct taking place where there is no proper responsibility. Proceedings relative to charities, unless conducted by the Attorney-General ex officio, and under regular authority of the solicitor attending for that purpose, are required by the Court to be conducted in such a manner as that some persons may be responsible under the orders of the Court in costs for improper conduct. All such responsibility ceases if cases like the present should be permitted to continue. These very instances and these very objections evidently occurred to Lord Thurlow, and were referred to by him in the month of May 1791, when he is reported by Mr. Vesey, jun. to have observed in the very case before mentioned, namely, the case of the Attorney-General v. The Haberdashers' Company, on the impropriety of keeping these informations alive for ever. His lordship is reported to have said in that case:—"As to the execution of the trusts,"—it is to be observed this is the very identical case now before me,—"as to the execution of the trusts, it is not to be kept under the direction of the Court, to be executed by the Court from time to time, but it is to be executed under a general direction to the trustees, which is the only way of administering a charity. Then the first thing they are to do is to repair, which must be sub arbitris bonorum virorum. If the trustees misbehave, there must be another information upon the new ground. I cannot keep this information here for ever. I know these applications to the Court are very expensive, and for that reason I want to get rid of them." It is singular to observe how utterly fruitless the observations of Lord Thurlow were in this particular case. I have certainly felt considerably embarrassed as to the course proper to be taken in this case, nor do I see, particularly after the experience of Lord Thurlow's observations, how any direction or order which the Court may make in one individual case, can have any effect or control over the proceedings in other suits in which a similar course of proceeding may now be in operation. To effect that purpose, some general order of the Court would probably be necessary, which might regulate or prevent proceedings in these cases of such great ambiguity. What I can do in the present case to prevent this practice from continuing, I shall do; but this will, as I have already stated, I apprehend, have a very limited effect. I shall at the instance of the Attorney-General declare the appearance of the solicitors on behalf of the Attorney-General and the charity since the decease of the relators irregular and improper, and that the services of notices on them as such solicitors have been since that time, and are now irregular and improper. I do not impute the slightest blame to them for having acted according to what appears to have been an existing, though, in my opinion, irregular practice. I shall, of course, make no reference to the Master according to the latter part of the prayer of the petition, and which part, in truth, is not asked for by the Attorney-General; but if the Attorney-General requires it, I will, on the petition being amended for that purpose, make a further order restraining all further proceedings in the suit on behalf of the Attorney-General, or on behalf of the charity, except as he shall direct, or till new relators shall have been duly constituted. The observations I have made with respect to one of the petitions applies equally to the other, and the same order must be made on both petitions. I shall make no order as to costs, except that the Attorney-General may be permitted to have his costs out of the charity estates.

Roupell.—The Attorney-General disclaims anything like a personal imputation, and on that account the Court might feel disposed to give the parties their costs out of the charity.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—If the Attorney-General does not object, and it is understood they do not intend to resist what I think right in the matter.

Roupell.—I cannot conceive it possible.

The MASTER of the ROLLS.—I do not like to make any conditions on the subject. I will, then, order the costs, because I think it is a common mistake. I will order the costs of all parties to come out of the charity estate.

V. C. TURNER'S COURT.

Friday, June 4.

COTTON v. CLARKE.

Practice—Bankrupt trustee—Default—Costs—Set-off.

An executor had retained balances in his hands, and a suit having been instituted to administer his testator's estate, the executor became bankrupt: Held, that the executor was to be charged with interest on the balances, but was entitled to his costs: that he was entitled to the costs out of the estate, and that they were not to be set off against what should be found due from him in respect of interest on the balances.

In this case a suit had been instituted by parties beneficially interested under the will of Thomas Chilner, for an administration of his estate. The testator died on the 22nd of October, 1813, having appointed Richard Nice and Francis Clark his executors, who shortly after proved his will. Richard Nice died in March 1845, insolvent, leaving Francis Clark surviving. Balances had been kept at their bankers' by both executors while Richard Nice lived, and by Francis Clark afterwards, which amounted, in June 1844, to 889*l.* 1s. 4d. and in January 1847, to 724*l.* 11s. 7d. which sum, however, was soon after invested in Consols. In October 1847, Francis Clark became bankrupt, and this suit was instituted in March 1848. A sum of 24*l.* in addition to the balances, was found due from the executor on his general account, but whether this was before the bankruptcy or since, was not ascertained. A decree was made in the cause, and then such inquiries were directed. The cause now came on upon further directions.

Roupell and Elderton, for the plaintiffs, asked that interest should be decreed to be paid on the balances in the hands of the executors from time to time, and that the defendant should not be allowed his costs, and if allowed, that they should be set off against the interest which he should be found liable to pay.

Glasse and Hoare, contrà, contended, on behalf of the defendant, that he was entitled to his costs. The suit had not been instituted till after the bankruptcy, and the costs incurred had all arisen since then, and they ought not to be set off against a debt which had been discharged by his bankruptcy. They cited Samuel v. Jones, 2 Hare, 246, as an authority in support of their position.

The MASTER of the ROLLS thought the defendant must be decreed to pay interest on the balances in his hands, from time to time, but that the case was not one in which the defendant should be deprived of his costs; but as to setting them off against the interest, he was of opinion that could not in this case be done. If the defendant were solvent, the costs would be set off against the interest, but it had been expressly decided by the case of Samuel v. Jones that the Court would not set off a debt of this kind against the costs incurred subsequently to the bankruptcy, and to which the defendant is entitled. He could not distinguish this case from Samuel v. Jones, and that as he was of opinion that this was a debt which had accrued due previously to the bankruptcy, he was precluded by the case of Samuel v. Jones from decreeing that it should be set off against the costs incurred since the bankruptcy and now payable to the defendant. The plaintiffs, however, must have liberty to proceed under the bankruptcy for the interest on the balances. As it had not been shewn whether the balance of 24*l.* found due from the defendant had arisen before or after the bankruptcy, it was taken by consent to have arisen after the bankruptcy, and therefore was not barred by the certificate, and that that sum, consequently, should be set off against the costs.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

Reported by J. HENRY COOKE, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

MARTIN v. HADLOW.

Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Revivor—Claim—Section 52.

Where a suit by claim had abated by the death of a defendant, who was an executor, the Court, under the 52nd section of the statute, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, made an order for the revival of the suit, and its being carried on against the executrix of that (executor) defendant. Held, that though the section only contained the words "bill of revivor or supplemental bill, the Act was intended to extend to suits by claim.

This was a motion made on behalf of a plaintiff in a claim to revive the suit against the executrix of a deceased defendant, the suit having abated by his death, that defendant being himself an executor.

R. W. E. Forster, appeared in support of the motion, and stated that it was made under the 52nd section of the recent statute to amend the practice and course of proceeding in the Court of Chancery, by which it was enacted that upon any suit becoming abated by death, it should not be necessary to exhibit a bill of revivor or supplemental bill in order to obtain the usual order to revive such suit, or the usual or necessary decree or order to carry on the proceedings, but an order to the effect of the usual order to revive, or of the usual supplemental decree, might be obtained as of course, or an allegation of abatement.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The motion does not ask enough, but I think that enough may be granted. An order to revive will not be sufficient, but there must also be decree as in a supplemental suit, and if such an order is made, it will save expense. I will therefore order that the suit shall be revived, and be carried on against the executrix of the deceased defendant. I am aware that the Act in this section only uses the words, "bill of revivor or supplemental bill," but I consider that the spirit of the Act is to be applied to suits by claim as well as to suits by bill.

The order was then made that suit be revived and be carried on against the executrix.

V. C. TURNER'S COURT.

YATE v. LEITHLAD.

Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Revivor—Supplemental claim—Printing bill.

Where proceedings on a claim abated by the death of an executor, and one of the co-plaintiffs, as administrator de bonis non of the original testator, and the other co-plaintiff had filed a supplemental claim to revive, the Court Held, that an order under the 52nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, was not sufficient, but that the supplemental claim should be filed: Held, also, that the directions of the Act as to printing are inoperative.

A claim had been filed by two plaintiffs against an executor and other parties, and the usual order of reference had been made. After this the executor defendant died, and one of the co-plaintiffs took out administration de bonis non of the original testator in the suit. The other plaintiff now moved for leave to file a special claim to revive the suit and carry on the proceedings.

Harrison moved for leave, and submitted whether the course proposed to be taken was or not precluded by the 52nd section of the New Chancery Proceedings Act.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The case now before the Court is neither included in the Act, nor precluded by the 52nd or any other section of it; in short, it is not affected by the Act at all; for the relief asked is more than the common order to revive, and the common order to carry on proceedings could afford. Leave may be taken to file the supplemental claim.

Harrison.—The supplemental claim is not only prepared, but it is actually engrossed; and, therefore, to save expense in printing, the parties were anxious to have the leave of the Court to its being filed as engrossed.

The VICE CHANCELLOR.—The 1st section of the Act is imperative as to the printing of bills or claims, excepting in the cases mentioned in the 6th section, of which the case before the Court is not one. The claim must be printed in the usual way.

Re CADDICK.

Chancery proceedings—Amendment Act—Investment—Conveyancing counsel.

Upon petition for investment of purchase-money paid by a railway company, the Court, under the 40th section of the Act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, will order a reference to the conveyancing counsel to report on the title, and upon this being reported satisfactory, the order for investment may be made without a fresh petition, on the production of an affidavit of the eligibility of the investment.

This was a petition for the investment of purchase-money paid by a railway company, unti. the purchase of other land could be made. There was no affidavit that the investment would be proper or eligible.

Buller appeared for the petition.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that by the new practice, the case must be taken before one of the conveyancing counsel of the court, for his opinion upon the title. Affidavits must be filed with the petition, stating that it was a proper purchase. When the conveyancer's opinion was returned to the Court, he would make the order without the presentation of another petition.

Practice—13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 19, and Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Taking accounts—Section 45.

Where an order had been made in an administration suit, referring it to the Master to take an account of the estate of an intestate, the Court under the 45th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, directed that the words of the order should be altered by directing the accounts to be at once taken.

Kinglake stated that an order of reference had been made in an administration suit, directing the account of an intestate's personal estate to be taken in the usual manner, and that it would be desirable that the form should be altered conformably to the 45th section of the statute.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—All that seems to be necessary is to have the words of the order altered by directing an account to be taken of the estate of this intestate, instead of directing a reference to the Master to take the account.

NEWTON v. THOMSON.

Order to confirm the Master's report made absolute, and service of the order nisi upon the defendant's solicitor:

Held sufficient, although the premises were not occupied, it being sworn that the place of service was the address given by the solicitor on entering appearance, that he had absconded, and that his client was out of the jurisdiction.

Cole moved to confirm absolutely the Master's report, on the ground that the defendant had gone out of the jurisdiction, and that his solicitor had absconded. The order nisi to confirm the report had been served at the solicitor's office, which, however, did not appear to be occupied by any person, but had been named as the address for service, when appearance was entered.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR granted the order.

THOMPSON v. TEULON.

Practice—Motions for production of documents.

Sir W. P. Wood, having in an unopposed case, moved for production of documents,

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, —The judges have considered the question as to these motions for production of documents. They think that under the new Act all those applications should originate at chambers. The effect of this will be, that if there is no dispute as to the production, all the expense of motions in court for production of documents, will be saved. If, on the other hand, there appears to be any difficulty as to the production, the judges will adjourn the motion into court in order that it may be argued.

DAVENPORT v. DAVENPORT.

Practice—Motion on behalf of purchasers to pay money into Court.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR also said, the judges had considered applications on the part of purchasers for payment into court of money accepting the title, might just as well be made in chambers as in court. This, so far as the public are concerned, would save expense.

Practice—Attendance of Common Law Judges.

Holt having applied to the Court to name a day upon which to hear a case in the presence of a common law judge,

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that under the Act of 1851, the Lord Chancellor would now apply for the attendance of a common law judge. He would write a note to the Lord Chancellor for the purpose, and the parties should be informed of the day on which it would be convenient for the common law judge to attend.

CONSTABLE v. BULL.

Will—Construction—Life interest.

A testator directed his debts, &c. to be paid, and gave to his wife all his estate and effects whatsoever for her sole separate use and benefit, and he further directed that at her decease whatever remained of his estate and effects should go to and be equally divided, share and share alike, among certain specified persons, or such of them as should then be living:

Held, that the testator's widow took a life interest only in what remained of the estate after payment of the debts, &c.

John Constable, by his will, dated the 19th of February, 1846, bequeathed as follows:—"First, I direct that all my just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, be paid out of my estate, as soon as convenient after my decease. I give, devise, and bequeath unto my dear wife, Mary Ann Constable, all and every my estate and effects, goods, chattels, houses, lands, moneys, securities for money due or growing due, every matter and thing whatsoever, wheresoever the same may be at the time of my decease, for her sole separate use and benefit. I further give, will, and direct that at the decease of my said wife, whatever remains of my said estate and effects shall go to and be equally divided, share and alike between the following persons hereinafter named, or so many of them as may be then living." After naming these persons, the testator appointed his wife sole executrix. The testator died on the 17th of August 1847, and his widow died on the 5th of December, 1848, intestate. The present suit was instituted by the administrator de bonis non of John Constable, for the purpose of having the trusts of the will performed; and the question was, whether, upon the construction of the will, the widow became absolutely entitled to the property therein comprised, or whether at her death so much as then remained of the estate and effects of the testator was divisible among the persons named in the will. A reference to the Master was made on the 28th of April, 1849 (see report of the case 3 De G. & Sm. 111, and 13 Law T. 156), and the cause now came on for further directions.

Wigram and Kent, for the plaintiff.

Toller, Bichner, Jebb, Craig, Grenside, Elderton, Ede, and Chichester, for defendants in the same interest.

Russell and Metcalfe, for the representative of the widow, cited Horwood v. West, 1 Sim. & Stu. 387; The Attorney-General v. Hall, 1 J. & W. 158; Ross v. Ross, 1 J. & W. 154; Bradley v. Peixoto, 3 Ves. 324; Pushman v. Filliter, 3 Ves. 7; and Cuthbert v. Purrier, Jac. 415.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that upon the true construction of the will, the widow took merely a life interest in so much of the estate and effects as remained after payment of the debts, and funeral and other expenses. The question then arose how the fund was to be divided after her death.

Elderton, for two of the defendants, contended that the gifts over were to classes, not to persons.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, however, did not think that the right construction, but held that the gifts were gifts per capita.

Practice—Election to proceed at law or in equity. Where a plaintiff is suing in equity for several matters, one of which is also cause of suit at law, and upon which he has commenced an action, he may be required to elect whether to proceed at law or in equity.

This was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to discharge an order which had been obtained by the defendants for the plaintiff to elect whether he would proceed in this court or at law.

It appeared that the plaintiff, being about to be tried for felony, executed certain deeds, conveying all his property to trustees, upon certain trusts, for the benefit of his creditors and his family. Upon the plaintiff's acquittal, however, he filed a bill against the trustees, alleging that the execution of the deeds was obtained from him by fraud, and seeking the cancellation of the deeds and an account from the trustees. Prior to the execution of the deeds, the plaintiff deposited with A. B. one of the defendants in this suit, a sum of 5,000*l.* for certain purposes agreed upon between them. A. B. paid the residue of the 5,000*l.* to the trustees. The plaintiff brought an action at law against A. B. for the 5,000*l.* and thereupon the order, the discharge of which was now sought, was obtained.

Malins and H. Hamilton Humphreys, in support of the motion, cited Anon. 2 Madd. 395; and Carwick v. Young, 2 Swanst. 239.

Bethell and Cotton, for the defendant, A. B. referred to Bainbridge v. Bainbridge, 9 Sim. 16; Hallett v. Young, 1 Madd. 437; and M'Fadden v. Jenkyns, 1 Ph. 153.

Malins in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the point raised was, whether a deed of assignment did or did not comprise a fund in the hands of the defendants as trustees. That must depend on the construction of the deed creating the trust; but upon that his Honour was not now called on to give an opinion. The plaintiff brought his action, insisting that the sum of money was not comprised in or affected by the deed. But that question would not be tried in the action at law, as those whose interests were to be bound would not be parties to the action. The real question at issue was, whether the sum was or was not bound by the deed; but the question now before the Court was merely one of pleading. The bill sought an account against the trustees on the footing of setting aside the deeds, and did not exclude from the account the sum in question. The plaintiff was, therefore, suing the defendants in equity for several matters, one of which was also cause of suit at law. That appeared to be a case where the plaintiff might properly be called upon to elect. The motion must therefore be refused, with costs.

Foreclosure—Parties.

An equity of redemption was assigned to trustees for the benefit of certain scheduled creditors. To a suit instituted by claim, by the mortgagee for foreclosure, the scheduled creditors should be parties.

This was a claim for foreclosure. The equity of redemption had been assigned to trustees for the benefit of certain creditors mentioned in the schedule to the deed of assignment. The trustees were made defendants, but the creditors were not parties.

Freeling appeared for the plaintiff, and asked for the ordinary foreclosure decree.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR referred to the cases of Calverley v. Phelp, 6 Madd. 229, and Holland v. Baker, 3 Hare, 68, and said that the scheduled creditors must be before the Court.

SMITH v. EDWARDS.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 39—Evidence.

This cause came on to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Parker on the 13th of July.

Glasse and Lovell appeared for the plaintiff.

Lee and Allnutt, for two of the defendants, objected that Graham, one of the defendants stated to be out of the jurisdiction, had not been proved to be so. The answer of the two defendants, which had not been replied to, stated their belief that Graham was within the jurisdiction.

The Vice-Chancellor Parker directed that the cause should stand over, with liberty for the plaintiff to apply on his proving Graham to be out of the jurisdiction.

The plaintiff then filed an affidavit, shewing that in December 1811 Graham was about to proceed to Australia, and the plaintiff believed he had then proceeded, and had ever since resided there. The case now came on again, when Lee and Allnutt objected to this evidence as insufficient.

Glasse and Lovell then asked, that if the Court considered the evidence insufficient, the plaintiff might, under the 39th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, be produced for oral examination.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after consulting with the other judges, said that they agreed with him, that the proper course would be to let the cause stand over until a day sufficiently distant to give the plaintiff a fair opportunity of proving his case in his own way. His HONOUR therefore directed the cause to stand over until the first day in Hilary Term, with liberty to apply.

WILDING v. RICHARDS.

Practice—Order to revive and usual supplemental decree.

By a decree in this case, Harper, a trustee, was ordered to account. Harper afterwards died, having by his will devised all estates vested in him as trustee to Parry Jones.

Bird now asked for an order of revivor and the usual supplemental decree against Parry Jones, under the 52nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the judges had agreed that if a mere order to revive, and the usual supplemental decree were asked, it was of course.] He observed that Parry Jones had himself entered into possession of the trust estates, and it was desired that the order should be extended to his own acts and receipts.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he might take the usual order to revive and the usual supplemental decree, but no further.

CABLE v. COOPER.

Practice—Mode of taking evidence, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

Where issue had been joined before the recent statute was passed, and afterwards interrogatories were filed, and an appointment with the examiner obtained, but no witness had been examined on either side, the Court considering the case a proper one for oral examination, directed that the evidence should be taken according to the new practice, and that the costs already incurred as to the evidence should be costs in the cause.

Rogers applied in this case, under the 39th of the orders of 7th August, 1852, that the Court would order that the evidence should be taken in the mode prescribed by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86. The cause was at issue by replication being filed on the 29th of June, and the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86 received the royal assent on the 1st of July. No witness had been examined on either side.

Stephen, for the defendant, opposed the application. An appointment had been obtained with the examiner for the following day, and the interrogatories had been filed. This expense, therefore, having been incurred, the Court would not, without sufficient grounds, grant this motion; and it was submitted that no satisfactory reason had been given for the application.

Rogers, in reply, stated that the case was peculiarly one for the advantage of an oral examination. The suit was instituted to set aside the sale of a reversion, on the ground of fraud on the part of the defendant's solicitor.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he considered the nature of the issue rendered it expedient that the evidence should be taken viva voce; and he should therefore order that the evidence should be taken in the mode prescribed by the recent Act. He thought it reasonable that the costs which had been incurred as to the evidence, as well as the costs of the present application, should be costs in the cause.

Re MAYNARD'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS.

Trustee Act, 1850—New trustee.

A petition by a tenant for life for an order vesting the property in a trustee appointed in the place of a trustee resident out of the jurisdiction, should be served on the remainder-man, and the fitness of the new trustee should be shewn.

This was a petition under the Trustee Act, 1850, by a tenant for life, praying for an order vesting the property in a trustee appointed in the place of a trustee who had been for some years resident in New York.

Welford appeared in support of the petition, and stated that the petition had not been served upon any person.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the remainder-man must be served, and that before any order could be made on the petition, it should be distinctly shewn that a case had occurred rendering it necessary that the power should be exercised, and that the person proposed was a fit person to be a trustee.

ANNING v. LAVERS.

Practice—Immediate sale of mortgaged property—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 48.

Freeling appeared for the plaintiff in this suit, which was instituted by claim for foreclosure, and asked that a sale of the mortgaged property might be at once directed, pursuant to the 48th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

Wright, for the mortgagor, did not object.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR accordingly decreed a sale, and said that the decree should be drawn up having regard to the recent Act and the new Orders; and that if any difficulty arose in working out the order, the case might be mentioned again to the Court.

LOWES v. LOWES.

Practice—Revivor by creditor—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52.

The above section is applicable to the case of an abatement occurring before the Act came into operation.

Of an application for an order to revive by a creditor not a party to the suit, notice should be given to the parties entitled to revive.

The plaintiffs in this suit were the two trustees and executors, and the defendants were the infant heir and widow, of a testator; and the object of the suit was the administration of the testator's estate. In 1848 there was a decree for sale. Both the plaintiffs having died, and the representatives of the survivor having neglected to revive the suit, the infant defendant, the testator's heir-at-law, filed a supplemental bill. Upon the death of this infant, whose interest was by the will given over upon his dying under twenty-one, the suit again abated.

Forster, on behalf of a person not a party to the suit, who had been found by the Master to be a creditor of the testator, applied ex parte for leave to file a supplemental bill, if the representatives of the deceased trustee did not revive within a limited time. (Dixon v. Wyatt, 4 Madd. 392.)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that notice of the motion should be served.

Forster afterwards applied, under the 52nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, for an order to revive, or for leave to serve notice of the application, if it should be considered that notice was necessary. It had been decided in another branch of the Court, that this section applied to the case of an abatement occurring befor the Act came into operation.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that there could be no doubt of that. He would give leave to serve notice of the motion.

Friday, Nov. 12.—Forster renewed his application under the 52nd section, the parties entitled to revive having been served.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the case was clearly not within that section, which was applicable only to the usual order to revive, or the usual decree on an abatement.

HARVEY v. HARVEY.

Will of married woman—Execution of power.

The question, whether a will (duly executed with all the necessary formalities required by law), operates as an execution of a power, is like all questions upon the construction of wills, purely a question of intention.

There are two modes by which that intention may be manifested: one by the will referring to the power itself expressing an intention to execute the power: the other, by its dealing with the special property comprised in the power, without referring to the power itself.

Where, therefore, a married woman had by a settlement powers of appointment over four different species of property, and by her will she expressed it to be made "by virtue of the power and authority reserved to me in and by the deed of settlement made on my marriage, bearing date," &c.; and then proceeded to appoint and dispose of the several four different species of property, and the residue of them:

Held, that without further reference to the several powers of appointment the will operated as a good execution of the power as to the residue of the funds.

In this case there were several points argued upon the effect of the will of one Mrs. Sarah Morrison, as operating upon the powers contained in a settlement made on her marriage. The present report is limited to one only of those questions, viz. whether the will operated as an execution of a power to dispose of the residue of certain of the properties comprised in the settlement. Only those parts of the settlement and will referring to this part of the case are therefore given.

By the settlement made on the marriage of Archibald Morrison and Sarah his wife, dated the 15th of May, 1823, it was witnessed that Sir Robert Harvey and John Stracey, the trustees, should stand possessed of several sums of South Sea Annuities, Reduced Annuities, shares in a gas company, and other property, upon trust, that they should, during the joint lives of said Archibald Morrison and Sarah Morrison, out of the dividends and annual proceeds thereof, raise the yearly sum of 500*l.* and pay the same to Sarah Morrison for her separate use, and subject thereto during the joint lives of the husband and wife pay the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of said trust moneys, &c. to or allow them to be received by said husband and wife as therein mentioned; and immediately after the decease of the husband, in case he should die in the life-time of said Sarah Morrison, as therein mentioned; and but if the said Sarah Morrison should die in the life-time of said Archibald Morrison, then power was given to the wife to dispose by will immediately of 3,000*l.* part of the particular funds put in trust; and after the husband's death of the residue of these funds to relations within certain degrees of consanguinity. Powers were also given to the wife to dispose by will of certain of the household furniture, plate, and other effects. There was also a covenant by the husband that she should have a power to sell, give away, or dispose of by her will or codicil certain shares in the Norwich Public Library or Institution, her ticket of admission in the Norwich Theatre, and all her jewels, pearls, watches, trinkets, and other personal ornaments, and all the money and effects which she might save or purchase out of the income thereby settled for her separate use, or which might arise by the sale of any other separate chattels or effects.

On the 23rd of May, 1825, Sarah Morrison made and published her will of this date, properly attested according to the terms of the settlement. It was partly in the following terms:—"I, Sarah Morrison, the wife of Archibald Morrison, &c. do by virtue of the power and authority reserved to me in and by the deed of settlement made on my marriage, bearing date the 15th day of May, 1823, make, publish, and declare this to be my last will and testament in manner and form following, that is to say:—Whereas by virtue of the said settlement I am entitled to dispose of the said sum of 3,000*l.* by will immediately on my decease; and I do hereby direct and appoint the same to be paid to the persons and for the purposes hereafter mentioned." She then gave legacies thereout to the amount of about 1,000*l.* and then proceeded: "And I do further direct and appoint that my executors hereinafter named, do and shall out of the said sum of 3,000*l.* raise a competent sum of money to produce the annual sum of 25*l.* and place the same in Government or real security during the natural life of my servant, Mary Sewell," with the usual directions, and after her death the money invested for securing the annuity was to fall into the residue "of my personal estate." "And I direct and appoint that all the remainder of the said sum of 3,000*l.* together with the said sum of money set apart for securing the said annuity to the said Mary Sewell, in case she shall die in the life-time of my said husband, and also any sum of money which I may save from and out of the annual sum of 500*l.* reserved to me by my said settlement, in the nature of pin-money, if the same shall exceed 1,000*l.* shall be severally continued out at interest by my said executors, or the survivor of them, during the life of my said husband, and that he shall be at liberty to receive the interest and dividends thereof as the same shall arise, during his life, for his own use, and from and after his decease then that the said several last-mentioned sums shall become part of the residue of my personal estate; but in case such savings should not exceed 1,000*l.* then I give all such savings to my said husband absolutely." She then appointed executors. After disposing of the shares in the Norwich Library, &c. and giving various bequests of jewels, plate, and other effects as legacies, she then made bequests of 200*l.* each to three nieces, and proceeded thus:—"And I give and bequeath to my said husband all the rest of my household furniture, household linen, common china, and all other articles of domestic or culinary purposes; and after payment of all my just debts, funeral expenses, and charges of proving this my will, and of carrying the trusts thereof into execution, I direct and appoint, give and bequeath, all the rest, residue, and remainder of my moneys, and other my personal estate, of whatever description the same may be, unto and amongst all and every the daughters of my said brother John Harvey, the said Charles Day and Louisa Day, the children of my deceased niece, and the two daughters of my said brother Charles Savill only, or to such of them as shall be living at the time of my husband's death, and to the issue of such of them as shall then happen to be dead, to be equally divided amongst them, share and share alike."

She then gave certain specific directions as to those shares of the residue.

The testatrix having executed several codicils to this will, not material to be set forth, died on the 15th of February, 1827. Her next of kin were her brothers, John Harvey and Charles Savill only. A. Morrison, her husband, died in May 1848. On a bill filed by Sir Robert Harvey, the surviving executor, the usual inquiries as to the state of the properties, and the parties entitled, had been made, and the principal point, on the cause coming on for further directions on the Master's report, was, whether the will operated as an appointment of the residue.

B. S. Follett and Busk for the plaintiff, the surviving executor.

Kenyon Parker, Haynes, and Olivier, for representatives of some of the next of kin. They contended that the will was not an execution of the power, and relied on Andrews v. Emmott, 2 Bro. Campbell and Wright, in support of the position that the bill was a complete execution of the power.

L. Wigram and Law in the same interest.

Walker, Russell, Bacon, C. Hall, and other gentlemen, for the several other parties.

On the 8th of July the Vice-Chancellor pronounced the following

JUDGMENT.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR, after stating the terms of the settlement, observed, that there were four portions of property comprised therein; first, the 3,000*l.*; secondly, the residue of the fund; thirdly, the furniture, plate, &c.; and, fourthly, the shares in the literary institutions, the ticket of admission, the jewels, &c. and the savings. He then stated the contents of the will. Now the first clause is of very great importance. She sets out, not only by referring to the instrument which creates her power of testamentary disposition, but says, that the will she is now making is made by virtue of the power and authority reserved to her by that settlement. With respect to the savings, of course being savings out of her own separate property, it required no special power to enable her to dispose of them by a testamentary instrument; but still the settlement does deal with them, to the effect of professing to give her a power of disposing of them by will, as well as of her jewels and ornaments, and her shares in the institutions, and ticket, as to which latter property of course she could have no testamentary power, except as given by the settlement. There was then a general reference to the settlement, and a special reference to the power to dispose of the 3,000*l.* and a disposition professedly of that 3,000*l.* and a disposition of part of another portion of the property, without any special reference to that particular power, as there was with reference to that particular power enabling her to dispose of the 3,000*l.*; and afterwards, without any further special reference, she disposes of part of the property comprised in the fourth portion, and part of that comprised in the third, calling it her own. She seemed to think that the will would have operated if she had survived her husband, which, of course, was not the case, and she gives him a life interest, which he already possessed under the settlement. In the previous parts of the will there was, without reference to any special power, an actual disposition of the property comprised in the third and fourth portions, but no specific reference to the special power which she had over the second portion, which formed the great bulk of the property, nor any actual gift of anything which in description necessarily embraces any portion of the property. Unless then she does exercise the power of disposing of the second portion by the clause containing the gift of the residue, she has not disposed of it at all. There is no doubt that the description "my moneys and other my personal estate of whatever description the same may be," in itself does not import property over which she had only a power, and which she could not in any way deal with, unless she exercised that power; but she appoints and bequeaths that property to persons who come within the description of persons in whose favour that special power was created, namely, relations within the eighth degree of consanguinity to herself, nieces being of course, of the third degree. Now, I take it to be clear that the question whether a will, assuming it to be, as in this case, duly executed, with the formalities required by the law, operates as an execution of a power, is, like every other question upon the construction of a will, purely a question of intention. It is a question of intention, and the Courts have determined, and necessarily determined, that there are two modes in which that intention may be manifested; the one is by the will referring to the power itself, and expressing its intention to execute that power, although not referring to the special property comprised in the power; and the other is by dealing with the special property comprised in the power, without referring to the power itself, and that is commonly enunciated by the proposition which is well established by all the cases, however it may have been actually adhered to in the application of the rule. It is commonly said, that to make a will an execution of a power, it must refer to the power or the property comprised in the power. What is there on the face of the will to indicate any intention to execute the power? I have to determine, then, this question as to the property comprised in the second portion of property; because as to the rest, there is no question as to the part comprised in the first portion. As to the property comprised in the third and fourth portions, that is, the plate and linen and the shares in the institutions, the ticket of the theatre, the jewels, and the savings of the income,—as to these, there is no question but that there is an execution of the power as to all of these. The question I have to determine is, did she intend to execute the power as to the three portions of the property being the smaller portions of the property, the least considerable portions, and not to execute the power as to the great bulk of property? No doubt it is perfectly possible that she did so, and I am not to conjecture that it is so probable that she should have such an intention, that, therefore, I am to determine upon that ground that she did mean to execute the power as to the second portion. But what do I find here? She sets out by not only referring to the settlement which erected the power, but she sets out by saying that she now makes this testamentary instrument, this will, by virtue of the power and authority reserved to her in and by the deed of settlement in manner and form following. Now it does appear to me, that unless there be something making it almost impossible to imagine that as to some particular portion of the property she meant to execute it primâ facie; that clause alone appears to me to lead strongly to the conclusion that she did intend to exercise the power as to all. But then it is said she refers there to the power and authority. Now it is said she had four powers; she does not say, "by virtue of all the four powers I make my will," but "by virtue of the power and authority;" and, moreover, she proceeds immediately afterwards to recite one of those powers, that is, the power to dispose of one of those portions of property, namely, the 3,000*l.* Now no doubt, in technical language and without impropriety, this lady may be said to have had four powers; but, on the other hand, with an equal propriety of language, she had a power and authority by that settlement to dispose of four portions of property. She had no power to make a will at all, except, indeed, as to the savings. She had no power to make a will at all as a married woman, except as it was given to her by the settlement; and she says, "Now having no power to make a will except by the settlement, I, by virtue of the power and authority given to me to make a will, do dispose in the manner and form following:" and then, though she only afterwards mentioned specially one of those powers, or to use another form of language equally appropriate, the power to dispose of one of those portions of property in specific terms, she does without referring to the particular clause which gave her the power to dispose of the third portion, actually dispose of them. Well, if the specific reference to the power to dispose of the first portion only is a reason why I am to infer that she did not mean to dispose of the second portion, it would be equally a reason why I should presume that she did not mean to dispose of the third and fourth portions; but I am precluded from such a supposition, because she has actually disposed of them. Therefore, it does not appear to me, after the general reference to the power, the reference to the particular power which she sets out by reciting for the purpose of describing the 3,000*l.*—it does not appear to me that reference to the particular power without reference to the other power is a reason why I ought to come to the conclusion that it was not her intention to execute the power to dispose of the second portion of property. But I find that when she is disposing clearly and beyond all controversy of some of the property comprised in the third and fourth portions, she used with regard to that property precisely the same language which she is using in this clause which is now under consideration, namely, the term, "my shares, my plate, my books," everywhere speaking of everything that she disposes of, I will not say of everything, but most or many of the articles she is disposing of, where she is clearly and confessedly executing the power still as her property. Now, it has been held over and over again, that if there be no reference to the power, and the will purports to be made in pursuance of the power, it is necessary to describe the property, but the words "my personal estate" would be sufficient. If a man says, "Whereas I have power to dispose of such and such a sum of money under settlement, and I do by virtue of that power dispose as follows: I give all my money to A. B." it has been held over and over again that his describing it as his money does not prevent it being an exercise of the power, because there is a reference to the power itself. Now, suppose there had been no power in this settlement, except the power to dispose of that which is the second portion of the property in this settlement; and suppose this will had set out, as it does, by saying, "I do, by virtue of the power and authority given me by settlement, make this my will in manner and form following;" and then she had added, "I give all my money and other my personal estate of whatever description to A. B."—a person within the class in whose favour the power is created, and is to be exercised; surely within the authorities it would be sufficient to operate as an execution of the power. Then the question is, am I to say, that because there was power and authority to dispose of four other portions of property (and she uses the term "power and authority" in the singular number) therefore I am to hold that there is no reference to the power and authority to dispose of the second portion of property? It really appears to me that the question resolves itself into this, it being admitted that there is no reference to the property in itself comprised in the second portion. It appears to me clearly that there is such a reference; and that when she uses the term "power and authority," she meant to use the term, not in the technical sense in which a lawyer would say, "she has four different powers under that settlement, but she meant to say the power," and not only the power, but she adds the words, "the authority," which was given to her by that settlement to make a will disposing of the various portions of property which are the subject of that settlement. I have therefore no hesitation in saying that I do not doubt, after her intention to exercise the power and to dispose of the property comprising the second portion; and it certainly is not a little striking how, with respect to every portion of property which she professes to dispose of, she always has regard to the question whether under the terms of the settlement which gives her the power, her power is capable of being exercised to take effect immediately on her death, or only to take effect upon the death of her husband surviving her. Now, I may observe, that if it be said, as it is contended, that this clause, which only uses the term, "all the rest, residue, and remainder of my moneys, and other my personal estate," meant to dispose of nothing but what might be hers, irrespective of any power created by the settlement, it is to be observed, that she does not give that to any body, until after the death of her husband; so that I must attribute this intention to her, if that be the true construction, that she meant to dispose of some property which, irrespective of the settlement, she had the power to dispose of in favour of her husband, but in such a way that it would be undisposed of as long as the husband lived, and the gift only took effect upon the death of the husband. Then, again, I do not mean to say, that that might not be the intention. It is not conclusive on the question, but all these matters, which I must necessarily look at in considering the will, combine and lead to the same conclusion, that the intention was to exercise the power with regard to every portion of the property. Then, it is said, that in this clause, the clause on which the question necessarily chiefly turns, she makes this property subject to the payment of all her debts, and that that is an indication that she did not mean to exercise the power, because, as to the property comprised in the power, she had no right to make it, subject to her debts, or to her funeral expenses, or to the charges of proving her will. Now it must be considered what, if the construction which I think is the right one to be adopted, would be comprised in this gift. First of all, of course there would be the property comprised in the second portion, namely, the bulk of the portion, the whole stock, and the gas shares, after deducting the 3,000*l.* But there is more: she had, when she disposed of the 3,000*l.* or professed to dispose of the 3,000*l.* she had given about 1,000*l.* of it, or something less than 1,000*l.* she had given a sum out of it to meet a life annuity for her servant Mary Sewell, and then she had directed that what was to be set apart to answer Mary Sewell's annuity should become part of what she calls "the residue of my personal estate;" and then she directs that what would still remain of the 3,000*l.* and also the stock set apart to meet that annuity, if Mary Sewell died before the husband, and also the savings which she might make out of the 500*l.* a year, if at her death they exceeded 1,000*l.* should go to the husband for his life, and then, after his death, all that is to become what she calls "part of the residue of my personal estate;" so that what she describes here as "all the rest, residue, and remainder of any moneys, and other my personal estate," clearly is meant, as to part of it, at all events, to embrace some property which ex concessis, and without controversy she is disposing of only by virtue of the powers given her by the settlement. The whole property had been originally hers. The whole property was still hers in this sense, that there was no limitation to children. It was not the ordinary marriage settlement, giving it to the husband for life, the remainder to the wife for life, the remainder to the children of the marriage, and so on, with an ultimate limitation as the wife should appoint; but it is given subject to the pin-money of 500*l.* a year for herself, to her and her husband for their joint lives; if she survive the husband, the whole to go to her; if she do not survive her husband, then, as to a good deal of it, her husband to have a life income only, and then to be at her disposal; and as to the rest, to be at her disposal. That was the disposition of the property, both before and after the settlement had taken place; she looks at the whole property as her property; she speaks of it as hers; and this is not conjecture, because she tells us she means by her property, comprised in the settlement, "my plate, my books, my ticket of admission to the theatre, my shares in the Norwich Literary Institution, and my furniture." Both where she is giving to her husband, and where she is giving to other persons; and then she winds up the whole—having stated that "certain portions of what I am appointing by virtue of the power, shall fall into the residue of my personal estate; and having disposed of everything with the exception of what I have directed to fall into the residue of my personal estate, and that which the settlement calls the residue of the funds after setting apart the 3,000*l.*"—by giving all the rest and residue of her property after the death of her husband, who by the terms of the settlement, or by this will, was to have the life interest in it (if it be an exercise of the power); after the death of the husband to certain persons within that degree of consanguinity within which alone she could appoint to relations. I think that this is a far stronger case than many of the cases—I think I might say most of the cases—which have been decided to be a valid execution. It is a stronger case than that case in Lord Kenyon's time, which was referred to,—I mean the case of Churchill v. Dibben, which has only comparatively recently been made public, and is the subject of observation by the present Lord Chancellor in his book of Powers. In that case, if I am not mistaken, there was no reference to the power at all. However, it is in vain for me to go through all the cases and distinguish this case from some, or shew that it is more like others, or shew that it is a stronger case than others. It is sufficient, I say, that the principles being established,—about which there really is no controversy,—that it is a question of intention, and that there must be reference to the power or reference to the property, those principles being elementary and beyond all controversy,—I think it would be a loss of time, and attended with very little advantage, to go and compare the language of the instrument in this case with the language of the instrument in other cases; for of course there must be a great variety,—a great dissimilarity,—but it is sufficient for me to say, that having carefully gone through—perhaps it would be bold to say all the cases, they are so numerous,—but having gone through not only the cases cited before me, but a number of other cases, and carefully considered them, the conclusion I have arrived at is, that this is a stronger case than almost any case which has been decided in favour of the execution of the power, where the question has arisen whether there is a sufficient reference to the power: unless it be a case where a party describes the particular property. I will now only advert, then, to the question, whether the fact of there being an appointment in favour of persons,—that is, not actually an appointment, but an attempt to limit what is appointed in favour of persons not objects of the power,—whether I am to consider that a sufficient argument for the conclusion, that she did not mean to execute the power at all, that she did not intend to refer to the property entirely undisposed of, and meant to leave the bulk of it entirely undisposed of. Now, Carver v. Bowles is a strong authority on the point; and I must say, irrespective of that case, that when I find that all she is doing is this,—she appoints it to her nieces; but she thinks that it would be very expedient to protect nieces, and to take care that each share should be settled to the husband of the niece, if she left one, and to the children of the niece, and in default of appointment to the next of kin in blood to the neice,—it does appear to me that there is no ground, in face of the strong argument to the contrary, sufficient to lead me to the conclusion that it was not a valid execution of the power. It ought to be observed, with reference to that clause, which I did advert to, where she directs that this gift is to take effect after payment of all her just debts and funeral expenses, that the property which, according to the construction I am putting on the will, was embraced in this devise, would not only be such property as could be made subject to her debts, but would comprise property which under this very settlement she could make subject to her debts and funeral and testamentary expenses,—namely, the residue of the 3,000*l.* and also the property comprised in the fourth portion—the jewels, books, &c. and the savings of her pin-money. It is true that, as I have said before, she might have disposed of the savings of her pin-money as the savings of her separate property without a special power; but then it certainly is to be borne in mind that though it is unnecessary the settlement itself does purport to contain in the shape of a covenant by the husband a power to her to dispose of that by will; and she says, "What I am disposing of I dispose of by virtue of the power and authority given by the settlement." Without going further then at present, my opinion is that the will is a valid execution of all the powers.

MILDMAY v. METHUEN.

New practice—Reference—15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 42—Scientific persons.

Where the Vice-Chancellors of the Court are to work out questions of reference, which were formerly sent to the Masters, they will do so in Chambers, with (if necessary) the assistance of accountants, merchants, &c. as provided for by the 42nd section of the above Act.

More questions of detail will be worked out by the chief clerk under the Master's direction; but should any question of law or of a grave nature arise, such question to be discussed in open court.

This was a petition presented by a Mr. Holland, a builder, who had entered into a contract with the late Lord Methuen for building works to be done at Corsham-house, in Wiltshire. A suit had been instituted for the administration of the personal estate of the late Lord Methuen, and under the usual reference to take the account of debts the petitioner had carried in a claim to prove against the estate for 10,097*l.* 2s. 6d. and interest, the balance of an account amounting to 23,020*l.* 8s. 3d. for certain building works, alterations, and additions done to the mansion-house before mentioned.

The executors disputed the amount of the petitioner's bill, alleging that the real value of the works so executed by the petitioner amounted to 12,811*l.* 13s. only; that some of the works ought not to be paid for, because they were useless; that others ought not to be paid for because they were executed in too expensive a manner; and that in some particulars too high a price had been charged. The Master had allowed the claim as a claim against the estate, but not as a debt proved.

A former order had been obtained from the Vice-Chancellor, dated 28th of May, 1852, allowing the petitioner to bring such an action at law as he might be advised against the executors, but no action had been brought. The petitioner now asked, by his petition, that that order might be discharged, and that it might be referred to the Master, to whom the cause was referred, to ascertain and state what was due to the petitioner in respect of his said claim, and that the said Master might be at liberty to obtain the assistance in such manner as he might think proper of such architect or other professional person as he might think fit and might nominate, to ascertain the amount due to the petitioner in respect of his said claim.

Malins and Jessell, in support of the petition, relied upon the words of the 42nd clause of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80(a), as a foundation for the reference in the terms set out in the petition.

Daniel and Beavan, for the executors, said they were bound to protect the testator's estate. That the present was only an experiment to do that in a particular mode, which the petitioner might now do, by trying the questions between the parties by the action at law, which had been already ordered. That it was a question of considerable difficulty as arising upon the legal liability of the executors under the terms of the contract, which might be thus defeated by the proposed mode of proceeding. That the section relied upon did not warrant the Court in delegating such a jurisdiction to the Master, or to dispense with the evidence of facts, which ought to be proved by the petitioner in the usual way. That scientific assistance only related to conjectures and not to facts.

Jessell in reply.

The clauses 10 and 39 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, and the clauses 61 and 62 of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, were also referred to.

The Vice-Chancellor postponed his decision.

On the 8th November he pronounced the following judgment:—

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that as this question arose for the first time since the new Act had come into operation, it was very important that a uniform practice should be established, and he had therefore consulted the other Vice-Chancellors on the point. The section in question was the 42nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, whereby "it was lawful for the Court of Chancery, or any judge thereof, in such way as they might think fit, to obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, actuaries, engineers, or other scientific gentlemen, the better to enable such Court or judge to determine, and act on the certificate of such persons." The question now was, whether that section conferred the power on the judge himself to act, or authorised him to delegate that power to the Master, calling in the assistance of such scientific gentlemen as should be expedient. He (the Vice-Chancellor) and the other judges were of opinion that it was never intended by the Legislature that the Court should delegate any such power to the Master, and that the purpose of the Act was to enable the judges, in doing that which they were now to do instead of the Master, to decide questions which otherwise would have been referred to the Master, and should have the power to call in the assistance of scientific persons, if necessary. In the form in which this petition prayed for an order he could not grant it; but the question remained whether, either that the matter should be left to go on at law, or that he (the Vice-Chancellor) should himself take the matter in chambers, calling in the assistance of builders, &c. if necessary. It would have been most satisfactory to him (the Vice-Chancellor) that the matter should go to law, but as he ought not to have any personal consideration on the subject, and as the whole matter would be best determined by discharging the former order and taking the matter himself in chambers, that was the course which he intended to adopt. Mere details would be worked out by the chief clerk, under his Honour's direction; and if there should be any question of a grave nature, it would be right to have that question discussed in open court. Order accordingly.

(a) Sect. 42. "It shall be lawful for the said Court, or any Judge thereof, in such way as they may think fit, to obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, or other scientific persons, the better to enable such Court or Judge to determine any matter at issue in any cause or proceeding, and to act upon the certificate of such persons."

REG. v. HENSON.

Nuisance—Bringing glandered mare into public place—Indictment—Scienter.

One count of an indictment charged that the defendant had a mare "inflicted with a contagious, infectious, and dangerous disease, called the glanders," and that he, "well knowing the premises," whilst the mare was so infected, brought it into a public place and way, where divers liege subjects then were, "to the great danger of infecting with the said contagious, infectious, and dangerous disease," the liege subjects in and near, &c. to the common nuisance, &c. against the peace, &c.:

Held, good, after verdict, without an allegation that the defendant knew the glanders to be a disease which was communicable to the human race by infection.

Indictment, for publicly exposing for sale a glandered horse.

The first count was in these words:—"The jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present, that James Henson, late of Melton Mowbray, in the county of Leicester, labourer, on the 1st day of June, in the fifteenth year of the reign of our said Lady the Queen, at Melton Mowbray aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, was possessed of a certain mare, which said mare was then and there infected with a contagious, infectious, and dangerous disease, called the glanders, and the said James Henson, well knowing the premises, afterwards and whilst the said mare was so infected as aforesaid, on the day and year aforesaid, with force and arms at Melton Mowbray aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, unlawfully, wilfully, wickedly, and injuriously did bring, and cause to be brought, the said mare so infected as aforesaid, into and along a certain open public way and place in which then of right were divers liege subjects of our said Lady the Queen, then going, passing, and staying, and amidst and among divers liege subjects of our said Lady the Queen, who were then and there in the said public way and place, to the great danger of infecting with the said contagious, infectious, and dangerous disease, called the glanders, the liege subjects of our said Lady the Queen, who on the said day and time were in and near the said public way and place, to the damage and common nuisance of all the said liege subjects of our said Lady the Queen, to the evil example of all others in the like case offending, and against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity."

The second count was for a nuisance, in bringing a glandered mare into a public fair where horses were being sold.

The third count was for bringing a glandered mare into a public place, where horses and other cattle were passing and repassing.

At the last Assizes for the county of Nottingham, the defendant was convicted on all the counts of an indictment for a nuisance.

Miller, Serjt. now moved in arrest of judgment. The first count is bad; it does not aver that the defendant knew that the glanders was a disease communicable to man infectiously. The verdict would be wrong unless that was proved; it was therefore necessary to prove it; and if so, there ought to have been a corresponding allegation. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—There is an allegation that he knew the mare to be glandered; and that is enough.] He might know that the glanders was communicable from one horse to another without contact; but that it was so communicable from a horse to a man, if such is the case, he would not, and in fact did not know. [COLERIDGE, J.—In the case of the small-pox, R. v. Vantandillo, 4 M. & S. 73, there was no averment of knowledge that it was infectious. The judge in passing sentence, however, says, "there could be no doubt that if a person unlawfully, injuriously, and with full knowledge of the fact, exposes in a public highway a person infected with a contagious disorder, it is a common nuisance to all the subjects, and indictable as such. Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—What fact?] The existence of the disorder and its infectious nature. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—If the case were one of small-pox, and the act was done with intention to endanger the liege subjects, would you say that an allegation of knowledge that small-pox is infectious was necessary?] There would in that case be a human being actually suffering, and the familiar experience that other human beings were liable to danger therefrom. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Your argument rests on the assumption that the ad commune nocumentum, &c. need not be proved. That is not so.]

COLERIDGE, J.—Here the defendant knew the mare to be glandered, and he took it into a public place "to the great danger of infecting with the said contagious, infectious, and dangerous disease," &c. the liege subjects in and near. What, after verdict for the Crown, does that mean?

By the COURT.—The indictment is good.

NICHOLLS and WIFE v. BROOKS.

Evidence—Admissibility of wife, she being joined as plaintiff with her husband.

It is quite settled that upon the trial of an action, in which husband and wife are joint plaintiffs, the wife is an admissible witness.

Keating moved for a new trial in this case, on the ground that the female plaintiff had been examined as a witness on behalf of herself and her husband.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—The point has often been ruled at Nisi Prius.

ERLE, J.—I have often admitted the wife when she is plaintiff.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—When she is a party to the record, she comes within the express words of the statute. Rule refused.

Trustees—Legal estate.

The surviving trustees had conveyed the trust property to themselves and a number of persons, so that the legal estate was in seventeen persons instead of sixteen, the number appointed by the deed creating the trust:

Held, nevertheless, that the legal estate being in the seventeen, they were entitled to recover on a joint demise by them in an action of ejectment.

Ejectment by the trustees of Hayle's Charity. Tried at the Surrey Assizes, before Jervis, C.J. and the verdict for the lessors of the plaintiff.

It appeared that the charity was constituted by a deed, Dec. 1, 1671, between R. Hayle and his wife of the one part, and the rector of the parish of Lambeth, and fifteen other persons, of the other part; and it was declared by the deed of settlement that when all the trustees, except five, should happen to die, the said five should convey to themselves, and eleven other parishioners, upon the same trusts as thereinbefore declared. For the purpose of carrying into effect the object of the charity, the 9 Geo. 4, c. 45 (private), was passed.

The demise was laid to be in seventeen persons jointly, whereupon it was objected at the trial that that was contrary to the provisions of the deed and the above Act, and that the lessors of the plaintiff could not recover. The learned judge, however, overruled the objection.

Shee, Serjt. now moved for a new trial, on the ground that such ruling at the trial was wrong. The above provision is in the nature of a power which has not been properly pursued. [WIGHTMAN, J.—Suppose there had been no Act of Parliament, and the trustees appointed by the deed had conveyed to seventeen persons?] That would have been a violation of the trust.

By the COURT.—If the legal estate is not in these seventeen persons, where is it? Rule refused.

STEWART v. JONES.

County Court—Jurisdiction.

By the 1 Vict. c. 33, a right to recover a paring rate in one of the Superior Courts of Record at Westminster, was given:

Held, that the County Court had jurisdiction, and that a plaint might be entered therein for the recovery of the rate.

C. Pollock moved for a prohibition to the judge of the County Court of Cheshire, to restrain him from proceeding further in the above cause. The plaint was for the recovery of 8*l.* 19*s.* 8*d.* alleged to be due from the defendant under a local Act, 1 Vict. c. 33, for sewering and paving, &c. the town of Birkenhead. Sec. 18 of the Act gave a power of recovering rates by distress or by action in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record at Westminster, and the learned counsel contended that the jurisdiction of the local Courts at the time of passing the above Act was thereby ousted, and that it was not the intention of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95 (County Courts Act), to give jurisdiction to the County Courts in a case like this. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—No doubt where a new right is created by Act of Parliament, and an appropriate remedy also given, that remedy must be pursued. But here the remedy was given to the Superior Courts in the first instance, and it is then transferred to the County Courts by the later Act. WIGHTMAN, J.—The form of action in the Superior Courts would be debt, and then jurisdiction is given to the County Courts in all cases of debt below a certain amount. COLERIDGE, J.—And this case is not within any of the exceptions in the 58th section.] He then referred to secs. 3 and 58 of the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95; The Apothecaries' Act; Foster's case, 11 Co. Rep. 61 a; Williams v. Pritchard, 4 T.R. 2; Owens v. Breese, 6 Ex. 413, 916.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Having heard the arguments and the authorities cited, I am only confirmed in the impression that I had when the motion was proposed. By the local Act of 1 Vict. c. 33, an action of debt was given for the recovery of the rate in a Court of Record, then by a subsequent Act, the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, it was enacted that in all pleas of personal actions where the debt or damage was not more than 20*l.* the County Courts should have jurisdiction. This was a personal action within the limited amount, and comes within the meaning of the enacting clause, and it is not within any of the exceptions. Then why should we not give that construction to the case? There is nothing at all to shew that it was the intention of the Legislature that County Courts should not have jurisdiction over such a cause of action as this. It is more for the convenience of the subject that they should have such jurisdiction. The 1 Vict. c. 33, is relied on, but it is a strange distinction to draw between Courts of Record and Courts of Record in Westminster Hall.

COLERIDGE, J.—I quite agree with Mr. Pollock that there would have been no mode of recovering this rate by action but for the 1 Vict. c. 33. By that Act, the right became a personal action, and when the right was enforced it became a plea of personal action, and jurisdiction over such rights is given by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 58, to County Courts. The 128th section is equally strong to shew that.

WIGHTMAN and ERLE, JJ. concurred. Rule refused.

BRYAN v. CLAY, Executor.

Dilapidations—Case against executor of deceased rector—Priority of debts.

By the custom of England, an action on the case lies against the executor of a deceased rector, at the suit of his successor, for dilapidations; but it is an incident of that custom, that in the order of payment, debts, whether simple contract or specialty debts, should be preferred to damages for dilapidations; and it is consequently a good plea in such an action that the assets are sufficient only for payment of debts.

Case for dilapidations against the executor of a deceased rector by his successor.

Plea that there were outstanding debts, and plene administravit præter. Demurrer thereto.

Kingdon, in support of the demurrer.—The question is whether simple contract debts are to be preferred in order of payment to damages for dilapidations; and there is no sufficient authority for that rule. Between different sorts of simple contract debts there is no distinction in the order of administration, and by 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 2, damages are to be payable by executors in the like order as simple contract debts. [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J. —That provision would seem to apply to the case of an incumbent vacating his living before his death, so that the action might have been brought against the prior incumbent in his lifetime.] It may also apply to a case like the present, where the action is for a wrong committed by the testator, though the testator himself could not have been sued in his lifetime. Besides, unliquidated damages have long been held to come within the category of debts for which executors are liable. (Fawcet v. Carter, Palm. 329; Sanders v. Esterbie, 1 Roll. Rep. 266.) The action is founded upon a duty, which the deceased rector ought to have performed; and the very admission that the action is maintainable seems to involve the consequence that the damages, when recovered, should be payable in the same order as other simple contract debts. (2 Williams's Exors. 815, 1351; Pinchon's case, 9 Rep. 87 a; Sollers v. Lawrence, Willes, 421; Jones v. Hill, 3 Lev. 268; Hambly v. Trott, Cowp. 371; Mason v. Lambert, 12 Q. B. Rep. 795; Wheatley v. Lane, 1 Wms. Saund. 216 a. The only authority for saying that damages for dilapidations are to be postponed to debts is that of Sir Simon Degge, p. 75, and he probably spoke only of specialty debts. Mr. Justice Williams mentions the rule with a "semble."

M. Smith, contrà.—This action is altogether anomalous, and depends entirely upon custom. That custom is stated by Sir Simon Degge; and one of its incidents is that the damages are to be postponed to debts in the order of payment. From the time of Sir Simon Degge to the present, all the authorities have mentioned that as one incident of the custom. Gibson, Cod. 791; Ayliffe Parer. 217; 2 Burn's Eccl. Law (ed. Phillimore), 148, 153, where an opinion of Sir Wm. Scott to the same effect is given; Dr. Grey's System of Eccl. Law, p. 250.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Having heard this case ably argued, I am now able to express a clear opinion that the defendant is entitled to our judgment. The action is founded upon a peculiar custom of the realm, which is set forth in the declaration, and not upon the common principles of the law of England; because, according to those principles, no action of tort would lie against an executor, and no action would lie against a representative, there having been no cause of action or foundation of a cause of action in the lifetime of the testator; but this anomalous action is given by custom to the subsequent incumbent, although he had no cause of action in the lifetime of the prior incumbent. We must see, therefore, what the custom is; and Sir Simon Degge, who is the first authority upon the subject, expressly states that, though the action may be maintained, still the payment of damages for dilapidations is to be postponed to the payment of all debts; and by debts it seems to me quite clear that he means simple contract as well as specialty debts. From that time to the present every writer has stated the custom in the same terms; and the opinion of Sir Wm. Scott shews, at least, what was the general understanding of the Profession at that time. It is true that Bishop Gibson expresses his discontent with the law in that respect; but that expression adds weight to the authority, because, whilst he laments the rule, he submits to it. Although this is the first time that the question appears to have arisen on the record, which is sufficient to explain the "semble" of Mr. Justice Williams, the law has been uniformly laid down the same way; and the plea, therefore, is good.

COLERIDGE, WIGHTMAN, and ERLE, JJ. concurred.

BIBBY and OTHERS v. LARPENT and OTHERS.

Debtor and creditor—Deed of arrangement—Bankruptcy.

A deed of arrangement between a debtor and his creditors, whereby it is agreed that the debtor should still carry on the business under the control of inspectors, he covenanting to use his best endeavours to get in the debts, and to conduct his affairs to a conclusion for the benefit of his creditors, and also upon the request of a majority of the inspectors to get in his private property, excepting his household goods, furniture, plate, and the like, for the benefit of his creditors, is not a valid deed of arrangement within sec. 124 of the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act.

Assumpsit on a bill of exchange.

Plea.—That six-sevenths of the creditors of the defendants had signed a deed of arrangement, whereby, amongst other things, the defendants covenanted to manage to the best of their ability, and conduct to a conclusion, the liquidation of their partnership affairs for the benefit of their creditors, to use their best endeavours to get in all the debts of the partnership, and to pay the same into their own or any other bankers; to deliver monthly accounts to certain inspectors, and not to enter into new contracts without their consent; and also, at the request of a majority of the inspectors, to collect and get in the separate and private property of the partners, exempting only their household goods and furniture, plate, linen, china, &c. for the benefit of the creditors. It was further provided that the money should be drawn out of the bankers by the cheques of two partners; that with the sanction of any of the inspectors, the partners might pay, either wholly or in part, the debt of any creditor not exceeding 5,000*l.*; and that they might retain a sum of 3,000*l.* for their services, to be apportioned amongst them as the inspectors might direct. The plea alleged that the plaintiff had notice of this deed. Special demurrer thereto.

Paterson, in support of the demurrer.—Tetley v. Taylor, 21 Law J. 346, Q.B. governs this case, because this deed does not effectuate a distribution of the whole estate of the debtor amongst his creditors. The plea is also bad for want of a sufficient averment that the plaintiff had three months' notice from the signing of the deed by six-sevenths of the creditors. (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 224, 225.)

M. Smith, contrà.—Tetley v. Taylor was the case of a composition deed simply; and the Court could not have meant to decide that the arrangement must be precisely such as would take place under a bankruptcy. The provisions here are only regulations for the maintenance of the debtors.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—The decision of Tetley v. Taylor, by the Exchequer Chamber, is binding upon this Court; and the principle there laid down certainly is, that these arrangements are void unless the whole property is distributed as it would be in bankruptcy. The exception of the plate and furniture alone is sufficient to bring this case within that rule; and whatever opinion I might form in the House of Lords, upon contrasting the reasons of the Exchequer Chamber with the reasons previously given by this Court, at present we must act upon that decision. Judgment for the plaintiff.

CASTELLI v. BODDINGTON.

Policy of insurance—Transfer of interest—Bankruptcy of assured—Set-off.

A set-off cannot be pleaded to a declaration on a policy of insurance claiming for an average loss.

To a declaration on a policy of insurance on goods on a voyage from Havannah to the Baltic, containing a stipulation that there should be a return of part of the premium if the voyage terminated in the United Kingdom, the defendant pleaded the bankruptcy of the plaintiff. The plaintiff replied, that before the bankruptcy he had sold the goods insured to Messrs. Fuge, and had handed over and transferred to them the policy thereon and all his interest therein.

Rejoinder, that before the bankruptcy the risks ended in the United Kingdom, whereby the plaintiff became entitled to a return of part of the premium, which return had not been made, and was still a subsisting claim upon the policy, in no way assigned or parted with.

Upon demurrer thereto:

Held, no answer to the plea; because, assuming that the plaintiff at the time of his bankruptcy was entitled to the return of premium as money had and received, still no interest in the contract of insurance remained in him so as to pass to his assignees under the bankruptcy.

Assumpsit on a policy of insurance on goods on a voyage from the Havannah to the United Kingdom, or to any port in the Baltic. The declaration set forth the policy, which contained a stipulation that if the risks should end in the United Kingdom, then the assured was to be entitled to a return of 23s. 9d. per cent.; and claimed for an average loss.

Pleas (inter alia).—1. A set-off. 2. The bankruptcy of plaintiff before action brought.

Replication to plea of bankruptcy.—That before the bankruptcy, plaintiff had sold the goods insured to Messrs. Fuge, and had handed over to them the policy of insurance, and transferred all his right and interest therein; and that the action was brought in the name of the bankrupt as trustee for the Messrs. Fuge.

Rejoinder.—That after the making of the policy, and the attaching of the said risks, and before the bankruptcy of the plaintiff, the said risks ended in the said United Kingdom, whereby the plaintiff then became entitled to a return of the sum of 23s. 9d. per cent. but which said return had not been made, and still remained a subsisting claim upon and by virtue of the policy, and in no way assigned or parted with. Verification.

Demurrer thereto, and to the plea of set-off.

Watson, in support of the demurrer.—1. The plea of set-off cannot be pleaded in this action, according to all the authorities. (Hardcastle v. Netherwood, 5 B. & Ald. 93; Grant v. The Royal Exchange Insurance Company, 5 M. & S. 439; Thomson v. Redman, 11 M. & W. 487; Forster v. Wilson, 12 M. & W. 203. 2. The rejoinder is no answer to the replication. There may be a collateral claim by the bankrupt or his assignees for money had and received, but as to the contract of indemnity, which is the subject-matter of the present action, all interest in that had passed away from the plaintiff before his bankruptcy. (He referred to s. 141 of the Bankruptcy Consolidation Act; Carpenter v. Marnall, 3 Bos. & P. 40; Willis v. Freeman, 12 East, 656.)

Bramwell, contrà.—1. The general impression has been against the plea of set-off in this action; but it is allowed in other cases where the demand is really as much a demand for unliquidated damages as here, such as actions for the value of goods, where the price has to be determined by the verdict of the jury. 2. The rejoinder is good. Whether the return of premium could or could not be recovered as money had and received, there is an express contract in the policy to make that return, and upon that contract an action would lie. The plaintiff, therefore, retained an interest in one of the stipulations of the policy; and as he retained that partial interest, the whole contract passed to his assignees under the bankruptcy. As to the contract of indemnity, and the damages recovered under it, the assignees of course would be trustees for the Messrs. Fuge. (D'Arnay v. Chesneau, 13 M. & W. 796; Gibson v. Overbury, 7 M. & W. 555.)

Watson, in reply.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment. First, as to the plea of set-off, it is quite clear that that plea cannot be pleaded to a demand for unliquidated damages; and a claim for an average loss upon a policy of insurance has been invariably considered a demand for unliquidated damages. Secondly, the plea of bankruptcy is a perfectly good plea; but the replication, if true, is an answer to it, because it shews that at the time of the bankruptcy the plaintiff had no beneficial interest in the promise of indemnity contained in the policy, upon which the action is founded. The rejoinder, however, relies upon the stipulation in the policy for a return of premium, if the voyage should end in the United Kingdom; and it says that that was not transferred. Now, the meaning of that stipulation was merely that as a certain premium was to be paid for a certain voyage, a less premium should be paid if the voyage was shorter; but assuming that that demand remained to the plaintiff, how does that shew any right in his assignees to maintain this action for an average loss either in their own name or that of the bankrupt? The demand for a return of premium was easily separable from that which arose upon the contract of indemnity; and the remedy would be by an action for money had and received, founded on failure of consideration. As soon as the goods were delivered in the United Kingdom, a right of action accrued to the assured against the underwriters for the 23s. 9d. and that cause of action might be available to the assignees, though they had no interest in the policy.

COLERIDGE, J.—It may be that if two interests in a contract are inseparably united, both may pass to the assignees of a bankrupt, though he has a beneficial interest in one only; but that is not this case. Here the interests are quite separate.

WIGHTMAN, J.—D'Arnay v. Chesneau appears to me quite distinguishable; because here the assignees have not, as they had there, any interest whatever in the immediate subject of the action.

ERLE, J. concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, Nov. 4.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE RIVER LEA v. THE NEW RIVER COMPANY.—This was an action on the case for taking a greater quantity of water from the River Lea than the defendants were entitled to take; tried at Maidstone, before Jervis, C. J. when a verdict was found for the defendants. Sir F. Kelly, Solicitor-General, now moved for a rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiffs or for a new trial. The question turned upon a private Act of Parliament relating to the navigation of the river Lea (12 Geo. 2, c. xxxii.), and the main question was, whether the defendants had altered the natural course of the river within the meaning of that statute. Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO COMPANY.—This was a proceeding by sci. fa. to repeal the letters patent whereby a charter of incorporation had been granted to the defendants. The declaration recited the letters patent, whereby, amongst other things, it was provided that a capital of 50,000*l.* at the least, should be paid up within a year; and that in case the company should not comply with any of the directions and conditions of the charter, it should be lawful for the Crown, by writing under the Great Seal, to revoke it absolutely, or upon such terms and conditions as should be thought fit. The declaration alleged that the capital had not been paid up as required; and the issue taken upon that allegation was found for the Crown. The trial took place before Lord Campbell, C. J. in Middlesex. Crowder now moved in arrest of judgment, upon the ground that the payment of the capital within the year was not a condition upon nonperformance of which the letters patent could be repealed by judgment in sci. fa.; and that the only mode of proceeding was to apply to the Crown to exercise the discretion which, in the case that had arisen, the charter expressly reserved to the Crown. Rule nisi.

EDWARDS v. LOWNDES.—This was an action for salary as an organist, brought against the clerk to the Local Board of Health, at Burslem, in Staffordshire, tried before Cresswell, J. at Stafford, when a verdict was found for the defendant upon the 1st and 5th pleas. Whateley now moved to enter a verdict for the plaintiff upon those issues, with 25*l.* damages. Under the Burslem Market Act, passed in 1826, the Market trustees were directed to apply the funds raised under that Act to various purposes at their discretion, and amongst others to payment of the organist's salary. The powers and liabilities of the trustees had been transferred to the Local Board of Health; and as they had funds in hand, they were bound to pay the organist's salary. (Pardoe v. Price, 13 M. & W. 267; 16 M. & W. 451.) Rule nisi.

HALL and WIFE v. HOCKLEY.—Shee, Serjt. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence, or to reduce the damages to 75*l.* The cause was tried in Surrey, before Jervis, C. J. and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 220*l.*

Cur. adv. vult.

REG v. HENRY DAVIS.—Sir A. E. Cockburn moved for a rule for a criminal information against the defendant, the publisher of the Cheltenham Chronicle, for publishing a libel upon Earl Fitzhardinge, imputing that he had corruptly exercised the office of Lord-Lieutenant for political purposes. Rule nisi.

POSTLE v. MAGNAY.—This was an action of covenant, tried before Jervis, C. J. in Surrey, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages, 345*l.* Chambers now moved for a rule to enter the verdict for the defendant upon two issues. The action was brought to enforce payment of the plaintiff's share of certain partnership effects, pursuant to a deed of arrangement for that purpose. The pleadings raised two issues. First, whether there had been a valuation of the stock in trade, &c. pursuant to the deed; and, secondly, whether there had been a realization of the property and effects of the partnership and an ascertainment of the plaintiff's share. There had been a valuation of the stock in trade, &c. but it was made by two persons only instead of three, as required by the deed; and there had been a statement of account, but in that statement bad debts were included, and it was expressed to be subject to deduction by reason of bad debts. The question was whether, under those circumstances, the issues were proved. Rule nisi.

BOUGLERX v. SWAINE and BOVILL.—This was an action of covenant for an instalment of 200*l.* payable on the 20th June, 1852, under a deed of August, 1848. At the trial before Platt, B. at the last Bristol Assizes, a verdict was found for the defendants. Kinglake, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. The defendants were licensees under a patent granted to the plaintiff for new and improved machinery for grinding corn; and they had, under the powers of the deed, transferred their licence to a third person. The question was upon the terms of the deed, whether the defendants could be required to pay the plaintiff the sums agreed upon, unless there was an actual use of the invention; or whether the enjoyment of the right to use it rendered them liable to pay. Rule nisi.

THE EARL OF SCARBOROUGH v. PICKEN.—Trespass. Plea, a public highway. At the trial, which took place at Nottingham before Coleridge, J. a verdict was found for the defendant. Willmore, now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence. The evidence negatived a dedication by the owner, because he had permitted his tenant every year to fasten up a gate across the alleged road. (Barraclough v. Johnson, 8 Ad. & Ell. 99; R. v. Lloyd, 1 Camp. 260, and 263, n.) Rule nisi.

WILTSHIRE v. COTTERELL.—This was an action for injury to the plaintiff's reversion by removing a granary, a threshing machine, and rick straddles. At the trial before Williams, J. at Oxford, a verdict was found for the plaintiff—Damages, 25*l.* for the granary, 5*l.* for the thrashing-machine, and 5*l.* for the rick straddles. Keating moved to enter the verdict for the defendant as to the whole or any part of the plaintiff's claim; and the question was whether the things above mentioned were chattels or fixtures, and whether all or any of them were included in the plaintiff's conveyance. The granary was said to pass because it was represented by a dot on the plan to which the deed referred. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. BUTT v. ROUSE.—Ejectment by a mortgagee of turnpike tolls pursuant to 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 49. At the trial before Martin, B. in Wiltshire, a prior mortgage to the defendant, one of the road trustees, upon which he had obtained a judgment in ejectment by default, was put in; and upon that evidence the learned judge directed a verdict for the defendant. M. Smith moved to enter the verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff, on the ground that the prior mortgage was no answer, each mortgage being of a proportion of the tolls only. (Doe dem. Thompson v. Ledlard, 4 B. & Ad. 137.) Rule nisi.

PRICE v. HEWITT.—Field moved to set aside so much of an order of Martin, B. setting aside a warrant of attorney and all subsequent proceedings as directed, that the defendant should enter an appearance. The warrant of attorney was void by reason of the infancy of the defendant, and the judge ought not to have imposed any terms when he set it aside. (Adlam v. Noble, 9 Dowl. 322; Sanderson v. Marr, 1 H. Bl. 75.) By the COURT.—Upon application for a summary remedy terms may always be imposed. Rule refused.

JOHNSON v. GIBSON, exor.—Debt for rent; tried before Jervis, C.J. at Hertford; and a verdict found for the plaintiff, damages 18*l.* The declaration claimed rent for three-quarters of a year ending 25th March, 1852; but no particulars of demand had been delivered. The defendant had paid 7*l.* 10*s.* into court, and upon the facts proved at the trial it appeared that with the exception of that sum the defendant had paid all the rent that was payable by him. The learned judge, however, thought that upon the pleadings as they stood, the plaintiff was entitled to a verdict for the rent for three-fourths of a year, which had been due. Bovill now moved to enter verdict for defendant, or to reduce the damages to a nominal sum or for a new trial. Rule nisi.

HALL v. GRENFELL.—Milward moved for a rule to take out of court 70*l.* deposited with sheriff in lieu of bail. Rule nisi.

Re BLAGG.—Keane moved for a rule calling upon an attorney to give up the papers relating to an action of ejectment, upon receiving an undertaking that his lien should not be prejudiced. Rule nisi.

MURPHY v. NUGENT.—Field, moved to rescind an order of Erle, J. allowing the plaintiff his costs, on the ground that the cause of action arose in some material part within the jurisdiction of the Marylebone County Court, within the jurisdiction of which the defendant resided Rule refused.

BISSELL v. WILSON.—Trespass, for false imprisonment. Plea, not guilty by statute. At the trial before Lord Campbell, C. J. in London, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, damages, 100*l.* The defendant was a magistrate of the City of London, who had issued his warrant for the apprehension of plaintiff, who, after his conviction under the Copyright Act, had neglected to attend personally, in obedience to a summons, calling upon him to shew cause why he should not pay the penalty. Hugh Hill now moved to enter a nonsuit or verdict for the defendant, on the ground that defendant was protected by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 2, inasmuch as the plaintiff's appearance by attorney and counsel was not an appearance according to the exigency of the summons. Also on the ground that the notice of action was insufficient, having been given before the conviction was quashed. Lord Campbell, C.J.—That point was not taken at the trial. Rule nisi on the other point.

Friday, Nov. 5.

DOE dem. BATT v. ACLAND.—Tried in Sussex before Maule, J. and the verdict for the plaintiff. Channell, Serjt now moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

THE MAYOR AND CORPORATION OF BERWICK-UPON-TWEED v. RENTON.—Action upon a bond against a surety tried in Northumberland before Lord Campbell, C.J. and the verdict for the defendant. Knowles now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule nisi as against evidence.

KEYSE v. POWELL.—Trespass q. c. f. tried at Monmouth before Williams, J. and the verdict for the plaintiff. W. H. Watson moved to enter the verdict for the defendant on the second and third pleas. Rule nisi.

NORTHAM v. HURLEY.—Case for diverting a stream of water, tried in Devon, before Martin, B. and a verdict for the plaintiff with 1*s.* damages. Kinglake, Serjt. moved to set aside the verdict and enter a nonsuit or for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Cur. adv. vult.

HEYWOOD v. POTTER.—Action for the infringement of a copyright design tried before Lord Campbell, C.J. and a verdict for the defendant on two issues. Bramwell moved to set aside the verdict for the defendant on those issues, and enter it for the plaintiff. Rule nisi.

WHARTON v. MCGRATH.—Replevin tried at Carlisle before Wightman, J. and a verdict for the defendant. Atherton moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Rule nisi.

GREGORY v. SLOWMAN.—Tried in Middlesex before Lord Campbell, C.J. and verdict for the plaintiff. M. Chambers moved for a new trial on the part of the defendant Slowman, on the grounds of the improper reception of evidence, misdirection, excessive damages, and that the verdict was against the evidence. Cur. adv. vult.

MAUGHAM v. SMITH.—E. James moved to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. HEARNE v. PARKINSON.—Keating moved for a new trial. Rule nisi.

EDWARDS v. LOWNDES.—(See Nisi Prius report of this case, 20 LAW T. Rep. 43.) Gray moved for a cross rule herein. Rule nisi.

MALLALIEU v. THE ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN GOLD MINING COMPANY.—Paterson moved for leave to abandon the rule for a new trial obtained herein. Rule nisi.

QUEEN'S BENCH.

JONES v. EVANS.—Welsby moved to review the taxation herein. Rule nisi.

Saturday, Nov. 6.

HUTTON and ANOTHER (Assignees) v. CRUTTWELL.—Kinglake, Serjt. moved for a new trial. Cur. adv. vult.

BERRITT v. WINTERBOTTOM.—Case by assignee for infringement of patent. Plea, denying the novelty. At the trial, before Wightman, J. at Liverpool, a verdict was found for the defendant. Knowles moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence. The patent was for an improvement in the mode of stopping bottles by lining the neck of the bottle with an elastic material. There was evidence that a tap had been previously made in which the stopper itself was surrounded by an elastic material, but the plaintiff's patent was founded upon a new combination; and the learned judge should have told the jury that the combination might be new, though the parts were old. By the COURT.—The question of novelty was properly left to the jury; and upon the facts it is clear that the principle was not new. Rule refused.

MAYOR OF BERWICK v. DOBIE.—Covenant upon a deed whereby the defendant and two others agreed to become co-sureties for one Murray, as borough treasurer. At the trial before Wightman, J. a verdict was found for the plaintiff. Watson moved for a new trial, on the ground that one of the co-sureties had since obtained a verdict on a plea of non est factum, it appearing that he had not executed. The fraud of the obligee in discharging one of the obligors to the bond would be a defence. (Langston v. Wetherwell, 1 Ex. 634.) By the COURT.—This is not a matter noviter veniens ad notitiam. Rule refused.

MAYOR OF BERWICK v. OSWALD.—Hugh Hill moved for a new trial in this case, also on the ground that the defendant was discharged because the bond had not been executed by all the proposed sureties, and the defendant had executed upon an undertaking that nothing should be done to defeat the liability of any other surety. By the COURT.—The point was not made at the trial. Rule refused.

KEANE v. STEWART.—Watson moved for a rule to refer back the taxation of costs herein to the Master. Rule nisi.

DEBRA DE MORODA v. DAWSON and OTHERS.—This was an action for a malicious prosecution; tried before Alderson, B. at Warwick; when the plaintiff was nonsuited for want of evidence to connect the defendants with the charge made against the plaintiff and the late Baroness Von Beck. The warrant of apprehension was not produced, and the depositions taken before the magistrates did not shew who made the charge. Miller, S. moved for a new trial, on the ground that there was some evidence to be submitted to the jury on that subject; and also upon an affidavit explaining the nonproduction of the warrant. Rule nisi.

DON dem. LORD SCARBOROUGH v. APPLEYARD.—Ejectment tried before Lord Campbell, C. J. at York; when a verdict was found for the plaintiff.—Hugh Hill now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against the evidence. Rule refused.

REG. v. THE INHABITANTS OF HOUGHTON.—Indictment for non-repair of a highway. Plea, not guilty. At the trial before Wightman, J. at Liverpool, the verdict was found for the defendants.

Atherton now moved for a new trial, on the ground that the learned judge ought to have told the jury that a former conviction of the defendants upon a presentment of the same road was conclusive evidence of their liability to repair. Rule nisi.

NEILL v. WARHURST.—Assumpsit for breach of an agreement by preventing plaintiff from completing a building contract, with counts for work and labour. At the trial before Wightman, J. at Liverpool, a verdict was found for the plaintiff, with 300*l.* damages on the special count, and 21*l.* on the common counts.

Wilkins, Serjt. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, the improper rejection of evidence, and that the verdict on the 1st count was contrary to the evidence, or to reduce the damages. The learned judge had told the jury that if the plaintiff was prevented from proceeding with the work by the defendant's fault, he was entitled to damages for loss of profit, and also for the price of the work done. The price of the work done could not be recovered at all, because the plaintiff had not obtained the certificate of the architect until after action brought (Morgan v. Birnie, 9 Bing. 672); and the only damage alleged in the special count was the loss of profit. 2. Evidence of carelessness in pulling down a house was tendered for the purpose of shewing that the work was not worth the price charged, and improperly rejected. 3. The evidence shewed that the defendant did not prevent the plaintiff from going on. Rule nisi.

REG. v. MORRISON.—Otter, in support of the order of Sessions. Heath, contrà. Cur. adv. vult.

Monday, Nov. 8.

REG. v. ——.—Webster moved to set aside the replication to a plea pleaded to a sci. fa. for repealing letters patent granted for improvements in gelatinous substances, and in apparatus to be used therein. Rule nisi.

REG. v. TALLIS.—The Attorney-General (P. Francis with him) moved for a criminal information for a libel by the defendant against Mr. Sheriff Croll. Rule nisi.

COOK v. GILLARD.—Atherton and Millward shewed cause against a rule to set aside a nonsuit and enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 142*l.* Keating (Bagley with him) supported the rule. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. (on the prosecution of Sir W. Worsley) v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE RYE AND DERWENT DRAINAGE ACT.—This was a question as to when the time of notice of appeal began to run, and turned purely on the construction of divers sections in a local Act of Parliament. The point is of no general importance. Cowling (E. S. Cayley with him) for the prosecutor, and S. Temple for the defendants. Judgment for the defendants.

Tuesday, Nov. 9.

REG. v. THE SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Watson moved to set aside an award, on the ground that the reasons given by the arbitrator on a separate paper, but delivered at the same time with the award, shewed that he had come to a wrong conclusion in point of law. The subject-matter of the reference was certain appeals against rates imposed upon the Reading and Reigate Railway; and the arbitrator had expressed his own dissatisfaction with the award, and with the state of the law on the subject. (Kent v. Elstob, 3 East, 18.) Rule nisi.

KIPLING v. INGRAM.—Special case as to validity of a paving rate. Crowder, for the plaintiff. Watson, for defendant. Judgment for defendant.

Wednesday, Nov. 10.

WALKER v. UNDERHILL.—Lush, in support of the demurrer to a replication to a plea of set-off. Phipson, contrà. At the suggestion of the COURT,

The parties agreed to amend without costs, as if the case was within the new Procedure Act.

HENNICKER v. HENNICKER.—Unthank, in support of the demurrer. Willes, contrà. The question was as to the validity of a bond conditioned for the payment of a sum of money, according to the terms of a deed of partition, that deed of partition not mentioning the amount of purchase-money. (11 Geo. 3, c. 140, ss. 22, 24; 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 8.) Cur. adv. vult.

KERNOT v. PITTIS.—Milward, for the plaintiff. Willes, for the defendant. Judgment for the plaintiff, by consent.

KERNOT v. CATTLEY. Stands over.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

(Before JERVIS, C.J. and MAULE, CRESSWELL, and TALFOURD, JJ.)

Friday, Nov. 5.

ROBERTS v. CORBETT.

Admissibility of evidence upon a disputed award.

The commissioner under an Act of Parliament who has made an award may be called as a witness to prove the state of his knowledge at the time the award was made, although he could not be called to prove the meaning of the award. A schedule to an award of commissioners determining the boundaries of mines in the Forest of Dean mentioned "old works;" the plan annexed to the award also shewed old works: but the plan was such that it could not conveniently set out everything, there being underground and open workings. There being a dispute as to what the words "old works" in the schedule applied to,

Held—1st. That one of the commissioners might be called to prove that he did not know of certain old works to which it was contended that those words applied: and 2ndly. That that evidence was properly left to the jury.

This was an action of trespass for entering a coal mine in the Forest of Dean, tried before Cresswell, J. at the last Gloucester Assizes, in which a verdict was found for the defendant.

Whateley, Q.C. moved to set it aside and for a new trial on the ground of improper admission of evidence, and for misdirection.

1st plea—Not guilty; 2nd. That the vein of coal did not belong to the plaintiff; 3rd. That the coal taken was not the plaintiff's.

The action was brought under an order of Vice-Chancellor Parker to ascertain the right to the property in question. Stat. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 43, s. 24, directed commissioners appointed under the Act to ascertain what persons were entitled to the coal and iron in the Forest of Dean, to determine the boundaries of the different mines, and to cause a plan to be made of the pits, setting out the metes and bounds, and also a schedule describing them to be annexed to their award. The commissioners in their award stated that they had in their plan delineated the gales, pits, levels, &c. "as far as the same can be conveniently ascertained." In the schedule the boundary of the mines in question was stated to extend "up to the old works." The point in dispute was what these old works were; it appearing that there were two sets of old works, and the plaintiff contending that one set of old works were intended, and the defendant the other. The plan marked out only one set of old works, it being difficult to delineate on one map both open and underground workings. At the trial one of the commissioners was called for the defendant, and the question was put to him, "Did you know of any old workings on the top of the crop?" This was objected to, but admitted; and he answered, that he did not. It is now submitted that, as the schedule mentioned old workings, and the plan set out some old workings, there was no patent ambiguity or inconsistency between them, and that evidence, therefore, could not be admitted to shew to what the words "old workings" in the schedule applied, there not being two subject-matters to which the descriptions were applicable. [JERVIS, C.J.—Could not the commissioner be called to prove the fact that there were no old workings at the time?] He was called to prove the state of his knowledge at the time, by which it was sought to explain what was meant; but where subject-matter exists to which the terms are applicable, no evidence is to be admitted to explain them. (Starkie on Evidence, 692.) I objected also that Mr. Justice Cresswell ought to have stated to the jury his opinion of the effect of the plan and the schedule. He did not do so, but summed up only the effect of the parol evidence.

JERVIS, C.J.—There are two grounds for this application. On the first point there is no question at all. The commissioner could not be asked what he meant by the award; but the question objected to was, whether he knew or not of the old workings in the crop, and this being a mere matter of fact, he was as competent to prove it as any one else. As to the second question, it was left doubtful by the map to what point they might go. And it was properly left to the jury.

MAULE, J.—The commissioners say in their award that they had delineated the pits, &c. in their plan "as far as could be conveniently ascertained." The plan therefore may have set out the bounds to some unascertained extent. If, therefore, a tree or wall were mentioned in it, the commissioner might be called upon to prove where it was. So here the commissioner was called to prove a matter of fact, namely the state of his knowledge. You object that it was in effect asking what his meaning was; but he only proves the state of facts, and from that his meaning is inferred. The question is, what are the old workings mentioned in the schedule? The plan does not shew what these old workings were, but it only professes to shew what it conveniently could. It could not conveniently shew these, because the commissioners did not know of them.

TALFOURD, J. concurred. Rule refused.

LIDDEL v. THE NEWPORT, ABERGAVENNY, AND HEREFORD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Admissibility of evidence—Proof of agency.

Before a conversation between one of the parties to the action and a third person can be given in evidence to prove an agreement by the other party, proof must be given of preceding authority to the third person to make the agreement, or of subsequent ratification. And the conversation itself cannot be given in evidence to assist in proving a subsequent ratification.

A. a landowner, objects to a railway passing through his lands. B. promises that it shall be carried past his land by means of a tunnel. A parliamentary notice is sent to A. stating that the railway would pass through his land by means of a tunnel, and his consent is asked. He does not oppose it. The Act passes. The company begin to construct their railway on the surface of his land. In an action by A. against the company for not carrying it through his land by a tunnel, A. seeks to give in evidence a conversation between himself and B.:

Held, that he must first prove B.'s agency, and that the notice did not shew a ratification, and that the conversation could not be given in evidence in order to shew that the notice ratified it.

This was an action against the defendants for breach of an alleged agreement to carry their railway past the plaintiff's mansion by means of a tunnel. It was tried before Jervis, C.J. The first count complained of a breach of agreement; the second sought to make the company answerable under their Act of Parliament. On the first issue there was a verdict for the defendants, on the second for plaintiff. A rule nisi had been obtained to set aside the verdict on the second issue, and Crowder, Q.C. now moved for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial in the event of the defendant's rule being made absolute. The first count alleged that the plaintiff objected to the railway passing through his property, and that an agreement was entered into between him and the provisional committee that the railway should be carried past his mansion by means of a tunnel, and that after the passing of the Act of Parliament incorporating the company, the company promised by deed to perform their agreement. Breach, that they did not do so. After the Act was obtained the company commenced constructing their railway on the surface. An injunction was obtained by the plaintiff, which was confirmed on appeal to the Lords Justices. It was then arranged that there should be an action to ascertain the facts. At the trial, the plaintiff was called to prove a parol agreement made by the plaintiff with a Mr. Sace, as an agent for the provisional committee. It was objected that his agency must be first proved. To answer that objection, a parliamentary notice to the plaintiff that the railway would pass through his land by a tunnel, with a schedule annexed, was put in; and it was contended that this confirmed the alleged agreement made by Mr. Sace, and that if the conversation between the plaintiff and Mr. Sace, were in evidence, this would appear. It was also shewn that Mr. Sace had been engineer to the promoters before the Act passed, and acted as their agent after they became a company. The Chief Justice rejected the evidence, and it was now submitted that he was wrong in so doing.

MAULE, J.—There is no ground at all. It is a very common case that one of the parties is desirous to prove agency, without calling a witness who might give evidence in favour of the other side. After a struggle, if he cannot do so, counsel says, "Well, then, I'll put Mr. So-and-so in the box." The plaintiff sought to give this conversation between himself and Mr. Sace in evidence, and it was objected that proof of agency must first be given.

The plaintiff said he could prove it by other evidence, and the notice was put in; but all that can be said of that notice is, that it is not inconsistent with Mr. Sace being an agent, and that is all. It has no reference to Mr. Sace or to any conversation. This conversation itself would not be competent between the parties until Sace's agency was proved. You must make a case on which the judge could determine that matter in the affirmative. Such proof must be given upon which the judge could properly decide there was such agency. It is not necessary, however, that conclusive proof should be given.

CRESSWELL, J.—The conversation would not be admissible unless in consequence of preceding authority or subsequent ratification. No evidence shewed preceding authority, and the notice does not allude to any authority, or any conversation. There is no allusion to anything else. It merely asks whether plaintiff agreed to what was set down in the notice.

TALFOURD, J. concurred. Rule refused.

GAPP v. ROBINSON.

Common Law Procedure Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, ss. 10 and 12—Revival of writ of summons—Uniformity of Process Act—Practice.

Where a writ of summons issued on the 8*th of June, and expiring on* 7*th of Octob*[illegible], was sought to be renewed (for the purpose of keeping alive the original writ), under the directions of the Court, construing the 10*th and* 12*th sections of the Common Law Procedure Act, the Court* Held, that the case was within the exception of the 10*th section, which leaves the Uniformity of Process Act*, 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, unrepealed, "so far as may be necessary for supporting any writs that may have been issued before the commencement of this Act;" and the Court directed an alias writ to be issued under the old practice, the plaintiff, when that writ has nearly expired, to proceed under the 12*th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, and renew his original writ.*

Lush applied to the Court for directions to be given to the proper officer as to the practice of renewing a writ of summons, under the Common Law Procedure Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76. The case had been before Cresswell, J. at chambers, and was by him referred to the full Court. A writ of summons in this cause was issued on the 8th of June last, and would therefore expire on the 8th of October, and the plaintiff now seeks to renew the writ, in order, by keeping it alive, to save the Statute of Limitations. The doubt is, how this should be done. The 10th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, says, that "From the time when this Act shall commence and take effect, so much of a certain Act of Parliament passed in the second year of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, entitled 'An Act for Uniformity of Process in Personal Actions,' as relates to the duration of writs, and to alias and pluries writs, and to the proceedings necessary for making the first writ in any action available to prevent the operation of any statute, whereby the time for the commencement of any action may be limited, shall be repealed, except so far as may be necessary for supporting any writs that have been issued before the commencement of this Act, and any proceedings taken or to be taken thereon." The Common Law Procedure Act commences and takes effect on the 24th of October. [JERVIS, C. J.—According to the Uniformity of Process Act, 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, a writ of summons not duly renewed is gone.] Under that Act the plaintiff would have, until the 8th of November, to issue an alias writ, for the second writ may be issued within a month under that statute. [MAULE, J.—The exception in the 10th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, is material here—"Except so far as may be necessary for supporting any writs that may have been issued before the commencement of this Act, and any proceedings taken or to be taken thereon."] The clause prescribing the practice as to renewal of writs issued before the new Act (sec. 12) says, "Where any writ of summons in any such action shall have been issued before, and shall be in force at the commencement of this Act, such writ may, at any time before the expiration thereof, be renewed under the provisions of, and in the manner directed by, this Act; and where any writ issued in continuation of a preceding writ, according to the provisions of the said Act of his late Majesty King William the Fourth, shall be in force and unexpired, or where one month next after the expiration thereof shall not have elapsed at the commencement of this Act, such continuing writ may, without being returned non est inventus, or entered of record, according to the provisions of the said Act of his late Majesty, King William the Fourth, be filed in the office of the Court within one month next after the expiration of the continuing writ, or within twenty days after the commencement of this Act; and the original writ of summons in such action may thereupon, but within the same period of one month next after the expiration of the continuing writ, or within twenty days after the commencement of this Act, be renewed under the provisions of, and in the manner directed by, this Act; and every such writ shall, after such renewal, have the same duration and effect for all purposes, and shall, if necessary, be subsequently renewed in the same manner as if it had originally issued under the authority of this Act." It will be seen, on consideration of these two sections (10th and 12th), that the present case does not in terms fall within either of them.

MAULE, J.—It seems clear that it is not within the 12th section.

JERVIS, C.J. (after consulting the Masters).—This case is within the 10th section; you will, therefore, issue an alias writ. Since the point was brought before them, the Masters have consulted, and have unanimously come to the conclusion that the writ in such cases should be kept alive under the 10th section. When that writ has nearly expired, the plaintiff may then proceed under the 12th section, and renew his original writ.

Order accordingly.

DOE dem. HENRY WILTON, and MARY, his Wife, v. BECK and OTHERS.

Amendment—Striking out party Ejectment—Nonsuit—3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 23.

In an action of ejectment, the demise by the lessors of the plaintiff shewed the legal estate in both husband and wife. At the trial, the title produced shewed the legal estate in the husband alone; and the learned judge refused to amend the record, by striking out the name of the wife:

Held, that the decision of the judge was right, this not being an amendment, within the meaning of 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 23, such as the judge had discretion to allow.

This was an action of ejectment tried before Williams, J. at Worcester Summer Assizes. A nonsuit was entered, but with leave for the plaintiff to move to set aside the nonsuit, and enter a verdict for the plaintiff, if the Court should be of opinion that the learned judge at the trial should have permitted an amendment of the record by striking out the name of one of the lessors of the plaintiff.

Alexander, Q.C. now moved accordingly to amend the pleadings, by striking out from the declaration the name of Mary Wilton. The lessors of the plaintiff claimed the property in dispute under the will of a Mrs. Stinton; and on putting in the will, it was found that the demise was to Henry Wilton, in trust for Mary, his wife; whereas, by the demise in the declaration, the legal estate was stated as in both the husband and the wife. It was contended for the plaintiff, at the trial, that it was competent for the judge to amend the record, by striking out the name of Mary Wilton; but his lordship thought he had no such power. The question, therefore, is whether such an amendment could have been made. The case of Doe dem. Edwards, 1 Mood. & Rob. 321, favours such an application as this. The only other case citable is Doe dem. Errington, 1 A. & E. 750, which is adverse; but that case is distinguishable from the present. Here our object is to strike out one of two names on the record, which it is submitted can be done under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 23. It is there enacted, that "It shall be lawful for any Court of Record, and any judge sitting at Nisi Prius, to cause the record, writ, or document on which any trial may be pending before any such Court or judge, in any writ, action, or in any information, &c. or proceeding on a mandamus, &c. where any variance shall appear between the proof and the recital, or setting forth on the record, &c. of any contract, custom, prescription, name, or other matter, in any particular or particulars not material to the merits of the case, and by which the opposite party cannot have been prejudiced in the conduct of his action, &c. to be forthwith amended." [MAULE, J.—Brother Williams was certainly right in holding that the Act quoted, which authorises amendments in certain cases, does not apply here.] Certainly, we are unable to produce any case in which the name of the plaintiff has been changed; but it is submitted we are within the letter of the statute, because here one plaintiff remains on the record, and this is a "setting forth on the record" within the purpose of the Act. It is admitted that if the judge had no power, he had no discretion to amend.

JERVIS, C.J.—As to his discretion, no doubt that is so.

MAULE, J.—In this case Henry Wilton and Mary his wife thought they had a joint right of action, and they sued accordingly, but at the trial they found that the right was only in one of them. They ask then to amend; but such a statement as that certainly is not within the scope of the statute authorising amendments.

By the COURT, Rule refused.

THE BRITISH, &c. LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY v. BROWNE.

Demurrer—Joint Stock Company — Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 44.

An action may be maintained by a Joint Stock Company on a corenant in a deed, which has not been executed by the company in the manner pointed out in the 44*th section of the above Act, if the company only takes a benefit under the deed, and nothing is contracted to be done by the company.*

An Insurance Company advances 200*l. to A. and A. and B. corenant with the company by a deed inter partes, to pay an annuity to the company, and in the same deed A. and B. assign to trustees for the company, who are also parties to the deed, certain lands as a security:*

Held, that the company can sue upon the covenant, although the deed has not been executed by the company, the contract being unilateral, and the deed being in effect equivalent to a deed-poll, and that contracts on behalf of the company mean contracted by the company.

The action was brought by the company against the defendant on the covenant by defendant and one Loder, inter alia, to pay an annuity to the company, for 200*l.* advanced to Loder. The deed was inter partes, and by it land was assigned to trustees for the company as a security for the payment of the annuity. Plea on the 44th section of 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, that the deed was not executed on the part of the company as directed by that section and was void. The 44th section enacts "That for the purpose of regulating contracts entered into on behalf of any Joint Stock Company completely registered under this Act (except contracts for the purchase of any article, the payment or consideration for which doth not exceed the sum of 50*l.* or for, &c. and except bills of exchange and promissory notes) every such contract shall be in writing, and signed by two at least of the directors of the company, on whose behalf the same shall be entered into, and shall be sealed with the common seal thereof, or signed by some officer of the company on its behalf, to be thereunto expressly authorized by, &c. and that in the absence of such requisites, or any of them, any such contract shall be void and ineffectual, except as against the company on whose behalf the same shall have been made." To the above plea the plaintiffs demurred.

Willes, in support of the demurrer.—Were I at perfect liberty, I should contend that this section was to protect the company and the shareholders from rash contracts; but in Ridley v. Plymouth, &c. Company, 2 Ex. 711, it seems taken for granted that the words of the section made a contract within it binding as against the company, but not against other parties; and I cannot now contend, as I otherwise should have done, that the section was applicable to the other parties only, and not to the company. I now, therefore, contend that it must be confined to cases of mutuality, and does not apply to a unilateral contract like this, under which there is nothing to be performed by the company. It could not have been intended by the Legislature that the forms mentioned in the 44th section should have been gone through to shew the intention of the company to take a benefit. There are several cases in which it is not necessary for the one party to execute the deed, as in Cooch v. Goodman, 2 Q.B. 580. [MAULE, J. mentioned the Fishmongers' Company v. Robertson.] That case has been doubted by the Court of Q.B. (Copper Miners' Company v. Fox, 16 Q. B. 229); but the case of Rose v. Poulton, 2 B. & Ad. 822, is an instance. [JERVIS, C.J.—The 44th section commences, "with respect to contracts entered into on behalf of the company;" this is to the company.] Yes; that shews that my construction is the right one. Moreover, if it applied to unilateral contracts, it would include bonds to the company.

Hugh Hill, Q.C. contrà.—I submit the contract is within the section. I do not doubt that in some cases a party may sue on a deed that he has not executed; but here the questions are—1st. What the contract is; and, 2nd. Is it within the section? The deed is inter partes, the plaintiffs being the third parties. One of the sets of parties are trustees for the company, and there is nothing to bind the company to recognise these or other trustees but the deed itself. In the deed there is land assigned to the trustees as a security for the due payment of the annuity, and it is thereby agreed and declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the land assigned as a security, &c.; and they covenant, in the event of a sale of the land, "to pay the residue of the money to the parties entitled." The exception in the section shews that the word "contract" is not in the first instance to be taken in a limited sense. There being provisions in the deed purporting to bind the company, they should have executed it.

Willes, in reply.—Everything done by this deed might have been done by a deed-poll. And it is now in effect contended by the other side that because it is in another form it ought to have been executed by the company, and cannot be sued on by them.

JERVIS, C.J.—I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to our judgment. It must be admitted that if this were a bond or a deed-poll, it would not be within the 44th section, and yet it is contended that because it is between parties, it is within it. The section says that all contracts in behalf of the company, except certain contracts mentioned, shall be executed by the company in a particular way, and if not shall be void, except as against the company. This is not a deed in behalf of the company within the meaning of the Act. A sum of money is advanced, and the defendant and another person covenant to pay an annuity. Land is assigned to trustees as a security, and that is to be sold if the annuity is not paid, and the surplus paid over to the parties entitled. This last provision would be binding on the trustees whether the company executed the deed or not, and so with all the other provisions. The section applies where something is to be done by the company, and then the execution by the company is necessary with all the formalities. If not so executed, the other party could enforce it against the company, but the company could not against the other party. This contract is entirely unilateral, and need not be executed by the company.

Maule, J.—I agree. The section is not perfectly clear as to its object; but the words are clear enough. This is a contract upon which, independently of the statute, it is competent for the covenantees to sue without execution by them. And that shews that this is not a contract on behalf of the company, and therefore not within the 44th section. As to the form of the deed, that does not signify.

Talfourd, J. concurred.

James v. Isaac and Others.

Demurrer—Common Law Procedure Act, ss. 51 and 116.

To a declaration brought on an executory agreement, a plea that the plaintiff and a third person have entered into a new agreement for the same purpose, and that the plaintiff received the new agreement in substitution and in satisfaction of the former one, is bad in substance.

A. and B. enter into an agreement for the building of a church. Part of the work is done, and B. receives an instalment for what he has done. B. then enters into an agreement with C. for completion of the church, and agrees to be paid certain instalments by C. and to look for the rest to subscriptions. This agreement being pleaded by A. in answer to an action by B. against him:

Held, that the plea shewed no satisfaction, and was bad in substance.

Quære, whether special demurrers pending at the time the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation are abolished by a retrospective operation of sec. 51 of that Act.

Quære, also, whether the 116th section, as to writs of error, has a retrospective operation.

This was an action on premises. The declaration contained counts for 300*l.* for work and labour and materials, and for money due on an account stated. Two of the defendants pleaded (inter alia) to the first count, that the money mentioned in the first count accrued due to the plaintiff under a certain agreement made on the 1st day of April, A.D. 1847, between him and the defendants, whereby the plaintiff agreed with the defendants to execute and perform all the works necessary in the erection of a church in the parish of Malpas, in the county of Monmouth, agreeably to certain plans, specifications, and details of the same, numbered from 1 to 15 inclusive, provided for that purpose by one J. P. architect, the whole of the said works to be performed for the sum of 1,140*l.* and to the entire satisfaction of the said J. P.; and that, after the making of the said agreement the plaintiff commenced the said works according to the said plans and specifications, and continued and proceeded with the same until the 1st day of August, A.D. 1850, when the said works, and the building of the said church, were finished and completed; and that during the progress of the said works and of the said building, and before the 18th day of February, A.D. 1850, divers sums of money, amounting in the whole to 580*l.* were paid to the plaintiff under the said agreement, and by the plaintiff received as instalments of the said sum of 1,140*l.* for and in respect of the said works and building of the said church as aforesaid; and that after the plaintiff had so received the said sum, and before the said 18th day of February, A.D. 1850, to wit, on the 26th day of January, A.D. 1850, the plaintiff discontinued the said works and the said building, and refused to continue the same or to allow the same to be proceeded with until he received payment of certain other sums of money, to wit, amounting to 320*l.* as instalments of the said sum of 1,140*l.* for and in respect of the said building of the said church, and that the plaintiff did then stop the said works, and the same remained so stopped until, to wit, the 18th day of February, A.D. 1850; and that afterwards, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, a certain agreement was made between the plaintiff and one Thomas Prothero, which said agreement was and is in the words and figures following: that is to say, "Whereas I, Benjamin James, having agreed to erect the new church at Malpas, mentioned in the within specification, and accompanying drawings, for the sum of 1,140*l.* have proceeded with the said works, and the building is now roofed and covered in, and I have received on account thereof the sum of 580*l.*; and whereas, in consideration of the sum of 200*l.* to be paid to me by Thomas Prothero as follows:—50*l.* now down, the receipt of which I acknowledge; of 50*l.* more on the 4th day of March next; 50*l.* more on the 18th day of March next, and the remaining 50*l.* on the 4th day of April next; I do hereby agree with the said Thomas Prothero to complete and finish in all respects the said new church, according to the said plans and specifications, so that the same shall be ready for consecration and opening on the 1st day of May next; and further that for the sum that will remain unpaid to me for erecting and completing the said church, I will accept and depend on such subscriptions as have been promised or can be raised to and by the Rev. W. D. Isaac" (averment, that Thomas Prothero paid the said sums of money on the aforesaid days); and that the plaintiff accepted and received the same of and from the said Thomas Prothero in full and complete performance of the said agreement, and that the plaintiff accepted and received the last mentioned agreement and the performance thereof by the said Thomas Prothero in satisfaction and discharge of the said agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants so made as aforesaid, and of the performance thereof by the defendants.

To this plea there was a demurrer.

Lush in support of the demurrer. The plea says that while the building was going on under the contract, another agreement was made by plaintiff with a third person, in substitution of all his rights against the defendants, and the defendants say by their plea that they can take advantage of it, as if they had been parties to it. I submit that they cannot do so. Moreover, if the plea admits that something was due, it does not avoid it by shewing a satisfaction; if it does not admit that anything was due, it is an argumentative denial, and amounts to non assumpsérunt. The plea is informal and bad on special demurrer.

Raymond, contrà.—If reliance is placed on the special demurrer, I submit that the Common Law Procedure Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 51, which enacts that no pleading shall be deemed insufficient for any defect which could heretofore only be objected to by special demurrer, prevents advantage of it being now taken. There is nothing said about pending demurrers, and the section has, therefore, a retrospective as well as a prospective effect.

Jervis, C.J.—This section was not originally in the Act, and being added in the House of Commons, pending proceedings were forgotten. The 50th section stood originally alone in the Act with reference to special demurrers. I mention this to exonerate Mr. Willes.

Lush, contra, upon this objection. Primâ facie an Act is only intended to apply to what occurs after it came into operation; and a retrospective operation will not be given unless it be clearly shewn on the Act that it is so intended. If a special demurrer had been argued last Term, the Court could not now give judgment, if this section has a retrospective effect. [Jervis, C.J.—You could not have proceeded under the 52nd section to get the pleading amended.] No; and, therefore, we could not have put this pleading right; and at the time of the demurrer we were entitled to costs, and no provision is made for them. The 15th and 49th sections appear in their language to be prospective, and it is only where Acts of Parliament are repealed that there is any reference to previous proceedings.

Raymond, in reply.—There would be no hardship, for the 52nd section gives power to get an embarrassing plea amended. There is a similar provision in the 116th section, by which "no judgment in any cause shall be reversed for any error therein unless error be commenced within six years after such judgment signed or entered of record." [Maule, J.—Surely that does not mean to take away the right of bringing error altogether in the cases you refer to?] It has been held by Cresswell, J. that under sections 104 and 120 application should be made to the judge for issuing execution in all cases. [Jervis, C.J.—That is until rules are issued. We will speak to our brothers on this point, that we may be unanimous. You may now proceed to argue the general demurrer.] Then as to the general demurrer, the meaning of the plea is that the plaintiff was to look to a particular fund and not to the defendants. [Maule, J.—The objection is that it is made between the plaintiff and a third party.] Assuming that it amounts to accord and satisfaction by a third party, that is a good plea, as was decided in this court last Term in the case of Belshaw v. Bush. Secondly, it is not bad as amounting to the general issue. (Stephen on Pleading, 231; Smart v. Hyde, 8 M. & W. 723.)

Maule, J.—In that case it is said that every word in the plea is consistent with the contract in the declaration, but that is not so here.

Lush, in reply. This case is distinguishable from that of Belshaw v. Bush. That was on a bill of exchange. This is an executory agreement, and before that is performed another is entered into for the building of the church upon different terms between plaintiff and a third party. But an agreement cannot be rescinded except by the parties who agreed to it. It is not an accord and satisfaction at all.

Maule, J.—No; there is nothing to satisfy. It is a rescission, if anything. Prothero puts himself in the place of the defendants. But that will not do.

Jervis, C.J.—The plea is bad in substance, and we need not decide the other point. We will, however, speak to our brothers about it.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, s. 4.

A foreign parol contract not to be performed within a year, but good according to the lex loci, cannot be enforced by an action in this country.

A. by a parol agreement in France, engages B. to collect eggs for him, and consign them to him in England, at a salary of 100*l. per annum. B. brings an action in this country against A. for not taking him into his service as agreed. Plea, non assumpsit:*

Held, that such action would not lie. That the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds is applicable to procedure, and not to the solemnities of the contract itself, and does not make a foreign contract void, so as to be contrary to the comity of nations, but only prohibits an action being brought upon it in this country.

This case was tried last Term before Talfourd, J. at the sittings in Middlesex. The declaration was in assumpsit, on a parol contract between the plaintiff and the defendant, alleged to have been made "at Calais, in France, to wit, at Westminster," and sought damages against the defendant for not receiving the plaintiff into his service. The material plea was non assumpsit. It was proved at the trial by the plaintiff and his father, that the plaintiff was engaged in France by the defendant to collect eggs in France, and ship them at Calais, consigned to the defendant in England; and that he was to be paid a salary of 100*l.* per annum, beginning from the 25th of December, 1849, whether the business was commenced or not; and a French advocate was called to prove that it was a good contract according to the lex loci. On the issue of non assumpsit there was a verdict for the plaintiff.

Last Term Hawkins obtained a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be entered for the defendant, or why there should not be a nonsuit, on the ground that the contract was within the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, by which it is enacted, that "no action shall be brought upon any agreement that is not to be performed within the space of one year from the making thereof, unless the agreement upon which such action shall be brought, or some memorandum or note thereof, shall be in writing, and signed by the party to be charged therewith, or by some other person thereunto by him lawfully authorised."

Wednesday, Nov. 3.—Allen, Serjt. and Metcalf, shewed cause. The 4th section of the Statute of Frauds does not apply to a foreign contract sought to be enforced in this country. The question is, whether it applies to procedure or to the right. If it applies to procedure only, it must be admitted that this action is not maintainable. If it affects the right, then it will not extend to contracts abroad, for that would be contrary to the comity of nations. But it does affect the right, and makes contracts within it void in their inception. The words, "no action shall be brought upon any agreement," are equivalent to saying that the agreements referred to shall be void. In Carrington v. Roots, 2 M. & W. 248; and Reade v. Lambe, 6 Ex. 130, the 4th section is said to be the same in effect as the 17th, which enacts, that "no contract, &c. shall be allowed to be good." They referred also to Story's Conflict of Laws, sec. 260; 1 Burgess's Colonial Laws, 29, and 3 Ib. 760.

Hawkins and Honeyman were now heard in support of the rule. No action is maintainable here upon this contract. Although a foreign contract may be good according to the lex loci of the country in which it is made. The remedy upon it must be taken according to the law of the country in which it is sought to be enforced. (British Linen Company v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 903; De la Vega v. Vianna, 1 B. & Ad. 284; Laythorp v. Bryant, 2 Bing. N. C. 746; General Steam Navigation Company v. Guillon, 11 M. & W. 877; Ferguson v. Fife, 8 Clarke & Fin. 12; 1 Clarke and Fin. 1; Story's Conflict of Laws, 635, B. n. a.; Browne v. Thornton, 6 Ad. & Ell. 185.) The 4th section of the Statute of Frauds refers to the evidence by which the contract is to be proved.

The contract itself need not be in writing if you can get evidence of it in writing, as e. g. a memorandum of it in a letter to a third party. The agreement in such a case exists antecedently to the memorandum in writing, and that shews that the statute refers to the evidence of the contract, i. e. matter of procedure, and not to the contract or right. (1 Sugd. V. & P. c. 3, s. 38, p. 174, ed. of 1839; Dobell v. Hutchinson, 3 Ad. & Ell. 355; Crosby v. Wadsworth, 6 East, 602.) The 4th section only prevents an action being brought. (Laythorp v. Bryant, 2 Bing. N.C. 746.) The observations of the Court of Ex. in Carrington v. Roots and Reade v. Lambe are to be taken only in reference to their subject-matter. In Courts of Equity contracts within this section, of which there has been part performance, are enforced. Reference was also made to 4 Moor. P. C. Cases, 300; and by Maule, J. to the Sussex Peerage case, where a perfectly good marriage according to the lex loci where it was solemnised, was held to be no marriage in this country; and to Davis v. Trevanion, 2 D. & L. 743.

Allen, Serjt. referred the Court to Boullenois' "Traité de Personalité," c. 2, tit. 4, obs. 46, p. 459, in which a passage from Brodeau, letter C, n. 42, was cited, to the effect that where two persons contract by parol in the presence of witnesses in a place where such contracts are good, and an action is brought on such contract in a place where proof of such contract by witnesses is not admitted, proof by witnesses ought to be admitted, as belonging ad vinculum obligationis et solemnitatem.

Jervis, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be made absolute. There is no question at the Bar as to the principle. My brother Allen admits that if the agreement had been made in this country, no action could be brought upon it. It is admitted on the other side, that if the 4th section of the statute applies to contracts, and makes them void, it does not operate on contracts made abroad. I am of opinion that it does not apply to the solemnities of the contract itself, but to its capability of being enforced in this country. It is true that, if it be not enforceable here, it is practically also void here. But it is not the same thing. The words themselves lead to the conclusion to which I have come [his lordship here read the words of the section]. It does not say the contract shall be void. It only requires evidence of the agreement in writing. And therefore it often happens that the agreement exists before the memorandum in writing by which according to the statute it may be proved. That being the view which presents itself on the face of the statute, we find it borne out by the cases which have been decided on the construction of it. If the Courts have thought that the agreement existed before the memorandum which may be evidence of it, then the section applies to procedure, and not to the solemnities of the contract itself. But it has been held, and cannot be doubted, that any writing subsequently made and signed by the party sought to be charged, is a sufficient compliance with this section. Therefore principle and authority agree. But reliance was placed on expressions which fell from the Court of Ex. in the two cases of Carrington v. Roots and Reade v. Lambe. It is a sufficient answer to that that the attention of the judges was not called to this particular case, and that they decided those cases on their own subject-matter. It must not be forgotten that in Crosby v. Wadsworth, Lord Ellenborough says that this section does not vacate the contract. [His lordship also cited Laythorp v. Bryant.] The contract exists antecedent to the writing, and the section takes away the remedy. It relates, therefore, to procedure, and an action on a foreign parol contract will not lie in this country. As to the passage cited from Boullenois, that is not opposed to our view, for it is there said that proof by witnesses belongs ad vinculum obligationis et solemnitatem, whereas this section does not refer to the solemnities of the contract.

Maule, J.—This case turns upon the plain words of the Act of Parliament. It is said that effect is not to be given to them because the contract was made in France. In literal terms this section does not say no contract shall have any force, but no action shall be brought. That applies to English courts, and therefore its terms apply to something to take place in England, and prohibits it unless the requisites of the statute are complied with. But it is said in some cases cited that these words are equivalent to "the agreement shall be void." Suppose this a universal proposition; still it would not be a legitimate construction to substitute the equivalent words for the actual words, and then proceed to argue as if the equivalent words had been used. The actual words themselves are those to be considered. If both expressions are equivalent, it is idle to substitute the one for the other. If the substituted words are capable of a different construction, that shews they are not equivalent. The words in the 4th section may, on many occasions and for many purposes, be equivalent to the words "the contract shall be void;" but they are not so in terms, and here, according to principle and authority, their meaning is, that you shall not bring an action upon a contract unless it can be proved according to the requisites of the 4th section.

Talfourd, J. concurred. Rule absolute.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, Nov. 4.

Holmes v. London and North-Western Railway Company.—This was an action for the infringement of a patent; tried before Jervis, C.J. at the sittings after last Trinity Term. Verdict for the plaintiff, with nominal damages. Knowles, Q.C. (Webster with him) now moved to set aside the verdict, and enter a verdict for the defendant. The declaration alleged that a certain person named Harrison was patentee of a new turning-table for railways, and had assigned to the plaintiff, and that defendant had infringed the patent. The usual pleas were pleaded, any one of which raises the question now before the Court. The substantial defence was, that the invention of Harrison was not new, but the invention of one Hancock, and patented by him, with the exception of one particular. [Jervis, C.J.—The difference between the two was the introduction by Harrison of a suspension-rod which improved on the old invention.] Yes, there were one or two slight differences, which amounted to nothing in the end. The only novelty of note is the suspension-rod, and the question is whether this has been sufficiently described in Harrison's specification. Now every part of Harrison's patent is described in Hancock's patent. The plaintiff's assignor claims, in fact, the same invention as Hancock's; he makes no reference whatever to the suspension-rods. Jervis, C.J.—You may take a rule.

Peterson v. Ayre.—This was an action of assumpsit, tried before Jervis, C.J.; verdict for the plaintiff, 165*l*. Byles, Serjt. now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant, or why a nonsuit should not be entered, or why the verdict should not be reduced to 27*l*. or for a new trial. The declaration stated that the defendant had sold to the plaintiff 150 tons of linseed cake, "to be shipped at Flensburg the first open water after the end of the month of January." Breach—That the defendant did not ship at the first open water after the end of January, or within reasonable time thereafter, and an allegation of special damage. The defendant pleaded 1st, Non assumpsit; 2nd. A traverse of the bargain; 3rd. Performance (that he did ship, &c.); 4th. That he shipped, &c. in reasonable time. On the 5th plea nothing turned. It appeared that the linseed belonged to Stoppel and Sons, of Hamburgh, and that the defendant was their agent for the sale of these goods. Messrs. Howes and Batten, as agents for the plaintiff, bought the goods, and regular bought and sold notes between Howes and Batten and plaintiff, and Howes and Batten and defendant, were exchanged. The bought and sold notes between Howes and Batten and defendant shew that defendant was a mere agent in the transaction, beginning thus:—"Bought of E. O. Ayre, esq. on account of Stoppel and Sons." The plaintiff at the trial put in as part of his case, the bought and sold note between Howes and Batten and the plaintiff, which was exactly the same as that between them and defendant, with the exception that the words "in the spring" are omitted. Ayre, the defendant, struck out from his note the words "in the spring," as he swore on 6th January, the day following the bargain; but on the 17th February he sent to Stoppel and Co. a letter containing a copy of the contract, with those words included. It appeared that the goods were actually shipped, and bills of lading signed on the 22nd March. On the 5th of February the plaintiff sold the linseed cake at an advance of a few shillings a ton, amounting in the whole to 27*l*. 10*s*. to which sum the verdict, if we fail on the more important point, should be reduced, it being the difference between the market price at the one time and the other. If entitled to recover at all, that is the sum he must have; but he claims and says he could have made 110*l*. more. The first point is, that the defendant here acted as a mere agent, and is not personally liable. In proof of this, the invoice, as will be seen, is made out on account of and in the name of Stoppel and Sons, and there was a correspondence between plaintiff and them relative to this matter. The second point is as to "open water in the spring," which is on one of the bought and sold notes. The defendant says he was afraid they would not get the linseed cakes from the crushers in time for shipment, therefore he substituted the words "after the end of January." Now, if the word "spring" is taken to refer to the season following 21st of March, you make the words "after the end of January" of no use. The true meaning is this, that the linseed cakes are to be shipped at the first open water in the spring, but not until after the end of January. It is admitted that this was not the intention of the parties, but the Court cannot look to that. [Jervis, C.J.—The real meaning of the parties is, "not to be shipped till after the 21st of March." The third point is, that supposing the plaintiff is entitled to succeed, it can only be to the extent of 27*l*. 10*s*. because the only sum he can recover is the difference between the price of the goods at the date of the contract and the delivery. The plaintiff had actually sold to one Crofts at that profit. Lastly, a new trial is asked because the Court may think a question might arise for a jury, with whom the contract was made.

Little v. The Newport, Abergavenny, and Hereford Railway Company.—This was an action of covenant, tried at the last sittings in the Guildhall, before Jervis, C.J.: verdict for the plaintiff on one issue, but on some points for the defendants. Bramwell, Q.C. (Sir Thos. Phillips with him) now moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for plaintiff should not be set aside and entered for the defendant. Under the covenant, the defendants undertook to pass under plaintiff's land through a tunnel; instead of doing so, they deviated within the limits prescribed by the statute, but to such a distance that a tunnel could not be constructed, and they passed through the land by means of an open cutting. The plaintiff alleged that defendants were bound to make a tunnel, and the defendants traversed that obligation. It was now contended that the defendants were not compelled, under the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 13 and 15, to make the tunnel as marked on the original plans. As to sec. 13, it only applies where it is possible to make a tunnel, which was not the case here. The question is not whether the defendants have the power of deviating from the original line. The declaration, however, assumes the defendants have deviated, and having done this, raises the question whether the defendants were bound to make the tunnel. Jervis, C.J.—Take a rule.

Dodd v. Carrach.—This was an action for work and labour, and money paid. Pleas—The general issue, set-off, and payment. It was tried before Jervis, C.J. on June 26 last, at the sittings in London. Hugh Hill, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and a new trial had, on the ground of misdirection. The sum sought to be recovered was 48*l* 7*s* 2*d*. The Court would not entertain the question of misdirection, holding there was nothing in the point.

Re Mary Taylor.—Brewer moved that instructions be given to the proper officer to admit an acknowledgment made by a married woman under the Fines and Recoveries Act. The requisites had been duly complied with.

Haynes v. Payne.—Crosby shewed cause against a rule obtained on a former day for a new trial, on the ground that the case was struck out because neither counsel nor attorney was present when the case was called on, they not expecting it would be taken when it was. They had all left at a quarter to four. The Court ordered the rule to be made absolute on payment of the costs of the day. Rule to be discharged, unless costs paid within a week.

Re Tomlins.—Brewer moved to strike an attorney off the rolls of this court at his own request, and on the usual affidavit.

Crawford v. Dixon.—Tried before Jervis, C.J. at the sittings at Guildhall. Verdict for plaintiff; damages, 437*l*. 10*s*. Knowles, Q.C. moved to have the verdict set aside and entered for the defendant, or for a new trial. Dixon was the clerk to the committee of visitors of the Northumberland Lunatic Asylum, and was a nominal party, the action being really against the visitors. The plaintiff had been employed to make designs for a lunatic asylum, to be approved of by the committee, and, if approved, to complete drawings, &c. for which he was to receive the sum of 437*l*. 10*s*. His drawings were not approved of; he then made others, which were also rejected, and the matter was broken off. He, in this action, sought to charge the visitors personally, sued in the name of their clerk, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 120. It was now objected, on the part of the defendants, that no action would lie against them, their power being ministerial only under the provisions of the Act, and the justices being directed by the Act to make a rate for the payment of expenses. Cases cited:—Allen v. Waldegrave, 2 Moore, 621; Tuck and Others v. Ruggles, 5 Esp. 237; Bogg v. Pearse, lately decided in the C.B.

Mathew v. Osborne.—Bramwell, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a verdict entered for the defendant, or why the damages should not be reduced. The action was for mesne profits. The premises in question were copyhold, and had been assigned by a married woman and her husband to a person through whom the plaintiff claimed as a security for an annuity. The defendant had been let into possession by the grantors of the annuity. He had demised them to tenants for some years, and had paid the annuity. He had never had notice to give up possession. The grounds for the motion were:—1. That the original surrenderee of the premises had never been admitted, and could not devise them by his will, the legal estate being in the grantors of the annuity and their heirs. (Doe dem. Tofield v. Tofield, 11 E. 246; Watkins, 328—330.) 2. That there had been no surrender to the use of the will, the stat. of Geo. 3, dispensing with a surrender, only applying to cases where a surrender might have been made. 3. That the devise was to three persons in trust, and only one had been admitted, and he was therefore only entitled to a third. 4. That there was no evidence of the married woman having been separately examined. (Watkins, 230.) 5. That defendant was in possession by his tenants, and there had been no demand of possession. (Doe dem. Whittaker v. Hales, 7 Bing. 322; Doe dem. Rogers v. Cadwallader, 2 B. & Ad. 473; Burn v. Richardson, 4 Taunt. 720.) 6. That the plaintiff did not shew possession within twenty years; and if he relied on the payment of the annuity, that proved that defendant had an estate which ought to have been determined. 7. That damages had been given for two years' rent, whereas the plaintiff had been admitted, and had entered into possession only in March, 1852.

Rule nisi, subject to liberty on the part of the plaintiff to move to increase the damages.

Griffiths v. D. L'Espinasse and Another.—This cause was tried before Jervis, C.J. in Surrey. Verdict for the defendant. M. Chambers now moved for a rule to shew cause why a new trial should not be had, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence and misdirection. The case will be reported next week.

Robert Jones v. Ann Jones.—This was an action on the case for disturbance of a bridle-way and foot-way. Plea, not guilty. The cause was tried at Ruthin last Assizes before Talfourd, J. Verdict for the defendant. Welsby now moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside on the ground that it was against the weight of evidence. The way in question led through a steep and narrow close called Naut-carreg-y-fran, which had been practically disused for many years except as a foot-way; but proof was given for the plaintiff that it had been used as a bridle-way, for it had gates made at intervals, which, though not wide enough to admit carriages, would well pass horses and cattle. Some of the gates had also stiles adjoining. The way had been used by, amongst others, a man leading a stallion about the country. There was also evidence of reputation, many persons having heard from their fathers, uncles, and others, that such was the road used by people on horseback in going to Denbigh, Ruthin, and various places. The defence was entirely of a negative character; there certainly had been no bridle-way within twenty years. Rule refused.

Ripon v. Hunt.—This cause was tried before Jervis, C.J. at Hertford Summer Assizes. Verdict for the defendant on the second plea. Edwin James, Q.C. now moved for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why judgment should not be entered for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto. It was an action on a bill of exchange, to which the defendant had pleaded that he had compounded with his creditors under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 100, and that the bill was included in the composition. Replication that the composition was bad, inasmuch as it was not signed by six-sevenths of the creditors in number and value. (Tetley v. Taylor, 21 L. J. 346.) Rule nisi.

Jones v. Booth.—This cause was tried at Stafford before Maule, J. Verdict for the plaintiff, 3*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* Miller, Serjt. now moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. It was an action by a builder for value of a quantity of bricks supplied to the defendant in March and April 1851. There had been a former action by defendant against plaintiff, in which the latter actually set off these goods as supplied to the defendant at his request. The defence here is, that there was no credit given at all, but the goods were supplied in part payment of a debt due to defendant. The direction seemed to be against this. Rule refused.

Jones v. Ambrose.—This cause was tried before Maule, J. in Surrey. Verdict for the plaintiff. Hawkins now moved to set aside this verdict and for a new trial, on the ground of misreception of evidence. It was a feigned issue. An action had been brought by the defendant against one Ray, had proceeded to judgment, and he seized goods which plaintiff alleges belonged to him. The plaintiff was a surgeon attending Ray's family, and had lent him 25*l.* on the security of the goods in question. For the plaintiff, evidence was offered to impeach the judgment debt of Ambrose; and it was urged that the judgment debt was invalid, because it was for a debt included in his schedule when he became insolvent. The plaintiff offered to call the debtor Ray, but we objected; but the Judge permitted him to be examined, and he swore he had received no consideration for defendant's debt; and it is to the admission of this evidence we object. Jervis, C.J. after consulting with Maule, J.—You objected, and it turns out that my brother Maule admitted the objection, and did not take down the evidence. That was complying with your own objection, so there is no ground whatever for asking this rule. Rule refused.

Re George Hume, One, &c.—*D. T. Shaman v. Saunders.—This was an action of indebitatus assumpsit for work and labour, &c. Plea—Set off and payment in goods. Replication The Truck Act. Bittlestone now moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. Morgan and Another v. Jones.

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit— Common Law Procedure Act, (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76.)

Judgment as in case of a nonsuit cannot be moved for in an action of assumpsit since the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852; the 100*th section of that Act having repealed the* 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, as to judgment in case of nonsuit, except as to proceedings taken or commenced under the latter statute, as to judgment in case of nonsuit, before the commencement of the Common Law Procedure Act, 24*th Oct.* 1852.

F. Bailey moved in this case for judgment as in case of a nonsuit. Issue was joined in July last, and notice of trial given for the then ensuing assizes at Cardigan; the question was, whether since the Common Law Procedure Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), ss. 100, 101, such a motion and course of proceeding as this was not now altogether gone. It seemed to him clearly to be so from the terms of the 100 and 101 sections, unless some proceedings under the statute of 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, had been taken previous to the 24th of October last, when the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation and repealed that of Geo. 2. Here there had been no such proceedings. Some doubts by the profession were suggested as to the word "thereupon" in the latter part of the 100th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, whether it did not refer to the "cause" or action, instead of the Act of Geo. 2; yet the terms of the 101st section seemed certainly to clear away all doubt. As there were many motions of the same kind, it would be desirable to have a suggestion of the opinion of the Court upon it.

Platt, B.—It is very clear that unless some proceedings had been taken under the Act of Geo. 2, in reference to the judgment, as in case of nonsuit, before the 24th of October last, when it was repealed, you cannot proceed now under it. If any proceedings had been taken, a motion made and a peremptory undertaking given, for instance before the 24th of October, it may have been different.

No rule.

Doe dem. Leigh v. Holt.

Common Law Procedure Act —Nonsuit— Ejectment.

The Court refused to grant a rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit in an action of ejectment, the 101*st section of* 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, having so far repealed 14 Geo. 2, c. 14.

In this case issue had been joined before last Term, and the plaintiffs had neglected to proceed to trial. Milward moved for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, and referred to the 100th, 101st, and 202nd sections of the Common Law Procedure Act. He contended that the group of sections in that Act relating to ejectment could not refer to actions now pending, for by the 202nd section it is provided, that "If, after appearance entered, the claimant, without going to trial, allow the time allowed for going to trial by the practice of the Court in ordinary cases after issue joined to elapse, the defendant in ejectment may give twenty days' notice to the claimant to proceed to trial at the Sittings or Assizes next after the expiration of the notice, and if the claimant neglects to proceed to trial in pursuance thereof, and the time for going to trial shall not be extended by the Court or a judge, the defendant may sign judgment in the form contained in the schedule (A.) to this Act annexed, marked No. 19, and recover the costs of defence;" but this action having commenced before the Act, that section could not apply, for there is no claimant on whom to serve the notice. The question, then, is, whether the 101st section, which repeals the stat. 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, as to judgment as in case of a nonsuit, is applicable to cases of ejectment. Then as to the 102nd section, requiring twenty days' notice to be given to the plaintiff, was that applicable to actions of ejectment, and, if so, to whom in such case was the notice to be given.

By the Court.—The 101st section of the Common Law Procedure Act repeals the 14 Geo. 2, c. 17, so far as judgment as in case of a nonsuit is concerned, and you must therefore take the cause down for trial by proviso. Rule refused.

Patent Law Amendment Act—Power of Court to grant injunction in cases of infringement—15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 42. (a)

An affidavit to obtain an inspection of a machine, supposed to be an infringement of a patent, must swear that it is in the possession of defendant, and that it is believed to be an infringement.

Quære, whether the power of the Courts of Common Law extends to the granting such an inspection.

Hawkins moved, under the 42nd section of the Patent Law Amendment Act, for a rule to shew cause why one Fothergill, and certain other persons named in the affidavit, should not have leave to inspect the machine used by the defendants for paging and numbering their books. An action was pending in the Court for the infringement of the plaintiff's patent for such a machine, and he was desirous that certain persons should inspect the defendant's machine to see whether or not it was an infringement, and in fact to enable them to give their testimony at the trial. [Martin, B.—You mean to say, that the word "inspection" in this clause applies to every inspection that the Court thinks it necessary that the party applying should have. Pollock, C.B.—This is a power only hitherto exercised by the Court of Chancery; and now that the Legislature has given to the Common Law Courts the power of granting injunctions, it must be presumed that those powers are to be exercised in the same way as they have hitherto been by the Court of Chancery. Cases have occurred in Chancery when such an inspection as here asked for has been granted. [Alderson, B.—You say to the defendant, produce the machine you use; he does so, which is an admission that it is used by him;—this application is in the nature of a discovery.] [The Court desired to see the affidavit.] Pollock, C.B.—This affidavit is very vague and defective, and on it the Court cannot grant what is now asked. You ought to swear that there is such a machine, and that you have reason to suppose it is an infringement; there is nothing of the sort sworn here.

Alderson, B.—At any rate you must amend your affidavit, but I do not think that even then you will take anything by your motion.

Rule refused.

Dublin and Wicklow Railway Company v. Black.

A plea of infancy to an action for calls on shares, should aver that the infant disaffirmed and repudiated the contract within a reasonable time.

Action for calls. Plea—Infancy, and repudiation. Demurrer.

Phipson, for the plaintiff.—This plea is bad. It does not say that the defendant repudiated within a reasonable time; it merely says that he took shares, and after he became of age, and before the commencement of the action, disaffirmed and repudiated. The result of the decisions on this subject (The North-western Railway Company v. M'Michael, 5 Ex. 111, and the same company v. Pilcher, reported in the same volume and page) is, that an infant purchaser of shares is much in the same position as an infant purchaser of real estate; that is, he may repudiate the contract, but he must do so within a reasonable time. (He cited Crep's case, Cro. Jac. 320; Carter v. Elliott, 2 Bulst. 69, and cited in Evelyn v. Chichester, 3 Burr. 1717; Holmes v. Blogg, 8 Taunt. 35, and 2 Moore.)

Addison, in support.—This contract was in the nature of an agreement for a lease, or to become a partner. The shares were not issued, or the company established, when it was made. The plea shews that the agreement is void; or, if the Court should think that it was only voidable, then the repudiation here was sufficient. (He cited 8 Vict. c. 16, s. 8; The Cork and Brandon Railway Company v. Cazenove, 10 Q.B. 935; The Newry and Enniskillen Railway Company v. Coombe, 3 Ex. 565; Kettley's case, Brown. Rep.; Co. Litt. 38.)

Alderson, B.—Surely the defendant should have disaffirmed before the call was made, or within a reasonable time. You had better amend the plea by introducing such an averment.

Defendant to amend within a week, otherwise judgment for the plaintiff.

Common Law Procedure Act—Notice of filing declaration.

Where the plaintiff had entered an appearance see stat. before the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation, and afterwards filed a declaration endorsed with a notice to plead within eight days, and signed judgment and issued execution without giving notice to the defendant, the Court granted a rule to shew cause why such judgment and execution should not be set aside.

J. Brown moved for a rule to shew cause why the judgment signed and execution issued herein should not be set aside. The writ was served on the 30th September, and the defendant heard no more of the action until the 9th of November, when the sheriff took possession. On searching, it appeared that on the 8th October an appearance had been entered sec stat. and that on the 27th October, three days after the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation, a declaration was filed, with notice to plead in eight days endorsed, but no notice was served on the defendant, and on the 5th November, judgment was signed and execution issued. He referred to the 27th, 28th, and 29th sections of the Act.

(a) The 42nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, enacts, that "In any action in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record at Westminster and in Dublin, for the infringement of letters patent, it shall be lawful for the Court in which such action is pending, if the Court be then sitting, or if the Court be not sitting, then for a judge of such Court, on the application of the plaintiff or defendant respectively, to make such order for an injunction, inspection, or account, and to give such direction respecting such action, injunction, inspection, and account and the proceedings therein respectively, as to such Court or judge may seem fit."

PLATT, B.—The question is, is there anything in this Act to render it unnecessary to serve defendant with notice of having filed a declaration. The defendant is in court by Act of Parliament, and is entitled to the service of the declaration or notice.

LUMLEY v. GYE.

Common Law Procedure Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 80)—Pleading and demurring together—Affidavit.

The defendant or his attorney in the affidavit to support a motion for leave to plead and demur together, under the 80*th section of* 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, should verify all matters within his or their knowledge; and (per Alderson, B.) where a third person is involved, an application ought to be made to him to depose as to the truth of the pleas it is proposed to plead, or some reason given for not doing so.

Creasy applied under the 80th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, for leave to plead several matters, and to demur, on the ground that the declaration disclosed no cause of action. The plaintiff was the proprietor and manager of her Majesty's Theatre, and the declaration alleged a contract by the plaintiff with Johanna Wagner to sing and perform for three months; that the defendant, with knowledge of the said contract between the plaintiff and the said Johanna Wagner, entered into a contract with the said Johanna Wagner to perform and sing during the said three months for which she was engaged to the plaintiff, by which the said Johanna Wagner was prevented from performing, and did not perform her said contract with the plaintiff; and that the defendant further undertook to hold the said Johanna Wagner harmless for such her breach of contract with the plaintiff, &c. whereby the plaintiff lost her services, to the plaintiff's damage of 30,000*l.* The pleas proposed to be pleaded were—1. Not guilty. 2. A traverse of the contract with the said Johanna Wagner being in force at the time of her contracting with the defendant. 3. A traverse of the defendant's knowledge of the contract between the said plaintiff and the said Johanna Wagner being in force. 4. A traverse that in consequence of the alleged acts of the defendant, said Wagner did not perform her said contract with the plaintiff. The affidavits of the defendant and his attorney stated that they were advised and believed (following the words of the Act) that the defendant had just ground to traverse the said allegations in the declaration. [ALDERSON, B.—Do the deponents swear that the allegations proposed to be traversed are not true? PLATT, B.—Surely the only ground for denying an allegation is that it is not true.] The 80th section of the statute enacts that "Either party may, by leave of the Court or a judge, plead and demur to the same pleading at the same time upon an affidavit by the said party or his attorney, if required by the Court or judge, to the effect that he is advised and believes that he has just grounds to traverse the several matters proposed to be traversed by him, and that the several matters sought to be pleaded as aforesaid by way of confession and avoidance are respectively true in substance and in fact," &c. These are not pleas in confession and avoidance, which, by this section, must be sworn to as true; they are traverses, and it is sufficient if the affidavit follow the words of the Act and state that the defendant is advised and believes that he has just ground to traverse the several matters; and moreover it is impossible that many of these things should be within the knowledge of the defendant. [PARKE, B.—Some of these matters are peculiarly within the knowledge of this defendant; for instance, his knowledge of the contract between the plaintiff and said Johanna Wagner being in force. The matters within the knowledge of the defendant should be sworn to directly.] That would impose upon the defendant the putting a construction on the contract. [PARKE, B.—There can be no difficulty in knowing what the general issue is a traverse of.]

ALDERSON, B.—I think when a third person is involved you ought to apply to that person for an affidavit in support of your application, or shew some reason for not doing so. Why not obtain an affidavit from Miss Wagner herself?

Affidavits to be amended by swearing to facts within the knowledge of the defendant.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, Nov. 5.

GLEN v. LEWIS.—Karslake moved to set aside the interlocutor judgment signed herein, and all subsequent proceedings, for irregularity; the declaration was upon a fire policy, and dated 2nd July; on the 31st July (Saturday) a summons was attended for leave to plead several matters, upon which an order was made at twenty minutes after three o'clock; it was served with a notice that the rule should be drawn up as soon as it could be obtained from the office and served. The pleas were also delivered. On Monday morning, at eleven o'clock, the plaintiff signed judgment as for want of a plea. [PLATT, B.—And he was perfectly regular in so doing, although it was very sharp practice. ALDERSON, B.—When you were before the judge upon the summons for leave to plead several matters, you should have applied for an extension of time to plead, to have enabled you to draw up the rule,—that is what is nearly always done; the plaintiff was not irregular in signing judgment, but certainly it was sharp practice.] Upon an affidavit of merits being produced, Rule granted to shew cause why the judgment should not be set aside without costs, why the rule to plead several matters should not stand, and why the pleas authorised to be pleaded should not be redelivered without further summons or order, or rule to plead several matters.

HEMMING v. BURNETT.—Tried at Dorchester, before Platt, B. when a verdict on the fourth and fifth issues and new assignment was found for the defendant, with liberty reserved to the plaintiff to move to enter a verdict thereon. Crowder, Q.C. now moved accordingly.

Rule nisi.

COLLIER v. COLLIER.—Tried before Martin, B.: verdict for the defendant. Butt, Q.C. now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter the verdict for the plaintiff.

Rule nisi.

JOHNASSON v. THE SPECIFIC STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—Trover for a cargo of coal: tried before Wightman, J.: verdict for the plaintiff. Knowles, Q.C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection.

Rule refused.

ROBINSON and ANOTHER v. DYGARD.—Tried at Durham, before Wightman, J.: verdict for plaintiff. Watson, Q.C. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a verdict for the defendant on the fifth issue. Rule nisi.

DUFF v. GANT.—Tried at Guildhall, before Martin, B.: verdict for the defendant. James, Q.C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. The action was on a bill of exchange, accepted by defendant as surety for F. C. Knight, who had borrowed a sum of money from an insurance company, of which plaintiff was a director, which sum was further secured by a policy of insurance on the life of Knight. The defendant pleaded that Knight had died since the policy was executed; and that the plaintiff had agreed, and was now enabled to deduct the amount of the bill sued on from the amount to be paid on account of the policy. Replication—That the policy was void, the said Knight having untruly and fraudulently answered one of the questions put to him by the office, and upon the true answering of which the validity of the policy was made dependent. The question was: "Are you aware of having any disorder tending to shorten life, or any other circumstance making the insurance more than usually hazardous?" To which Knight had answered in the negative. The policy was effected on the 22nd May, 1850; and on the 13th May, 1851, Knight committed suicide; and it was now contended that he had fraudently concealed that his mother and brother had been insane. The learned Judge had left it to the jury, "Whether the assured had suppressed these facts, knowing them to be material." POLLOCK, C.B. said he thought the direction was right, that the man was not bound to answer any questions about his mother and brother's disorders unless they were directly put to him.

Rule refused.

MORGAN v. THOMAS.—Tried at Carmarthen before Crompton, J.: verdict for the plaintiff for 11*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.* Evans, Q.C. moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a verdict for the defendant. Rule nisi.

ROBERTSON and ANOTHER v. WAITE and ANOTHER.—Tried at Liverpool before Wightman, J.: verdict for the plaintiff for 1*s.* with leave to move to increase the amount to 150*l.* Wilkins, Serjt. now moved accordingly.

Rule nisi.

ATTWOOD v. HILL and ANOTHER.—Tried at Stafford before Cresswell, J.: verdict for the defendants. Whateley, Q.C moved pursuant to leave to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 80*l.* Rule refused.

LOWTHER v. WILSON.—Tried before Jervis, C.J. at the Surrey Assizes: verdict for the defendant. Shee, Serjt. moved for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence and for misdirection.

Cur. adv. vult.

STEADMAN v. KNIGHT.—Prendergast, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the taxation of costs therein should not be reviewed. Rule nisi.

ABBOTT v. MATHISON.—T. Jones moved for a rule to shew cause why the trial had herein should not be set aside. The question was whether any notice of continuance had been served. Rule nisi.

Saturday, Nov. 6.

BENSON v. AVERY.—Crowder, Q.C. moved in this case, tried before the Chief Baron, in London, for a new trial, on the ground of an alleged improper rejection of evidence. Rule refused.

THOMPSON v. LETTS.—Borrill moved to set aside the plaintiff's verdict, on the ground of misdirection. The action was in trespass upon an alleged right to a party-wall claimed, the plaintiff having premises on the side of "George-alley," situate in Thames-street, in the City of London, and the defendant having premises opposite those of the plaintiff. The COURT thought, on considering the whole of the summing up of the learned judge, there was no misdirection. Rule refused.

DOE dem. HEWLINS v. POWELL.—Tried before Williams, J. at Monmouth. Whateley, Q.C. moved to set aside the plaintiff's verdict, and on affidavits for a new trial.

Rule nisi upon payment of costs.

PALMER v. THOMER (part heard on Friday).—O'Malley, Q.C. had moved in this case, tried at Norwich before the Lord Chief Baron, for a new trial on the ground of misdirection, and for the improper rejection of evidence. It was an action upon a note of hand for 20*l.* The note in question was, it was said, originally given for 7*l.* only, but had been subsequently altered to 20*l.*

Rule nisi (on terms).

PEARSON v. MENNIES.—Horn moved to discharge a married woman out of custody, she having been arrested upon mesne process for a debt contracted before her marriage, her husband being still alive. He referred to Edwards v. Rourke, 1 T. R. 486, and to 1 Chitty's Archbold's Practice, 630, where all the authorities are collected. There were also three technical objections to the affidavit.

Rule nisi.

DECLERMONT v. BRADBURY and COOK.—M. Chambers moved in this case, tried before the Chief Justice of the C. P. to set aside the plaintiff's verdict, pursuant to leave reserved, and to enter a nonsuit, or for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, or to reduce the damages.

Rule nisi on the point only where leave was reserved to move.

Monday, Nov. 8.

CROWHURST and UX v. LAVERET.—Tried at York before Campbell C.J. Verdict for the plaintiff, damages 8*l.* 10*s.* on the first count, and 16*l.* 10*s.* on the second count. Watson, Q.C. moved for a rule to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside and for a new trial, or that judgment should be arrested on the second count of the declaration, on the ground of misdirection.

Rule nisi granted.

HUBBERSTY and ANOTHER v. WOOD.—Tried at Liverpool before Wightman, J. Verdict for the plaintiff. Watson, Q.C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

Rule nisi granted.

CHRISTIE and ANOTHER v. SIR THOMAS WILLINGTON.—Tried at Worcester before Williams, J. Verdict for the defendant. Alexander, Q C. moved to enter the verdict for the plaintiff. Cur. adv. vult.

ORMOND v. THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Tried at Lincoln before Alderson, B. when the plaintiff was nonsuited. Mellor, Q.C. now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for 37*l.* 16*s.* or 17*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* Rule refused.

JUNTAN v. YATES.—Tried at Stafford before Cresswell, J. Verdict for the plaintiff for 63*l.* 6*s.* Gray moved to enter a nonsuit pursuant to leave, or for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection. This was an action on an agreement to erect a house, by which the plaintiff agreed to complete the said house according to a specification, in consideration of 132*l.* to be paid by the defendant to the plaintiff, and to finish the work in a good and workmanlike manner to the satisfaction of the defendant; and in case of delay, or the plaintiff entering into any sub-contract without the consent of the defendant, the defendant might, after four days' notice, employ other workmen, and pay them out of the moneys then remaining unpaid to the plaintiff, and in that case the plaintiff was not to interfere with the defendant in the completion of the works. At the trial the specification referred to was not produced. Gray then objected that the agreement was not complete without it, and that it was necessary to omit the specification to see what stamp ought to be affixed to the agreement. The judge thought the agreement could not be admitted without the specification, but admitted it, reserving leave to move, and the agreement was then read, subject to the objection; but when Gray was about to address the jury, certain papers were passed over to him as the specification, and he then commented on certain parts of it; but it was afterwards discovered that two or three sheets of it were missing. Gray did not afterwards object to its production, so that, in fact, the objection was not made to the specification, as being unstamped, but to the agreement as a whole. The second objection was, that the judge left it to the jury, that if there was delay in the execution of the works, the defendant might have given the four days' notice, and he omitted to leave to them the question of neglect. The COURT said that objections to stamp must be distinctly and promptly made, and that the document to which the objection was made, viz. the agreement, was well stamped, and the objection was not made to the specification separately, which by the Stamp Act was subject to a separate stamp of 10*s.*; on that point, therefore, there would be no rule, but on the other

Rule nisi granted.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF ROMFORD UNION v. THE BRITISH GUARANTEE ASSOCIATION.—Tried before Pollock, C.B.; verdict for the defendants. Bramwell, Q.C. moved for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, and that the verdict was against evidence.

Rule nisi granted.

STAMMERS v. ———.—Bramwell, Q.C. moved to set aside an award. Rule refused.

LEVERONI v. DRURY and ANOTHER.—Tried before Martin, B. at the sittings in Middlesex this term: verdict for the plaintiff for 36*l.* 18*s.* Crowder, Q.C. moved for a new trial on the ground of misdirection. Cur. adv. vult.

ASH v. DORLEY.—Tried before Lord Campbell, L.C.J. at York: verdict for plaintiff, damages 5*l.* H. Hill, Q.C. moved in arrest of judgment. Rule nisi.

MORGAN v. THOMAS.—Davison moved for a cross rule herein.

Rule nisi for a new trial, if Evans, Q.C. succeeds in his motion.

GLOVER v. JONES.—Tried before the Under-sheriff of Gloucester, when the plaintiff was nonsuited. Gray moved for a new trial. Rule nisi.

BRAHAM v. KING.—Tried at Hertford, before Jervis, C.J. H. T. Cole moved for a rule to shew cause why the record, verdict, and all subsequent proceedings herein should not be set aside on the ground that the record had been altered, and did not agree with the declaration or with the issue. Rule nisi.

WOOD v. BOND and WOOD v. CAWLEY.—Horn moved for a rule to shew cause why two orders of Alderson, B. and the proceedings thereon, should not be set aside.

Rule nisi, with stay of proceedings.

REG. v. THE MAYOR AND ASSESSORS OF HARWICH.

Municipal Corporation—Notice of objection.

A notice of objection given to a burgess to his name being retained on the list of burgesses should describe him as he is described on the burgess list. A notice, therefore, given to the burgess in the following form:—"I hereby give you notice that I object to your name being retained on the burgess list of the borough of Harwich," was held to be bad.

Lush moved for a rule calling upon the mayor and assessors of Harwich to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to hear and adjudicate upon an objection taken to William Butcher, jun. who is now on the burgess roll of the said borough of Harwich. By the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, the overseers of the poor are annually to make out a burgess list; and by sec. 17, every person whose name shall have been inserted in any burgess list, may object to any other person as not being entitled to have his name retained in the said burgess list, and he is on or before a certain day to give to the town clerk, and also to the person objected to, or leave at the premises for which he shall appear to be rated in the burgess list, notice thereof in writing according to the form No. 3, in the schedule D, or to the like effect. The form runs in these words:—

"To the town-clerk of the borough of (or to the person objected to as the case may be.)

"I hereby give you notice that I object to the name of Thomas Bates, of Brook's Farm, in the parish of (describe the person objected to as described in the burgess list) being retained on the burgess list of the borough of

"Dated the day of in the year

"(Signed) JOHN ASHTON.

(Here state the place of abode and property for which he is said to be rated in the burgess list.")

It appeared that one of the burgesses on the burgess-roll wishing to object to another burgess, gave a notice to the town clerk, to which no objection arose; and he also, as required by the statute, gave a notice to the burgess objected to, which he personally served, and was in the following form:—

"To Mr. William Butcher, jun.:—

"I hereby give you notice that I object to your name being retained on the burgess-list of the borough of Harwich.

"Dated the 15th day of September, in the year of our Lord, 1852.

"JOSEPH GAUP.

"Place of abode: King's Head-street, St. Nicholas Parish.

"The property for which I am said to be rated in the burgess-list: House, King's Head-street, St. Nicholas, Harwich."

On the day appointed for the revision of the burgess-lists both parties attended, when it was objected, on the part of Mr. Butcher, that the notice of objection was insufficient, inasmuch as it was not in conformity with the form in the Act, which directs that the person should be described as he is described in the burgess-list. The mayor and one of the assessors held that the objection to the notice was good; the other assessor held that it was not; the voter was, therefore, retained upon the burgess-list. (This objection applied to many other cases in which the same form of notice had been given.) It was now contended that the form of notice of objection was quite sufficient; for that, as the power given by the statute is a compendious one, intended to be modified, according as it was served upon the town clerk or the burgess, it could not be necessary, when serving the latter, to shew how he was described upon the burgess-list. [CROMPTON, J.—There is no description at all in the notice.] It was served upon the burgess himself. The statute gives no imperative form; it says, "or to the like effect." [CROMPTON, J.—Suppose there are two persons of the same name, it should be shewn who is meant.] There are in the Parliamentary Registration Act (the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18), two forms of objection given, one to the overseers, and the other to the party objected to, and the latter runs in the form adopted in this case, without reference to the way he is described in the list, as "I hereby give you notice that I object to your name being retained on the list of persons entitled to vote in the election of members," &c. It was only necessary that the party should have a clear notice that he was objected to.

CROMPTON, J.—I do not think that the provisions of the statute have been sufficiently carried out. The effect of the Act is to give a notice describing the person as he is described upon the burgess list. There may be two persons of the same name, and it is right that it should be pointed out in the notice itself, who is really meant by it. The Act intended that the person should be described as he is on the burgess list. I cannot, therefore, say that the mayor and assessor were wrong.

Criminal information.

Collier moved, on the behalf of Mr. Gedye, an attorney of this court, for a rule, calling upon Mr. Thomas Robert Mulcock, one of the churchwardens of the parish of St. Mary, Newington, to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for publishing and circulating a placard reflecting upon the character and conduct of Mr. Gedye. Rule nisi.

Ex parte HENRY WILTON.

County Court—Criminal information.

Upon an application for a rule for a criminal information against a County Court judge, the Court refused to interfere, it not appearing or being suggested that the judge acted from any corrupt or improper motive.

On a former day (Nov. 6) Hawkins moved for a rule calling upon one of the judges of the County Court to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for misconduct in his office. It appeared from the affidavit upon which this motion was made, that the defendant (the present applicant) having attended upon a judgment summons, he was duly sworn and questioned by the judge as to his not having paid the amount of debt as ordered; and it was alleged, as the ground of this motion, that as he was explaining the reason for his not having done so, he was stopped by the judge who (on the application of the plaintiff) committed him for a month. There was no suggestion that the judge had acted from any corrupt or ill motive, but it was contended that this conduct of itself amounted to such a dereliction of duty as to entitle the complainant to make the present application.

Cur. adv. vult.

His LORDSHIP to-day said he had considered this subject, and as there was no imputation or suggestion of any corrupt or improper motive influencing the judge, which is usually required upon applications of this kind, he should refuse the rule.

Rule refused.

Ex parte WILTON.—Hawkins moved for a rule calling upon the judge of a County Court to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for misconduct in his office, in refusing to hear a defendant who had been summoned upon a judgment summons, and whom he committed to prison. Cur. adv. vult.

REG. v. — MOON, Esq.—Huddleston moved for a rule calling upon Mr. Alderman Moon, as one of the magistrates for London, to shew cause why, under the circumstances stated in the affidavits, he should not issue his warrant to levy a poor-rate on the goods of one Ewen Green. Rule nisi.

Re ROBINSON.—Atkinson moved for a rule directing the Master to tax the costs herein. Rule nisi.

Re ELIZABETH HAKEWILL.—Cooke moved for an attachment against Elizabeth Hakewill, for disobedience to a writ of habeas corpus. Rule nisi.

CLERK, appellant, v. THE PARISH OFFICERS OF BINBROOK, respondents.—Manisty moved on behalf of the respondents for a rule to refer this case back to the arbitrator, or to set aside the award, on the ground that the arbitrator had not ascertained and adjudged the amount of costs to be paid by the appellants to the respondents, and, in the event of the award being set aside, that the justices should be directed to enter continuances and hear the appeal. This was an appeal against a poor-rate, which came on before the justices of Lindsey, Lincolnshire, and was referred to arbitration under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 13. The arbitrator made his award in favour of the respondents, and ordered the appellant to pay, within one month, the costs of the appeal and the reference, but did not, as he should have done, assess the amount of such costs. Rule nisi.

Monday, Nov. 8.

(Before Mr. Justice CROMPTON.)

WORRALL v. LOWE.—Temple moved for a rule calling upon the plaintiff to shew cause why the judgment should not be set aside and the defendant be admitted to plead. The application was made on affidavits disclosing reasons for the defendant having neglected to plead, and that there is a good defence upon the merits.

Rule nisi on payment of costs.

Ex parte TOCQUE.—Phipson, upon the behalf of a Mr. Tocque, an articled clerk, moved that he may be discharged from his present articles and be at liberty to enter into fresh ones with some other attorney, his present master having absconded, and his offices being shut up. (Ex parte Wilkinson, 9 Dowl. 330.) Rule nisi.

WILLIAMS v. PARFITT.

Plea of insolvency—Sufficiency of description of creditor in schedule

The plaintiff was described in the defendant's schedule as "Mr. Williams, timber merchant, New-road, London," but his residence was in the City-road, about a mile and a half from the nearest part of the New-road:

Held, that the sufficiency of the description was a question of fact for the jury, and not a question of law.

Held, also, that the proper question for the jury was, whether the plaintiff was so described in the schedule that a letter so directed to him by the assignee would find him.

This was an action by the plaintiff, as indorsee of a bill of exchange for 30*l.* against the defendant, as drawer. Among other pleas, the defendant pleaded his discharge under the Insolvent Debtors Act; and the real issue was, whether the plaintiff was sufficiently described in the schedule as a creditor for the amount of the bill. In the schedule, the debt and the consideration for it were correctly described, but the plaintiff was described as "Mr. Williams, timber merchant, New-road," whereas his residence was in the City-road, and about a mile and a half distant from the nearest part of the New-road.

CRESSWELL, J. said the question for the jury was, whether the description in the schedule was such that a notice sent by the assignee to the creditor in pursuance thereof would reach him by post? The 71st section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, provides that "the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors shall cause notice of the making of every such vesting order as aforesaid, and the filing of every such schedule, and of the time and place so as aforesaid appointed for such prisoner to be brought up, to be given by such means as the said Court shall direct, to the creditor or creditors at whose suit any such prisoner shall be detained in custody, or the attorney or agent of such creditor or creditors named in the schedule of such prisoner, and resident within the United Kingdom, and whose debts shall amount to the sum of 5*l.*" The official assignee in sending these notices must necessarily be guided by the schedule, and he naturally directs his notice to the creditor's address as given in the schedule. The question therefore is, whether this description in the schedule is a sufficient direction if the notice were sent to the creditor by post in pursuance thereof.

Verdict for plaintiff.

LYNAR v. FOSTER.

(Before the full Court.)

Libel—New trial—Rebutting case—Privileged communication.

Where any question of great difficulty or importance arises, especially if the Court should disagree, a new trial will be granted to give the parties an opportunity of having the question raised upon the record and taking the opinion of the Courts of Appeal:

Semble, the rule that a verdict when set aside on the ground of surprise shall be on payment of costs is not universal.

Case for libel.

Pleas—1st. Not guilty and issue thereon; 2nd. Justification.

Replication—De injuria, and issue thereon.

This case was tried before the Lord Chief Justice at the sittings after last Easter Term.

From the evidence it appeared that the libel complained of was contained in a letter addressed by the defendant (who was the rector of the parish in which the plaintiff had been officiating as curate) to another clergyman in the same diocese for the purpose of inducing him to withdraw his name from a testimonium signed by him and testifying to the good character and propriety of conduct of the defendant. The libellous words set out in the declaration, and proved to have been written and published by the defendant, were "An act of gross fraud has come under my personal knowledge. He (meaning the plaintiff) attempted to a gross fraud; he falsely represented to the primate that his horse had died, and obtained money from his Grace." It further appeared that the plaintiff had represented to the primate that he had lost his horse, and that he had on that representation obtained money from his Grace. It was admitted that the horse in question, which had been purchased by the plaintiff for 18*l.* for the purpose of attending his duties as curate, had fallen sick, and had been sold at a great sacrifice for a few pounds. It further appeared that the plaintiff was in very needy circumstances. The other facts of the case are not material, as the questions raised as to the proving the justification, that of privileged communication, and the right of the plaintiff to be allowed into a rebutting case, were not decided by the Court.

Joy, Q.C. (with whom was J. T. Ball) having obtained a conditional order to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial.

McDonagh, Q.C. (with whom was S. B. Millar) shewed cause.

The following authorities were cited in the course of the argument: Dunscombe v. Daniel, 8 C. & P. 226; 1 Taylor's Evidence, 276; Rees v. Smith, 2 Stark. Rep. 31; M'Callagh v. Greer, Alcock & Nap. Rep.; Anon. 1 Hudson & Brooke, 117; Rex v. Earl of Bantry, 2 Car. & Kir.; Toogood v. Strumey, 1 Cromp. Mee. & R.; 1 Stark. Ev. 423; Wright v. Woodgate, 2 Cromp. Mee. & Ros. 573; Chapman v. Wright, 1 Arnold, 241; Robertson v. McDowell, 12 Ad. & El.; Ward v. Smith, 6 Bing. 749; Ashford v. Hardy, 7 Car. & P. 502; Martin v. Strong, 5 Ad. & El. 535; Blagg v. Sturt, 10 Q. B. 899.

LEFROY, C.J.—In this case there were two grounds on which a new trial was asked; first, that the defence of a privileged communication was not open to the defendant, and that the facts constituting such defence should not have been left to the jury; the second was, that the plaintiff was not allowed to go into a rebutting case. As to this first point, it is one of great importance and difficulty, and one on which the Court is not agreed; but even if we were, it is one of too much importance to be decided on motion. Therefore, in order to give the parties an opportunity of putting the matter on the record, we will make the order for a new trial. As to the second point, that the plaintiff was not allowed to go into a rebutting case, it must be borne in mind that it was at a particular point of the entire case he asked to be allowed to give fresh evidence. Now, there is no doubt that if a party goes into no part of his rebutting case, he may, when the time comes, if he think proper, enter on it; but if he does go into it at first, he shall not be afterwards allowed to eke it out by giving fresh evidence. It appeared to me at the time that he had not, with respect to the particular matter, a right to do so; it was given to the jury, which ought to have saved the plaintiff from any harm. However, it is very possible that notwithstanding the caution I had given them, they were influenced very much by the consideration that the defendant stated an admission to him by the plaintiff as to his intention in writing to the primate, and if so it would be as contrary to law as to justice that the plaintiff should be prejudiced by that act, without having an opportunity to explain it. We consider there ought to be a new trial, and the more especially as the questions raised are of so much importance, and that the entire matter may appear on the record. The order will be for a new trial, and no costs. Although in every case where a new trial is granted on the ground of surprise, costs are required to be paid by the party obtaining the order, yet really in this case, in the peculiar position of the parties, I do not think defendant ought to press for costs, although he might in strictness be entitled to them.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. KEENE, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before Lord ST. LEONARDS, L.C.)

Nov. 2 and 3.

BOSTOCK v. SIDEBOTTOM.

Lessor and lessee—Injunction—Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Covenant—Violation of—Distinction between a power "to amend and repair," and a power "to widen and enlarge"—User.

In 1800, land and a part of the watercourse or bed of a river extending 100 yards in length, are demised for a term of years; the lessee being authorised to cut a goit or sluice out of the river, "at a proper and convenient distance from and above a weir" (which he had also power to make), in the most convenient line or direction through two particular closes, and to turn and divert the water of the river into the goit or sluice, and to amend and repair such goit or sluice. The lease contains a covenant on the part of the lessee to arch or cover over the goit or sluice so to be cut, so as to make the soil into good arable or mowing land. A goit is subsequently cut nine feet in width at such distance, and through such properties, &c. The lessees erect cotton mills on the demised premises, the absolute remainder in fee of which premises, with liberty to use the goit, &c. is conveyed, in 1835, to A. and B. the representatives of the lessees, they entering into covenants similar to those contained in the lease. In 1850 they proceed to open the goit, for the purpose of widening it from nine to eighteen feet, and excavate, and carry away part of the soil. On a bill filed by the representative of the lessor, who was entitled to the fee of the two particular closes, subject to the easement granted by the lease:

The Court, affirming the decision of the Court below, restrained them by injunction from widening the goit, and ordered them to restore it to its original condition, and to replace the soil.

A lessee was empowered to make a goit, which was to be made at once:

Held, that when the power had once been exercised it was exhausted: it was not the case of a power to do a thing toties quoties, as to make roads, &c.

A power contained in a lease to "repair and amend" does not include, by implication or otherwise, a power to "widen and enlarge."

This Court will not in many instances enforce a legal right by an injunction, but will leave the parties to their remedy at law:

This Court does not assume to itself the power of compelling a party to do a thing by injunction, but it restrains him from doing it.

This was a motion by way of appeal to discharge an order made by the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, and a consequent order made by the late Vice-Chancellor Parker, restraining the defendant, his agents, &c. from further widening a goit or sluice made from the river Mersey, below the Broadbottom-bridge, in the township and parish of Mottram, in Longdendale, in the county of Chester, leading from the said river Mersey through and across the Em meadow, in the said township and parish, into the dam or reservoir made near to or adjoining the cotton mills and premises of the said defendant in the said township and parish aforesaid, called the Broadbottom Mills; and also from interfering or meddling with, for purposes not contemplated by indentures of the 12th day of July, 1800, and the 15th day of September, 1835, the said goit or sluice, or the fender or shuttle bye-wash or waste-gate drain from the said bye-wash or waste-gate to the said river Mersey and weir or dam, or any or either of them, and from maintaining or using the part of the said goit or sluice which had been so widened, and from permitting or suffering the said goit or sluice, or any part thereof, save and except for the distance provided by the indentures of the 12th day of July, 1800, and the 15th day of September, 1835, or one of them, to remain any longer open or uncovered.

By indenture, dated July 12, 1800, John Bostock, the paternal grandfather of the plaintiff, demised unto William and George Sidebottom a piece of ground intended for a mill-dam or reservoir for water, and also all that part of the watercourse or bed of the river Mersey, lying, &c. and extending from thence one hundred yards in length up the same watercourse or river, with full and free liberty, privilege, power, and authority to make, build, erect, and fix a weir or dam in, through, and across the said river, and anywhere opposite to, or adjoining, &c. the Em meadow, with like liberty, &c. to cut a goit or sluice out of the said river, at a proper and convenient distance from and above the said weir, in the most convenient line or direction through the two closes called the Em meadow and the Lime-field, into the south-west side or end of the said piece of ground intended for a reservoir, and to make, erect, build, and fix a fender or shuttle at the mouth of such goit or sluice, and also to make, erect, build, and fix a bye-wash or waste-gate, and to cut a drain from such bye-wash or waste-gate into the said river, and from time to time, and at any time or times to turn and divert the water of the said river into and through the said fender and goit, or sluice, and also into and through the said bye-wash or waste-gate, with like liberty, &c. to make, and from time to time to repair such drain or slough, and to get materials for making the said weir, fender, goit, or sluice, bye-wash, or waste-gate, and drains, with full liberty, &c. from time to time, and at all times during the said term, to repair and amend the said weir or dam, and also the said goit or sluice, &c. as often as need or occasion should be and require, making reasonable satisfaction to the said John Bostock, his heirs and assigns, for all damage to be done to the grass, &c. for a term of 999 years, subject to the yearly rent and covenants therein mentioned; and in the said indenture was contained a covenant on the part of the lessees, that they would arch or otherwise cover over the goit or sluice, and drain, so to be made as aforesaid, from the said bye-wash or waste-gate to the said river, with good stone or bricks, and afterwards cover the same over with soil, so as to make the same into good arable or mowing land, and should, &c. from time to time, and at all times thereafter during the said term, keep and continue the said goit or sluice, and drains, &c. in a good and workmanlike manner. The said Messrs. Sidebottom thereupon erected a weir or dam in and across the river opposite and adjoining the Em meadow, and they constructed also a mill-dam or reservoir upon the said piece of land, and made a goit or sluice nine feet in width, and arched and covered it over as required by the said lease, and built a fender or shuttle at the mouth of the goit or sluice, and a bye-wash or waste-gate in the said Em meadow, and made a drain therefrom into the said river. They subsequently erected and built several large cotton mills, and cotton factories, and premises upon the ground comprised in the lease, and they turned, and from time to time diverted the water of the river through the fender, &c. along the goit or sluice into the said mill-dam or reservoir, as occasion required, to the said cotton mills, &c.

The father of the present plaintiff, as heir-at-law of the lessor, became entitled in fee, subject to the term, to the demised premises, and also to the Em meadow and lime-field,—the ground through which the goit or sluice was cut; and by indentures of lease and release of the 14th and 15th of September, 1835, the executors and devisees in trust of John Bostock, the son, conveyed the absolute reversion in fee of the demised premises to Messrs. George and Joe Sidebottom, who were then carrying on the business of cotton-spinners as copartners, with like powers, &c. to use, and repair, and amend the goit or sluice, and to divert the water of the river, as in the said lease mentioned.

From the date of the said lease up to the month of December 1850, the defendant, and those through whom he claimed, used the goit upon the terms and conditions contained in the said two several indentures of July 1800 and September 1835, when the goit was opened by the defendant for the purpose ostensibly of repairing it. Since that period it had remained open, and in the month of June 1851 the plaintiff, who is absolutely entitled to the land through which the goit had been cut, discovered that the defendant was enlarging it from nine to eighteen feet, and on his threatening to proceed with the works, the plaintiff filed his bill for an injunction.

These facts, with those which are stated in the Lord Chancellor's judgment, are alone necessary for the purposes of the present report.

On the motion coming on to be heard before the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, his Honour ordered it to stand over, the plaintiff undertaking to bring an action for the purpose of trying the defendant's right to widen the soil.

The action was tried before Lord Campbell, and the justices of the Queen's Bench, in April last, when judgment was given for the plaintiff; Lord Campbell observing that the license given in the lease was to make a goit, and it was to be made at once, and when it had once been made and completed, there was no power to make another. It was not like the case where there was a power to do things toties quoties, as to make various roads, but it was to make a goit, and when that power had once been exercised, it was exhausted. There was a power to repair and to amend, but not a power to make another goit. That must be taken to be another goit, and not the goit originally made or set out. If it could have been shewn that the power might have been exercised from time to time, in any direction so as to suit the purposes of the lessees and their assigns, during the whole of the term, then the power might have applied as well to the width as to the direction. The power was "to cut a goit or sluice," &c. If it could be shewn that, the goit having been cut and having been enjoyed for a number of years, and found to be inconvenient, another goit might be cut in a direction more convenient, then judgment might have been for the defendant. The license and liberty which was reserved was to make a goit, and when that goit was once made and completed, the power was exhausted, and could not be exercised in making another goit either of a greater width or in a different direction.

The defendant being dissatisfied with that judgment, brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber to reverse it. The judgment was there affirmed, and the late Vice-Chancellor Parker, on the motion coming before his Honour, granted the injunction which the present appeal now sought to dissolve.

Dickinson (in the absence of Malins), opened the appeal, and contended that, even if the question of law were against the appellant, the case was not one for the extraordinary interposition of the Court of Chancery by injunction; in certain cases this Court was not bound to follow the decisions of the Courts of Law. (Evans v. Prothero, 19 Law T. Rep. 117.) The intention of the parties at the time of the demise was, that the lessee should have a certain benefit in the water of the river, and was to construct any goit that might be necessary for the purpose of working his mills and factories. Other mills had since been erected, as well by himself as other parties, and the power of the water was thereby diminished. To a certain extent his property was injured, inasmuch as the water of the river was directed to those mills; the injury might for the future be obviated by the widening of the goit so as to admit of a greater flush of water. The conditions of the lease bound him as to locality, but not to width; he was to have water sufficient for a particular purpose, and to build a goit accordingly. The alterations in the river had rendered a larger goit necessary, and without he was allowed to alter the former goit his power and liberty to use the water would be of no service. (Wood v. Sutcliffe, 18 Law T. Rep. 191.) The other points of argument are referred to in the Lord Chancellor's judgment. The case of Rochdale Canal Company v. King, 2 Si. N.S. 78, was cited.

J. Russell and Hislop Clarke appeared for the respondent, but were not required to address the Court.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I cannot say that this case is open to any doubt. The rules of this court are perfectly clear upon this subject, though it may be sometimes difficult to apply them to the particular case. With regard to the opinions of the learned common law judges, it is impossible they should not have great weight with any one sitting where I do; and although a late Act of Parliament has thrown upon the Court the duty of itself deciding points of law, so that it cannot send a case as heretofore to a Court of Law, yet it could not properly have deprived it of the power of having the assistance of those Judges when it should deem it necessary; and, therefore, if I had thought differently from them in this case, undoubtedly I should not have ventured to have so decided without having the assistance of some of them. As regards the question,—supposing the merits to be against the defendant upon the mere construction of these instruments and the intention of the parties,—there is no doubt that this Court will not in many instances enforce a legal right by injunction, but will leave the parties to their remedy at law. Here there is a contract which, like every other contract, can receive but one construction; it is not open to one construction in Equity and another at Law: whatever be its true construction, that must be the rule and guide of this Court. If the contract does not permit the party to cut a new or an additional goit, or to add, which is the same thing, to the present goit, it is then a case simply in which a man under a tenancy or under a grant in fee of a certain right does assume to exercise a right, which he has not, to cut into the soil of his landlord or the grantor, and carry away that soil, and usurp a right of that soil to himself. This Court could never possibly allow that. This Court will not allow one man, upon his construction of a grant, to take away and help himself to the soil of another; therefore I think this is a case in which it would be impossible for this Court to refuse to enforce an injunction if it should be of opinion, on the true meaning of the contract, that the party had no right to make that addition to the goit. During the argument it was said that, even supposing I should be of that opinion, yet that I never should do so strong a thing as to order the parties (the defendant) to fill up the place which he had already excavated; and that this was represented as an impossible performance. Now this Court does not assume to itself the power of compelling a party to do a thing; it restrains him from doing it; therefore, what the effect would have been, if the thing had been done and the party had come to the Court too late for an injunction, is another question, which I am not called upon to consider. The defendant in this case entered into the undertaking, and if the Court should think fit that the injunction should be granted, then of course he will have to fill up that portion of the ground which he had excavated. Now I take it for granted there will not be the slightest difficulty beyond the mere common labour. Of course the soil has not been removed: nobody will assert that that which formerly filled the solid ground, and which has not been taken away, cannot be thrown in again. But what I have to consider is the true construction of these instruments in regard to what has been decided at law; and I cannot say, having very attentively read them, that I entertain the slightest doubt as to their effect. There is no actual contract, but I think the fair presumption is that the parties did intend to build a mill. Here is a grant of a piece of ground for the purpose of making a reservoir, and the whole object of getting the water was to give power to the mill. Although there may be no actual covenant to erect a mill, yet there is a covenant to erect buildings on the ground of a certain yearly value: no doubt the mill was intended to form a portion of the buildings so to be erected. Taking that to be so, this is a case distinguishable from those which have been cited, particularly the case of Blakemore v. The Glamorganshire Canal Company. In this case there is no question as to the quantity of water, but of the quantity of land through which the water is to be conveyed. It is not a question of the right of the defendant to take water from the river Mersey, but a question as to whether he has the right to take the plaintiff's land in order to cut that land into an additional canal, or goit, or sluice, in order to convey the water to his mill, to give him an additional mill power. Now the way in which the parties managed it was this: If you look at the lease for 999 years you will see how very limited the grant was; that is, what a small quantity of land was granted, described by yards; yet it was sufficient for the then purpose. At the time the parties granted it I suppose there was not much water in that portion of the river. They granted what they had the right to grant, that is, half the soil of the bed of the river bounding upon the particular properties, and the right to make a weir or dam to divert the water, and the right to make a goit, without limiting in any manner whatever what the proportions of that goit should be. Therefore it is undeniable that if the defendants in the first instance had found that the water power would occupy eighteen feet in breadth, it is impossible to deny that they might have taken eighteen feet. It was left to them at that time to decide what should be the breadth. Now they were not hurried under this contract in coming to that decision; two years were allowed to them in order to complete their works, during any portion of which time they might have adopted their goit to the actual state of the river, and the probable wants of their works, so that they could not be taken by surprise. They were left to choose for themselves their own breadth, their own depth; not their own length, because that was defined: but the breadth and depth would, of course, be entirely dependent upon the bed of the river, and the alterations they might be at liberty to make in it; but the breadth is entirely left to them. But then the parties knew, without compelling the defendant, the lessee, to erect a mill, that a mill would be erected; and so they perfectly well knew, not to an inch or a foot, but what would be the probable width of that goit which would be made under the general powers granted by this lease. It was not necessary to fix the limits at that time, because the nature of the water itself, the power which was intended to be applied, would necessarily direct and define the width and depth of the goit; it contained, therefore, in itself those elements which would circumscribe and limit its actual depth and width. Accordingly, this lessee does make such a goit as will suit his purpose, and it turns out to be nine feet wide; he is bound to overarch it, and to cover it with earth, and it is again to form a part of the field. Is there anything in this contract which would have prevented the lessor, after the completion of that goit and covering it over, building directly upon its edge all along his meadow. Was not the soil his? Was he under any liability to keep it there in a state of meadow, in order to wait to see whether the lessee would choose to enlarge his goit? Was there any limitation or restriction whatever upon the power of the lessor to deal as he pleased with his land, after the lessee had exercised his right and discretion to build such a goit as he thought would answer the purpose of his works? Certainly not. Then it is said that there was power to amend. That power is "to repair and amend." There is nowhere the power to widen and enlarge; and nothing, to be sure, can be more perfectly in contradistinction the one to the other than the power to repair and amend, and the power to widen and enlarge; and therefore, where it was intended that it should be repaired and amended, the power was reserved, although it might not be necessary so to have provided, because it might have followed in point of law, but nothing was left to implication. There was an express covenant. If it had been intended that from time to time it should be varied, as science threw new light upon the mode in which water-power, like many other powers, might be rendered capable of giving greater force and greater additional assistance to the mills of the defendant, that must have been inserted in order to form part of the contract. I have looked through the lease, and I cannot find a single expression, or anything which denotes the intention to give to the lessee the slightest power to enlarge that goit after he had once completely made up his mind as to its width and shape, and had arched and covered it in. It was pressed upon me in argument, what could the Court have said, if immediately after the erection of the goit it had been found insufficient, and the party had then enlarged it? The Court would then have given a very liberal construction to this instrument. The question then would have been, whether, within the intention of this contract there had been a completion of the work. Supposing the moment it had been opened the flush of water had been so great as to have blown up the walls of the arch, and it had been found that it was insufficient for the purpose. The Court is not bound by such a straight-laced construction of this contract, to prevent it from saying it was not the true intention that the moment it was completed there it was to remain. If it did not answer the purpose for which it was intended, it might go on till it was completed; but that question does not arise. This goit has been completed for about half a century. For half a century it has answered the purpose for which it was erected; for all time to come it will and would have answered all those purposes; it has not failed to answer those purposes,—the purposes for which the contract provided; and if the lessee had left it alone, it would have still continued to answer them just as it did at the moment of its original completion. Men will naturally endeavour to turn the new lights which science has introduced to their own advantage. This lessee wants assistance on another man's ground, to which he is not entitled. Like everybody who wants to get into another man's land, to make a canal, goit, or anything else, he must condescend to bargain with him, and to pay him for the right which he desires to exercise. Therefore I do not see even that there is any hardship. He has got all he contracted for. Now what took place in 1835? There was a purchase of the land by the lessee, which had been granted in this way: it was a purchase by him of the fee-simple, with which they conveyed the lease; therefore I consider that to be a legally binding instrument. What, then, is the effect of the transaction? It was the grant in fee to a man and his heirs of those rights which had been granted, in 1800, for 999 years, of a chattel interest; that is a grant of the goit which then existed, without the slightest allusion to any right to enlarge or widen that particular goit. Well, after the experience of many years, the parties act upon things as they then stood, without having discovered any necessity to alter the goit, or without having at that time contracted to alter their rights. I must consider the parties as dealing upon what then existed, and I can see no landship. The defendant, under pretence of a right which did not exist, digs into the landlord's soil, and in a manner in which he has no right. My opinion is, that the judges came to a perfectly right construction of this instrument, and nobody can read it without coming to the same conclusion; it admits of no doubt in this court, any more than it does at law, and the construction must and ought to be the same; there is no equity and no circumstances existing here to prevent me from granting this injunction. I have seen nothing to complain of in the way in which the case was sent to law. It was a proper case to go to law, and I see nothing to complain of in what has taken place in any branch of the courts. I must, therefore, necessarily refuse this motion with costs.

DUNCAN v. ROSS.

Will—Construction—Priority of legacy to executor.

A testator stating that his executor would have considerable trouble in the conduct and management of the affairs of his estate, for which he would otherwise have no legal claim to compensation, gave and bequeathed the executor of the trusts of his will, so long as he should act therein, an annuity or yearly sum of 100*l. to be paid half-yearly. The estate proving insufficient to pay all the debts, annuities, and legacies:*

Held, that as the annuity to the executor was given as a remuneration for services, it was in the nature of a debt, and was chargeable on the estate in priority to all other legacies and annuities.

This was a case upon the construction of a will, involving a question of priority between legacies and annuities, the estate being insufficient. The only point, however, worth reporting is as respects the priority of a legacy given to the executor of the will in these words:—"As my acting executor and trustee in England will have considerable trouble in the conduct and management of the affairs of my estate in this country, for which he would otherwise have no legal claim to compensation, I give and bequeath to such of my executors of the trusts of this my will in England, so long as he shall act therein, one annuity or yearly sum of 100*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, to be paid half-yearly, the first payment to be made at the end of six months after my decease."

This annuity, it was contended, was in the nature of a debt, being a compensation for services to be performed, and therefore, it was urged, that it took precedence over all the legacies and annuities bequeathed by the will.

Rowpell, R. Palmer, E. Smith, and other counsel, for the various parties.

The MASTER of the ROLLS held that this legacy did take precedence over all the others, and decreed accordingly.

BROWN v. GORDON.

Debt due—Partnership—Lien of creditor on estate of deceased partner—Statute of Limitations.

A promissory note was given by a banking firm to a customer for moneys deposited. A new partner was afterwards introduced, and one of the original partners subsequently died. Other changes ensued in the partnership firm, but the successive firms continued to pay interest on the note. The firm became bankrupt, and the creditor proved his debt under the bankruptcy. The original partner who died had by his will given his real and personal estate to trustees, on trust to raise money to pay his debts. The creditor filed his bill for administration of the estate of the deceased partner, and sought to charge it with the debt due on the promissory note. The bill was dismissed with costs.

This was a suit by a creditor of Henry Baines Lott for administration of his estate, and seeking to charge it with payment of a sum of money due on a promissory note dated the 22nd February, 1827, whereby the testator and his two partners, Edward Lott and C. Flood, who carried on the business of bankers, promised to pay the plaintiff the sum of 100*l.* with interest, in consideration of a deposit in the bank of that sum. In the year 1830, C. F. Flood, a new partner, came into the firm, and in 1833 the testator died, having by his will devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, in such way as to them should seem best, to raise a sufficient sum of money to pay his debts. Soon after the testator's death another partner was admitted, and in 1836, Edward Lott, one of the original partners, died; and in 1843, C. Flood, the other original partner, died, having appointed C. F. Flood, his executor. The business continued to be conducted by the partners who had come into the firm after the execution of the promissory-note till 1847, when the firm became bankrupt. Interest on the note was paid all along to the plaintiff through all the successive changes of the firm; and the plaintiff had taken no steps to get in the principal sum, either from the partnership property or the estates of the deceased partners till the bankruptcy; and he had proved the debt under the bankruptcy as a debt due from the partnership. He filed his bill for the administration of the estate of H. B. Lott. The cause now came on to be heard.

Willcock and Giffard, for the plaintiff, contended that the debt, though joint at law, was a several debt in equity. There was no evidence that the plaintiff had accepted the successive firms as his debtors in discharge of the parties who had originally executed the note, and the note itself had never been renewed. The debt was not barred by the Statute of Limitations, inasmuch as interest had been regularly paid by the successive firms, who must be considered agents of the original partners, one of the present partners also being executor of one of the original partners. Besides, the charge of debts contained in the testator's will was sufficient to save the statute, and prevent its operation as a bar. They cited Winter v. Innes, 4 My. & Cr. 101; Way v. Bassett, 5 Hare, 55; Harris v. Fearnell, 15 Law J. (N. S.) Ch. 185; Lane v. Williams, 2 Vern. 292; Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen, 203; Wilkinson v. Henderson, 1 Myl. & K. 582.

R. Palmer, Hetherington, and Chambers, for the defendants, the executors and trustees of H. B. Lott, contended that the debt was merely a joint debt, but the deceased partner's estate is held liable by Courts of Equity merely to work out the equities between the partners. The Statute of Limitations was a bar to the rights of the surviving partners as well as to the plaintiff's, and therefore the rule of equity did not apply. Then as to payment of interest since the testator's death, that could not affect him even though a surviving partner was his executor, for he sustained a double character. They cited Scott v. Jones, 4 Cl. & F. 382; Ex parte Kendall, 17 Ves. 514; Thompson v. Percival, 5 B. & Ad. 925; Cowell v. Sikes, 2 Russ. 191.

Follett for the assignees.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said the only question was whether the plaintiff's claim still existed or was barred by lapse of time. As to the debt being kept on foot by payment of interest by the successive firms, that must depend upon the question whether the surviving partners were or not to be considered the agents of the testator. If they were it must have been by an implied authority, for no express authority was pretended to have been given. There was nothing, however, in the relation between the partners to cause such a presumption. It was urged that one of the partners was executor of the deceased, but it did not follow that because a man held two characters his acts in one of them should be considered referable to the other; and on the whole it was clear that the payments of interest were made by the surviving partners in their character as bankers, and without reference to the testator's estate. They considered themselves liable for the debt as surviving partners; and on this point Way v. Bassett, and Henderson v. Wilkinson, were express authorities. But then it was said that the testator had created a charge on his real estate in favour of the plaintiff, and it was argued that even if the remedy against the personal estate was barred, the real estate was liable under the charge in the testator's will; but he (the Master of the Rolls) was of opinion that that was not a sufficient charge. There was no debt which was binding on his estate at law, and the creditor was only entitled to stand in the place of the surviving partners. The plaintiff had not enforced his remedy against the testator's estate, but had accepted the surviving partners as his debtors, and they alone were now his debtors. It was impossible now to put the parties back into the position in which they would have stood if at the death of the testator the plaintiff had enforced his claim against his estate. The bill must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

COWLEY v. WATTS.

Practice—Production of documents.

Bilton, in this case, moved for production of documents admitted in the defendant's answer.

The MASTER of the ROLLS took occasion to say that the practice was altered as to motions for production. Hereafter all applications must be made in chambers in the first instance. The party requiring production would issue a summons, and the party required to produce would then put in a list of documents on affidavit. Forms for the summons and affidavit had been prepared. If any dispute should arise the parties would then, and then only, come into court.

Settlement—Voluntary assignment—Trustee and cestui que trust.

By a postnuptial settlement, A. B. conveyed certain property to two trustees jointly with himself, in trust for himself for life, with remainder to his children; and in default of such issue, in trust for such persons as he should appoint in his will; and in default of appointment, for his next of kin. The property consisted of a share of a residue under the will of a testator, some of which was transferred by the trustees of the will to the trustees of the settlement; but some of it still remained vested in the trustees of the will:

Held, that the part transferred was subject to the trusts of the settlement, which as to that must be enforced, but as to the part not transferred, the relation of trustee and cestui que trust was not created, and the settlement as to that part was inoperative, and that part must be transferred by the trustees of the will to the settlor.

Part of the property was freehold, in which the settlor had only an equitable interest, the legal estate being in the trustees:

Held, that no trust was created in the freehold, and the settlement as to that was also inoperative.

This was a bill filed by the plaintiff, a nephew of the late John Bridge, for an account of his estate, and to ascertain his share of the residue. The will of the testator bore date the 27th of November, 1833, and under it the plaintiff became entitled to one fifth-part of the freehold and residuary personal estate of the testator, which was to be transferred to him on his attaining the age of twenty-five years. The property to which the plaintiff thus became entitled, and which was ascertained and agreed to by him on attaining the age of twenty-one years, consisted of shares in the General Mining Company, Regent's Canal shares, Colombian bonds, a sum of 1,296*l.* Consols, and a balance of 475*l.* cash; besides a freehold estate. The will was proved in 1834. The plaintiff attained twenty-one in 1846, and twenty-five in 1850. After he came of age, and on the 9th of April, 1847, the plaintiff executed a deed, whereby, after reciting the settlement of the accounts and his marriage with the lady, who is his present wife, it proceeded to convey all his interest in his real and personal estate to two other persons jointly with himself, upon trust for himself for life, with remainder to his children, the issue of the marriage, with the usual powers of maintenance and advancement; and in default of such issue, in trust for such persons as he should appoint by will; and in default of appointment, for his next of kin. The whole of the property stood vested in the trustees of the testator's will, but the mining shares and the Regent's Canal shares were transferred to the trustees of the settlement. The Colombian Bonds pass by delivery, but no delivery had been made, and the legal estate in the freehold had never been transferred. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff contending that the settlement, which was voluntary, was altogether void, filed his bill for administration of the testator's estate, and for an account and for a transfer to him of the property by the trustees of the will. The trustees, on the other hand, asserted that the amount of the property coming to the plaintiff had been settled and agreed to by the plaintiff when he came of age. But the trustees of the settlement supported it, at least so far as concerned the property actually transferred to them. The case now came on to be heard.

Rowpell and Southgate for the plaintiff.

Lloyd, R. Palmer, Sandys, Southgate, Allnutt, and Macnaghten, for the several defendants.

Cases cited:—Seele v. Law, 15 Sim. 95; Fortescue v. Barnett, 3 Myl. & K. 36; Ward v. Audland, 8 Beav. 201; Antrobus v. Smith, 12 Ves. 39; Beatson v. Beatson, 12 Sim. 281; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 4 Hare, 67; Ex parte Pye, 18 Ves. 140; Sloane v. Cadogan, Sugd. V. & P. app.; Meek v. Kettlewell, 1 Hare, 464; Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. 646; Blakeley v. Brady, 2 Dr. & W. 311.

The MASTER of the ROLLS stated the facts, and observed that the principle on which the Court acts in enforcing voluntary settlements was clear and well expressed by Sir William Grant in the case of Ellison v. Ellison, 6 Ves. and that rule has been followed in subsequent cases; but great difficulty sometimes arose in applying the principle to particular circumstances. He (the Master of the Rolls) purposely excluded those cases in which the settlor had executed abroad an obligation to make provision for the donee, and incurred a debt or liability; in which case the Court will always enforce it, as in the case of Fletcher v. Fletcher, 4 Hare. He confined himself to those cases in which the donor professed to assign some previously existing chose in action. If a person possessed of stock, &c. declared a trust of it in favour of volunteers, that would be perfectly good, there would be no difficulty, and the Court would execute the trust; or if he assigned his interest in a fund which was in the hands of trustees, and gave them notice of the assignment, and they acknowledged the notice, it was clear that they became trustees for the donee. But where no notice had been given to the trustees, or where they did not acknowledge the trust, the assignment constituted only an imperfect gift, and it was doubtful in what case the Court would interfere. His Honour then referred to and commented on the cases of Sloane v. Cadogan, Fortescue v. Barnett, Meek v. Kettlewell, Antrobus v. Smith, Beatson v. Beatson, and Blakeley v. Brady It was remarkable that in the present case the settlor did not profess to make the trustees of the will, in whose hands the funds were, trustees for the assignees of the settlement, but created fresh trustees; and no transfer was made to them, though there was nothing to prevent that from being done. After a consideration of all the authorities, he was of opinion that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust could not be created in the absence of any transfer; and that it must be considered to have been the settlor's intention that till a transfer took place, no such relation should arise. The only question then was, how far that transfer had in this case been made. The mining shares and Regent's canal shares it appeared had been transferred to the new trustees, and these shares, therefore, were bound by the trusts of the settlement. The Colombian Bonds, which passed by delivery, had not been delivered, and still remained in the custody of the trustees of the will. The same might be said with respect to the consols and cash balance, which still stood in the names of the trustees of the will; and they, as well as the Colombian Bonds, must be delivered to the plaintiff. He was of opinion, also, that no trust was created in the freehold estate. The settlor had only an equitable interest in it till he attained the age of twenty-five, and the settlement therefore was inoperative as a declaration of trust.

WILKINSON v. STRINGER.

Chancery Proceedings Amendment Act—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 39—Viva voce examination.

Where a case before the Court is not such upon the evidence that it would direct an issue on a matter of fact raised by the pleadings, the Court will not examine witnesses viva voce on the mere speculation as to what evidence might be elicited on such examination.

This was a suit by claim for the specific performance of an alleged agreement for the sale by Mr. Stringer, the defendant, to Mr. Wilkinson, the plaintiff, of a house, land of about twenty acres, and timber, at Peckham Fields, for the sum of 7,000*l.* It appeared that the transaction had been managed by agents on each side, Mr. Martin having been the agent for the plaintiff, the purchaser, while Mr. Wild was the party who acted as agent on behalf of Mr. Stringer. A deposit of 500*l.* was made. The affidavits of and on the part of the defendant made the case that Mr. Stringer never gave Mr. Wild authority to enter into the contract, and further, that it was well known to Mr. Martin, the agent of Mr. Wilkinson, that Mr. Wild had no authority; and also that both sides well knew, and mutually understood, that the whole agreement was conditional, and depended on the approbation of, and ratification by, the principal, Mr. Stringer.

Rolt and J. W. Borill for the plaintiff. The question now before the Court is simply one of fact, and is precisely one of the cases for which the recent statute was intended to provide. By the 39th section it is provided that upon the hearing of any cause, whether commenced by bill or by claim, the Court, if it shall see fit so to do, may require the production and oral examination before itself of any witness. Here, therefore, was a case for the interference of the Court in this manner, for the point being one of fact, it can examine into the matter by witnesses generally, and particularly by the examination of Mr. Wild, alleged by the plaintiff to be the authorised agent of Mr. Stringer.

Sir W. P. Wood and Webb opposed the application on behalf of the defendant. Here evidence has been deliberately gone into according to the established rules of the Court, and the plaintiff has failed in connecting the contract set up with the defendant. The evidence already taken may have proved Mr. Wild to have entered into the contract, but that is not enough, for it falls far short of shewing that any thing done was done by order or with the authority of the defendant. The way in which the case might have been proved, if proved it could be, was by examining Mr. Wild as a witness, and that was open to the plaintiff, and if he had failed to extract that proof from him, the Court would not have permitted the new statute to be made the means of enabling the plaintiff to re-examine his own witnesses by calling on them to give evidence orally in court. And, if so, there was no reason why now, the plaintiff having concluded his case, he should be allowed, because the Act had passed, to have the opportunity of calling evidence which he has already neglected to adduce.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The true view, I apprehend, to be taken of this provision of the Act of Parliament, is to consider whether, if this case had been brought forward by bill, and the defendant had answered, and the parties had gone into evidence, the case was one on which the Court would have directed an issue on the question of fact raised by the pleadings? If there be no such sufficient evidence in support of the plaintiff's case as to lead the Court to direct an issue in the case I have supposed, the Court will not, under the recent Act of Parliament, examine witnesses viva voce, on the mere speculation as to what evidence may come out on such examination. In the present case I am of opinion that there is no sufficient evidence to establish the alleged agency or authority of Mr. Wild sufficient to induce the Court to direct an issue, and, therefore, I think the case is not one in which an oral examination of the witnesses will be required. I shall dismiss this claim without giving the plaintiff liberty to file a bill. Since the new Act of Parliament, I would, in a proper case, order the witnesses to be examined, rather than put the parties to the expense and delay of filing a bill; and if in this particular suit a case had been made, which in my judgment there has not, I would have examined them in this court, as there is but one single issue, namely, that of agency, and such an issue is a fit subject for such an examination.

LAMBERT v. LOMAS.

Chancery Proceedings Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 6—17th of the New Orders—Filing of interrogatories.

Where a bill, written, had been filed which prayed an injunction, and the defendant had appeared, the Court directed interrogatories to be received and gave the plaintiff leave to file them, although the printed bill had not been filed.

This was an application for the direction of the Court to the officers to permit interrogatories to be filed. A bill had been filed, not printed but written, as the same prayed for an injunction, such a course of proceeding being allowed by the 6th section of the Chancery Proceedings Amendment Act, which enacts, that notwithstanding the preceding directions as to the filing of a printed copy of the bill, the clerks of records and writs may receive and file a written copy of any bill of complaint praying a writ of injunction. The 16th of the General Orders requires the plaintiff to file his interrogatories within eight days after the time limited for the defendant's appearance, and as in this case the defendant had appeared, and as the before-mentioned section went on to direct that the printed copy of the bill, in such a case, must be filed within fourteen days from the time of filing the written copy, the fear was that the interrogatories, if not received by the record and writ clerk, would not be in time.

Amphlett, in support of the motion, stated, that a doubt had been expressed by the clerks of records and writs, whether in such a case they were authorised in receiving and filing the interrogatories before the printed bill was on the file.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I do not think there needed any doubt upon this point. The interrogatories ought to have been received, and must now be received and filed, and I give the plaintiff leave to file them, although the printed copy of the bill is not yet on the file, but of course the requisitions of the statute in that respect will be strictly complied with.

CRAMER v. CRAMER.

Trustee Act, 1850—Infant out of jurisdiction.

The sole trustee of a sum of stock, who was an infant out of the jurisdiction, was held not to be a "sole trustee of stock out of the jurisdiction," within the provisions of the 22nd section of the above Act.

This was a petition under the Trustee Act, 1850, for an order to vest in another person the right to transfer a sum of Consols, standing in the name of Victoria Harriet Cramer, an infant, who was resident out of the jurisdiction. On the 25th of March, 1841, Harriet Sarah Cramer, who was a widow, resident in Switzerland, invested a sum of 1,800*l.* in Consols, in the names of herself, her son, and V. H. Cramer, her granddaughter. Mrs. Cramer and her son afterwards died, leaving V. H. Cramer surviving. In the suit of Cramer v. Cramer, in which this petition was presented, it was declared that V. H. Cramer was absolutely entitled to one half of the sum of Consols, and that she was a trustee of the other half for the executrix of the son. V. H. Cramer being a minor, and out of the jurisdiction, this petition prayed an order to vest the right to transfer the stock as before mentioned.

The 22nd section of the Trustee Act, 1850, provides that, "When any sole trustee of any stock or chose in action shall be out of the jurisdiction of the said Court, or cannot be found, or it shall be uncertain whether he be living or dead, it shall be lawful for the said Court to make an order vesting the right to transfer such stock, or to receive the dividends or income thereof, or to sue for and recover such chose in action, or any interest in respect thereof, in any person or persons the said Court may appoint." It was admitted that neither the present Act, nor the 1 Wm. 4, c. 60, applied to the case of an infant sole trustee within the jurisdiction; but it was submitted that where a sole infant trustee was out of the jurisdiction, the provisions of the 22nd section of the present Act applied.

Headlam and Hetherington appeared in support of the petition.

Friday, Feb. 26.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the question on this petition was whether an infant, who had been declared by the Court to be a sole trustee of a sum of stock, and who was out of the jurisdiction, could be dealt with as a sole trustee out of the jurisdiction under the 22nd section of the Trustee Act 1850. The Act applied to two entirely different classes or conditions of trustees; one of which consisted of those trustees who were unable to act by reason of their incapacity or lunacy. The other consisted of trustees who were out of the jurisdiction, or could not be found, or who refused to act: and these provisions were quite separate. The case of an infant trustee out of the jurisdiction would be the same as that of a lunatic trustee in the same position, but a lunatic trustee would not be under the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, but under that of the Lord Chancellor in lunacy. Supposing, then, that a sole trustee being a lunatic, were out of the jurisdiction, that could not enable the Court of Chancery to deal with his estate. It would be impossible to say that he was less a lunatic by reason of his being out of the jurisdiction, and therefore construe the Act as enabling this Court to deal with him; that would be to transfer, by implication, the jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor in lunacy to this Court. So in the present case the Act did not apply to an infant sole trustee of stock, who was within the jurisdiction, and it could not be extended by implication to the case of an infant sole trustee of stock who was out of the jurisdiction of the Court. No order, therefore, could be made on the present petition. (a)

MOATE v. MOATE.

Will—Construction.

"Survivors and survivor" held not to be understood as others and other.

Robert Moate, by his will dated the 10th of June, 1833, gave the dividends of 3,000*l.* stock to his wife for her life, and directed that after her decease the dividends should be applied for the maintenance of his son John for his life, and, after the decease of John, the testator bequeathed the sum to his (the testator's) four children, Mary, Joseph, Samuel, and Septimus, to be equally divided between them, share and share alike, and directed that in case of the death of either of them in the lifetime of John, the share of him, her, or them so dying should be divided among all and every the child or children of him, her, or them so dying in the lifetime of John, upon such child or children attaining the age of twenty-one years, and in case of the death of any or either of them, the said Mary, Joseph, Samuel, and Septimus, during the life of John, without leaving issue, then the testator directed that the share of him, her, or them so dying should be divided among the survivors and survivor of them the said Mary, Joseph, Samuel, and Septimus. The testator died in September 1834, and his widow died in December 1845. John died in June 1846, leaving only Joseph and Septimus him surviving, Samuel having died in May 1839, leaving nine children, and Mary having died in June 1839, leaving no issue. The question raised in this case was, whether the children of Samuel were entitled to any part of Mary's share.

Taylor, for the plaintiffs.

Campbell, for the defendants.

The following cases were referred to: Willetts v. Willetts, 7 Hare, 38; Leeming v. Sherratt, 2 Hare, 14; Crowder v. Stone, 3 Russ. 217; and Davidson v. Dallas, 14 Ves. 576.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he ought not to go beyond the words of the will, which in this case were unambiguous. The stock was given to four persons and the child or children of such of them as might die in John's lifetime; and in case of the death of any or either of them in John's lifetime without leaving issue, then the share of him, her, or them so dying was to be divided among the survivors or survivor of them. Samuel, one of the four persons, died in John's lifetime, leaving children—his one-fourth share went to his children. Mary, another of the four persons, died in John's lifetime, but without issue—her share therefore went to the two survivors of the four persons named.

WATERS v. WOOD.

Will—Construction.

A testator by his will gave to A. B. all the policies he had effected in the X. and Y. offices, and the moneys payable in respect thereof, and he gave to his wife all the other policies he had effected in other offices, and the money payable in respect thereof; and then he gave to his wife all his shares in public companies. By a codicil the testator revoked the bequest of the life insurances to his wife, and gave the said insurances and all his shares in the S. society to his wife for life, and afterwards to A. B. The testator never effected any insurance in the X. or Y. offices, but he had shares in them and in the S. society, and also two policies of insurance in the L. association:

Held, that the shares in the X. and Y. offices did not pass to A. B. under the bequest of the policies in those offices.

John Wood, the testator in this special case, by his will gave to the plaintiff "all the policies of life assurance which he had effected in the Union and Law Life Assurance Offices, and the moneys payable in respect thereof," and he bequeathed to his wife "all and singular the other policies which he had effected in any other office, or offices, and the money payable in respect thereof, to and for her own absolute use and benefit." The testator then, after making several bequests, gave and bequeathed to his wife all his goods, chattels, and shares in public companies not thereinbefore specifically bequeathed. By a codicil to his will, the testator thus provided:—"Whereas I have in and by my said will given and bequeathed certain life assurances to my wife absolutely, now I do hereby revoke the said bequest to my said wife, and bequeath the said insurances and also all my shares in the life assurance society called the Sun, unto my said wife for her life, and after her decease I bequeath the same unto my said niece (the plaintiff), her executors, administrators, and assigns." The testator had not at any time during his life effected any policy of life insurance either in the Union or the Law Life Assurance Society; but at the date of his will, and thence up to the time of his death, he was a holder of twenty shares in each of these companies. The only policies of life insurance which he had effected at the date of his will were two on his own life in the London Life Assurance Association. At the same period he was also possessed of sixteen shares in the Sun Life Assurance Society, and seven shares in the Sun Fire Insurance Society. The principal question proposed to the Court in this special case was, whether the twenty shares in the Union Life Assurance Office, and the twenty shares in the Law Life Assurance Office, or either of them, passed to the plaintiff by the bequest to her of all the policies of life assurance which the testator had effected in the Union and Law Life Assurance Offices, and the moneys payable in respect thereof.

Daniel and Speed, for the plaintiff.

Campbell and Kenyon, for the testator's widow.

C. M. Roupell, for the trustees and executors.

Daniel in reply.

The following cases were cited: Door v. Geary, 1 Ves. sen. 255; Selwood v. Mildmay, 3 Ves. 306; Dobson v. Waterman, 3 Ves. 398, n.; Pentecost v. Lee, 2 J. & W. 207; Gallini v. Noble, 3 Mer. 631; Finch v. Inglis, 3 Bro. Ch. Ca. 120; Hewson v. Reed, 5 Madd. 451; King v. Wright, 14 Sim. 400; and Evans v. Tripp, 6 Madd. 91.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that it was quite apparent, from the will and codicil taken together, that the testator at the time he executed the will, believed that he had policies of insurance in the Law Life and Union Insurance Companies, and that what he meant to give was those policies which he imagined he had. That being the testator's intention, the shares in those companies would not pass. The present differed from those cases where the testator intended to give what he really had, but made an error in describing it; here the testator believed he was possessed of something, which it turned out that he had not, and he meant to give that which he did not possess. In the will and codicil, the testator spoke of "shares," plainly meaning shares, and none of the authorities cited would justify the Court in deciding that the bequest of the policies would pass the shares which he had. The principle upon which his Honour decided the case was, that the testator, thinking that he had policies, intended to give such policies; and the Court could not, under such circumstances, give the shares to the legatee. When the testator intended to give shares, he so described them, and it was plain that by the term "policies" he meant policies. The question, therefore, as to the shares must be answered in the negative. The costs of all parties must come out of the estate.

VICE-CHANCELLOR STUART'S COURT.

Reported by GEO. S. ALINUTT, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, Nov. 11.

MACKINTOSH v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86—Mode of taking evidence.

Upon the application of the defendants, the Court directed that the evidence in a cause, in which issue had been joined on the 18*th of May last, and in which a witness had been examined de bene esse, should be taken in the mode prescribed by the above Act, and Orders of 7th August,* 1852.

Bacon and T. Stevens, on behalf of the defendants in this case, moved that the evidence to be used at the hearing of the cause might be taken in the mode prescribed by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the General Orders of the 7th of August, 1852. They referred to the 31st Order of 7th August, 1852. Issue was joined on the 18th of May last.

Russell and Bazalgette, for the plaintiff, opposed the application, and said that already a portion of the evidence had been taken under the old system (one of the witnesses having been examined de bene esse on account of his great age and infirmity). It would, therefore, be extremely inconvenient to have the evidence taken partly in one way and partly in the other. The 31st Order required that the plaintiff should, within seven days after issue joined, give notice to the defendant of the mode in which he desired the evidence to be taken, and that period had long since expired. Besides this, no good ground had been shown for the application.

Bacon, in reply, referred to the 46th Order of 7th August, 1852, as enabling the Court to enlarge or abridge the time for doing any act, or taking any proceedings.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the provisions of the Act of Parliament of the last session, which had been referred to in the argument, and the provisions of the General Orders of the Court for effectuating the purposes of that Act, and made under the authority of that Act, had imposed upon the Court in this case, and were likely to impose upon the Court in cases of a similar nature, a task of very great difficulty and great importance, with a view to the interests of parties engaged in litigation before the Court. Here the defendants asked that the evidence upon the matters in issue between themselves and the plaintiff in this case might be taken according to a system and practice hitherto new and untried. The plaintiff, on the other hand, resisted that application, and asked the Court to allow the evidence in this cause to proceed under the old system, he having filed his bill at a time when he had reason to expect that he would have the means of proving his case under the old system, and under no other. His Honour was, therefore, to decide upon the construction of the Act of Parliament, and these orders, and upon the facts brought before the Court to guide its discretion in this case, whether it was proper that the application should be granted. Now, in the first place, the plaintiff resisted the application upon this ground, that nothing has been shewn in support of this application that was sufficient for the Court to grant it; nay, if the Court granted the application in this case to have the evidence taken under the new system, it must be a motion of course in every other case pending before the Court; and when the cause was at issue before the Orders came into operation, it must be a motion of course to have the evidence taken under the new system. His Honour did not think that was an accurate view of the case, or of the grounds upon which the Court was applied to here. He thought that it by no means followed that if the Court in this case should grant the application, it must grant it in every other case. There were matters here brought before the Court that were not matters that must occur in every other case, which was brought before the Court, to guide its discretion, and, as the party moving asserted, which gave good ground for the Court to proceed in the case in the exercise of its discretion upon those special grounds, which might not be applicable to any other case pending before the Court. Now, it was perfectly plain that the intention of the Act of Parliament was, that the mode of taking evidence in cases before the Court should be altered, because the old mode was considered to be defective; it was also evident that it was in the contemplation of the judges of this Court, who had authority to make Orders suspending the operation of these enactments, that cases might occur in which it might be highly inconvenient, and not at all conducive to the principles of justice, to extend the new system to causes actually at issue, and in which the evidence might be taken either altogether, or to a great extent, according to the old system. Cases might occur, it was conceived, in which evidence taken according to the old system in causes already at issue, might be allowed to be used with reference to the matters in issue, in such a way as to have those matters disposed of in a perfectly satisfactory way, and it was conceived, he presumed from the terms of the General Orders, that the majority of cases were likely to be cases in which, to a great extent, the evidence had been completed under the old system. Now, the present case was not a case of that kind at all. In the present case, in the month of September last, no interrogatories had been filed; nothing had happened except that the cause was simply at issue; and in the month of September last, the plaintiff was aware that the defendants' view of the matter was, consistently with the view of the Legislature, that nothing having been done at the time towards the taking of the evidence in the cause in the one way or the other, it was desirable that the evidence should be taken according to that system which the Legislature had declared to be the best. If it was the view of the General Order of the 7th of August last, that in the majority of causes at issue, the evidence might have been taken to a considerable extent, that Order did not apply to the present case. His Honour, therefore, thought that the argument grounded upon the terms of the General Orders of the 7th of August, and that section which had been referred to, did not apply to the present case at all. He thought that here, where nothing had been done, except the cause simply being at issue, it was open to the defendants to shew the Court that, nothing having been done as to the mode of taking the evidence, from the nature of the points at issue in the cause, it was more convenient that the new mode should be resorted to. It was next suggested, on the part of the plaintiff, that he ought not to be made the victim of a new experiment; that he had begun his litigation under the old system, and ought to be permitted to proceed under it. But that was a matter on which the General Orders of the Court had authorised his Honour to exercise a discretion. The difficulty of the task was rendered more difficult by the assertion of the plaintiff of his right to proceed in the course in which he had begun; still it was his Honour's duty, looking at the matters in issue between the parties, and the way in which the evidence was proposed to be taken, to decide upon the conflicting views of the plaintiff and the defendants, in which of the two ways justice would be administered between the parties most expeditiously and most cheaply, so as to be satisfactorily administered. Now, when his Honour looked to the matters in issue in the cause, they seemed to him, if the new system was worth anything, to be such matters as were particularly within the view of the Legislature in altering the mode in which evidence should be taken. No doubt the old system of taking evidence in this Court was a defective mode, its defect was always felt; but it was to be considered, that as to the new mode he must be a very bold man who would say that, even as to the new mode, there were not defects in the mode of taking evidence by examining witnesses viva voce and by affidavit in the form contemplated. There might be proved to be defects of a very formidable kind, but if his Honour found that the Legislature in its wisdom, looking at the defects on both sides, was of opinion that the new mode was likely to be more effectual than the old, and had made it imperative, as the order had made it imperative, when the cause was not at issue before the new orders came into operation, that the new mode should be pursued; his Honour thought that in the peculiar circumstances of this case it was fit and proper, and a discreet thing on the part of the Court, to allow the evidence to proceed in the mode which the Legislature had declared to be the best. He was influenced in coming to that conclusion very much by the fact, that in point of delay and expense so far as one could speculate upon such matters, the delay and expense were likely to be much less in bringing the litigation to its ultimate result by proceeding by the examination of witnesses under the new system than under the old, if the new system were worth anything at all; and his Honour was not at liberty, sitting in that court, to say that the new system was not the better system of the two, since it was that which had received the sanction of the Legislature in consequence of the defects in the old. Upon the whole, therefore, he thought that in the exercise of his discretion, as well as he could exercise it, this was a case in which the application of the defendants ought to be granted; and in disposing of this case his Honour had felt it to be his duty, as he should in all these cases, to struggle as much as possible with any difficulties or uncertainties that might arise from the language of the Act of Parliament, and from the language of the orders of this Court, to struggle with any difficulties of that kind, in order to effectuate what was the great object of the Act of Parliament, and of the orders of the Court, to enable parties to meet on equal terms in that Court, and have the questions between them disposed of with as little delay and with as little expense as possible.

MACKINTOSH v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 20—Production of documents by the plaintiff.

Upon the motion of the defendants in a suit the Court ordered the production by the plaintiff upon oath of certain documents and classes of documents specified in the notice of motion relating to the matters in question in the suit.

Bacon and T. Stevens, in this case on behalf of defendants, moved, under the 20th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, for the production by the plaintiff on oath of certain documents and classes of documents specified in the notice of motion, and all other documents relating to the matters in question in the suit in his possession or power.

Russell and Bazalgette, for the plaintiff, opposed the motion. By an affidavit filed in opposition it appeared that the production of these documents would be attended with the greatest inconvenience to the plaintiff, who was unable from his engagements to devote the necessary time to the selection of them, &c. They referred to the 19th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86; and Flett v. Mullins, ante, p. 50.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that with reference to that case it might be as well to say, that by some of those who took part in framing the Act it was intended that the Act should apply to a general production, as proposed by the motion in that case. Upon the best construction, however, it had been felt that the words of the Act entirely failed to effectuate that intention.

Bazalgette contended that the terms of the notice of motion were too general, and referred to Attorney-General v. Wilson, 9 Sim. 526.

Bacon in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he thought upon the whole the defendants had entitled themselves to an order against the plaintiff in this case. The application was made under the 20th section of the Act of last session, c. 86. The terms in which the enactment of that section was expressed were very large and comprehensive. It had been stated very justly that the view of the Legislature in the enactment of that section was to give to a defendant, without the more costly process of a bill of discovery, means of obtaining the production of documents in the possession of the plaintiff, which related to the matters in question in the suit; it, however, imposed upon the Court the duty of exercising a discretion in ordering such production, for very obvious reasons; because there might be many documents in the possession or power of the plaintiff relating to matters in question in the suit, the production of which might be altogether nugatory or unnecessary. What he had to consider on the present occasion was, whether it appeared from the evidence before the Court that there were in this case documents in the possession of the plaintiff, relating to the matters in question in the cause, which it was fit and proper, from the information which the Court had before it as to the nature of the litigation and the nature of these documents, that it should order the production on oath by the plaintiff. Now, his Honour found in this case that the subject-matter of the suit was the right of the plaintiff, which he asserted to recover from the defendants certain sums of money which he alleged to be due to him under certain contracts that subsisted between them. He found that, in the course of the litigation, the plaintiff thought it material for his case to compel the defendant to the most ample discovery and production of documents in the defendant's possession relating to the subject of the suit. He found, moreover, that from the evidence now before him, the defendant alleged, and the plaintiff admits, that he had in his possession documents relating to the matters in question in the cause. What his Honour had to consider was, whether, upon this general admission, it was proper that there should be a production ordered at the instance of the defendants. Now it appeared, strangely enough, from the case stated by the plaintiff in his own affidavit, that an enormous mass of documents relating to matters in question in this cause were in his possession; that he had been litigating upon the matter to which the documents related for five years, and had never for himself ascertained the contents of those documents so as to be able to state whether they did immediately relate to the matters in such a way as to enable the Court to exercise a more particular judgment upon their contents as to the matters in question in the cause. His Honour thought, upon a litigation which had been conducted under such circumstances with regard to the documents which related to the subject-matter of the litigation, in the possession of the plaintiff himself, that the case was pre-eminently one in which the Court should exercise its discretion in favour of the defendants, so as to give the most ample means of investigation as to the nature of those documents. The want of diligence, he did not say of caution, on the part of the plaintiff himself with reference to these documents was a very strong reason for the Court exercising its utmost power to give the defendants the means of investigation on their part of the contents of these documents. He therefore thought it was his duty to make an order according to the terms of the notice of motion, with some qualification with reference to the time. What the Act of Parliament authorised him to make would be an order for the production on oath by the plaintiff; that was, the plaintiff must, under the order his Honour was about to make, state more particularly on oath the nature of those documents which were in his possession. It was needless for his Honour to consider, in the present state of the matter, any question that might arise with reference to the form in which that oath would be made by the plaintiff. All that he could do was, in the terms of the Act of Parliament, to order him to produce them on oath, and to give him a reasonable time for that production. The time asked by the notice of motion was twenty-eight days, which he thought was too short. If the parties could arrange between themselves the time within which the affidavit could be made, he would make the order. His Honour was aware that the plaintiff in his affidavit had stated that great inconvenience and great loss to himself would accrue from the investigation, which would be necessary in consequence of the order that his Honour was about to make: that inconvenience and that loss had been already incurred by these defendants in reference to a similar investigation as to documents in their possession, at his instance; and his Honour did not think it rested with the plaintiff, therefore, who had commenced the litigation, to object to any degree of inconvenience and expense to himself that might arise from what was necessary, in order that complete justice might be done between the parties: but it was the duty of the Court to see that nothing unreasonable or harsh was exacted by the defendants, by the order of the Court, with reference to that expense and inconvenience to which he must necessarily be put. His Honour therefore wished the parties would agree, if possible, to some proper time, to be mentioned, in order to enable the order of the Court to fix a time.

By arrangement, the period of two months was afterwards fixed upon.

Ex parte WINTHROP, re THE UNIVERSAL SALVAGE COMPANY.

Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act—Creditor. By arrangement between the directors of a company, 3,000l. was, on the 15th of August, 1845, paid by A. B. a director, into the company's account, the same being stated to be advanced in equal proportions by A. B., C. D. and seven other directors. On the 25th of August it was resolved, that each party making such advance should be allowed sixty shares as a security for the same, with liberty to retain such shares in satisfaction thereof, or to return the same, and claim the repayment of such advances out of the company's funds. C. D. and the seven others gave a joint and several bond to A. B. for the amount and interest. The sum was not paid to A. B. when due, and another security by way of a policy of assurance for 5,000l. on W.'s life, and a warrant of attorney, by C. D. and the others, to secure the payment of the premiums, was given. Default was made in payment of the premiums. An execution was issued on the warrant of attorney against C. D. and another only. C. D. subsequently paid the money. The company being in course of winding up under the above Acts, C. D. was placed on the list of contributories in respect of the sixty shares. He afterwards claimed to be a creditor in respect of the sum so paid by him, but it was Held, that the sixty shares had been retained by him in satisfaction of the debt.

This was a motion by way of appeal from a decision of Master Farrer, disallowing certain claims of Mr. Winthrop against the Universal Salvage Company. The Company was formed in April 1844, and therefore previous to the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. Formal registration under that Act was, however, effected on the 30th of December, 1844; the deed of settlement was dated the 18th of August, 1845; and the company was completely registered on the 9th of January, 1846. On the 1st of August, 1845, it was resolved "That a sum not exceeding 3,000*l.* be raised as early as possible on the joint security of the directors and officers of this company, to carry out the operations of this company; the following gentlemen having consented to join in the security, viz. Captain Samuel Price, R.N.; the Hon. Capt. Lord Viscount Ingestre, R.N; the Hon. C. J. Murray; Captain Edward Norcott, R.N.; Edward G. Winthrop, esq.; Robert W. Wood, esq.; Dr. William Marshall; John Watson, jun. esq.; Thomas E. Wyche, esq. That in the event of the money being obtained as above, an agreement shall be entered into by the foregoing gentlemen to limit the liability of each and others that may consent." On the 15th of August it was resolved "that the directors, solicitors, and auditors should themselves advance the amount" (3,000*l.*); and "That all moneys received from this day should form an accumulating fund for the repayment of the said 3,000*l.*" On the 19th of August a cheque for 3,000*l.* was drawn by Mr. Murray, and paid into the company's account. A joint and several bond by Mr. Winthrop and the others was thereupon given to Mr. Murray for the repayment of 3,075*l.* and interest on the 15th of February, 1846. On the 26th of August, 1845, it was resolved by the directors, "That in conformity with the resolution of the 15th August inst. the sum of 3,300*l.* had been advanced and placed to the company's credit in equal proportions by the following directors and officers, for a period of six months from this date, namely, Col. G. Coffin, 300*l.*; Lord Ingestre, 300*l.*; Honourable C. J. Murray, 300*l.*; Dr. W. Marshall, 300*l.*; E. G. Winthrop, 300*l.*; R. W. Wood, esq. 300*l.*; John Watson, jun. esq. 300*l.*; T. E. Wyche, esq. 300*l.*; A. Prince, esq. 300*l.*—3,000*l.*;" and "That each party making such advance be allowed sixty shares as a security for the same, with liberty to retain such shares in satisfaction thereof, or to return the same, and claim the repayment of such advances out of the company's funds." Upon the bond becoming due it was not paid; and in July 1846, it was agreed that the time for payment should be enlarged, upon the terms that 2,835*l.* (being the amount and interest which would be due on the 31st July, 1846, to Mr. Murray, after deducting 300*l.* erroneously included in the original amount), should be secured by a policy of insurance for 5,000*l.* on the life of Mr. Watson, and a warrant of attorney. By the deed of arrangement then signed by the parties, it was agreed that no judgment or execution should be entered up upon the warrant of attorney, unless default was made in payment of the premiums on the policy. The second year's premium upon the policy was by accident omitted to be paid; and Mr. Murray thereupon, on the 27th July, 1847, signed separate judgments against all the parties to the warrant of attorney, but issued execution against Mr. Winthrop and Mr. Wyche only. These gentlemen, on the 14th of August, 1847, filed a bill against Mr. Murray and the remaining seven directors, to stay proceedings at law; and on the same day an injunction was granted. This injunction was dissolved on the 18th of August; and on the following day another injunction was obtained, upon the plaintiffs paying the sum in dispute into Court. On the 30th of January, 1850, the cause came on to be heard, when the bill was dismissed with costs, the sum remaining in court after taxation and payment of costs to be transferred to Mr. Murray. The company having been ordered to be wound up, Mr. Winthrop claimed to be repaid the sum which he had so paid to Mr. Murray, less some few contributions which he (Winthrop) had obtained from his co-obligors. Mr. Winthrop's name had been placed on the list of contributories in respect of sixty shares.

Baggallay appeared in support of the application.—This money had been applied for the partnership purposes of the company. By the fifth clause of the deed of settlement, all arrangements made, and engagements and contracts entered into, by the persons who had conducted or managed the affairs of the company since the projection and formation thereof, were ratified and confirmed. The 102nd clause provided that the costs and expenses attendant upon the outfit, establishment, and management, and carrying on the business of the company, &c. should be paid out of the deposits on the shares. The option given by the resolution of the 26th of August, 1845, to retain the sixty shares, had not been yet exercised by Mr. Winthrop, who had merely held them as a security.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Russell and Selwyn for the official manager), said that the only question was whether Mr. Winthrop, who claimed to be a creditor of the company, was a creditor, or was to be treated as a person who had been a creditor, but whose claim had been satisfied. His Honour considered that the Master came to a right conclusion in holding that Mr. Winthrop was no longer entitled to be considered as a creditor, for it appeared extremely plain that he had exercised his option with regard to the sixty shares. Assuming what was in his Honour's opinion the fact, that Mr. Winthrop was entitled to be considered a creditor of the company, it appeared by the resolution of the 26th of August, 1845, that provision was made for giving Mr. Winthrop, and the persons who stood in the same position with him, shares, which they had the power of keeping in satisfaction of their debt, or returning. There was no doubt about the terms of the resolution. In this state of things, and up to the time when Mr. Winthrop applied to prove his debt against the company, he had not returned the shares, under the liberty which he had of doing so; but he had retained them, exercising all the rights in respect of them; and his name had been placed on the list of contributories in respect of these very shares. On all questions then between Mr. Winthrop and the company, all the liabilities as well as the rights in respect of the shares were fastened upon him. Whether the result were benefit or liability was of no consequence; it was enough to say that he had not made use of his liberty to return the shares, and if he asked now to do so, it was too late, for he must be treated as having retained them in satisfaction of his debt.

Motion refused with costs.

Ex parte FENN, re THE PENNANT AND CRAIGWEN CONSOLIDATED LEAD MINING COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Contributory.

A company was formed for working, on the cost-book system, a mine (of which they had a lease) in Wales, and by one of the rules a shareholder might determine his liability by giving notice to the purser of his desire to retire, and depositing with the purser the transfer of his shares, and signing a relinquishment of his claims on the company in respect of the shares. A. B. having shares in the company, signed a document, furnished to him at the company's office, relinquishing his shares. The affairs of the company being afterwards ordered to be wound up, it was Held, that A. B. was not a contributory in respect of these shares.

This was a motion, on behalf of Mr. Joseph Fenn, to discharge an order of Master Tinney retaining Mr. Fenn's name on the list of contributories of the above-named company. By the prospectus and rules of the company, which mentioned a lease of the mines held by them, it was stated that the company was formed upon the cost-book principle. The 24th rule provided "That any shareholder may determine his or her responsibility or liability with respect to the affairs of these mines upon his or her giving notice in writing to the purser of the company for the time being of his or her desire of retiring from the company; and also, upon depositing with the said purser the transfer of the shares held by him or her, and signing a relinquishment of all claims or demands on the company in respect of such share or shares." In August 1851 Mr. Fenn signed a document, procured for that purpose from the company's office, relinquishing his shares. The affairs of the company having been ordered to be wound up, under the provisions of the Winding-up Acts, the Master placed Mr. Fenn's name on the list of contributories in respect of these shares.

Selwyn appeared in support of the application.

Roxburgh, for the official manager, contended that as the cost-book principle was applicable to Cornwall only, and these mines were in Wales, the company could not be properly formed upon that principle. Mr. Fenn was unable, according to the 24th rule, to retire from the company without doing three things, viz. give notice in writing to the purser, deposit with the purser the transfer of the shares held by him, and sign a relinquishment of all claims on the company in respect of his shares. Mr. Fenn having complied with the third only of these requisitions, he could not be held to have exonerated himself from liability in respect of his shares. In any event, Mr. Fenn would be liable for rent due at the time he relinquished his shares.

Selwyn in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that although the facts of this case were not so clearly before the Court as might be desired, he must assume, from the document admitted between the parties, that the company had been conducted on the cost-book principle; and that the subject-matter of the partnership was the lease of a lead mine. In the case, two questions arose. Fenn said that he relinquished his shares in the company in such a way as, according to the stipulations subsisting between the parties, absolved him from all further liability. If that were so, it would require, in order to justify the Master in placing his name on the list of contributories, that it should be shewn there was some liability antecedent to the date of the relinquishment, for which he was still responsible. As to relinquishing the shares, his Honour was of opinion, on the best construction he could put upon the words of the instrument which had been produced, that what had been done by Fenn amounted to a relinquishment of his shares within the 24th rule. If so, did there remain any liability in respect of which his name should be placed on the list of contributories? It had been suggested on behalf of the official manager that there was a liability still subsisting in respect of the lease, which was the subject-matter of the partnership, as to which Mr. Fenn might still be called upon. Keeping in view that the principle of the cost-book system was one which made a shareholder liable for no more than the sum he had paid down, unless that amount had been increased by some subsequent arrangement between the parties, and keeping in view that the subject-matter of the partnership was a lease vested in the managing partners for the benefit of the whole concern, and that the amount to be subscribed by each shareholder must have had reference to what was necessary to answer liabilities in respect to that lease, his Honour did not consider that he had enough before him, nor could he say the Master had enough before him to justify him in holding Mr. Fenn liable for arrears of rent before he relinquished his shares, or any other debt beyond the stipulations of the deed. Mr. Fenn's name, therefore, must be removed from the list.

Ex parte WOOD, re THE WORCESTER CORN EXCHANGE COMPANY.

Joint-stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Contributory.

This was a motion on behalf of Mr. Joseph Wood, a builder, that the decision of Master Farrer, that Mr. Wood's name be included in the list of contributories in respect of ten shares in the above-named company, might be reversed or varied; and that Mr. Wood's name might be struck out of the said list. Mr. Wood was a builder at Worcester, and was interested in a rival company projected there for a similar object to that of the Worcester Corn Exchange Company. Upon, however, being assured that the rival company was abandoned, Mr. Wood proposed to take four shares in this company, and, as he alleged, under a misrepresention, he signed the subscriber's agreement, and to his signature the number ten, as the number of shares to be taken by him, was afterwards added. Mr. Wood, however, never made any payment in respect of the shares, nor was his name returned to the Registration Office as a shareholder. The company was formed in 1848, and was completely registered under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110. The deed was dated the 8th of May, 1848.

Roxburgh, in support of the application, referred to Bird's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 47; and Ex parte Yelland, 19 Law T. 30.(a) He contended, that upon the evidence, which was conflicting, it appeared that the blanks for the date and number of shares opposite to Mr. Wood's name, had been filled in after he had signed the subscriber's agreement. The deed became void, and the company was in fact never established, inasmuch as there were not, as he contended, the necessary number of shares taken within three months after the date of the deed.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Glasse and Smythe for the official manager), refused the motion, with costs.

BOLCKOW v. THE HERNE BAY PIER COMPANY.

Bond—Right to sue, although Act excludes priority among creditors.

By a Pier Act 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 112 (private), the company were enabled to borrow money upon bond, and it was provided that all creditors upon such securities should be equally entitled to a claim or lien on the rates, tolls, &c. in proportion to the sums secured, and without any preference by reason of priority of date or on any other account:

Held, that the right to sue by action upon the bond was not thereby taken away.

Debt on bond for a sum certain, payable on a day certain, with interest.

The defendant, after setting out the bond and condition on oyer, demurred.

The bond was given by the Herne Bay Pier Company for money borrowed in pursuance of the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 112 (local and personal), and the 9th and 11th sections thereof were cited in the argument.

Sect. 9. If the company shall think it expedient to borrow the sum of 30,000*l.* or any part thereof, by bond or bonds under their common seal, it shall be lawful for them to do so; and the money so secured shall be payable in such manner, and at such time, and at such legal or less rate of interest as the company shall think proper; and the rents, rates, tolls, and profits which shall from time to time arise in respect of the said undertaking shall be a security for the money so to be borrowed, with interest; and all persons to whom any such securities, either by way of mortgage or bond, shall be given or transferred, or in whom they shall become vested, shall be equally entitled to a claim or lien on the said rents, rates, tolls, and profits, in proportion to the respective sums thereby to be secured, and without any preference, by reason of the priority of date of any of such securities, or on any other account whatsoever.

Sect. 11. The interest of money borrowed by mortgage or bond shall be paid half-yearly, and in case any such interest, or any part thereof, shall be unpaid for thirty days after it is due and after demand, two justices may, by order, appoint a receiver of the rents, rates, tolls, and profits to the use of the person to whom such interest shall be due, but in case such power shall not be resorted to, the interest so due may be sued for and recovered, with costs, by action of debt.

Willes, in support of the demurrer. The Act of Parliament is recited in the condition of the bond, and shews that the bond was given in pursuance of the Act. Then sect. 9, placing creditors upon an equal footing, and forbidding any priority, and sect. 11, enabling the creditors to apply to have a receiver appointed, shew that it would be defeating the object of the Act to allow one bondholder to sue, and so by judgment obtain priority over the other creditors. (Doe dem. Wyatt v. The St. Helen's and Runporn Gap Railway Company, 2 Q.B. 364; Pontet v. The Basingstoke Canal Company, 3 Bing. N.C. 433; Hart v. The Eastern Union Railway Company, 7 Ex. 246; 19 Law T. Rep. 314, S.C. in error.)

Addison, contrà.—Section 11 enables a bondholder to sue by action for nonpayment of interest, and non constat, that the plaintiff is suing for more at present. The plaintiff may assign breaches of the condition in his replication, and so shew that his claim at present is confined to the nonpayment of interest. But upon section 9 there is nothing to take away the plaintiff's right to sue upon this bond, which the company had power to give; and the bond being given, the right to sue for breach of the condition follows, and there must be express words to take away that right. Doe dem. Banks v. Booth, 2 B. & P. 219, shews that a mortgagee may maintain ejectment for toll houses and gates in order to repay himself the interest due, notwithstanding by the Act all the mortgagees were to be creditors upon the tolls in an equal degree.

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.—All that we have to decide now is, whether an action can be maintained upon the bond of the company in this form. No doubt the 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 112 (private), by sec. 9, in the most express terms, enables the company to enter into a bond in this form, the condition being the payment of the principal on a day certain. Well, then, primâ facie an action lies upon it for breach of the condition, and it lies on the defendant to shew something to prevent the action being maintained. Mr. Willes relies on the words in section 9, "and all persons to whom any such securities shall be given, &c. shall be equally entitled to a claim or lien on the said rents, rates, tolls, and profits in proportion, &c. and without any preference," &c. I do not know that it is necessary to refer these words to the power of suing on the securities; but at all events for the nonpayment of the interest, the breach whereof may be assigned in the replication, this action may be maintained by section 11. None of the cases cited by Mr. Willes apply to such a bond as this, and indeed Hart v. The Eastern Union Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 314, is an authority against him.

COLERIDGE, J.—I confess it strikes me that the construction of section 11 is not so sure as the construction of section 9, and my judgment is pronounced on section 9 alone. If this company give a bond conditioned for the payment of the principal on a day certain, an action lies for the breach of the condition, and the onus is on the defendants to take away that right of action. The words at the end of section 9 are relied on by the defendants for that purpose, but they seem to me not to take away the right of action. It is said that they operate in this way, that if the plaintiff obtains judgment in the action, he might obtain a preference over the other creditors, which would be contrary to the provision of the Act. But I do not think that follows. However, that is not the question we have now to determine. What the consequences may be after judgment, it is not necessary to determine at present.

WIGHTMAN, J.—It seems to me that there is nothing in section 9 to prevent the plaintiff suing on this bond. The company have thought proper to make a bond for a sum of money payable on a day now passed. I find nothing to prohibit the plaintiff bringing an action for the nonpayment of the money in such a case. The plaintiff may be under a disability in issuing execution, but that is not the question.

ERLE, J. concurred.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

(a) Upon this case of Ex parte Yelland being cited from the LAW TIMES, the following observations were made:—

Roxburgh.—There is Yelland's case, which is reported in the LAW TIMES by Mr. Allnutt. [The VICE-CHANCELLOR intimated his unwillingness to hear it.] It is also reported in 16 Jur. 599.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I believe that the reports in the LAW TIMES are extremely good, but the Lord Chancellor, feeling that every record ought not to be quoted, would not allow Sir W. Wood the other day to quote the LAW TIMES,—not from any disrespect to the authority of the reporter, as I happen to know. I objected to a case being cited from the LAW TIMES before Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, but he allowed it to be used. It is not from any feeling on the part of the Lord Chancellor of discrediting those reports that he refuses to permit them to be cited, but from the inconvenience which an endless multiplicity cannot fail to produce.

Roxburgh said that it was a very great advantage indeed to have early reports.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I am an old reporter myself, and quick and ready reports I know are valuable; but I do not think that a report is worth much, unless the reporter has an opportunity of looking deliberately over all the papers. Quick and ready reports have their value, but whether they should be cited as authorities to guide the judgment of the Court, is another and totally different question.

Roxburgh said, that from personal knowledge he could bear testimony to the general accuracy of the reports in the LAW TIMES.

COURT OF COMMON BENCH.

Reported by DANIEL THOMAS EVANS and R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

HAMILTON, Appellant, v. BASS, Respondent.

Registration—40s. freeholder.

To ascertain the clear yearly value of premises to the landlord on a question of qualification for a county voter, the average annual amount of the cost of repairs is to be deducted from the gross rent. The cost of collecting the rent is not to be deducted.

A. with twenty-nine others, was owner in fee of premises which let for 63l. per annum: 1l. per annum was the average cost of repairs: 1l. 6s. per annum was paid to a person for collecting the rent:

Held, that the cost of collecting the rent was not to be deducted from the gross sum in order to ascertain the clear yearly value, but that the cost of repairs must be deducted, and that therefore A. was not qualified to vote as a 40s. freeholder.

Premises in East Cumberland were owned by thirty persons in fee Rent, 63*l.* per annum; paid for collecting, 1*l.* 6*s.*; cost of repairs, 4*l.* The owners claimed to vote as 40*s.* freeholders. Claim rejected by the revising barrister, on the ground that the clear yearly value was less than 40*s.*

Mellor, Q.C. appeared for the appellant, and referred to 8 Hen. 6, c. 7; 10 Hen. 6, c. 2; 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5; to R. v. Framlingham, Bur. S.C. 748; and Colvill v. Wood, 1 Lutw. 483.

S. Temple, for the respondent, cited Copland v. Bartlett, 2 Lutw. 102; Lee v. Hutchinson, 8 C. B. 16; and Reamish v. Overseers of Stoke, 2 Lutw. 189.

Mellor, Q.C. in reply, referred to R. v. Ringwood, 1 M. & S. 381.

JERVIS, C.J.—The barrister was substantially correct. The question is, whether the claimant has property of the value of 40*s.* per annum above all charges. A mere voluntary payment is not to be deducted from the gross amount. That which is paid to an agent for collecting the rent is a mere matter of convenience, and is not to be deducted. But money paid for repairs is different. It is not a charge within the meanings of the Acts, but that it is to be deducted from the rent in ascertaining the clear yearly value is virtually decided in Lee v. Hutchinson. What the property is worth is a question of fact. Now, if in this case the tenant was bound to repair, he would not give 63*l.* but 59*l.* per annum. The property, therefore, is only worth 59*l.* per annum to the landlord to spend. The barrister has found that 4*l.* is to be deducted from 63*l.* That is a question of fact, which he has decided, and I think correctly.

MAULE and TALFOURD, JJ. concurred.
Appeal dismissed with costs.

COLLINS v. THOMAS.

A house and garden held of the same landlord, but not stated to be held under the same demise, amounting together, but neither separately, to 10l. per annum in value, sixty yards distant from one another, will not give a qualification to vote as a 10l. householder,

This was an appeal from the revising barrister for the borough of Tewkesbury. The claim was in respect of a cottage and garden, held of the same landlord, amounting together to 10*l.* per annum in value, but separated from each other by about sixty yards. The case did not state that they were under the same demise.

Kerr, for the appellant, submitted that the garden was occupied "therewith" within the meaning of the 27th section of 2 Wm. 4, c. 45.

Appeal dismissed, with costs.

LAMBERT v. THE OVERSEERS OF ST. THOMAS, NEW SARUM.

A notice of objection to a vote is good if it can be commonly understood.

A notice in the following form, "Take notice, I object to your name being retained on the list of voters for the parish of St. Thomas, New Sarum, in the southern division of the county of Wilts," was sent to a person who claimed to vote for the southern division of that county:

Held, that such notice, though not strictly in form, could be commonly understood, and was therefore sufficient according to the 7th and 101st sections of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18.

In this case the appellant claimed to vote for the southern division of the county of Wilts. The notice of objection to his vote was in this form: 'Take notice, I object to your name being retained on the list of voters for the parish of St. Thomas, New Sarum, in the southern division of the county of Wilts."

The revising barrister held the notice good.

Warren, Q.C.—The notice is not according to the form given in the Act. It ought to have been:—"In the St. Thomas, New Sarum, list of voters for the southern division of," &c. There is no such list as a list of voters for the parish of St. Thomas, New Sarum, in the southern division of the county of Wilts. "In the southern division of the county of Wilts," merely shews where the parish is situated. It might have been a vote for the borough that was objected to. It might possibly mislead, and is therefore bad. (Allen v. House, 7 M. & G. 157.)

JERVIS, C.J.—The 7th section of the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, says the notice shall be according to the form given in the schedule, or to the like effect. The 101st section of the Act says, no misnomer or inaccurate description of any possession, place, or thing named or described in any notice shall in anywise prevent the operation of the Act, provided such possession, place, or thing shall be so denominated in such notice as to be commonly understood. This notice could be understood by any voter.

MAULE, J.—I think the notice is within the 7th section. Would not people commonly understand that the county list was meant? An uncommon person might not understand it. There was no other list to which this notice would apply, and it takes great legal acuteness to spy out the objection.

TALFOURD, J. concurred.
Appeal dismissed without costs.

ARNETT v. THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

A railway company built bridges over their line of railway upon land conveyed to them in fee, but with a reservation of the use of the bridges. The commissioners for paving, &c. paved the road over the bridges. There were walls on each side of the bridges:

Held, that the company were liable to be rated for the walls on each side of the bridges, under 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, s. 3, the walls of the bridge being "dead walls" within the meaning of the Act;

Held also, by Jervis, C. J. that they were liable under the words "void spaces:"

Held also, by Maule, J. that they were liable for them as "public buildings."

This action came before the court on a special case, by which it appeared that the plaintiff was clerk to commissioners for paving, lighting, &c. who sought to recover from the company the amount of several rates upon two bridges over the line of their railway, the one called Crescent-place-bridge and the other Stanhope-place-bridge. The two cases were identical. The land over and upon which the bridges were built was conveyed to the company, but there was a clause in the conveyance, "excepting and always reserved out of the conveyance hereby made, the use and enjoyment of the bridges" in question. The case did not shew whether at the time of the conveyance the bridges were public or not, but they are so now. The bridges had been paved by the commissioners, and the question for the court was whether the company were liable for the cost of paving.

Byles, Serjt. (with whom was Barstow) for the plaintiff.—The company are liable to be rated, either under 43 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 26, by which the commissioners are enabled to rate every person who shall inhabit, hold, use, occupy, possess, or enjoy any premises, shop, &c. building, or tenement in any street, &c. and the rate is to be calculated upon the yearly value of the premises; or under 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, s. 3, which enables the commissioners to include in any rate "all public buildings" assessed according to the number of square yards contained in one half of the width of the street which may lie before or at the side or rear of, or abut upon such public buildings, and also to rate "churchyards, cemeteries, dead walls, and void spaces of ground." These bridges are public buildings, and for them the company are rateable; if not so, the walls of the bridges are dead walls within the terms of the Act.

Channel, Serjt. (with whom was Bovil).—The company are not liable under 43 Geo. 3, c. 139, s. 26. [The COURT did not require an argument upon this point.] 2ndly. They are not liable under 57 Geo. 3, c. 29, s. 3. The bridges are the street, and therefore do not lie before, &c. or abut upon it, and the walls of the bridges are not dead walls within the meaning of the Act, which only intended such walls as separated land or other property from the street, and they are not void spaces.

JERVIS, C.J.—I do not think this case comes within the first branch of the question, under which it would be necessary to shew that these bridges were public buildings such as were contemplated by the Act. I think, however, if it were necessary we might hold that there was a void space on each side, it being the object of the Act that everything on each side should contribute, each individual possessing property along the line of street being benefited. The Act first makes all private occupants liable to be assessed to the rate, then all public buildings, cemeteries, dead walls, and void spaces; and I think it was intended under "void spaces" to include everything not otherwise charged. But under the term "dead walls" they are directly within the Act. The wall is built on the ground of the company on each side of the street, and the rate is on those who occupy the ground. It satisfies the words and the intention of the Act.

MAULE, J.—This case is very clear. The Legislature in both Acts, which are public in form and matter, intends the improvement of the road for the benefit of all persons whose property abuts on either side, and that some person should be rateable for every inch of it,—some in respect of the annual value, and others in respect of the frontage. This is not directly expressed, but the intention is abundantly clear. The expression "dead wall" is literally applicable to the walls of the bridges. I think a dead wall is one which is not a portion of any house or building, but intended only to separate property from a road, and having in it no door or window, and therefore this case comes so clearly within the words of the Act, that if it were not within the object, it would be difficult not to give effect to the words. I think also they might also be considered as public buildings, being for the benefit of the public; but it is not necessary to decide that.

(Before JERVIS, C.J. and MAULE, WILLIAMS, and TALFOURD, JJ.)

ROBERTS v. BETHELL.

Bill of exchange—Infancy—Acceptance, time of—Presumption that acceptance was made within a reasonable time after the date of the bill.

Where a bill of exchange is produced, and the acceptance proved by proof of the handwriting of the acceptor, but no evidence is given as to the date of the acceptance, the jury may infer that it was accepted within a reasonable time after the date of the bill, and this may in some cases be taken to be within a few days after the date of the bill.

Where, therefore, to an action by an endorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange, payable four months after date (the defendant and the drawer both living in the same town), the defendant pleaded "non accepit," and "infancy at the time of the acceptance," and the acceptance was proved to be in the handwriting of the defendant, and it was also proved that the defendant came of age on the last day but one of grace:

Held, that the plea of infancy was sufficiently proved.

This was an action on six bills of exchange, drawn by one Miller, who resided in London, accepted by the defendant, who also resided in London, and endorsed to the plaintiff, who is a bill discounter in Northumberland-court, Strand.

Pleas.—1st, "Non accesit;" 2nd, "Infancy at the time of the acceptance."

At the trial the bills were produced, when it appeared that five of them became due before the 11th of March, 1851, on which day it was proved that the defendant came of age.

The sixth bill, which was for 20*l.* was dated the 9th of November, 1850, and was payable four months after date; it therefore became due on the 12th of March, 1851, one day after the defendant came of age.

The acceptances by the defendant were proved by proving them to be in the handwriting of the defendant, and no other evidence was given as to the time at which the bills were accepted. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff, that the defendant must shew that the bills were accepted before the 11th of March, 1851. The learned judge, however, left the case to the jury, who found a verdict for the defendant, leave being reserved to move to enter a verdict for the plaintiff.

A rule nisi having been obtained accordingly,

Edwin James and Fortescue now shewed cause.—The rule must be discharged. Harrison v. Clifton, 17 L. J. 233, Ex. was cited at the trial. In that case no bill was produced. Mr. Baron Parke there says, "Admitting the bill to have been drawn on the day on which it bore date, why may not the defendant have accepted it some time after?" The case of Levy v. Bulkeley, 14 Law T. 378, Ex. can hardly be said to overrule that case, [MAULE, J.—Suppose you shewed a document respecting the execution of which there was no evidence, then the person who had to shew when it was executed must fail. When the acceptance of a bill is denied, and proved by the handwriting, the acceptance is presumed to have been before maturity. JERVIS, C.J.—It is presumed to be within a reasonable time.] In the absence of evidence to the contrary, a bill of exchange must be taken to have been issued on the day of its date. (Anderson v. Weston, 6 Bing. 295, N.C.) The proposition that bills may be accepted after they are due is conceded. (Byles on Bills, 116, 6th edit. was cited.) It is for the jury to say, looking at the date of the bills, when they were accepted, and the inference is, that a bill was accepted within a reasonable time from its drawing, and at all events before maturity. The jury are entitled to infer that the bills were accepted within a reasonable time, and during the minority of the defendant. When a bill is accepted after it is due, the proper mode of pleading is, that it was so accepted, for then it is payable on demand. (Jackson v. Pigott, 1 Ld. Raymond, 364.) Then as to the case of Mulford v. Walcot, 1 Ld. Raymond, 574, cited by Byles, Serjt. in his work on bills, it shews that the days of grace are not part of the period during which the bill has to run. In this Court the practice has been to allege an acceptance after maturity when it was so. (Billing v. Devaux, 3 M. & G. 565.) In Christie v. Peart, 7 M. & W. 491, it was said by the Court, that after the dishonour of a bill, it is payable on request; and that a promise, therefore, by the acceptor, after the bill was due, to pay it according to the tenor and effect of his acceptance, is a promise to pay it on request. Brown v. Harraden, 4 Term Rep. 148, was also cited.

Byles, Serjt. and Huddlestone, in support of the rule.—Even the rule that the date of a document is evidence of when it was made is not universal. The exception is, where a bill or note is produced for the purpose of proving a petitioning creditor's debt. The declaration means "A third person drew a bill on the defendant, and the defendant, before action brought, accepted it." The defendant pleads, "I did, before or after it was due, accept, but I so accepted whilst I was an infant." There a distinct affirmative is taken on himself by the defendant. It involves a fraud if you suppose the bill accepted while the defendant was an infant. The defendant must shew that he accepted before he was of age. It is within his knowledge. We cannot know when he accepted it. [MAULE, J.—It is to be taken that an instrument was executed on the day of its date. On a trial for murder, on a plea of "not guilty," it would be so if the question were before the jury. The form of the issue can make no difference, provided the matter sought to be proved is a matter on the issue before the jury.] It may be that in a case of infancy the presumption does not apply. (Israel v. Argent, 1831, Ex. M. S.; and Blyth v. Archbold, Guildhall, July 9, 1835, cor. Lord Abinger, C.B. were cited (both of these cases are cited in Pearson's Chitty's Precedents, in the note, p. 330, 2nd edit.); Dickson v. Evans, 4 T. R. 57, was also cited.) You must not make a presumption in favour of a man who has the means of knowledge, especially when he has the affirmative of the issue upon him, against a man who has not the means of knowledge. The jury should have been told that they ought not to make a presumption one way or the other. There was not, in fact, any evidence to support the plea of the defendant. The only evidence was the date of his birth. Then is there any rule of law to raise the presumption that a bill is accepted on the day of its date? In 1 Starkie on Evidence, p. 420, 3rd edit. it is laid down, that "It is a general rule that the onus probandi lies upon the party who seeks to support his case by a particular fact of which he is supposed to be cognizant. It is not to be presumed that an indorsee could be cognizant of when the acceptance took place. There is no presumption in favour of the defendant, because he is cognizant." [MAULE, J.—The Court is by no means satisfied that there is no evidence here. On the contrary, the Court think that the production of the bill, and the proof of the handwriting, is evidence that the bill was accepted shortly after it was drawn.] The only presumption on a plea of non accepit is, that the acceptance was at some time before action brought.

JERVIS, C.J.—I think this rule ought to be discharged. It is not denied that the defendant must prove that he was an infant when he accepted the bill. The question is, was there any evidence. If there was any, then my learned brother was right. It is every-day practice simply to prove the handwriting on the bill. The bill must have been accepted at the time of the action brought. It is not so proved, except that by the course of business it would be accepted during its currency. The only question is, is there evidence to go to the jury? We are to presume that the bill was accepted within a reasonable time after its date, and the party accepting must be presumed to follow the ordinary course, unless the contrary is shewn.

MAULE, J.—I also think this rule must be discharged. The defendant undertook to prove that at the time of the acceptance he was an infant, and the jury found that he was. The question is, was there evidence for the jury? I do not think that this is a case of presumption. A presumption is where, without any evidence, a fact is assumed. The way the defendant proves his plea is by shewing that the bills, except one of them, became due while he was an infant, and as to that one that he came of age on one of the days of grace. Does that amount to evidence from which the jury may infer that he accepted during his infancy? It is well established that a bill is considered to issue at the time it bears date. Why is this the general rule? The reason is, that, ordinarily, bills are issued at the time they bear date. The acceptance is ordinarily not dated, and therefore there is nothing to prove the day of it. It is not, by any means, universal usage that bills should be accepted on the day of their date; but it is usual to accept at some early opportunity after the drawing: therefore, where two persons, being in the same town, draw and accept a bill, the presumption is that the bill was accepted one or two days after the drawing, therefore the acceptance is evidence that the bill was accepted a few days after the drawing, regard being had to the distance at which the persons reside from each other. Therefore, on the same principle as that by which the day of the date is to be taken as the day of the issue of a bill, you may presume the acceptance to have been made at some early opportunity after the drawing. You must prove that a bill was accepted before action brought, and this is ordinarily done by shewing the bill,—and if it be evidence in that case it is evidence in all cases, except in the one exceptional case which has been mentioned. This rule of evidence, though not founded in terms of express decisions, is on the principle on which the decisions have been come to, that the date of a document is evidence of the time of its execution.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion, for the reasons given by my lord and my brother Maule, and think that there was evidence for the jury.

TALFOURD, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion.

Rule discharged.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

FORD v. SWEDLEY.—Appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the borough of Westminster dismissed.

To be reported.

Tuesday, Nov. 16.

HARRIS v. THIRKELL.—Brownell and Barrow shewed cause against a rule for a new trial in this case. The other side will be heard on Saturday, the 20th November. A report will be given in our next number.

EVERETT v. LEVY.—Hawkins moved for a rule to shew cause why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to take out of court the sums of 22*l.* 10*s.* and 10*l.* which had been paid by the defendant in lieu of bail, and for costs. The defendant had not put in special bail, nor paid in the 10*l.* in lieu thereof, and had gone abroad.

A rule nisi was granted, to be served at the last known place of abode of the defendant, and notice to be given in the office.

BARRENGER v. HANDLEY.—Prentice moved, on behalf of the plaintiff, pursuant to the 17th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, for an order that the plaintiff be at liberty to proceed in the action as if personal service had been effected on the defendant. It appeared by the affidavit in support of the motion that a copy of the writ had been left at a shop which the defendant had previously given as his address, but which, on inquiry, was ascertained to be merely the place where he called for his letters. That subsequently a clerk to the defendant's attorney called on the plaintiff's attorney with the copy of the writ to offer terms, and that the defendant's residence was not known. It appeared also by the affidavit that the appearance book had been searched, and that the defendant had not appeared to the action. JERVIS, C.J. in order that the practice of the Courts might be uniform, went out and consulted the Lord Chief Baron and Mr. Baron Parke, and on returning, the Court granted the application, the order to be absolute in the first instance, and without service; but intimated that circumstances might exist in some cases which would make it expedient that the defendant should be called on to shew cause.

Wednesday, Nov. 17.

NEWELL v. THE TOWN CLERK OF DERBY.—Appeal struck out for want of sufficient paper-book.

BARKER v. PULMON.—Appeal struck out for the same reason as the last.

BESSON v. BURTON.—Appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the southern division of Leicestershire. It was stated in the case that certain commonable lands, being the property of the resident freemen of the borough of Leicester, are vested in deputies for the benefit of the resident freemen. Portions of these are allotted to freemen as gardens; and the question was, whether the occupiers take a freehold interest. The deputies, with the consent of the majority of the freemen, might remove the occupiers for certain purposes. Cox for the appellants. Hayes for the respondent. Held, that this case differed from Davies v. Waddington, 7 M. & G. 37, and that the deputies, having no power to remove without the consent of the majority of the freemen, that is to say, without the consent of the occupiers themselves, as included in or represented by the majority, the estate was not one at will, but was of an uncertain extent, which might last for the life of the occupier, and therefore amounted to a freehold. Appeal dismissed.

MOORE v. THE OVERSEERS OF CARISBROOKE.—Appeal from the decision of the revising barrister. The claimant was the owner of land of the value of 5*l.* which, with other land of the value of 50*l.* was mortgaged for 300*l.* at an interest of 5*l.* per cent. Poulden, for the respondent. MAULE, J.—Deduct 15*l.* the mortgage interest, from 53*l.* the total value of the land, that leaves 40*l.*: the 11th part of that is more than 40*s.* Appeal dismissed.

FENDON v. SAWYERS.—Appeal from decision of the revising barrister for the city of Carlisle, holding that a notice of objection to a vote signed A. B. F. "on the list of freemen for the city of Carlisle" was bad. S. Temple, for appellant; Mellor, Q.C. for the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

BARROW v. BUCKMASTER. Part heard.

ROBERTS v. GRANT, and six other cases.—The parties to these cases had agreed to abide by the result of Roberts v. Lucas. Channell, Serjt. applied for leave to have another trial, on the understanding that the same point should not be raised. The Court thought that substantially the same point must be raised, and refused the application.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILY and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Saturday, Nov. 13.

GLEN v. LEWIS.

Rule to plead several matters—When it should be delivered.

When a rule to plead several matters is required, it should be obtained and served before the time to plead has expired, otherwise judgment may be signed.

This was a rule obtained to set aside an interlocutory judgment signed, there having been no rule to plead several matters, served before the time for pleading expired. (See it reported ante, p. 71.)

A judge's order had been obtained for leave to plead several matters, on Saturday, when the defendant's time to plead would expire; the pleas were delivered, and a notice also that the rule to plead the several matters as allowed by the learned judge and pleaded, should be served as soon as it could be obtained from the office: that rule, however, not having been obtained and served before Monday morning, eleven o'clock, the plaintiff, on the opening of the office at that time, signed judgment; and this rule having been obtained to set it aside.

Willes shewed cause.—Although from an ex parte statement of the circumstances, it might have appeared to the Court when this rule was moved for sharp practice, yet it really was not so, the defendant was as much to blame as the plaintiff. Even before the rule of Hilary Term, 2 Wm. 4, this practice was regular, but since then it is free from all doubt. The case was before Mr. Justice Erle at chambers, and neither then nor when this rule was first applied for was there any affidavit of merits. [PARKE, B.—We decided, when the rule was moved, that the judgment was regular; the defendant has an affidavit of merits, and the rule must be absolute on payment of all costs.]

Karslake, contrà. Rule absolute accordingly.

PINHORN v. SOUSTER.

Common Law Procedure Act, ss. 50, 51, and 52—Special demurrer.

These clauses only apply to future proceedings; and a special demurrer pending before the Act came into operation can therefore be heard as before the passing of the Act.

Trespass for goods.

The third plea justified, under an alleged tenancy at will between one Quested and the defendant. An indenture was set out an oyer, which appeared to have been made between Quested and the defendant, whereby it was agreed between them that Quested should hold as tenant at will, at a rent of 150*l.* payable quarterly, which rent should be recoverable, when in arrear, by distraint, and should be applied to certain trusts contained in the indenture. By the deed it appeared that the demise came out of a term originally vested in one Muggridge. To this plea the plaintiff demurred. Demurrer dated 15th May, 1852. Joinder in demurrer, 21st May, 1852.

T. Jones, in support of the demurrer, stated the pleadings.

PARKE, B.—They ought to have begun with the seisin in fee. This may be good as between the parties to the deed, but it does not bind the plaintiff. The defendant had better amend.

Macnamara, for the defendant.—The defendant cannot amend, so as to insert the necessary allegation. This is a good objection only on special demurrer, and special demurrer is altogether taken away by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 51. That section enacts, that "no pleading shall be deemed insufficient for any defect which heretofore could only be objected to by special demurrer." That clause has a retrospective effect, and operates on demurrers already pending; the word "deemed" means judicially decided by the Court. The words are not, "no pleading shall be specially demurred to after this Act comes into operation," but, "shall be deemed insufficient"—that is, adjudged insufficient. This point has already been mooted before the C. P. but the judges of that court did not decide it, but said they would consult with their learned brothers.(a) The plaintiff is not thereby deprived of his remedy, for by the 52nd section, "If any pleadings be so framed as to prejudice, embarrass, or delay the fair trial of the action, the opposite party may apply to the Court or a judge to strike out or amend such pleading, and the Court or any judge shall make such order respecting the same, and also respecting the costs of such application as such Court or judge shall see fit." Sec. 50 applies to future special demurrers; but if sec. 51 is not applicable to demurrers now pending, it is not applicable at all. [ALDERSON, B.—Sec. 52 applies to future demurrers. The wording of the Act is clear enough. Why should we go out of our way to find a difficulty?] This is a remedial Act, and is to be construed liberally. He referred to ss. 10, 12, 24, 26, 92, and 100, to shew that where it was intended by the Legislature that the provisions of the Act should only operate from the time of the Act coming into operation, it was so expressly provided, and pending proceedings were specially excepted. [ALDERSON, B.—Just consider the inconvenience and delay that the plaintiff would be put to. This demurrer is dated the 15th May last, and was put in for the purpose of curing a pleading, which would materially have embarrassed the plaintiff at the trial. The new Act takes away special demurrers, but gives a compensation. Here you desire to apply it to a case where no compensation can be given. PARKE, B.—These sections must be read as if the word "future" had been introduced before the word "pleading," and the cases now pending must be decided according to the law as it was at the time of the proceeding, and before the passing of this Act.] This question is fully considered, and all the cases collected in Mr. Wise's book on the Common Law Procedure Act, p. 3, and the author there expresses his opinion in conformity with the present argument. He also referred to the cases there collected.

PARKE, B.—This Act must be construed according to the general maxim, "Nova constitutio futuris formam imponere debet, non præteritis." That rule always prevails unless there is something in the context which clearly indicates a contrary intention; and here there is nothing. Read as a whole, it is clear to my mind that the Act only applies to future proceedings. I think the point is without the least doubt that all these clauses are prospective, and relate solely to future cases.

The rest of the Court concurred.

The case was then adjourned till Wednesday, that the defendant might consider in the mean time whether he would amend.

Ex parte WILLIAM STOREY.

Ecclesiastical Court—Prohibition.

A decree in the Ecclesiastical Court having been made against a party, which he had disobeyed, he applied to this Court for a prohibition to issue to the Ecclesiastical Court, on the ground that he had received no previous notice of the decree, nor had he had any opportunity of shewing cause against that decree being made:

Held, that as the Ecclesiastical Court had jurisdiction, his proper remedy would be to apply to that Court in reference to any supposed irregularity of practice, or to appeal.

(a) See James v. Isaac and Others, 20 Law T. Rep. 68.

Parry moved in this case for a rule to shew cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to the Bishop of London and Dr. Lushington, the judge of the Ecclesiastical Court, restraining them from proceeding in a suit of Storey v. Storey, which was instituted by the wife for the restitution of conjugal rights; and he also asked for a rule for a certiorari to bring up certain books of the court in reference to entries therein relating to that suit. A similar motion has already been made to the Court of C. P. upon the same state of facts, and that Court refused the rule. On 26th April last a notice was served on the husband by the wife's proctor, that the judge would be moved to make an order to take her home. On the 30th, the husband appeared and called on the wife's proctor to move, and said he was ready to take his wife home; but that motion was not made. In consequence of his following the proctor, some unpleasant circumstances took place, whereby the husband was given into custody by the proctor, for which the husband brought his action, and recovered nominal damages. On the 11th May he appeared in court, and was then threatened with imprisonment for contempt in not paying alimony, and, under protest, he then paid all that was due. On the 2nd September, Storey, the husband, received notice first, to obey a decree made to take his wife home; and, secondly, to pay alimony, or he would be declared in contempt. He swears by his affidavit that until the 2nd September, he never heard of the decree in any way whatever (the decree in question, it is said, was made on the 9th June). The decree was to take her home. The word "take" appears now to be struck out, and the word receive written over it, which may make a material difference. He states that he believes the alteration was improperly made, and he also says he never had any opportunity of shewing cause against it in any way whatever. [PLATT, B.—The whole matter is within the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court; should you not have appealed? PARKE, B.—Yes; that is the question,—what is the proper remedy?—what is your gravamen?] That the decree has been made upon us to take or receive the wife home, and pay alimony, without giving us any opportunity of being heard against it before it was made. The husband had no proctor, he went to the Court on the 9th of November, and tendered an affidavit of these circumstances; the judge refused the affidavit, requested the officer not to administer the oath, and said, "If you do not pay and take her home, I shall, on the next court day (the 17th of November) pronounce you in contempt." [ALDERSON, B.—Suppose we were to make a rule absolute, without having served the opposite party, could he go into the Court of Q.B. and obtain a prohibition against us? It is clearly only an irregularity, at the utmost, in the Ecclesiastical Court, and no ground for taking away their jurisdiction altogether. PLATT, B.—It may be the practice not to serve notice at all under the circumstances.] In the County Courts it had been held, that after a party had been ordered to pay a sum of money, he ought to be summoned to shew cause why he did not pay before taking him in execution for it. (Ex parte Kinning, 17 L.J.) [PARKE, B.—That was under a particular Act of Parliament.] Carmichael Smith's case, 3 Adol. & Ellis, 719; Capell v. Child, 2 Cr. & Jer. 558; Williams v. Bagot, 3 & C. 386; and also 16 L.J. 256 Q.B. were cited.

PARKE, B.—The question is, whether the Court had jurisdiction, and it clearly had. If the facts are as you state, it would only amount to an irregularity in practice; and the remedy, perhaps, may be, to apply to that Court to have it set right, or to appeal. It is a question upon the practice of the Court, and one not at all calling for our interference by prohibition. Rule refused.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE ROMFORD UNION v. THE BRITISH GUARANTEE ASSOCIATION.

Collector—Board of guardians—Fraud—Releasing collector's sureties for the due performance of his office—Substituting policy of the Guarantee Society.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover 800*l.* from the defendants upon a policy of guarantee effected in the office of the defendants by Mr. George Beadle, for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office of collector of the poor-rates for the parishes of Barking and Dagenham, in Essex. The defendants, among other things, pleaded that the loss had not accrued during the existence of the policy, and that they were induced to make and execute the said policy by the fraud, covin, and misrepresentation of the plaintiffs. The cause was tried before the Lord Chief Baron on the 29th of June last, when the jury returned a verdict for the defendants, on the plea of misrepresentation; and a rule nisi having been obtained to set aside that verdict, on the ground of misdirection, and for a new trial,

O'Malley and Whitmore shewed cause. The learned judge left the whole case to the jury very fairly. This rule has been obtained on the ground that the judge, instead of leaving it to the jury, should have told them there was no evidence whatever of fraud on the part of the poor-law guardians. The collector and applicant for this insurance or guarantee had, it seems, been a collector of the poor-rates for about ten years, and had theretofore entered into a bond with two sureties for the due performance of the duties of the office. Some six months before any default on his part was discovered, which led to the present suit, Beadle suggested to the plaintiffs that they would oblige him by cancelling the bond discharging the sureties and accepting the policy of guarantee from the defendants. The plaintiffs agreed to do so. It became necessary, then, in the first instance, that Beadle (the collector and applicant), as well as the plaintiffs, should answer, in writing, the usual questions in such cases proposed by the Guarantee Society. Accordingly such questions were sent to the plaintiffs by the defendants, who referred the board of guardians in answering those questions particularly to the regulations of the Poor-law Commissioners (one of which regulations it appeared was that a collector should not be allowed to retain in his possession more than 50*l.* at a time of money belonging to the board), and one of the questions asked of the plaintiffs by the defendants was, how much money he was allowed to retain in his possession? The answer was, "Never more than 500*l.* but it may be 800*l.*; in fact, he frequently had as much as 500*l.* in his possession belonging to the board at one time." Another question was to the effect, with reference to the regulations of the Poor-law Commissioners, whether Beadle had ever been a defaulter, or neglected duly and regularly to pay over all moneys due from him, and the answer was "That his accounts had been always regularly audited by the auditor of the district." The policy by the defendant was thereupon effected, and in the course of about six months afterwards it was discovered he had been for some time past a defaulter to the amount of about 1,000*l.* The auditor, it appeared, had not discovered it, but instead of Beadle's paying over the proper checks and money as received to the proper authorities, he used to send it all to his own bankers', or at all events to pay the board of guardians, when he did pay them, by check upon his bankers, and he did not certainly comply with the regulations of the Poor-law Commissioners, to which the plaintiffs had been referred previous to their answering the question. The plaintiffs must, or at least ought, to have known this, and particularly should they, for it was their bounden duty to have most carefully examined his conduct and his previous accounts upon being asked to cancel his bond and discharge his sureties from liability; that great caution was necessary must at once have suggested itself to the minds of any body of men under such circumstances; it ought to have raised suspicion and induced inquiry, yet nothing of the kind takes place, his sureties are discharged, and the defendants induced by the answers of the plaintiffs to give this policy of guarantee, although Beadle, the collector, had been acting in this way for nearly ten years, entirely in contravention of the regulations of the commissioners. The 9th form of rules, that every such collector shall make out a statement, &c. signed by himself, &c. to be laid monthly before the board of guardians, had never been complied with once during the whole time he was employed. The answer to the 5th question was also fraudulent, and the defend- ants contend this must be within the knowledge of the plaintiffs, who, in fact, induced the defendants to enter into the policy by fraud and misrepresentation. The jury expressly so found, and this rule ought to be discharged.

Bramwell, Q.C. and Willes.—There was no evidence whatever produced to shew that the guardians or their clerk knew of any default whatever on the part of the collector at the time, they released his sureties and this policy was entered into. The auditor was called and examined, and he stated that he audited the accounts and did not discover, nor did he know of any irregularity, or that the collector was in arrears. The learned judge should have told the jury there was no evidence of their knowledge of fraud, and not have left it to the jury to say whether there was fraud or not. [The case was then adjourned.]

Wednesday, Nov. 17.—PARKE, B.—We do not say there was any misdirection in this case; yet under all the circumstances we incline to think it would be much the best that there should be another trial, when the whole facts may be fairly ascertained. No person can doubt that there was fraud practised by Beadle, the collector; but whether it was with and to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, the board of guardians, is another question: there must, therefore, be a new trial, the costs to abide the event. Rule absolute.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Thursday, Nov. 4.

SPIGER v. MAGNAN.—Tried before Maule, J. when the plaintiff obtained a verdict for 150*l*. The action was brought for diverting a stream of water that ought to have run to a mill. E. Chambers, Q.C. moved to reduce the damages, on the ground of their being excessive. POLLOCK, C.B. (Nov. 13), said,—In this case there will be a rule to shew cause, unless the plaintiff will consent to reduce the damages to 100*l*. We have consulted my brother Maule, before whom the case was tried, and he is of opinion that the damages are too large. At the same time we think there ought not to be a new trial granted, if the plaintiff is prepared to reduce the damages from 150*l*. to 100*l*.

The plaintiff subsequently consented to reduce the damages accordingly.

Friday, Nov. 12.

PEARSON v. MEUNIER.—Carrington shewed cause against a rule to shew cause why an order of Martin, B. and the cs. sa. issued should not be set aside for irregularity. Horn, contra.

Rule absolute; no costs, and no action to be brought.

WATERS v. HOWELLS.—Gray moved for a rule to shew cause why the certificate herein for a special jury should not be set aside or the Master be desired to review his taxation and to disallow certain costs. Rule nisi granted.

GARDNER v. SCOTT.—Milward moved for a rule to shew cause why the plaintiff should not take out of court 37*l*. 10*s*. deposited by defendant in lieu of bail. Defendant had gone to Australia. Granted.

MARKS v. THE SUN FIRE OFFICE.—Shee, Serjt. moved that authority be given to the arbitrator herein to administer oaths to necessary witnesses. Granted.

EVANS AND ATTWOOD. MCKINNON AND PENSON.—To stand over.

POULTER v. HOOPER.—Bramwell (Willes with him) shewed cause. J. Brown, contrà. Rule discharged.

Saturday, Nov. 13.

LEWIS v. ROGERS.—Phinn moved on behalf of the defendant to change the venue from Middlesex to Monmouth. It was an action on a bill by the indorsee against the acceptor; the defence, in fact, was payment, and all the witnesses were at Monmouth, some of them being bankers. [PARKE, B.—What do you say as to the plaintiff's witnesses?] Rule nisi.

SHAW v. CONINGHAM.—Tried before Martin, B. in Middlesex, when the plaintiff obtained a verdict. It was an action by a publican for refreshments, &c. to voters at the last election for Westminster. James, Q.C. moved to set aside the verdict and for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, rejection of evidence, and the verdict being against evidence, or to reduce the damages to 5*l*. 10*s*. Rule refused.

MCKINNON v. PENSON. Cur. adv. vult.

LINES v. LORD CHARLES RUSSELL.—The Attorney and Solicitor General, Andrews, and Welsby appeared to shew cause against the rule obtained for a new trial. James, Q.C. and Hawkins, contra.

Rule discharged, unless plaintiff would consent to a stet processus in a week.

LUMLEY v. GYE.—(Reported ante, p. 71.) Creasy moved upon the amended affidavits as suggested on Friday. Rule granted.

SHAW v. THE BANK OF ENGLAND.—Ante, p. 76. Hawkins moved upon amended affidavits. Rule nisi.

Monday, Nov. 15.

PINHORN v. SOUSTER.—Demurrer to plea.

Adjourned till Wednesday. Defendant to consider in the meantime whether he will amend.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF WOLSTANTON AND BURSLEM, in the county of Stafford, v. EMBURROW.—Demurrer to declaration. Judgment for the plaintiff.

Tuesday, Nov. 16.

REG. v. E. SALTRE.—Watson moved, on behalf of the Crown, that certain goods seized, and now in the hands of the sheriff, those of a perishable nature might be sold. Rule nisi.

LEWIS v. DANIELS.—Bramwell, Q.C. moved that the verdict and subsequent proceedings may be set aside for irregularity. Rule nisi.

WATNEY v. DENNISON.—Bramwell, Q.C. and Willes shewed cause against a rule obtained for a new trial. The action was in assumpsit for not accepting a quantity of oats. Knowles and Rew, contrà, were stopped. Rule absolute.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE ROMFORD UNION v. THE BRITISH GUARANTEE ASSOCIATION. Part heard, and adjourned.

Wednesday, Nov. 17.

PINHORN v. SOUSTER.—A special demurrer to a plea. Macnamara appeared in support. Jones, contrà, not called upon. Judgment accordingly.

STEWART v. WILSON. A stet processus agreed to.

CROSSFIELD and OTHERS, Administrators, v. SUCH. Cur. adv. vult.

COPE v. ALDINSON.—Cowling, in support of the demurrer, was stopped by the Court. Milward, contrà, called upon. He referred to Traverse v. Bank, Sid. 57, as an authority in point. PARKE, B.—The answer to your case is that there is nothing quite agreed upon; it was a mere offer or promise to pay a composition upon certain terms, which were never completed or agreed to by both parties, and therefore no contract. Judgment for defendant.

STAFF v. MORRISON.—O'Malley, Q.C. and Couch, shewed cause against the rule nisi. No one appearing in support of it, Rule discharged.

HENNING v. BURNET.—Slade, Q.C and Taprell, shewed cause against the rule obtained herein. The cause was tried at Dorchester before Platt, B. and turned upon the construction of a deed in reference to a right of way. Crowder, Q.C. and Hodges, contrà, not called upon. Rule absolute.

BAIL COURT.

Reported by T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before Mr. Justice CROMPTON.)

Friday, Nov. 12.

Re CRAVEN, Gentleman, one, &c.

Attorney—Taxation of costs — Negligence.

Where upon the taxation of a bill of costs between attorney and client, the Master disallowed a certain sum on the ground of negligence, this Court directed him to review his taxation, the question of negligence being one properly for a jury and not the Master.

In this case Ball, on a previous day, obtained a rule nisi for the review of the Master's taxation, the Master having disallowed a certain sum, on the ground that the proceedings were abortive in consequence of the attorney's neglect. (See report, ante, 54.)

C. Pollock now shewed cause, and contended that the Master was right. (Rice v. Rigby, 4 B. and Ald. 202; Matchett v. Parkes, 9 M. and W. 767; Williams v. Nicholas, 1 Dowl. N. S. 810.)

Ball, contrà.

CROMPTON, J. thought that the question of negligence was one for the jury and not the Master, and therefore directed that the rule should be made absolute. Rule absolute.

Ex parte JOHN MATTHEWS, Gentleman, one, &c.

Attorney—Change of name.

Allen, Serjt. moved on the behalf of Mr. John Matthews, who is an attorney of this Court, that he may be permitted (under the peculiar circumstances stated in his affidavit), to take and use the name of Chamberlaine (his mother's maiden name), instead of his present name, and he cited ex parte Moses, 15 Law T. 70; 19 Law J.; and Re Dearden, 20 Law J. 80, Ex.

CROMPTON, J. upon referring to those cases, granted the application, directing the rule to be drawn up as in the case of Re Dearden. Application granted.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Friday, Nov. 12.

Hayes moved for a rule, calling upon a Mr. Thomas Potts to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for a libel upon two gentlemen who are magistrates of Daventry. Rule nisi.

On Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, the Court held its second sitting at Nisi Prius.

INSOLVENCY COURT.

(Before Mr. Commissioner LAW.)

Re WHITE.

A person committed by the Clerkenwell County Court—Discharged.

Sargood (instructed by Mr. Clarke) applied to his Honour for the release of ——— White, who had been yesterday committed to the debtor's prison for twenty-one days, by the judge of the Clerkenwell County Court, for non-payment of a debt, from which debt the defendant had been discharged by this Court in January last.

His HONOUR inspected the defendant's schedule, and finding the fact was as stated by the learned counsel, ordered his discharge from prison forthwith.

NOTE.—It appears from the discharge of Mr. Commissioner Law, that it is doubtful whether the judge of the County Court had jurisdiction to commit the defendant to prison; and it is said actions will be brought against all parties to try the validity of these now frequent committals.

CLARKE v. SCRIPPS.

Revocation of will by tearing—1 Vict. c. 26, s. 20.

The signature of the testator had been torn off all the sheets of a will save the last one, where it appeared, as did also the names of the attesting witnesses; part of one page of the will had also been torn. There was no evidence when or why this was done. The will had remained exclusively in the testator's possession. The part torn off was preserved with the will:

Held, that the will was neither wholly nor partially revoked.

Sir J. D. Harding, Q.A. and Bayford, appeared in support of the will.

R. Phillimore and Twiss, contrà.

Sir JOHN DODSON.—This case arises upon the will of the late William Armitage Scripps, of South Molton-street, in this town, and of Niton, in the Isle of Wight. He died on the 26th of August, 1851, at the age of eighty years or thereabouts. He was a widower, and he left behind him three sons and three daughters, his only next of kin, and he also left a grandchild, the daughter of a deceased son, who, together with the next of kin, would be the parties entitled in distribution in case he is dead intestate. Now, these parties, the sons, are Mr. William Washington Scripps, Mr. James Mogg Scripps, and Mr. Thomas Scripps, who is the party in the cause. The daughters are a Mrs. Tudor, a married woman, the wife of Mr. Tudor, one of the parties in the cause, Mrs. Deacon, also a married woman, and Anne Eliza or Elizabeth Scripps, the youngest daughter, who is a spinster. She was unmarried at the time, the other two being married, and there is the grandchild also, Mary Emma Scripps, who is likewise a spinster. The deceased left behind him real property consisting of a cottage at Niton, in the Isle of Wight, of the value of about 600*l*. and he left personal property of the value of about 9,000*l*. By his will, which he appears to have made and duly executed upon the 16th of May, 1843, he appoints Mr. Thomas Clarke, Mr. Samuel Tudor, his son-in-law, and Mr. William Hookham Carpenter, his executors. He leaves certain legacies as a provision for Mrs. Tudor and Mrs. Deacon by the will as it originally stood, and after some other legacies, he gives the residue of his property to his youngest daughter. After his death, which event occurred very suddenly whilst walking out, apparently in good health, with a friend at the Isle of Wight, search was made amongst his papers for a will, and in his depositories was found the paper that is now before the Court, it was found by Mr. Thomas Scripps, the son,; whether it was locked up in a place where the deceased kept papers of moment and concern, whether it was kept with merely loose waste papers, does not appear. And the Court has some little ground of complaint that it has not been furnished with the requisite information in that respect. However, I presume that it was amongst papers of moment and concern, and that it was locked up, because I now find it stated to have been in a tin box, and I find it stated in one part of the evidence, that the deceased was very particular as to his keys being left about, because he did not wish any one to see what disposition of his property he had made by will. Therefore, in all probability, this paper was found locked up, but of that I have no certain evidence. When this paper was found it was in a mutilated state; it was both cut and torn, but by whom that was done does not at all appear, that is, there is no evidence as to whom it was cut or torn by, but having been in the possession of the deceased himself, being in his custody, the usual presumption of law must prevail, and it must be taken that he himself did the act. Out of this state of mutilation, then, arises the present question, which is one not very easy of solution, namely, whether the will is to be considered revoked in toto, or in part only. In discussing this matter, the counsel have very properly called the attention of the Court to certain sections of the Wills Act (1 & 2 Vict. c. 26), and more especially to the 20th, which has a direct bearing upon the present case, and by which it must in a great measure be determined. That section is to this effect. It is enacted, "That no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked otherwise than aforesaid"- that is, "by marriage," and so forth; but that has nothing to do with the present question; "or by another will duly executed," that is, duly executed according to the form of the statute; that again has no application to the present suit. Then it goes on, "or by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some other person by his direction, with the intention of revoking the same." Therefore it may be burned, torn, or destroyed, by the testato. himself, or by his direction, with the intention of revoking the whole, or any part of it. I say the whole or any part of the will, because under this enactment it is quite obvious that a part only of a will may be revoked, by burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying such part; or, in other words, that the whole will is not necessarily revoked by the destruction of a part. I do not, however, by any means, intend to assert that the destruction of the part of a will may not, under certain circumstances, operate as a revocation of the whole will; it has been held so to do. Secondly, it is to be observed that the burning, tearing, or other destruction of the instrument, must be done with the intention to revoke. It is not the mere manual operation of tearing or cutting the instrument, or the act of throwing it into the fire, or of destroying it by other means that will satisfy the requisites of the law; but the Act must be accompanied with the intention of revoking. There must be the animus as well as the act; both must concur to constitute a valid legal revocation. It is the animus, also, which must govern the measure and extent of operation to be attributed to the Act, which must determine whether it shall affect the revocation of the whole instrument, or only of some and what portion thereof. Now the intention of the testator to revoke wholly or in part may, as I conceive, be proved in several ways. First, it may be proved by evidence of the expressed declarations of the testator, especially if such declaration was contemporaneous with the act which he was doing. If in doing the act, tearing, burning, or destroying the whole, or tearing, burning, or destroying a part, he should declare that it is his intention to revoke it, that would be the two acts taken together. To whatever extent it was torn, or burned, or destroyed, however much or however little, if he declared that it was his intention thereby to destroy it, that declaration, I apprehend, coupled with the act, would be sufficient. Now, secondly, the intention may, in the absence of any express declaration, be inferred from the nature and extent of the act done by the testator, that is, it may be inferred from the state and condition in which he has left the paper, to which he has reduced it. From the state in which it is found, it may be inferred either that he did intend to destroy it altogether or did not; that may be inferred from the face of the paper itself, where there are no declarations coming from him. Lastly, the intention may in some degree, at least, be inferred from other extrinsic circumstances; something dehors the instrument, and something not depending on the declarations of the deceased. There may be extrinsic circumstances; there may be declarations not wholly direct as to the revocation of the will, but which lead to be inferred one way or other, whether he did intend to destroy the will or did not. Now the case of Bibb v. Thomas was adverted to; a case that is repeated in the second volume of Sir Wm. Blackstone's Reports, p. 1043, a case which occurred under the Statute of Frauds, and arose under the Statute of Frauds. Though the words of the Statute of Frauds are somewhat different from those of the present statute, still I think that there are no circumstances to make any distinction between the case of Bibb v. Thomas and the present case in that respect. The words of the Statute of Frauds are "burning, tearing, cancelling, or obliterating;" whereas here we have, "burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying." Now the case of Bibb v. Thomas rested principally on the declarations used. The testator in that case took his will, gave it a rip, and threw it on the fire, but it fell off the fire. It was then seized by a person present, a female, who put it into her pocket and preserved it. The testator had his suspicion that she had got possession of the will and he demanded it. She gave an evasive answer to his application, and he was led to believe, and did believe, it was actually destroyed, and he afterwards declared that he had left no will, that his property would go to his brother. Now upon that state of facts the jury held, with the concurrence of the judge, I think, that this was a sufficient revocation. I apprehend it was upon the ground that there was an actual tearing; he gave it a rip and there was the declaration of his intention; a declaration that he had no will, and that his brother would inherit the property. The will had been only slightly torn, but there was this declaration, for us to throwing it on the fire, as it was not burned, but only singed, that, I apprehend, would have no effect whatever. Indeed, from the next case cited by the learned counsel it is pretty clear they would not have held the mere singeing the side of the will a sufficient act of revocation, even if accompanied with the declaration. Now the next case mentioned was that of Doe v. Harris, 6 Adol. & E. 209. That was also under the Statute of Frauds. In that case the will was thrown into the fire and pulled off by the devisee. The corner of the envelope was burned, and that was all that was burned. No part of the will itself was affected by the fire; the testator insisted on its being again thrown on the fire, but that was not done, though he insisted upon it. It was held to be no revocation at all. The will not having been mutilated at all, there being no rip or tear, or burn on any part, for it was only the corner of the envelope that was burned, that was held to be insufficient, consequently the will continued to be a valid and subsisting will, and was pronounced for. I forbear to pursue these cases further as to declarations which may have been used, because in this case the act was accompanied, as far as the Court is informed, by no declaration whatever, nobody was present, nobody knows how or when the will was torn; the question must depend consequently upon the state and condition of the instrument itself. Now the case of Hobbs v. Knight, which was also mentioned by counsel, and which is reported in 1 Curteis, 768, has more bearing on the question. That, I believe, was one of the first, if not the very first, case of the kind which occurred after the passing of the Statute of Wills. That case depended altogether upon the state and condition to which the instrument was reduced by the act of the testator, unaccompanied by any evidence of declarations at the time; therefore much more similar to the present than the two cases mentioned of Bibb v. Thomas, and Doe v. Harris. There, the testator had cut out his signature at the foot of the will, and this was held to operate as a revocation of the entire will. It was decided that the signature at the foot or end of the will was of the essence of the will, and the destruction of it by cutting was considered, and I think justly considered, as equivalent to tearing. It was stated in the first place, that tearing off the foot of the will would, under the statute, be sufficient; and then the learned judge, considering that cutting and tearing were essentially one and the same, held that the will was destroyed, since it would have had precisely the same effect whether it was cut or torn. I mention that particularly, because the will now before us is partly cut and partly torn. He also intimated that a total obliteration of the signature might have the same effect as being another mode of destruction; that is, if it was so entirely obliterated as to be perfectly illegible, that would have the same effect as if it had been torn off, or as if it had been cut off; the signature at the foot or end being of the essence of the will, and that being destroyed in any one of the ways I have mentioned, and done by the testator himself, the Court held that would be a sufficient revocation of the whole instrument. There was also another case cited, a case that came before the Court on motion only,—The Goods of Francis Lambert, 1 Notes of Cases, 131, and which also has a very strong bearing on the present question. It was very true, as was observed by counsel, that this was a case on motion only, and there was no contest about it, no argument of counsel on the one side or the other. The Court decided it as merely an ex parte case, but we know very well how extremely cautious my learned predecessor was in cases of this description. If he entertained any doubt whatever he always rejected the motion, and directed the instrument to be propounded, in order that he might hear both sides; therefore, it shews that he entertained a very strong impression on the subject, otherwise he would not have disposed of it in the way he seems to have done, viz. on motion. Now, in this case, Mr. Lambert, the deceased, was a goldsmith in Coventry-street, and he died on the 2nd of February, 1841, leaving a considerable personal estate. In 1835, a solicitor received instructions to prepare a will for him, and from these instructions he made a draft, and afterwards another draft; and in March 1836, a fair copy of this draft, filling nineteen sheets of paper, was left with the testator for his approval. In August 1836, he produced this draft will, which he had signed, to two clerks in his office, and informed them it was his will, requesting them to attest it, which they did. In July 1837, the deceased, having made certain alterations, had them likewise attested. The solicitor never received back the draft will, but the deceased spoke of intending to return it, telling him that he had signed it, by way of precaution, lest he should die before he had executed a regular will. After his death, the draft will was found in a box, executed, but certain parts of the first sheet were cut away, and the latter part of it was annexed to the top of it by a wafer. So that is a case which approaches very nearly to the present: part of one sheet was cut away, and afterwards re-annexed by a wafer. In the case before us we find part of a sheet has been cut away, and has been re-annexed. Whether it was actually annexed by the testator himself, and whether found in that state, there is a little discrepancy in the evidence; but, at all events, it was found replaced there according to the admission in the case, by whomsoever done, still it was placed back in that situation; therefore the two cases are very much alike in that respect. The learned judge, in Lambert's case, says that there was no evidence when this was done. Dr. Addams submitted that the presumption was, that it had been done before the 1st of January, 1838; that the legacies were unimportant. So that thus a question arose, whether it was done before the 1st January, 1838. This was to see whether it came within the Statute of Wills or not, because, as is well known, that statute came into operation on that particular day; however, the learned judge held that it made no difference whether it was done before or after, because he held that it came under the words of the statute if done after the 1st January, 1838, and the effect would be the same if it had been done before that time. What the learned judge says, is this, "The passages must have been cut out after July, 1837; but it is immaterial," that is really coming pretty close to 1838, "whether it was done before the 1st January, 1838, for, under the 20th section of the Act, a will may be revoked in part, as well as in the whole, by burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying with intention to revoke." He, therefore, considers it as if it were done under the Act—as if it were done after the Act had come into operation. "There can be no doubt that the testator intended to revoke the part removed, and that it was his own act; the paper is, therefore, revoked pro tanto, and good for the other parts. I am of opinion that probate should pass without the words in the first sheet removed by the testator himself." That was his opinion it was revoked pro tanto, that the parts cut out were to form no part of the will, but the remaining part of the will was to stand good, and he accordingly decreed probate of it. Now, then, as to the will of the testator in the present case. It is true the testator had executed only the draft of a will—the fair draft; but that makes no difference. He did it by way of precaution—that was, in point of fact, his will. It is quite clear that the deceased had regularly and duly executed the will itself, which was drawn by a solicitor, disposing of the whole of his property, appointing executors all in due form, signed by himself at the bottom of every page, and also by the attesting witnesses at the opposite corner; and at the foot or end of the will there is the signature of the testator, and there is also an attestation clause, with the names of the subscribing witnesses; therefore, there is no doubt in this case whatever, that the will as originally executed by the deceased was perfect and complete in form and manner. But the important part of the case is, to consider the present state and condition of the will, the state in which it was found, in order to decide whether it must be considered as revoked in the whole, or in part only. Now this will, which, as I stated before, was executed in due form, has had various alterations made in it. The first page seems to have been slightly struck through with a pencil, that of course that can have no operation whatever as to the revocation of it. The mere striking through with a pencil, even before the statute, would only have been equivocal, and since that statute it can have no operation at all if confined to this mere striking through with a pencil, or even if done with a pen, unless it had been signed again and attested by the deceased. But, however, it may have some little, though rather remote, bearing, perhaps, upon the question of intention. The other alterations made in this paper are that the bottom of every page, where the signature of the testator appears to have been—no doubt it was his signature—is cut off all the first six pages; it consists of seven pages, and his signature is cut off from every one of these sheets, but the signature at the foot or end of the will remains, as does the attestation clause, as does the signature of the witnesses, and therefore if it had rested there, this mere cutting off the name from the bottom of these seven sheets, I apprehend there would have been no difficulty at all in coming to the conclusion that the will must stand good, notwithstanding these signatures are cut off at the bottom of each page, because what the Act of Parliament requires is, the signature at the foot or end, and that attested by the witnesses. But there are other and very important matters to be considered in this instrument. In the third sheet of the will two lines seem to have been cut off from the top, less than a third of the way down,—they seem to have been cut off, and to have been replaced, but not so as to make it so perfect as it was before. Now at the beginning of it there has been the word "thousand" cut off. The will had gone on to dispose of 2,000*l.* which is given to trustees for the benefit of the two daughters of the testator, Mrs. Tudor and Mrs. Deacon. It had given this 2,000*l.* to trustees for their benefit; they were to have the dividends and interest for life, and then the principal was to go to their children. Now, thousand has been cut off, and, instead of 2,000*l.* it stands 2—l. followed by a blank, or gap. Now, this alteration seems to be accounted for in some measure from the circumstance of the deceased having, before he had left London and gone down to the Isle of Wight, where he died, determined whilst there to make certain alterations in his will, in order to avoid the legacy duty. It seems that many years ago he had had a legacy left to him, that he declined to accept that legacy, and consequently did not pay any legacy duty on it; but the Government officers insisted upon his paying the legacy duty in full, and not only on paying the legacy duty in full, but likewise on paying twenty-five years' interest upon it; and, in consequence of that, he determined to see whether he could not save some of the legacy duty on his own property. In consequence of this, before he left London, he transferred the sum of 1,500*l.* to trustees for the benefit of his eldest daughter, the wife of the executor in the cause, and executed a deed of trust as to that 1,500*l.* He told his other daughter, Mrs. Deacon, in a conversation with her (we have it in the evidence) that it was his intention to do the same for her—to convey to her 1,500*l.* and that she would find something more in the will. Therefore it is quite clear that the intention of the deceased was to revoke this appointment of "thousand" to the trustees, to convey it in his lifetime, as he actually did to one of the parties, and intended to do to the other, and then to follow this up with some slight legacy to the daughter, because, he says, "You'll find something more." But this is not the only alteration in this paper, because at the bottom there are several lines cut off, so as to leave it quite imperfect; it had purported to give 800*l.* for the benefit of his son, Mr. James Mogg Scripps, but the latter part is cut off, and the next page begins "Mogg Scripps;" so that, in point of fact, there is an excision there of the legacy of 800*l.* to Mr. James Mogg Scripps. Now these are certainly very important, very awkward alterations to deal with, because the paper is left still imperfect; however the deceased replaced the torn parts. I think the evidence preponderates that he fastened the pieces together by a pin, but whether he did or did not, he so placed them that they might continue to form one instrument. But this is not quite the whole of what is to be considered in this matter. Here are certain pencil marginal notes and observations. These are not of very great importance; they would have no effect in themselves. But what is more important is, what has been relied upon, and is said to come within the statute is, the tearing one of the sheets of the will. The sixth sheet, the last sheet but one of the will is torn—that is, the margin about half way is entirely torn off, and certainly that is a "tearing," and if it was done with an intention of destroying the will, if the act accompanied the intention it would be sufficient. But there is no evidence of what the intention was, and I can only judge of the instrument itself. This seems to have been torn very carefully, so as not to destroy the will itself, or any part of it. There may be some little portions of the letters at the beginning of some of the lines destroyed, but not a whole letter anywhere, and the will is just as legible as if there were no tearing at all. It seems as if the margin were carefully torn off so as not to destroy the will, and therefore from that circumstance I think it is rather to be argued that the deceased did intend that the will should remain in operation, otherwise why should he have taken such care not to destroy any part of the writing? If he intended that it should be destroyed he would have torn it in a very different way, and not in that extremely careful manner in which it seems to have been done. It may be said there may have been some codicil or some matter of that sort written, but suppose there had, what alteration would that have made? Suppose he had written a codicil it would have had no effect unless it was duly attested, and if duly attested and torn off it would have been the destruction of that codicil, and that codicil only. The same remarks may be made with respect to the last page, because it will be observed one half of the last page is either torn or cut. I can hardly make out which, but I believe torn. The paper has been so handled now, that I cannot well distinguish, but it is a matter of no importance whether it is torn or cut; because I quite agree with what was said by the learned judge in Lambert's case, that cutting and tearing are equivalent acts. Here, again, it is said, there may have been a codicil on this part of the will, but if there had been, and he had torn it off, it would have been only the destruction of that codicil, as I stated before; and when he cut or tore this off, it is quite clear that this upper part of the sheet which contains the close of the will, and the signature, and the attestation clause and the names of the witnesses, must have been before the deceased at the time when he tore away this last part; therefore he must designedly, I think, have left his signature and the names of the witnesses. I think there is a strong inference to be drawn from that circumstance, that he did not intend to revoke the will in toto. It is said that he kept it, not because it was his will, not that he intended it as such, but he intended it for the draft of a new will. That may be so, he might intend it for the draft of a new will, to use it as such on some future occasion, but he might likewise intend to keep it as an operative instrument, until he had converted that draft into a more formal instrument. It might serve both purposes. I think the circumstance of preserving the name at the foot or end of the will and the attestation clause, and the names of the witnesses, shews that he did not intend to revoke it altogether. In that case I referred to, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust held that cutting or tearing was destructive of the whole will: if that be so, then the preservation of the name at the foot or end is a very important circumstance, and tends to shew that it was the intention of the deceased, though he might mean to use it as a draft for a future will, and to make certain alterations in it, which he certainly did intend to do, still to keep this by him as an operative instrument, in case he should die without completing his intention by making another formal will. I am the more inclined to think this from the age of this gentleman, from his cautious conduct in many respects, and from the circumstance that though he did die when apparently in good health, yet he had a disorder of the heart, that he had been made aware of that fact, and that it might terminate his life suddenly. Under all these circumstances, I do not think it likely that by doing what he has done, he intended to revoke the will altogether. I think he intended to revoke it pro tanto only, and keep it by him as an operative instrument, till he should make another to carry his wishes more perfectly into effect. I must, therefore, pronounce for this will as it stands. The costs to come out of the estate.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. Kent, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

(Before Lord St. Leonards, L.C.)

July 21 and 27.

Dyke v. Rendall.

Dower—Equitable bar of—Contract.

Equitable bar of dower depends entirely upon the doctrine of contract.

An adult lady may agree to accept any given thing in satisfaction or in lieu of dower, and having accepted it, must take it with all its faults and defects.

The acceptance of a mere "chance" will create an equitable bar to dower.

The case of Power v. Shiel, 1 Moll. 296, considered.

By a settlement made on the marriage of A. with B. who was of age, it was recited, that "In consideration of the intended marriage, and for providing a competent jointure and provision of maintenance for B. in case she should survive and outlive A. and for securing a provision for their issue," C. the father of A. had paid to him the sum of 3,000*l.*: and that it had been agreed that A. should give to the trustees of the settlement a bond conditioned for the payment of 2,000*l. within six months after the marriage, to be held by them upon trust for himself for life, then for his intended wife, and then for the children of the marriage. A. gave the bond, but paid only a small portion of the* 2,000*l. During the coverture he was seised of real estate, which he sold. At his death, the remainder of the* 2,000*l. was unpaid: the wife having done no act to bar her dower, filed a bill claiming dower out of the estate sold by her husband:*

Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the settlement was a good equitable bar;

And held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that she was not entitled to any lien upon the estate in respect of so much of the provision as remained unpaid.

This was a suit instituted by Elizabeth Dyke, for dower. The facts were these.

By an indenture of settlement, dated 20th June, 1810, made upon the marriage of the plaintiff, then Elizabeth Skinner, with Thomas Well Dyke, her late husband, it was recited, "That in consideration of the said intended marriage, and for providing a competent jointure and provision of maintenance for the said Elizabeth Skinner, in case she should, after the said intended marriage, survive and outlive the said T. W. Dyke, and for securing a provision for their issue," William Dyke, the father of the said T. W. Dyke, had paid to the said T. W. Dyke the sum of 3,000*l.*, and that John Skinner, the father of Elizabeth Skinner, had paid to the said T. W. Dyke the sum of 851*l.* 10s. and had agreed to pay the further sum of 500*l.* at his death, "which two sums of 815*l.* 10s. and 500*l.* were intended as the marriage portion of the said Elizabeth Skinner:" and that it had been agreed that the said T. W. Dyke should give his bond to &c. (the trustees of the settlement), in the penal sum of 4,000*l.* conditioned for the payment of 2,000*l.* with interest at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum, within six months after the solemnisation of the said intended marriage, to be held by them upon trust for the said T. W. Dyke for life; and after his decease, upon trust, to pay and apply the interests and profits thereof unto the said Elizabeth Skinner and her assigns for life; and after the decease of the survivor of them, upon and subject to such trusts for the benefit of the children of the said intended marriage, is therein expressed. T. W. Dyke executed a bond of even date with the settlement, by which he became bound in the payment to the trustees of the 2,000*l.*; of that sum, 484*l.* 18s. only was paid. On the death of the father of Elizabeth Skinner, the 500*l.* was paid. Subsequently to the marriage, and during the coverture of the plaintiff with the said T. W. Dyke, he became seised and entitled in fee simple in possession of certain lands and tenements known by the name of the "Bulford estate," in the county of Wilts, and which in 1831 he sold and conveyed to Richard Cox, of whose executors and devisees in trust the defendant Charles Edward Rendall in the year 1847 purchased it. At the date of the settlement the plaintiff was of age, and on the sale of the Bulford estate she had done no act to bar her dower. T. W. Dyke died in December 1846, and the plaintiff, his widow, then filed her bill, praying that she might be declared entitled to her dower out of the said Bulford estate, and that it might be assigned to her accordingly.

The defendant, by his answer, set out the deed of settlement as an equitable bar to her claim. The late Vice-Chancellor Wigram, on the cause coming on before his honour, referred it to the Master to inquire whether any settlement was made on the marriage, and whether such settlement, if any, was actually productive of any, and if any, what benefits, in favour of the plaintiff, &c.

The Master, by his report, found that the only sums received by the trustees of the settlement were the sum of 500*l.* in liquidation of the bond of J. Skinner, and the sum of 484*l.* 18s. part payment of T. W. Dyke's bond of 2,000*l.* leaving the residue, amounting to 1,515*l.* 2s. unpaid. The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, on the cause coming on, on further directions (in his judgment, which is not reported), said, that but for the decree and the earlier authorities, he should probably have considered the legal title of the plaintiff—a legal title which was perfectly clear—to the dower claimed by her bill, not touched or affected in any manner by her marriage settlement, although it contained the words, "for providing," &c. He (the Vice-Chancellor) thought himself bound, perhaps, by the decree, but certainly by earlier authority, not so to construe the deed; and felt bound to deal with it as containing a contract between the plaintiff, who was of full age and unmarried when she executed the deed, and Thomas Webb Dyke, who afterwards became her husband, that in consideration of the provision made for her by him, and by the bond of 2,000*l.* she would waive and relinquish her dower. The contract was not performed on his part; it was broken, if not before he acquired, certainly before he parted with the real estate in question, which he did not do until a period subsequent to the time appointed for the payment to the trustees of the settlement of the 2,000*l.* secured by the bond. Could he then, and if he had died seised of the estate, could his heir or devisee have claimed her dower from her—that is, compelled her to release it, or resist in a court of equity a suit by her, without performing his engagement as to the 2,000*l.* to the extent at least of her life interest in that sum—and if not, could the defendant say that he stood in a better position? The defendant could not be allowed to say so; for he and every one deriving a title between him and the husband must be considered as having acquired the interest, with notice actually or constructively of the plaintiff's title. The defendant contended, first, that on the ground of the settlement, whatever might have been the husband's conduct, he or his heir or devisee would have been, and the defendant was, entitled to resist the plaintiff's demand absolutely and unconditionally; and secondly, that if not, he was entitled to require her to elect between the settlement and her dower, denying as he did that she could as against him, keep what she had under the settlement, and apply her dower so far as it would go, or a sufficient part of it, to make good the deficiency. The plaintiff insisted in effect that she had a lien upon the dower for the full performance, so far at least as her own interest extended, of the ante-nuptial contract on her husband's part; and it was on that point mainly or solely that his (the Vice-Chancellor's) judgment rested. He was of opinion that the plaintiff's view of the question was correct—her case being, if not exactly the same with that of a vendor of land who had purchase-money remaining unpaid, and had a lien for it not relinquished, and entitled to enforce that lien in equity, yet analogous to it. The settlement did not leave the husband an option after the marriage to refuse to perform his part of it as between himself and his wife, upon the terms of placing her in the same situation as if there had been no settlement, or to take or keep from her what, but for the settlement, she would have had without performing the stipulations on his part for her benefit contained in them; if those stipulations had been fulfilled, she could not have claimed any dower either on the terms of relinquishing her interest in the settlement or otherwise. She in that event would have had no right of election, no option. To say that in the contrary event she was put to her election, must have been unjust. His Honour thought the plaintiff was entitled to assert her legal right, as it was a case of dower in this court, for the purpose and to the extent, at least, of making good, so far as by such means she could, on the failure on her husband's part to perform the stipulation for her benefit contained in the marriage contract. His Honour declared that the plaintiff was entitled in respect of her dower to one-third of the rents and profits of the Bulford estate, not exceeding, for such one-third of the said rents and profits, 60*l.* 12s. per annum, being the interest at 4*l.* per cent. per annum, which would have accrued due to her on the sum of 1,515*l.* 2s. the portion of the bond remaining unpaid.

From that decree the defendant appealed. The questions raised were, whether the settlement was to be taken in bar of the plaintiff's right to dower, and whether she was entitled to any lien upon the estate in respect of that settlement.

Greene and Vance, for the plaintiff, argued that the deed of June 1810 was an ordinary marriage settlement, its trust being merely in favour of the husband and wife, and issue of the intended marriage. The observations of Lord Hardwicke, in Walker v. Walker, 1 Ves. Sen. 54, which case influenced the Vice-Chancellor against them on the first point, were collateral to the present case. The plaintiff was at all events entitled to have the interest of so much of the 2,000*l.* as remained unpaid made good to her out of her dower. (Carruthers v. Carruthers, 4 B. C. C. 500.) In Power v. Sheil, 1 Moll. 236, Sir Anthony Hart decided "that to create an equitable bar to dower, the provision should be forthcoming." There was no case of election. The plaintiff had contracted to part with her dower for a consideration, which had not been paid. For that consideration she had a lien on the estate, as a vendor would have on the subject of a purchase. The plaintiff's case was analogous to that of an evicted jointress entitled under the Statute of Uses. As to costs, the Vice-Chancellor would have given her her costs, had the settlement been stated substantially in the bill; it was referred to, and which they submitted, was sufficient.

Malins and Bird, for the defendant, the appellant, contended that a contract by an adult female, before marriage, in lieu of dower, was effectual. (Carruthers v. Carruthers, 4 Bro. C.C. 500.) Not so in the case of an infant. In Simpson v. Gutteridge, 1 Madd. 613, a rent-charge had been accepted in lieu of dower, and that was considered an equitable bar to a claim. The term "jointure" in a settlement was indicative of a provision in lieu of dower, and consequently a bar. (Vizard v. Longdale, mentioned in Tinney v. Tinney, 3 Atk. 8.) An adult female may take a mere "chance" in lieu of her dower. The plaintiff might have had recourse to the estate out of which the sum secured by the bond might have been raised. The estate was not primarily subject to the payment. The bond was given as a security for the 2,000*l.* (Drury v. Drury, 2 Eden, 38.)

Greene, in reply.—Lord King, in Vizard v. Longdale, held, that although a bond was a bar to dower, the contract could be literally enforced. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to have the interest on so much of the money secured by the bond as remained unpaid made good out of the estate.

The Lord Chancellor.—The points raised in this case involve questions of great importance. I shall not, therefore, dispose of it without further consideration. In Vizard v. Longdale, Kel. Chan. Cas. 17, Lord King said:—"Several estates that are not specified in the stat. 27 Hen. 8, c. 10, are yet within the equity of the statute, and the present is not a case within the letter of it; but whenever an estate is settled so as to fall and take effect immediately upon the death of the husband, with a covenant or other instrument declaring it to be as a jointure, or in bar of dower, and is tantamount to its being an actual settlement within the letter of the statute, what is necessarily to be done by the words of the statute? The words are expressly "for the jointure of the wife," but the statute does not say that the jointure must be, to be expressed in bar of dower. The bar of dower is only a consequence of its being a jointure; and a jointure, according to my Lord Coke, is a provision and maintenance for the wife; and sure this is expressed to be so, and therefore within the description of it. Before the statute 29 Car. 2, a parol averment of any such provision being made as a jointure was sufficient." Here, then, the settlement expressly recites that the provision thereby made is "for providing a competent jointure and provision of maintenance," and that is a declaration which in this Court would, I think, create a clear bar of dower; but whether in the event which has happened that could be considered a bar or not is a different question, and a question which I shall not now decide. This is a very peculiar contract: an adult female, for a consideration which fails, contracts to bar her dower. Such a person may of course bar her dower by any means and on any terms and conditions that she pleases; but have the term and conditions which in this case actuated the plaintiff to create the bar been complied with? I do not bear with Sir Anthony Hart in some of his observations in Power v. Sheil. He says, "I put the case of a contract agreed to by an adult female before marriage, to the effect that the wife never will claim dower, and I asked what a Court of Equity would do with such a contract as that? Undoubtedly, it would say that it only enforces contracts which may be legally entered into, but are deficient in legal form. Now, such a contract as that the Court does not tolerate in any shape." Now, in that observation I cannot agree, for I think a woman may be doing a very wise thing by enabling her husband to deal with his estates. I have no doubt but that an adult female can exercise such a right. She can enter into any such contract. The question here is, for what has the plaintiff contracted? Now, this settlement seems singularly shaped: the fathers of the intended husband and wife are parties to it; the intended husband himself provides no money, but his father furnishes him with the sum of 3,000*l.* Now, it is apparent that that was the true consideration for which the plaintiff agreed to bar her dower. Mr. Dyke intended that the property of his son should not be encumbered with her dower. That sum he agreed to pay to the trustees as a "jointure;" and he would have done so, had not the parties themselves arranged that, instead of his so doing, the husband should retain 2,000*l.* of it, and give his bond to the trustees for its payment within six months after the marriage. I am inclined to think that the moment the money was paid, and the condition of giving the bond complied with, the plaintiff could not have claimed dower against the estate of the husband, in consequence of the provision made by his father. She accepted the bond in question at her own hazard; she accepted it as a security for the 2,000*l.* At the date of the settlement the husband was seized of no real estate, so that she had no inchoate right to dower. She chose to give up her future right for the provision made by Mr. Dyke, and I do not know of any rule of law which would render such a transaction illegal, or one which could not be enforced in this Court. In Vizard v. Longdale, the wife had a present right to 14*l.* a year; and if the 1,515*l.* 2*s.* could be recovered on the bond, she would of course be entitled to a life interest in it. I am therefore of opinion that the settlement did create an equitable bar. But as to the question whether, upon the consideration for which she had created that bar having in part failed, she can fall back upon the real estate for the deficiency, this I must consider, and will decide in a few days.

Tuesday, July 27.—The Lord Chancellor.—In this case the Vice-Chancellor decided that the settlement was to be taken in bar of dower; so far, therefore, the decree is right; but there remains another and a very different question to be considered, namely, whether the plaintiff is entitled to any lien in respect of this settlement upon the real estate of which her husband was seised during the coverture, and which he sold during his lifetime. To decide this question, it becomes necessary to consider the difference, as the law stands, between a legal and an equitable bar of dower. Vernon's case, in 4 Term Reports, 1, explains how the Statute of Uses provided for dower. At the time that it was passed, a very great proportion of the lands of this country were vested in feoffees to uses; the consequence was, that, as to entitle a wife to dower, the husband must be seised of the land, a great portion of lands were not subject to dower prior to that statute. When, therefore, the statute passed which vested the estate in the person entitled to the use, the wife would have immediately become entitled to dower. The Act of Parliament, therefore, provided, "that where conveyances had been, or should be made of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to the use of the husband and wife in tail, or to the use of one of them in tail, or for their lives, or for the life of the wife for her jointure, every woman married having such jointure should not claim, nor have any title to, dower out of the residue of the lands," &c.; and it went further,—it provided that, in case the widow should be evicted from her legal jointure, then she should be at liberty to resort back to her dower. That was reasonable enough; so that when the clause of eviction operates, it does so upon the legal jointure which was made a bar under the statute: the statute creates the bar with an exception; that is, the exception of the jointress being evicted: so that the exception never could operate except where the bar was created by the statute. But how stood the case as to an equitable bar? It was very soon settled that what was not a legal bar of the dower under the statute might be made an equitable bar under the rules of this Court. There might have been some idea of proceeding by analogy to the legal bar, or on the ground of contract. Now, I am clearly of opinion that the true ground of the equitable bar depended on contract, and on contract only, and wholly independent of the statute. If we were to suppose that this Court acted by analogy to the legal bar, of course the bar could only be effectual where it would be so at law; but this court has always disregarded the Statute of Uses and the nature of the provision, and has never required any real estate to be settled, but has always considered that personal estate would do equally as well as real. In Carruthers v. Carruthers, Lord Alvanley states the rule of the Court, that an adult female may take anything, even a "chance" in bar of her dower, though that chance, as a bar of dower under the Statute of Uses, would go for nothing; but when this Court began to give effect to equitable bar of dower, it not only disregarded the nature of the property, or the quantum of it (for an interest, however slight, if accepted, was just as good as a larger provision), but it did not consider it necessary that it should be certain of coming to the widow. An equitable bar of dower, therefore, as to an adult has not the qualities necessary for creating a legal bar. Everything depends upon contract; there is no doubt you may bar any possibility; you may deal with your rights in this court, of whatever nature they may be, by contract fairly entered into. In Birmingham v. Kirwan, 2 Sch. & L. 444, Lord Redesdale thought that there was nothing peculiar in the doctrine of this court as to the equitable bar of dower—that it was a mere matter of contract. But how stands this case upon the authorities. In Simpson v. Gutteridge, Sir Thomas Plumer said that it was the uniform practice with conveyancers not to question the title of the jointure in cases of equitable bars. I have never met with an instance where it was done. It was argued that it was now the practice of conveyancers to inspect the title of the jointure estates. From my own experience (which was not small) I can say that it was not formerly the practice of conveyancers to call for the title to the jointure. If, indeed, it were a jointure purporting to create a legal bar within the statute, it would be different, and the case would stand upon the law as to eviction; but in this court the bar stands simply upon the question of contract. My opinion, therefore, is, that if an adult lady contracts to accept any given thing in satisfaction of her dower, she must take that thing with all its faults and with all its defects; we must look to the contract only, and by no analogy to the rule of law can she, in the case of eviction from what she contracted for, come against the lands out of which she might have otherwise been entitled to dower. Of course this has nothing to do with the performance of the covenant of the husband to give the bond; he must of course perform it if he desires to keep the estates free from dower. He must do the act contracted for,—that depends upon the common doctrine of this Court. The question which I have to decide is, did the plaintiff or not accept of this settlement such as it is in bar of her dower? I am of opinion that she did. Now, though in the events which have happened, the money has not been paid, yet I am inclined to think that the plaintiff has no right to resort to the lands acquired by the husband after marriage. I altogether differ from the observations of Sir Anthony Hart, in the case of Power v. Sheil, upon this question; and as the parties may have been misled by the authority of that case, I shall dismiss this bill, but without costs.

Bill dismissed without costs.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by Owen Davies Tudor, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 3 and 4.

MAXWELL v. MAXWELL.

Construction of will—Scotch heritable bonds—Election.

A testator, domiciled in England, where he had real and personal estate, and also being entitled to Scotch heritable bonds, by his will, which was inoperative to pass real estate in Scotland, devised and bequeathed all his real and personal estates, whatsoever and wheresoever, to trustees for the benefit of his children:

Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the eldest son and heir-at-law was not bound to elect between the Scotch heritable bonds and the benefits conferred on him by the will.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Master of the Rolls on a special case, under the following circumstances:—

The testator, P. C. Maxwell, was, at the date of his will and down to the time of his decease, domiciled in England, and also entitled under certain Scotch heritable bonds to one-third of 5,000*l.* one-fifth of 16,000*l.* and one-fifth of 22,000*l.* charged upon real estate in Scotland. He was also during the same periods seised of real estates in England, and also possessed of personal property invested in the public funds and in other English securities to an amount exceeding 25,000*l.*; the testator being so entitled, interested, seised, and possessed, made his will, bearing date the 27th of February, 1851, which was not in his handwriting, but which was duly made, executed, and attested according to the law of England. It was as follows:—"By virtue of every right, power, or authority enabling me in this behalf, I give and bequeath unto and to the use of William Lawson, of Brough Hall, in the county of York, bart. and Edward Wright, of Richmond, gentleman, their executors, administrators, and assigns, all my real and personal estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, and whether in possession or reversion, upon trust to permit my dear wife Helena to receive and take the rents, interest, dividends, and annual profits thereof for the term of her natural life, in full confidence that she will promote, to the best of her power, the education and advancement of my children; and after her decease, in trust for all my children, their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, equally share and share alike, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants; and I appoint the said William Lawson and Edward Wright executors of this my will." The testator died on the day of the date of his will, leaving the defendant, F. H. C. Maxwell, his eldest son and heir-at-law in England and Scotland, and the plaintiffs, his only other children, who, with their brother, the defendant, were then, and still remained, all infants. In June 1851 H. C. Maxwell, the testator's widow, died.

The Scotch heritable bonds did not pass by the will to the trustees upon the trusts therein declared, for the following reasons:—First, the will did not in the terms of the devise contain the word "dispose," which in Scotland is essential to the validity of a devise of real estate. Secondly, it had no "testing clause," which is also essential to the validity of such devise, unless the will is holograph. And moreover, even if it had contained the word "dispose," and a "testing clause," the heir-at-law might have set the will aside so far as it affected heritable property in Scotland, on the ground of its having been made on the deathbed.

The question raised by the special case for the determination of the Court was one of election, the doctrine of which, in Scotland, being known by the terms "approbate" and "reprobate," is the same as in England, viz.—was the heir-at-law, F. H. C. Maxwell, bound to make his election between the shares and interests in the Scotch heritable bonds, which descended to him in consequence of the devise being invalid, and the benefits to which he was entitled under the will as one of the children of the testator, or was he entitled to the Scotch heritable bonds in addition to the benefits conferred upon him by the will? Both the plaintiffs, the younger children, and the defendant, the heir-at-law, appeared by guardians appointed by special order of the Court. The trustees also appeared as defendants.

His Honour the Master of the Rolls, upon the authority of Johnson v. Telford, 1 Russ. & M. 244, and Allen v. Anderson, 5 Hare, 163, held that the heir was not bound to elect, and the plaintiffs now appealed from that decision.

Anderson and Fleming, for the appellants, cited Trotter v. Trotter, 4 Bligh, N. S. 502; 3 Wils. & Sh. 407; Brodie v. Barry, 2 V. & B. 127; Johnson v. Telford, 1 Russ. & M. 244; Churchman v. Ireland, 1 Russ. & M. 250; Allen v. Anderson, 5 Hare, 163; Ker v. Wauchope, 1 Bligh, 1; Gaunet v. Cunningham, 1 Bligh, 27; M'Call v. M'Call, Dru. 283; and Reynolds v. Torin, 1 Russ. 29: and the following Scotch cases:—Bennet v. Bennets, trustees, 7 Sh. & Dunl. 817; Dundas v. Dundas, 2 Dow. & C. 347, 7 Sh. & Dunl. 241; 4 Wils. & Sh. 460; 2 Rop. The Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE:—In the year 1851, a gentleman connected with Scotland, resident and domiciled in England, having real estate in England, and personal estate in England, and real estate in Scotland, makes his will in the English form. The will as executed and attested, is incontestably valid according to the English law. [His lordship here read the will.] The will is incontestably invalid as to the real estate in Scotland, which accordingly descended upon one of the testator's sons as his heir, according to the law of Scotland. It is against this son, in respect of the Scotch property thus descended, that the question of election is thus raised. It is said on the part of the other children of the testator, that the heir must either give up the Scotch property for the purposes of the will, or not take under it, this claim of the younger children being founded on the generality and universality of the language of the will. Here it is argued that the testator had property, that Scotch real property formed part of his estate. I apprehend, however, that according to principle, a rule of construction which the English law applies, if not to all instruments, at least to instruments testamentary, the law is to interpret them according to the principle that the generality merely, or the universality of the gift of property, is not sufficient to demonstrate or create a ground of inference that the giver meant it to extend to property incapable, though his own, of passing by the particular Act. If the will mentioned particular property, that would not be the same case as here. If the will had mentioned Scotland in terms, or the testator had not any real estate except real estate in Scotland, this might have been a ground for putting the heir to his election. The matter, however, standing as it does, we are bound to hold that the will does not exhibit an intention to give or affect any property which it is not adapted to pass. In coming to this conclusion, I suspect we must be doing what the testator himself would disapprove of if he could be heard otherwise than through his will. I wish he could; but I am bound, however I may regret it, to act upon the principle of construction. I referred during the argument to the cases of Harris v. Ingledew, 3 P. Wms. 91; Hazlewood v. Pope, 3 P. Wms. 325; Judd v. Pratt, 13 Ves. 168; and Wentworth v. Cox, 6 Madd. 363; and many other authorities were cited at the bar, and others might be referred to, but this would be superfluous. I may be excused, however, in quoting a few words from the judgment of Tindal, C. J. in the case of Doe d. Clarke v. Ludlam, 7 Bing. 279; 5 Moo. & P. 58:—"I agree in the necessity of adhering to general rules in the construction of wills and other instruments. It is expedient that such rules should be held sacred, because they withdraw the decision from the discretion of the individual judge, and prevent him from pursuing his own views of each particular case. And there is less inconvenience in the hardship which may sometimes be occasioned by a strict adherence to the rule, than in the confusion which must follow from the departing from it."

The Lord Justice LORD CRANWORTH.—I need add nothing beyond the expression of my concurrence, both in the conclusion that has been arrived at, and in the regret at being obliged to arrive at it. I take the general rule to be that which was put distinctly by Sir John Leach in Wentworth v. Cox, that general words primâ facie import only that which the nature of the instrument is calculated to pass. An exception to the application of that general rule is, where it is apparent on the face of the will that property beyond that is intended to pass; as where other property is mentioned by name, as in Brodie v. Barry, and the other cases cited. Here nothing of the sort occurs; and we should be doing what is unwarrantable, if, acting on conjecture merely, we interpreted the will otherwise than according to the general rule.

Chancery Practice Amendment Act—Suitors in Chancery Relief Act—Written and printed bill—Stamp.

Where a bill was filed in writing pursuant to the 6th section of the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and was impressed with a 1*l. stamp, as directed by the Orders of Oct.* 25, 1852, and then a printed copy was tendered to the record and writ clerk, who refused to receive it unless stamped, as being contrary to the 12*th section of the stat.* 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, but

Held, that only one stamp was necessary, and accordingly the Court ordered the bill to be received and filed.

A bill (in writing) was filed, on which, pursuant to the order of Court of the 25th of October, 1852 Schedule, Part D, a fee of 1*l.* had been paid by a stamp of that amount. In accordance with the 6th section of the Chancery Practice Amendment Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 86), a printed copy was made and offered to the clerk of records and writs for acceptance, and to be filed; but an objection was made that the printed copy had not a stamp for 1*l.* impressed upon it. The ground for this objection was said to be the language of the 12th section of the Chancery Suitors' Relief Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 87), by which it is enacted that no document which by any order shall be required to have a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto, shall be received or filed unless or until the same shall have a stamp impressed thereon or affixed thereto in the manner directed by such order.

Amphlett now brought the matters before the Court, and contended that the object of the recent statutes was that a fee of 1*l.* only should be paid in the filing of a bill, and although in form and in mere words the Chancery Suitors' Relief Act did appear to require a stamp to be affixed on every document before it should be received, still as the written bill and the printed bill were in substance but one single document, the latter being only filed in substitution for the former, it was manifestly intended that only one fee should be paid. Under these circumstances, he submitted that the Court should direct the clerk of records and writs to receive the printed bill without the stamp, and file it accordingly.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—The very words of the Acts in question, if strictly construed, seem to intimate the necessity of a stamp being affixed on every such document. Still it never was nor could be intended, that a plaintiff in such a case as this should be charged with a double fee. It is exceedingly desirable that the rules of the Court should be uniform, and I will, therefore, speak to the other judges on the question; but in the meantime I direct the bill to be received by the clerk of records and writs, and filed without a second stamp.

Ex parte CRAMER, re STEWART'S Trusts.

15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44—Practice—Purchase-money of real estate.

Persons who had been appointed executors of a will which was not proved, ordered by the Court to represent the personal estate of the testator for the purposes of the proceeding then before the Court.

A sum of stock in court, in which the purchase-money of land sold under the compulsory powers of an Act of Parliament had been invested, was Held to be personal estate impressed with the character of real estate, and consequently passed to the heir-at-law or devisee, and not to the executor.

John Stewart, by his will dated the 19th of March, 1823, devised certain real estate at Manchester to trustees upon trust to receive the rents, and after causing the premises to be kept in substantial repair, to pay and apply the remainder of the rents for the maintenance, support, education, and advancement of Eliza, Henry, and Frederick, the children of Mary Cramer, until the youngest of them should attain the age of twenty-one years; and after the attainment by the youngest of them to the age of twenty-one years, upon trust to pay the rents, or so much as should remain undisposed of for the purposes aforesaid into the proper hands of the said Eliza Cramer for her separate use, and after her decease upon trust to stand seised of such hereditaments to the use of all the child or children of the said Eliza Craven equally, if more than one as tenants in common, his, her, and their heirs and assigns, and if but one child, then to the use of such one child, his or her heirs and assigns for ever; and in case of default of such children of the said Eliza Cramer, or such children living to be entitled, or issue of such children living to be entitled, then to the use of the said Henry Cramer and Frederick Cramer, their heirs and assigns for ever, as tenants in common. The testator died in May 1833, leaving Eliza Sarah, Henry John, and Frederick Augustus Cramer, who were the three children of Mary Cramer named in the will, him surviving. Under the Manchester Improvement Act (2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 36) the improvement committee, appointed by the commissioners, entered into an agreement, dated the 12th of February, 1836, with the trustees of Mr. John Stewart's will, for the purchase of the real estate included in the said devise, for the sum of 2,000*l.* This sum was, according to the directions of the Act in such cases, paid into the Court of Exchequer, and by an order of that court, dated the 14th day of February, 1838, and made on the petition of the trustees and tenant for life under J. Stewart's will, the said sum of 2,000*l.* was invested in the purchase of 2,139*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.* 3 per cent Reduced Bank Annuities. Upon the abolition of the equity jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer, this sum of stock was transferred into the name of the accountant-general of this court, the account being "Ex parte the Commissioners of the Manchester Gas and Improvement Acts.—The account of the trustees of John Stewart, deceased." Eliza Sarah Cramer, afterwards Ravenscroft, received the dividends of the stock until the 10th of October, 1849, and she died on the 23rd of December, 1849, without having had any children, and leaving William Richard Ravenscroft, her husband, her surviving. Henry John Cramer died on the 28th of June, 1844, in the lifetime of his sister, and intestate as to real estate, but having made a will disposing of his personal estate, and appointing H. Crisp and R. C. Hubbersty executors. The will, however, was not proved. Frederick Augustus Cramer now petitioned for the transfer of the stock to him, as to one moiety in his own right, and as to the other moiety, as heir-at-law of his brother H. J. Cramer.

Smythe appeared in support of the petition.

Greene objected that there was no personal representative of H. J. Cramer before the Court.

Smythe referred to the 44th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, as authorising the Court to proceed without the representative of a deceased person, or to appoint one.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that the persons named in H. J. Cramer's will might represent the estate for the purposes of the matter before the Court, and directed that any order on the petition should be prefaced by the statement that the Court had ordered that H. Crisp and R. C. Hubbersty should represent the personal estate of H. J. Cramer, for the purposes of this matter.

Smythe contended that the stock, representing as it did land which had been sold under the compulsory powers of this Act of Parliament, retained the nature of real estate. He referred to Midland Counties Railway Company v. Oswin, 1 Coll. 80; and Re Cross's Estate, 1 Sim. N. S. 260.

(a) Tuesday, Nov. 23.—In the course of the argument in James v. Lord Wynford, Collins proposed to cite a case from the LAW TIMES, at the same time stating that he believed it was not an accredited report. Malins said, that the reports in the LAW TIMES were by barristers whose names were prefixed to the cases, and upon the authority of those gentlemen the reports were always received. So recently as last Saturday, the Lord Chancellor permitted a report to be cited from the LAW TIMES. The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had only felt with the Lord Chancellor that there must be a limit somewhere; he had only acted upon what the Lord Chancellor had done. His Honour then desired Mr. Collins to state the case from the LAW TIMES report.

W. D. Lewis (amicus curiæ) mentioned the case of Re Taylor's Settlement, 9 Hare, 596.

Greene contended that the long acquiescence of H. J. Cramer in the property remaining in stock, and the fact of his will relating to personalty only, evinced an intention on his part, that the property should be considered as personalty. He referred to Cookson v. Cookson, 12 Cl. & Fin. 121.

Smythe, in reply, cited Re Horner's Estate, before Vice-Chancellor Parker. (See 19 Law T. Rep. 199,)

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that in this case H. J. Cramer was entitled to an estate in fee simple in remainder, in certain real estates in Manchester. That estate had been devised to a lady for life, and H. J. Cramer's interest in remainder was defeasible in the event of the birth of children of that lady. This real estate was taken by the Manchester Improvement Commissioners for the purposes, and under the compulsory powers, of their Act. The purchase-money, which represented the value of this real estate, was paid into Court under the provisions of the Act, and invested in stock, and the dividends of that stock were ordered to be paid to the tenant for life. No application was ever made to the Court for re-investment of the stock in real estate, but the money remained in Court, as representing real estate, and the parties entitled to the stock were those who were entitled to the real estate, and, but for the operation of the Act, in the events which had happened, the heir or devisee of H. J. Cramer would be entitled to one moiety of the real estate, and the possession and enjoyment of it. It was contended, however, on the part of the personal representatives of H. J. Cramer, and of those interested in his personal estate, that the effect of the transactions under the Act was to convert the quality of the estate of H. J. Cramer in this property into personal estate, or if it had not been so converted, they contended that at least, from the nature of the interest which he had, he had a right to elect that the property should be his property as personal, and not real, estate. The questions which his Honour had to consider were, first, whether, by the operation of the Act, this real estate had been converted absolutely into personal estate, and was to pass to the representatives of Cramer as personal estate; and 2ndly, if not, whether it was so converted by reason that Cramer having a right to elect to enjoy it as personal estate, some act to testify such election was done by H. J. Cramer in his lifetime. In support of the argument that the property had been converted into personal estate, Cross's case, decided by Lord Cranworth, had been cited; and his Honour must say that that case did countenance the argument that this fund would be personal estate. It did not go to the whole extent of the principle contended for in the present case, but it countenanced the principle. Against that authority three cases had been cited, one before the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, when Vice-Chancellor, another before Vice-Chancellor Turner, and another before the late Vice-Chancellor Parker. To the principle of these decisions his Honour entirely acceded. His Honour thought that in a case of this kind, where money was paid into court, where real estate was converted by the compulsory powers of these acts into personal estate, and remained in court subject to the rights of the parties interested in it, to have it re-invested in land, it was to be considered as money or personal estate in the hands of this Court, impressed with the trusts of real estate. That was a sound principle, and there must be strong words in the Act to induce the Court to act on the assumption that it was personalty. Therefore, it seemed to his Honour clear, upon authority and principle, that, independently of any act on the part of Cramer, his interest in the money in court in this case was to be considered, for the purpose of the question who was entitled to it on his death, as real estate. A doubt had been suggested whether he had a right to elect. His Honour was of opinion that, it he had, no act of election, such as to have any weight with the Court, appeared in this case. If so, it was needless for his Honour to consider whether Cramer had the power, and he did not touch that question. It was enough for him to find that there were no facts to shew an election with regard to Cramer's interest in this property, which was personal property in this court impressed with the character of real estate. No act of election appeared, and therefore his Honour was of opinion that there had been no election on Cramer's part, and that the claim of this petitioner was plain.

Re parte JOHN SCOTT'S EXECUTORS, re THE NORTH OF ENGLAND JOINT-STOCK BANKING COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Contributory Call.

Executors of a deceased shareholder in a company, whose names had been placed on the list of contributories, they having received dividends on the shares, sought to reverse or vary the Master's order for payment of a call by them, on the ground of their not being liable to the debts of the company. There had been no classification of the contributories, and the Court, considering that some classification was necessary in order to meet the equity suggested, refused the motion with costs.

This was a motion to discharge or vary an order of Master Farrer, whereby he directed that a call of 50*l.* per share should be made upon Alexander Bartram and Michael Allan, as contributories for sixty shares, in the character of personal representatives of John Scott. From 1812, when John Scott, the owner of the shares, died, until March 1847, when the bank stopped payment, Mr. Bartram and Mr. Allan received dividends on the shares, but they took no steps for constituting themselves shareholders, according to the provisions of the 29th and 30th sections (a) of the company's deed of settlement. Messrs. Bartram and Allan received the dividends under the description of representatives of John Scott, without being named.

Malins and Terrell, in support of the application, contended that Messrs. Bartram and Allan were not liable to any call at all; but that, if they were, it should not be until all the other contributories had paid. They were not liable to any debts, and although they might be properly on the list of contributories, they ought to be exempt from the payment of any call. They referred to Ex parte Gay, 16 Jur. 51.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (without hearing Bacon and J. L. Prior, for the official manager) said, that the Court should proceed on some classification of the contributories, in order to meet the equity upon which the appellants sought by this motion to be relieved from payment of the call. This classification had not been sought before the Master. If his Honour, by making an order simply refusing this motion, should prejudice any right to assert the equity which had been suggested, he did not intend it, nor did he consider that the appellants would be prejudiced. The right to ask the Master to make that classification was not gone by,—at least, that was his Honour's impression: but he did not wish to influence the Master in the matter. He considered that these contributories had made no case for exempting them from liability to the call, and he should refuse the motion with costs.

SMITH v. BOUCHER.

Practice—Trustee Act, 1850.

To an order of course to render a foreclosure absolute, the Court refused to add a declaration that the mortgagor was a trustee within the Trustee Act.

In this case, which was a foreclosure suit by an equitable mortgagee, a decree had been made that the defendant, the mortgagor, should pay, or in default be foreclosed, and convey to the mortgagee. On the Master's certificate that default in payment was made,

Shapter moved for an order to render the foreclosure absolute, and asked that the Court would, under the 30th section of the Trustee Act, 1850, declare the mortgagor a trustee, in order that the mortgagor being out of the jurisdiction a vesting order might hereafter be obtained under the 9th section of the Trustee Act. He referred to Bowra v. Wright, 15 Jur. 981; and Rowley v. Adams, 15 Jur. 1001.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that to this order, which was granted upon a motion of course, it was sought to tack a very special addition, and he could not do it.

LANGDALL v. GILL.

Practice—11th Order of 7th August, 1852.

It is not necessary to obtain the leave of the Court previous to filing a statement of new facts or circumstances in the Record and Writ Clerks' Office, under the above Order.

This was a petition by Cora Eliza Wood, one of the defendants (who had recently married), her husband, and the trustees of the settlement made upon her marriage. In the suit an amount of stock had been brought into Court, and the dividends directed to be paid to Cora Eliza Wood, then Cora Eliza Langdall. The petition, after stating the said order, the marriage, and the settlement, prayed that the dividends might be paid to Mrs. Wood for her separate use, "and that the said infant plaintiff might be directed to enter upon record in this cause such statement as might be necessary to record the said marriage of your petitioners, Cora Eliza Wood and Henry Thomas Wood, and the nature and effect of the said settlement of the 29th of October, 1852."

Baxill appeared in support of the petition, and referred to the 14th Order of 7th August, 1852.

Osborne, for the plaintiff, opposed the latter portion of the prayer of the petition as unnecessary.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that he did not understand why an order was wanted previous to filing such a statement, under the 11th Order. It certainly would be a novelty to allow the defendant to amend the plaintiff's bill. He would make no order upon the latter part of the prayer of the petition: the rest was almost of course.

Practice—Receiver.

Application for the appointment of a receiver should be by summons at chambers.

Terrell moved for the usual order of reference for the appointment of a receiver of the testator's estate, the executors having abandoned their trust.

The motion was not opposed.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the appointment of a receiver might be made upon summons at chambers. The orders permitted the Court to send such matters as were thought fit to chambers, and this appeared to be such a matter. In this case, however, he would, upon the production of affidavits as to the fitness of the proposed receiver, appoint him at once upon this motion without putting the parties to the expense of a summons.

STAINS v. RUDLIN.

New practice—Foreclosure - Sale.

This was the usual claim filed for the foreclosure of a mortgage. The 48th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, enables the Court "in any suit for the foreclosure of the equity of redemption in any mortgaged property, upon the request of the mortgagee, or of any subsequent incumbrancer, or of the mortgagor, or any person claiming under them respectively, to direct a sale of such property instead of a foreclosure of such equity of redemption, on such terms as the Court may think fit to direct; and if the Court shall so think fit without previously determining the priority of incumbrances, or giving the usual or any time to redeem; provided that if such request shall be made by any such subsequent incumbrancer, or by the mortgagor, or by any person claiming under them respectively, the Court shall not direct any such sale without the consent of the mortgagee, or the persons claiming under him, unless the party making such request shall deposit in court a reasonable sum of money, to be fixed by the Court, for the purpose of securing the performance of such terms as the Court may think fit to impose on the party making such request."

Drewry, for the mortgagee, now asked, on the claim coming on to be heard, that a sale might be directed under the above section of the Chancery Practice Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

Shebbeare, for some of the defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made a decretal order on the claim to the following effect:—That an account should be taken before his clerk of the principal and interest due on the mortgage, and to tax the costs of all parties except the mortgagor; and should the principal, interest, and costs not be paid by the mortgagor within one month after the date of the clerk's certificate of this amount, the estate to be sold, and the proceeds paid into court, with the usual and necessary directions.

CLARKE v. CLARKE.

New Practice - Service of infant defendant with notice of decree.

The 8th rule of the 42nd section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, provides, in the cases thereinbefore mentioned, that "the persons who, according to the practice of the Court, would be necessary parties to the suit, shall be served with notice of the decree, and after such notice they shall be bound by the proceedings in the same manner as if they had been originally made parties to the suit, and they may, by an order of course, have liberty to attend the proceedings under the decree; and any party so served may, within such time as shall in that behalf be prescribed by the general order of the Lord Chancellor, apply to the Court to add to the decree."

A claim had been filed by residuary legatees for the usual accounts. One of the parties to it was an infant.

Bazalgette, for the claim, asked the opinion of the Court as to whether this infant party should be served with notice of the decree.

Buske, for defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR was of opinion that under the new practice an infant must be served with notice of the decree in the same way as any other party; and should any difficulty thereafter arise, any question arising upon the propriety of the service might then be decided.

REG. v. NORTH AND SOUTH SHIELDS FERRY COMPANY.

Poor-rate—Rateability of tolls—Ferry—Landing-places.

A company, incorporated by Act of Parliament, and authorised to establish a ferry for the conveyance of passengers, &c. across the Tyne, between North and South Shields, was rated to the relief of the poor of North Shields in respect of their ferry, landing, and tolls. The bed of the river Tyne, between the townships of North and South Shields, is situate in a third parish, and the boats of the company, when afloat for the purpose of carrying passengers, &c. were in that third parish; but it was found that the ferry would be of no value without the landing-places on each side, and that no tolls would be paid by any one for coming on the landing-place unless they were also conveyed across the river. The rate was imposed upon one-half of the entire net profits of the company, as being the rateable value of the property occupied by the company in North Shields:

Held, that the rate so laid was wrong, inasmuch as the tolls earned by the ferry could not be rated either directly as land or indirectly as the profits arising from the occupation of the landing-place: but that, though the amount of tolls was not the measure of value, the land should nevertheless be rated at the increased value given to it by its being available for the purposes of the ferry.

Held also, that as the tolls were principally earned, not by the use of the landing-places, but by a voyage across a tidal estuary not performed in any particular course, a mileage apportionment of the profits was inapplicable to the case.

Upon appeal against a rate the rate was confirmed, subject to the following

CASE.

The parish of Tynemouth is situated wholly in the county of Northumberland, and is bounded on the south by the river Tyne, and extends from the mouth of that river about four miles westward, for the whole of which distance, and beyond, the said river, is public tidal, and navigable. The said parish contains eight townships, each maintaining its own poor; North Shields is one of these townships, and is bounded on the south by the said river, along which it extends about one mile and three-quarters. The township of South Shields, in the county of Durham, also maintains its own poor, and is situate on the opposite side of the said river, by which it is bounded on the north, and along which it extends about two miles. All the part of the said river which flows between the said two townships, that is, the water of the same river and the bed and soil thereof below low water-mark, is within the ancient parish of St. Nicholas, in the borough and county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne. The shore of the river adjoining North Shields is, when left dry by the receding of the tide, in that township, and in the like manner the shore on the south side adjoining South Shields is, when so left dry, in the said township of South Shields; but all vessels and things afloat are in the said parish of St. Nicholas.

The appellants were incorporated by the statute 10 Geo. 4. c. 98 (local, personal, and public), and were thereby authorised (section 2) to establish, keep, and maintain, a ferry, consisting of steam boats, barges, floats, rafts, or other vessels, for the conveyance and passage of horses, carriages, and foot passengers over and across the river Tyne, between North Shields, in the county of Northumberland, and South Shields, in the county of Durham; and to build ferry-houses on each side of the river, and to make and keep in repair causeways at the landing-places of the said ferry. And it was thereby declared that all persons with carriages, horses, &c. should have free liberty to pass over the said ferry so to be established, upon payment of the tolls thereby granted.

By section 4, the company were empowered to make and purchase a road or passage from the said ferry, on the north side of the said river, into the main street of the low town of North Shields, and another road from the said ferry, on the south side of the said river, into a public street in South Shields, called Dean-street, and the same roads or passages were to be made, and at all times thereafter, maintained and repaired at the proper costs and charges of the said company, by and out of the tolls by the said Act granted.

By sections 5 to 7, the company are prohibited in making such roads from deviating from the lines marked in the plans deposited with the clerks of the peace of the counties of Northumberland and Durham, and of the town and county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne aforesaid, without the written consent of the owners of the lands through which any deviation is made, or through any house, garden, or yard, except such as are mentioned in the schedule of the Act.

By section 8, the company are enabled at any time thereafter to widen, turn, or alter any part or parts of the said roads, for rendering the same more commodious, or to make a new and more commodious road through any private lands, with the written consent of the owners thereof.

By section 10, the company are empowered to contract with the owners of lands and hereditaments necessary for the purposes of the Act, or of any ferries across the said river, for the purchase of the same, or for compensation for any damage such owners may sustain by the execution of the said Act.

The Act contains the usual clauses enabling corporations and persons under disabilities to sell, and for assessing the price in case of disagreement.

By sec. 27, the company's power to purchase lands and hereditaments without the consent of the owners expires in five years from the passing of the Act, but such purchases are allowed after five years with such consent; and by sec. 28, the company may resell lands and hereditaments not wanted. Sec. 30 requires a capital of 9,950*l.* to be raised before the powers of the Act be put in force. Sec. 31 declares the shares to be personal property. Sec. 70 enacts that as soon as the said ferry shall be made fit for the passage of carriages, horses, and passengers, it shall be lawful for the said company to collect and receive, before any carriages, horses, or foot passengers, or portable articles, shall be permitted to pass over the said ferry, or through any gate to be erected by virtue of the said Act across the approaches to the said ferry, certain tolls there specified, all which tolls shall be paid every time of passing and repassing. Under and in pursuance of the said Act, the company having raised the required capital, purchased a piece of land, about fifty yards long, and five or six wide, in the township of North Shields, and made the same into a landing-place, or approach, communicating with and leading into the main street of North Shields; and they also purchased a similar piece of land, and have converted it to the like purpose, at South Shields; on each of these landing-places a toll-house and gate have been erected. These landing places are not immediately opposite each other; that on the South Shields being a quarter of a mile higher up the river than the other. The company out of their capital also purchased three or four steam ferry-boats at a cost of about 5,000*l.* and have since kept up the same number of ferry-boats, which, with their stores, &c. are now worth about the same sums. They also purchased of the Dean and Chapter of Durham an ancient ferry, or right of ferry, between North and South Shields aforesaid, which that body possessed by charter or prescription, and had, up to the passing of the said Act, exercised and worked, the consideration for such purchase being the annual payment of a certain portion of the net profits of the ferry belonging to and worked by the appellants, which has been ever since and still is paid to the said dean and chapter. In 1830 the company began, and have ever since continued, to work and exercise their ferry between the said two landing-places, and have received certain tolls as allowed by the said Act. At each of the said landing places some timbers with iron rails thereon have been with the consent of the corporation of Newcastle-upon-Tyne aforesaid, then conservators of the said river, erected in an inclined position, up and down which a moveable platform is moved on wheels, so as to reach the ferry-boats while afloat, according as the tide rises or falls, and enable cattle, carts, and passengers to embark therein and land therefrom. The ferry-boats, when working, are necessarily always afloat, and consequently in the said parish of St. Nicholas. They ply between these two landing-places, not pursuing exactly the same track each passage across the river, but varying the same according to the tide, and according as it is necessary to avoid collision with other vessels navigating the river. For the first seven years the tolls were collected on the North Shields landing-place; but when the present rate was made, and for some years previous, at South Shields landing-place.

For a short time the tolls were collected on board the ferry-boats. Neither of the townships of North or South Shields has, from the establishment of the ferry until October last, attempted to rate the ferry tolls, but has rated each landing-place, with the toll-house thereon, at 70*l.* without taking into account the value or amount of the tolls.

The landing-place, and toll-house thereon, at South Shields, is still rated at 70*l.*

In the year 1851, the overseers of North Shields caused a fresh valuation to be made of the rateable property in that township, and caused the appellants to be rated in a rate made 19th October last, for the relief of the poor, at 2*s.* 3*d.* in the pound, from 25th September to 25th December last, as follows:—

Name of Occupier	Name of Owner	Description of Property.	Situation.	Gross estimated Rental.	Rateable Value.
Company of Proprietors of the North and South Shields Ferry.	Ditto.	Ferry Landing and toll.	Duke street.	£ 531	£ 531

Against this rate the appellants appealed, on the following grounds:—1st, having in consequence of an amendment by the Sessions become immaterial, is here omitted; 2ndly, that the said ferry landing and tolls are rated at too high a value; 3rdly, that the said ferry landing is rated at too high a value; 4thly, that the said tolls are not liable by law to be rated; 5thly, that the said tolls do not arise from any land, house, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal-mines, or saleable underwood in the said township; 6thly, that the said tolls do not arise from any local visible property within the said township, nor are they received or paid within the same; 7thly, that tolls being incorporeal hereditaments, and not rateable, the rate does not specify and distinguish the respective value of the said ferry landing and of the tolls; 8thly, that the said rate on the said Ferry Company is unfair; 9thly, that the said rate is laid upon the face thereof, the requirements of the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, entitled "An Act to regulate Parochial Assessments," not having been complied with, and in other respects not being made according to law.

The appeal came on to be heard at the Epiphany Northumberland Sessions, on the 8th January, 1852, when in addition to the foregoing facts, the respondents proved by inspection of the company's books, and the Sessions found, that the net annual profit of the said tolls and landing-places, was 1,062*l.* upon the following calculation:—

The said books shewed the gross yearly amount of tolls received to be		£3,570
From which, deducting the working expenses, as wages, stores, &c. for one year	£1,637
Average repairs for one year taken on an average of six years	757
Contingent or casual average annual expenses	114
		2,508
There remained		£1,062

Besides the said tolls, the appellants derive no profits whatever from the said ferry or landing-place, or either of them.

The Sessions found that the net annual rateable value of the said landing-place in North Shields was without taking the said tolls into account, 7*l.*

That no tolls would be paid by persons for coming either by themselves, or with their cattle and goods on to the landing-places, unless they were also conveyed across the said river; and, on the other hand, that no person, either alone or with his carriages, &c. would or could use the ferry-boats, without the convenience of landing-places for embarking and disembarking.

The respondents then contended that each of the said landing places being equally advantageous and necessary to the company, and conducive to the earning of the tolls, 531*l.* being a moiety of the above net amount of tolls calculated as aforesaid, was the rateable value of the said landing-place in North Shields, as enhanced by the tolls, and that the tolls were taken as well for the passage over the landing-places as for the passage over the river.

On the other hand, the appellants contended that tolls not arising from the use of corporeal hereditaments are not rateable. That a ferry is an incorporeal hereditament. That these are ferry tolls, and do not arise out of the use of the landing-place, but are substantially, and in fact, paid for the passage and conveyance of passengers, carriages, and cattle across the river. The exclusive occupation of a landing-place is not a necessary part of a ferry. That the accident of the appellants' being the owners and occupiers of these landing-places does not alter the nature of the ferry-tolls so as to make these tolls rateable, and that they are earned in the parish of St. Nicholas, and become payable by the exercise within that parish of a franchise, and that, it rateable at all, they ought to be rated there, and not elsewhere.

No evidence was given by the appellants to shew that the amounts in the above calculation of the rateable value of the tolls were untrue, nor was any argument adduced to shew that any further deductions ought to be allowed.

The sessions found that the said ferry was of no value without landing-places or approaches, which were in this case in the occupation of the appellants.

That without taking into account the tolls, the rateable value of the said landing-place or approach in the said township of North Shields was 72*l.*

That the rateable value of the said landing-place, as enhanced by the tolls, was 531*l.* if the said tolls are to be taken into account.

They therefore confirmed the rate subject to the foregoing case, of which the said Act of Parliament (a public one) is to form part. If the Court of Q. B. are of opinion that the said landing-place and tolls ought to be rated at 531*l.* then the order of the sessions and rate are to be confirmed; but if the said Court are of opinion that the said landing-place and tolls ought to be rated at 72*l.* then the said order of sessions and rate are to be amended by striking out the words "and tolls," and reducing the rateable value of the said landing-place from 531*l.* to 72*l.*

The case was argued on Saturday, June 5, before Lord Campbell, C.J. and Coleridge, Erle, and Crompton, J.J. by Pashley and Otter, in support of the order of Sessions.

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court. In this case the appellants were rated to the relief of the poor of the township of North Shields, in the parish of Tynemouth, as occupiers of a ferry, landing, and tolls, and the Quarter Sessions for the county of Northumberland confirmed the rate, subject to a case for the opinion of this Court. It appeared by the statute 10 Geo. 4, c. 19, the appellants were incorporated, and authorised to establish and maintain a ferry, consisting of one or more steamers, or other boat or boats, barge or barges, float or floats, raft or rafts, or other vessels, for the conveyance and passage across of carriages, foot passengers, goods, &c. over and across the river Tyne, between North Shields, in the county of Northumberland, and South Shields, in the same county, and to erect ferry houses and proper offices on each side of the said river, for the habitation and use of the ferryman there, for the use of the ferry, and for the convenience of persons using the same, and to make and keep in repair proper causeways at the landing-places of the said ferry-house to be established on each side of the said river, and all persons were to be at liberty to pass the said ferry on payment of certain tolls granted by the Act. By sec. 4, the company were empowered to make a road on the north of the river Tyne from the new ferry, to be established to the main street of North Shields, and another road on the south from the same ferry to the main street of South Shields. The company are restrained from deviating from the line of the road in the plan of reference without consent of the owners. By sec. 8 the company are empowered, with the consent of the owners at any time thereafter, to alter or widen the road, or make new roads, with the consent of the owner of the land. By subsequent sections the company are empowered to purchase and take any land necessary for the purposes of the Act, or any ferry or ferries across the river Tyne. A capital of 9,950*l.* was to be raised before the powers of the Act were to be put in force. By the 17th section the company are empowered, as soon as the ferry should be made fit for the carriage of passengers, &c. to collect and receive, before any carriages or passengers should be permitted to pass over the ferry, or through any gate to be erected across the approaches to the said ferry, certain tolls specified in the Act, and which were to be paid every time of the passing or repassing. The river Tyne, between the two townships of North and South Shields, is a public tidal and navigable river. All the bed of the river below low-water mark is in the parish of St. Nicholas, in the borough or county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, the shore on each side when left dry is in the townships of North and South Shields respectively, but all vessels afloat anywhere on the river are in the parish of St. Nicholas. There is a great peculiarity in this, and I suppose there is nothing like it to be found anywhere else. The company under the powers of the Act raised the required capital, and purchased a piece of land about fifty yards long and five or six wide in the township of North Shields, and made the same into a landing-place or approach communicating with and leading into the main street of North Shields, and also purchased a similar piece of land in South Shields, of which they made similar use, and on each of these landing-places they erected a toll-house and gate; they purchased three or four steamboats at a cost of 5,000*l.* and have kept the same ever since; they also bought from the dean and chapter of Durham an ancient ferry over the Tyne, and began, in 1837, to work the ferry with a steamboat, and have since that time worked it, and taken tolls according to the Act of Parliament. The ferryboats, when working, are always afloat and in the parish of St. Nicholas. The company, by the consent of the corporation of Newcastle, have erected on each of the landing-places moveable platforms, so arranged as to enable passengers and cattle, &c. to embark in the steamboats in all states of the tide. The boats do not assume a fixed position or pursue the same track, but vary in their course according to the state of the tide and other circumstances. For the first two years the tolls were collected on the North Shields landing-place; they were afterwards collected for a short time on board the boats; but at the time of the rate in question being made, and for several years previously, they were collected at the South Shields side. The ferry landing and tolls were rated in the rate in question at 531*l.* the Sessions finding that the net annual profits of the tolls was 1,062*l.* The gross yearly amount of the tolls appeard to be 3,570*l.* from which the Sessions deducted, for working expenses, wages, storing, &c. 1,637*l.*; for average repairs, 757*l.*; and for contingent annual average expenses, 114*l.* The balance, 1,062*l.* they found to be the net annual profit of the tolls, and they assessed one-half of that sum on the appellant parish, as being the rateable value of the ferry landing and tolls; the appellants derived no profit from the ferry or landing-place except the said tolls. The Sessions found that the net annual rateable value of the landing-place in North Shields, without taking the tolls into account, was 72*l.* odd. These being the facts, the questions raised before us in the argument were, first, whether the principle on which the rate is laid at 531*l.* is correct; secondly, whether the rate ought to be made on the landing-place only, and be reduced to 72*l.* It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the occupation by the company of the landing-place made the tolls rateable; and secondly, that at all events the landing-places are not merely rateable upon their net rateable value, independently and unconnected with the value insisted upon as being enhanced by their being available for the purposes of the ferry and the earning of the tolls. On the first point it was contended, that though tolls are not rateable per se, yet that they become so in the present instance by being connected with the real property occupied in the township for the purpose of earning such tolls. To support this rate on the half of the entire net profits it must be made out, either that the tolls can be directly rated as ceasing to be incorporeal, and becoming landed property, on account of their connection with the landing-places occupied by the appellants, or that they can indirectly, by the rate being put on the landing-places as land enhanced in value by the amount of the entire net profit. When tolls are attached, and appurtenant in a manner to land, they are rateable as land, and when they really arise from the use of land, as in the case of canals or railways, or the pipes of water companies, though not rateable per se, they may, after a proper deduction, be treated as the direct profits of the lands which are used, and are the real cause of earning the tolls. We do not think that in the present case the ferry and tolls can be treated as appurtenant to the landing-places so as to become part of the land. By the Act of Parliament, the company is incorporated for the purpose of setting-up a ferry across the Tyne, which is to consist of one or more steamers or boats, which were bought and kept up at great expense; and the powers of taking land for the approaches to the main street of the town, for houses for the accommodation of the ferrymen and landing-places, seem by the Act to be given as convenient and necessary for the ferry, and as incident and accessory thereto. I find nothing in the Act to make the ferry or the tolls appurtenant to, or annexed to, the landing-place in the one township or the other so as to make them accessories to the landing-places; which seem rather to be accessory and incidental to the incorporeal franchise, which it was the object of the statute to create; nor do we think the tolls can be indirectly rated by laying the rate upon the landing-place, and treating the half of the entire net procee ls of the tolls as the direct profit earned by the use of such land. The tolls are not the direct profits arising from the landing-places, as in the case of canals, bridges, railways, or the mains and pipes of water companies; but they arise principally from the large capital employed in the boats, and from the transit of the boats, not over the land in question, but over a tidal river entirely situated in another township. We do not think the authorities establish that the tolls become rateable directly or indirectly, by reason of some portion of land being used, — although necessarily used, in the earning of the tolls. When the use of the land is so small a part of the consideration for the tolls, it would manifestly be unfair to throw the whole burthen on the small portion of land. In the case of canals, the profit may be said to arise from the occupation of the land covered by water occupied by the canal company, and along which the transit takes place, and this is said by Mr. Justice Bayley, in Rex v. Nicholson, to be the ground of rating canals in respect of their tolls. So in the case of bridges, the whole profit arises from the bridges attached to the freehold and part of the freehold. The same observation applies to the mains and pipes of water companies; and the principle has been applied to lines of railways, though great difficulty has arisen in so applying this principle, railway companies conducting their business as carriers, and not merely as persons entitled to take tolls on a public highway. Still, however, in the case of railways, the profits may be said to arise mainly from the use of the line occupied by the companies as real property. If the mere use of any land conducive to the earning of tolls would make the tolls rateable, either directly or indirectly, as contended for by the respondents, it is difficult to see why they were not rateable in the case against the Mersey and Irwell Navigation Company, by reason of the use of the cuts, wears, locks, and dams, which were absolutely necessary for the purpose of the navigation; and so in the case of Rex v. Tynemouth, though the lighthouse was rateable property, the tolls did not therefore become rateable. We agree with what is said by Mr. Justice Bayley in Rex v. Tynemouth, where, in answer to a case put of toll for the use of a mooring-post affixed to the freehold, he says, "There the rate will be upon the post, not upon the tolls." Assuming, then, that the rate is really in the present instance to be made on the landing-place as land, just as it is intimated, in the case of Rex v. Tynemouth, that the rate ought to have been made on the lighthouse, or on the post; it remains to be considered on what principle the amount of such rate is to be fixed. In the case of the mooring-post, it would not seem unfair in such a case to take all the net profits of the tolls, as they directly arise from the use of a corporeal hereditament, and there would be much more reason for taking the profit of the tolls into calculation in the case of a light-house, where the whole meritorious consideration for the toll arises from the use of a corporeal hereditament, and arises within the parish. We think that in the present case, in rating the landing-place, the profits of the tolls cannot be properly brought into the calculation as the profits of the occupation of the landing-place, which is in effect done by the rate. On the other hand, the consideration of the toll cannot be wholly excluded, but the land should be rated, not, according to the view of the counsel for the appellants, as land in that situation, without reference to the toll at all, but according to the principle relied on by the counsel for the respondents in the second branch of the argument; and the value should be taken not as the value of the land merely, but as the value of land enhanced by being available for the purpose of earning the tolls. This appears to be the true principle according to the test laid down in the Parochial Assessment Act, as it would be the rent which the company could obtain, and which they would have to pay for the land for the purpose for which it is available under the Act. We think, therefore, that the order of sessions should be quashed, and that the landing-place should be rated as land rendered more valuable by being available for the purpose of earning tolls. It has been suggested that the mileage principle might be applied in calculating the rateable value of the land, and that the proportion of profit might be assessed on the two landing-places according to the proportion which their dimensions bear to the length of the transit over the river. This principle may be fair in the case of profits arising from the use of land in the case of canals or railways running through different parishes, but we do not think it at all applicable to a case where the profit is principally earned, not by the use of land, but by a voyage over a tidal estuary, not performed in any particular course, and where it is not pretended that the parish in which the tidal river is situated could say that there was any use or occupation of land within that parish. Therefore the order will be quashed, and the rate amended according to the judgment. Rate to be amended.

REG. v. MORRISON and ANOTHER.

Poor-rate—Rateability of a floating-dock moored to a building-yard.

A shipwright, occupying a building-yard on the banks of a public tidal and navigable river, constructed a wooden vessel or cradle, called a floating-dock, for the purpose of repairing ships therein, and moored the same by several chains to his building-yard. The harbour-master had power to remove the floating-dock, when the convenience of the harbour required it, and occasionally had done so. In order to remove it, it was only necessary to slacken or cast off the mooring-chains, which could be done by the hand. At low water the dock grounded, and was then in the same parish as the building-yard, but at high water, and when afloat, it was in another parish—the water-line forming a shifting boundary between the two. The overseers of the parish in which the building-yard was situate rated the building-yard in an amount increased by the value of the floating-dock:

Held, that the rate was wrong, inasmuch as the floating-dock was neither rateable per se; nor was it so connected with the building-yard that it could properly be taken into account in estimating the rateable value thereof.

This was an appeal against a rate for the relief of the poor of the township of North Shields, in the county of Northumberland. The appeal was tried at the Epiphany Quarter Sessions for the county of Northumberland, Jan. 7, 1852, when that Court confirmed the said rate, subject to the opinion of the Court of Q.B. on the following

CASE.

The appellants are co-partners as shipwrights, and are and have been, since May, 1850, the sub-tenants from year to year, and occupiers at the annual rent of 50*l.* (under Messrs. John and Charles Carr, the lessees of Mr. Collingwood) of a ship-building yard and piece of ground adjoining the river Tyne where public tidal and navigable, and situate in the above township. The whole of this yard is above the high-water mark, is separated from the shore of the river, and bounded by a quay or wall about thirteen feet high, and extends in breadth parallel to the river about forty-nine yards, and in depth at right angles from the river about thirty-two yards; at high tide the water rises to within a few feet of the top of this quay or wall, and at low tide recedes so as to leave dry the whole of the quay or wall, and also the ground or shore below the quay, to a distance of from twenty to thirty yards, according as tides are neap or spring. The property in the ground, or shore, between high and low water mark in the river Tyne, at this part of the river, is a subject of doubt, and though occasionally used by the occupier of the land in front of which it is situate, an acknowledgment is usually paid to the conservators of the Tyne, who were till lately the corporation of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, which corporation hold the river Tyne, and port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in fee farm, by a charter or grant from the Crown. The conservatorship of the river Tyne has, however, been removed by the river Tyne Improvement Act, 1850, from the corporation to commissioners chosen from the boroughs of Newcastle-on-Tyne, Gateshead, Tynemouth, and South Shields, and the foreshore is claimed by the owner of the adjoining property; but is also claimed by the mayor and burgesses of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and whether it belongs to either of the above parties, or to the Crown, or to the commissioners for the conservancy of the river, appointed under the said Act of Parliament, is not decided. The bed of the river, that is, the soil below low-water mark, and also the river itself, are from a point called Hedwin Streams, seven miles above Newcastle, down to another point, about ten miles below Newcastle, and called the Spar Hawk, situate in the sea, just at the mouth of the said river, within the parish of St. Nicholas, Newcastle. A part of the river, in length about two miles, between these two points, forms the southern boundary of the township of North Shields. The shore of that part of the river is, when dry, within that township, the water being the boundary; but as the tide rises, every thing floating in that part of the river, and whether within or below low-water mark, is in the said parish of St. Nicholas. In the year 1850, the appellants constructed a wooden vessel, or cradle, called a floating dock, at a place called Howdon, two miles distant from the building yard, and towed the same down the river opposite to their said yard, and have ever since used the same for repairing ships in their business of shipwrights. The mode of using it is as follows: — When a vessel requiring repair is to be put into the dock, the dock is hauled a little further into the river, where the water is deeper, and certain plugs are taken out, whereby the water is admitted, and the dock, sinks, and grounds on the shore adjacent to the building-yard, or partly on the shore and partly on the bed of the river below low-water mark. The gates of the dock are then opened, and whilst it remains sunk and aground, the vessel to be repaired is, at high tide, hauled immediately into the dock, and allowed to settle down in the same as the tide falls; at low tide the dock-gates are closed and the plugs replaced, and any water which has not run out is pumped out; with the next tide, the dock containing the vessel, rises and floats, and is hauled in again towards the shore, and, as the tide falls, again grounds; but the interior being kept clear of the water, the repairs of the ship inside go forwards, whether the dock is aground or afloat, and rather more conveniently when afloat than when aground. When the repairs are finished, the plugs are taken out again, which has the effect of sinking the dock, and where there is a sufficient depth of water, the gates are opened, and the dock remaining sunk, the vessel is hauled out; when a vessel is in the dock, the latter is usually moored about 13 feet from the said quay or wall, and a boat can pass between the dock and the yard at high tide. To enable the workmen to get to their work, a plank or gangway goes from the quay or yard to the floating dock, such gangway or plank merely resting at each end respectively on the building-yard and floating dock, and a rope passes through a staple at that end of such plank which rests on the floating dock, which rope is tied to the floating dock, to prevent the plank falling if it should happen to be accidentally pushed off the dock, and such plank or gangway is moved to any part of the yard or dock, as convenience may require. The floating dock is moored by several chains; three of these chains are attached to anchors or posts in the bed of the river, and two of them are put round posts standing in the said building-yard, the other ends being on board the floating dock; each of these chains can be easily slackened, or altogether cast off by the hand, as readily, indeed, as a ship is loosed from her moorings, and this is done every time a vessel is docked or undocked, in order that the dock may be hauled off a little farther into the river, which is done to facilitate the operation, by getting into deeper water. The time that vessels remain in the dock varies from two days to three weeks, according to the extent of the repairs required. In order to use the floating dock in the way described, the license of the said Conservancy Commissioners is necessary, and their officer (the harbour-master) has power to remove the said floating dock for a time, when the convenience of the harbour so requires. He once (but not since the making of this rate) caused the dock to be removed and kept away for two tides, in order that a steamer which had foundered near might be raised. Thus the dock, when moored, is alternately in the parish of St. Nicholas and the respondent township, according as it is afloat or aground, in each of which states it is for about an equal time each day; but occasionally, when hauled off below low-water mark, and when removed to another part of the river, it is altogether out of the respondent township. From the time the appellants first became occupiers of the building-yard down to October last, when the present rate was made, and during a year and a half of which period they had possessed and used the said floating dock in the manner before described, they were rated to the relief of the poor of the township of North Shields, in respect of the building-yard, as follows:—

Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property.	Situation.	Gross estimated Rental.	Rateable Value
George Wilson Morrison and George Fawcus.	E. T. Collingwood.	Building-yard.	Limekiln Shore.	£ 52	£ 46

It being customary in this township to deduct about ten per cent. for outgoings and repairs, from the gross rental of property in the township, to give the rateable value. A new valuation of the property in the said township having been recently made, the overseers, by a rate made the 14th of October, 1851, for the relief of the poor, at 2s. 3d. in the pound, from the 25th of September to the 25th of December, 1851, rated the appellants in respect of the same premises as follows:—

Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property.	Situation.	Gross estimated Rental.	Rateable Value.
George Wilson Morrison and George Fawcus.	E. T. Collingwood.	160 feet of river frontage with floating dock attached.	Limekiln Shore	£ 104	£ 147

Against this latter rate the appellants appealed, on the following grounds:—

1st. That the said floating dock is not liable by law to be rated.

2nd. That the said 160 feet river frontage, with floating dock attached, is rated at too high a value.

3rd. That the said 160 feet river frontage is rated at too high a value.

4th. That the said 160 feet river frontage cannot be rated at a higher rate than it otherwise would be on account of the said floating dock alleged to be attached thereto.

5th. That the words and figures, "160 feet river frontage, with floating dock attached," is not a sufficient description of the property intended to be comprised in the said rate or assessment as occupied by us, the said George Wilson Morrison and George Fawcus, so as to enable us to ascertain upon what property we are intended to be thereby rated in the said townships.

6th. That the said floating dock is not, either any land, house, tithes impropriate, propriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwood, in the said township.

7th. That the said floating dock is not situate within the said township.

8th. That the said floating dock is only occasionally situate within the said township.

9th. That the said floating dock is occasionally within the parish of St. Nicholas, in the borough and county of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

10th. That the said floating dock being personal property, and not rateable, the rate does not specify and distinguish the respective values of the said floating dock and of the said 160 feet river frontage.

11th. That the words and figures, "160 feet river frontage," do not describe any rateable property in the said township.

12th. That the said floating dock is not an erection made upon any land, or fixed to the freehold of any land in the said township, and cannot, therefore, add to the value of any land within the said township.

13th. That the said rate on the said 160 feet river frontage and floating dock is unfair.

14th. That the said rate on the said 160 feet river frontage is unfair.

15th. That the said 160 feet river frontage is not liable by law to be rated.

16th. That the said rate is bad on the face thereof, the requirements of the statute 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 96, intituled "An Act to Regulate Parochial Assessments," not having been complied with, and in other respects not being made according to law.

At the hearing of the appeal the foregoing facts were proved, and the Sessions found that the rateable value of the building-yard was 57*l.* and of the floating dock, if rateable, 90*l.* a year. It was agreed that the words "river frontage" in the rate meant the said building-yard. On these facts it was contended by the appellants that admitting the principle that lands and houses are rateable according to their actual value as combined with the machinery attached to them without considering whether that machinery be real or personal property, whether it would go to the heir or executor, or whether at the expiration of the lease it would go to the landlord or lessee, still such machinery must, in the first place, for its ordinary use, be actually attached to the soil or the walls, so as for the time at least to form part of the soil or building, or in other words to be a fixture; and, secondly, the machinery must be and remain, permanently and continually, that is to say, during the time of its use and the period for which it is rated within the rating parish or township, and that the said floating dock was not a fixture, nor so actually attached to the soil or walls of the said building-yard as to form part thereof, nor permanently or continually during the time of its use and the time for which the rate was made situate within the rating township, inasmuch as the said dock was about twelve hours out of every twenty-four within the parish of St. Nicholas. The Sessions, however, held, that though the floating dock was not rateable per se, it was, by means of the said mooring-chains passing from the same to the said posts in the said building-yard so connected with the said building-yard (although not permanently and continually, but only occasionally attached) as to enhance the value thereof, and that the rateable value of the said building-yard was thereby enhanced to 147*l.* being the aggregate of the above-mentioned sums of 57*l.* and 90*l.* They therefore affirmed the rate subject to the opinion of the Court of Q. B. whether, upon the facts above stated, the value of the said building-yard can, according to law, be so enhanced by such attachment or connection of the said floating-dock thereto as to increase the rateable value of the said building-yard to the amount above stated.

If the Court of Q. B. are of opinion that this question must be answered in the affirmative the said rate is to stand affirmed; but if the said Court are of opinion that the said question must be answered in the negative, then the said rate is to be amended by reducing the rateable value of the said premises of the appellants to 57*l.*

The case was argued Saturday, Nov. 6, before Lord Campbell, C.J. Coleridge, J. Wightman, J.

and Erle, J. by Otter, in support of the order of sessions, and Heath contrà.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—In this case, respecting the rateability of a ship-yard and a floating dock, we are of opinion that the rate, as laid, cannot be supported. The Sessions very properly have found that the floating dock per se was not properly rateable under the 43 Eliz. and the only question is whether the rateable value of the ship building yard is to be considered as enhanced by reason of the floating dock. Looking to the manner in which the floating dock is constructed and used, we think the Sessions have come to an erroneous conclusion in point of law on this question. This floating dock exactly resembles a ship at anchor, which occasionally grounds when the tide ebbs; it may be approached either by a boat or by a float, and it has no necessary connection with the yard: the two might easily be in the separate occupation of different shipwrights carrying on business separately, and the accidental proximity of the one to the other is for this purpose immaterial. If words had been introduced into the 43 Eliz. making the floating dock rateable, the floating dock and the yard being in different parishes, there would have been as much reason for contending that the yard was an accessory to the floating dock, as that the floating dock was an accessory to the yard. This does not appear to us to come within the cases in which it has been held that the rateable value of real property may be enhanced by circumstances which increase its profitable value. The decisions respecting machinery and other fixtures of course can have no application. The steam-tug in the Southampton case, was not made the subject of the rate, and the only question there was, whether the appellants, the dock company, had, in estimating the profits, been properly allowed a deduction in respect of the steam-tug, which was necessary for carrying on the business. Reg. v. Leith comes much nearer the present case; and some expressions there used by the Court would, in their generality, countenance the doctrine for which the respondents now contend; but those expressions must be taken with reference to the facts of that case, which was materially different from the present. The pier there was permanently fixed as a landing-place, and the one could not be used without the other. Besides, that case did not turn upon the construction of the 43 Eliz. but on a recent local Act which contains words more extensive with respect to property of this description. This being our opinion, it is unnecessary for us to consider the effect of the floating dock being sometimes in one parish and sometimes in another, and we have only to direct that the rate be amended by reducing the rateable value of the appellant's premises to the sum of 57*l.* and therefore the order of Sessions will be quashed.

Rate amended.

Settlement appeal Search for agreement—Secondary evidence.

The appellants relied on a settlement by renting a tenement in parish M. The pauper's husband proved that the holding was under an agreement in writing, drawn up by P.'s clerk, and which remained with P. the landlord. A witness then deposed, "I went to P. asked him whether there was any agreement between himself and Gillott respecting the house in question. He said, 'I cannot say for a certainty, I will search.' He then told his clerk to search, and the clerk and I searched together amongst the papers of the office, and also amongst day-books and ledgers, and we could find no agreement."

The Court of Quarter Sessions held the proof of search insufficient to let in secondary evidence of the agreement:

Held, on appeal, that the above ruling was correct.

On the hearing of the appeal, at the Middlesex Quarter Sessions, an objection was made to the admissibility of evidence tendered by the appellants, which objection arose as follows:—

The appellants, by way of answer to the primâ facie case of the respondents, relied on a settlement alleged to have been acquired by renting a tenement in the parish of St. Marylebone, and it appeared on the evidence of the pauper's husband that the tenement in question had been rented by him under an agreement in writing, which was drawn up by a clerk of Mr. Ponsford's, and read over by him to the witness, and which had remained with Mr. Ponsford, his landlord.

A witness was then called, who gave the following evidence:—"I went last week to Mr. Ponsford, and asked him whether there was any agreement between himself and Mr. Gillott respecting the house in question. He said, 'I cannot say for a certainty, I will search.' He then told his clerk to search, and the clerk and I searched together amongst the papers of the office, and also amongst day-books and ledgers, and we could find no agreement.

The Court of Quarter Sessions was of opinion that the proof of search for the agreement was insufficient, to warrant the reception of secondary evidence of its contents, and that Mr. Ponsford ought to have been called as a witness.

If this Court should be of opinion that the view of the Sessions was incorrect, the order appealed against and the order of sessions are to be severally quashed otherwise they are to stand confirmed.

Huddleston, in support of the order of sessions.—Where the sessions have found a fact on which there was evidence before them, this Court will not interfere. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—This was rather a question of law for the opinion of the judge than of fact.] It is submitted then that the judge's decision was satisfactory. The agreement was traced to the possession of Ponsford. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—And the defect you say was, that without Ponsford being called, it did not appear where the search ought to have been.] Yes. The evidence does not say that all Ponsford's papers were searched, and it does not appear that the document was placed among those that were searched. The judgment of Lord Denman, C.J. in Reg. v. Kenilworth, 7 Q.B. 649, is pertinent to the present case. Reg. v. Denis, 7 B. & C. 620; Rex v. Castleton, 6 T. R. 236; R. v. North Bedburn, Caldecot, 452, were then referred to. Rex v. Morton, 1 M. & S. 48, may be relied on by the other side; but in Taylor on Evidence, 305, it is said that "The decision in that case appears to have proceeded on the somewhat dubious ground, that if the statement of the apprentice was admissible, the indenture was not traced into his hands, and being functus officio, there was no particular reason why it should be in his custody, while if the statement could be received so as to shew a possession of the deed by him, it shewed also that further search or inquiry was unnecessary. The second branch of this dilemma is unanswerable, but the first is subject to much doubt, for even if the fact of the deed not being traced into the hands of the apprentice could preclude the necessity of searching in that quarter, it could not discharge the parties of laches in having neither called the personal representative of the master, nor even examined his papers."

Pashley, contrà.—It is manifest that the search was made under the directions of Ponsford, by the witness and Ponsford's clerk, among Ponsford's papers. It is as if Ponsford had made the search himself in the witness's presence. Enough appears in the case to shew that a search was fairly made in the place where the document was likely to be. Rex v. Stourbridge, 8 B. & C. 96; and Rex v. East Farleigh, 6 D. & R. 153, were then quoted.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that we cannot say, that the Sessions were wrong in holding that the evidence of the search, was insufficient to let in secondary evidence of the agreement. There was proof of the existence of such an agreement, whereby Ponsford agreed to let the premises, and the agreement is traced to his custody. A witness is then called, who says, "I went last week to Mr. Ponsford;" he does not say where; it might have been in Covent-garden-market, or the Royal Exchange, for all we know. "And I asked him whether there was any agreement between himself and Mr. Gillott. He said, I cannot say for a certainty, I will search. He then told his clerk to search, and the clerk and I searched together among the papers of the office, and amongst day-books and ledgers, and we could find no agreement." And this is all. The question does not arise whether the declaration of a person, made at the time when the search took place, is admissible to obviate the necessity to prove a search in the proper place of deposit; because the witness does not say that this took place at the house of Ponsford. It is consistent with all that he says, that Ponsford might have had the agreement at another place, which was not searched. There was, therefore, no evidence before the Court of Quarter Sessions of a search at the proper place of possession, in which the document might have been expected to be found.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion; and I wish to express the conclusion of my mind, that there is not sufficient in the case to satisfy us that the Court of Quarter Sessions was wrong. Though unquestionably the decision of the Court of Quarter Sessions is subject to our review, this is just one of those cases in which this Court ought to be cautious not to interfere. The burthen is cast on the appellants to shew that the search is sufficient to let in secondary evidence of the agreement, for they raise a preliminary inquiry of a matter of fact, and from which the Court of Quarter Sessions is to draw a conclusion of law. I may put an extreme case, where for very good reasons, you may disbelieve every word which the witness to prove the search says. Now, if the judge were to hold, on such testimony, that the document was useless, and that the probability was, that it was destroyed, that might be wrong. But from the mixed nature of the inquiry, there is not enough in the case to make out that this decision was wrong. There is nothing to satisfy us that this was either a useless document, or that the right place was searched. We need not decide as to the reception of Ponsford's declaration, because that was received, and yet it was held, that it did not shew enough to let in the secondary evidence. If it had been shewn that the agreement had expired, it would have been a useless document, and the presumption would have been that it was destroyed. Again, we do not know where Ponsford was seen by the witness.

WIGHTMAN, J.—The Court of Quarter Sessions has come to the conclusion that the evidence of search was not sufficient to warrant the reception of secondary evidence of the agreement, and unless we are perfectly satisfied that that was wrong, we ought not to overrule the decision. Ponsford has made no declaration at all which is important in this case, for he does not know whether there was any agreement or not.

ERLE, J.—It is difficult to lay down a definite rule of law, settling what is sufficient evidence of a search. In Phillips on Evidence, it is said to depend on the particular circumstances of each case. I am of opinion that sufficient facts are not here stated to compel us to say that the Court of Quarter Sessions was wrong in excluding secondary evidence of the agreement.

Order of Sessions affirmed.

Friday, Nov. 19.

RUST v. NOTTIDGE.

Agreement—Construction—Plea.

It was agreed that the plaintiff should serve the defendant for seven years, at 100l a year, and if defendant, from any cause, should give up business or not require plaintiff's services, then that he would use his best endeavours to procure the plaintiff employment in some similar business, of not less than 100l. a year, or in case he should be unable to do so, then the defendant should pay the plaintiff 100l. a year during the residue of the seven years.

Breach in the declaration that the defendant wrongfully discharged the plaintiff during the term, and did not use his endeavours to procure the plaintiff employment, and by means of the premises the plaintiff lost the wages which he otherwise would have obtained, and which the plaintiff refused to pay.

Plea, that the defendant was unable to procure the plaintiff such employment.

Held, that the breach was well assigned, there being an absolute undertaking by the defendant to use his best endeavours, and that the plea was bad on general demurrer, as tendering a different issue to that proposed by the breach.

Assumpsit.—The declaration stated, that the defendant was about to enter into business as a manufacturer of chemicals, and had requested the plaintiff to enter into his employment as a manufacturer and assistant, which the plaintiff had consented to do, and leave his then employment; that it was mutually agreed that the plaintiff would serve the defendant as such manufacturer and assistant for seven years, to be computed, &c. at 100*l.* per annum, and that the defendant would pay to the plaintiff 100*l.* per annum by monthly payments, "and if the said defendant should from any cause give up the said business or not require the plaintiffs services, then that he would use his best endeavours to procure for the plaintiff employment in some similar business, and for which he should receive a salary of not less than 100*l.* per annum, or in case he should be unable to do so, then the said defendant would pay to the said plaintiff the yearly sum of 100*l.* during the residue of said term of seven years." Averment of performance on plaintiff's part, and that he did enter into the defendant's employ. Breach, that during the seven years the defendant wrongfully discharged plaintiff, and would not continue the plaintiff in his employ during the residue of the said term; that the defendant did not use his best or any endeavour to procure, nor did he procure the plaintiff employment in some similar business, and for which he should receive a salary of not less than 100*l.* a year, and by means of the premises, the plaintiff hath lost all the wages, profits, and advantages which he might and would have derived from being so employed as aforesaid, and which the defendant hath wholly refused to pay or allow to the plaintiff.

Plea.—That at the time when the plaintiff was discharged, the defendant was and thence hath been wholly unable to procure for the plaintiff any such employment as in the agreement mentioned.

Demurrer to the plea.

Udall in support of the demurrer.—There is but one breach in the declaration, and the fallacy of the defendant consists in treating the contract as an alternative one, but it is not so. The defendant objects that it is not averred that a reasonable time has elapsed for procuring the plaintiff employment. That is unnecessary. The agreement is for the defendant to use his best endeavours, according to the circumstances. If no time has expired, the defendant has not broken the contract. The defendant further objects, that the plaintiff does not aver that he was willing to accept such other employment, but no offer of other employment was ever made, which the plaintiff could be willing to accept.

Bovill contrà.—The contract is not a contract to employ the plaintiff, though he is bound to pay 100*l.* a year, during the seven years, like that in Aspdin v. Austen, 5 Q. B. 671. The breach is framed as if it were a contract to pay, and it is therefore bad. (Dunn v. Sayles, 5 Q. B. 685.) [Coleridge, J.—If on the declaration there is a good breach for the nonpayment of the 100*l.* you are answered.] The judgment in Elderton v. Emmens, 6 C. B. 160, proceeded on the words in the contract there, "it was agreed." The meaning of the present contract is, the defendant will pay the plaintiff 100*l.* a year, if he employs him, and if he does not require the defendant's services, that he will find him other employment, or pay him 100*l.* a year. [Coleridge, J.—You introduce another element, if he should be unable "or unwilling" to do so.] The case of Anon. Hardres, 120, was then referred to. An averment of readiness and willingness to accept another situation was necessary (Doogood v. Rose, 9 C. B. 132); and also an averment that a reasonable time had elapsed for procuring the plaintiff other employment. (Stavart v. Eastwood, 11 M. & W. 197.) Then, it is submitted, the plea is good on general demurrer.

Udall.—The plea is bad. The allegation in the breach is, that the defendant did not use any endeavours to procure employment for the plaintiff. The plea does not traverse that, but says that he was unable to do so. This does not touch the question to be tried. He may have been unable for many causes that are consistent with his not using any endeavours. The plaintiff ought not to be compelled to traverse the plea.

Lord Campbell, C. J.—I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the plaintiff. I give no opinion as to whether there was any undertaking to employ the plaintiff, although I have a strong inclination on my mind that there is. At all events there is a breach well assigned, on the undertaking of the defendant that he would use his best endeavours to procure for the plaintiff another situation. The words are "that if the defendant should from any cause give up the said business, or not require the plaintiff's services, then, that he would use his best endeavours to procure for the plaintiff employment in some similar business, and for which he should receive a salary of not less than 100*l.* per annum, or in case he should be unable to do so, then the defendant would pay the plaintiff the yearly sum of 100*l.* during the residue of the said term of seven years." This is an absolute undertaking to do a certain thing, and in case the defendant is unable to do it, having used his best endeavours to do it, then that he would pay the plaintiff 100*l.* a year during the residue of the term of seven years. That is clearly an absolute undertaking that the defendant would use his best endeavours. Then the breach assigned is that the defendant discharged the plaintiff from his service, and that the defendant did not use his best or any endeavours to procure the plaintiff a situation, and for which he should receive a salary of not less than 100*l.* a year, and by means of the premises the plaintiff hath lost all the wages, &c. which he would have acquired from being so employed as aforesaid, and which the defendant hath wholly refused to pay. My opinion is, that it does not leave to the defendant the alternative to pay the plaintiff 100*l.*; but that the defendant is bound to use his best endeavours to procure a situation for the defendant, and that this breach is well assigned. Then as to the special objections, none of them seem to be entitled to our sanction. The allegation that the defendant wrongfully discharged the plaintiff supposes a wrong. Then it was objected that there was no request on the plaintiff's part alleged, but the agreement is not that the defendant would use his best endeavours on request, but that he would ex mero motu use his best endeavours. Then it is said there is no averment of readiness and willingness on the plaintiff's part to accept another employment. That is wholly unnecessary, and indeed there is a general allegation of performance. The only other objection is, that it is not stated that a reasonable time had elapsed for the defendant to use his best endeavours; but from the manner in which the breach is assigned, it is sufficient, being in the words of the undertaking. Then as to the plea. No doubt it is bad on special demurrer; and as being tricky, might have been set aside. And as it tenders a different issue from that assigned in the breach, I think it is bad on general demurrer.

Coleridge, J.—I have had no doubt as to the construction of this agreement, that during the continuance of the plaintiff in defendant's employ, the defendant is to pay him a salary of 100*l.* a year; that if during that time the defendant should give up business, or not require the plaintiff's services, then that the defendant would use his best endeavours to procure for the plaintiff other employment of not less than 100*l.* a year; and I see no reason for saying that this is not what the parties intended. Then further, in case of the defendant being unable to do so, and then only, that the defendant would pay to the plaintiff 100*l.* per year during the residue of the said term of seven years. Mr. Bovill contends that the words of the contract are to be inverted, and that they are not to be taken in their natural sense. I did not entertain more doubt about the plea; and having heard the argument, I see no ground for holding it to be good.

Wightman, J. concurred.

Erle, J.—This is not an alternative contract, but one which imposes a series of duties on the defendant; and in case of defendant's failing as prescribed, then that he would pay the plaintiff 100*l.* a year during the residue of the term. And as to the plea, that is bad, as tendering a totally different issue from that proposed by the declaration. Does it follow from the defendant's being unable to procure other employment for the plaintiff that he has used his best endeavours to do so? There might have been no similar manufactory of chemicals, and then the defendant would be unable; but that is no defence. The plea is therefore bad on general demurrer.

Reg v. The Great-Western Railway Company.

Railway company—Lands Clauses Act—Subscription contract—Obligation to complete branch line.

Under ordinary circumstances, an Act of Parliament authorising a company to make a railway, and conferring upon them the usual powers for that purpose, imposes upon them an obligation to complete the line: which this Court will enforce by mandamus.

Where the special Act authorised an existing railway company to make an extension line, and to apply the funds of the existing company to that undertaking, and to raise the required capital of the new line by the creation from time to time of new shares, to form part of the capital stock of the old company:

Held, that it was no answer to a mandamus to complete, that no subscription contract had been executed pursuant to section 16 of the Lands Clauses Act inasmuch as that section applied only to a case where the funds are by the special Act directed to be raised by a subscription contract to be signed by the promoters.

It is no objection to the issuing of a peremptory mandamus, that since the issuing of the first writ the compulsory powers have expired.

Mandamus to the defendants to make and complete a branch railway from Twirton to Radstock, which the defendants were authorised to make by stat. 10 & 11 Vict. c. ccxxvi.

Return, setting up, amongst other things, that no contract binding the parties to pay the required capital had been signed by the promoters of the undertaking pursuant to sec. 16 of the Lands Clauses Act (8 Vict. c. 18), which enacts that, "Where the undertaking is intended to be carried into effect by means of a capital, to be subscribed by the promoters of the undertaking, the whole of the capital shall be subscribed under a contract, binding the parties thereto, their heirs, executors, and administrators, for the payment of the several sums by them respectively subscribed, before it shall be lawful to put in force any of the powers of this or the Special Act, in relation to the compulsory taking of land."

Demurrer thereto.

Fitzherbert in support of the demurrer. 1. The facts stated in the writ shew a primâ facie case. This has been settled by the recent judgment of the Court in R. v. The York and North-Midland Railway Company, and R. v. The Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company (not yet reported). [Wightman, J.—I was not present during the argument of those cases; but I may say that I have read the judgments, and that I entirely concur in those of Lord Campbell and my brother Crompton.] 2. The return in this case shews no answer. Section 16 of the Lands Clauses Act has no application to this case; because this is not a case where the funds are to be raised by a subscription contract signed by the promoters, and binding their "heirs executors, and administrators." By sec. 4 of the special Act, it is provided that the funds for carrying out this undertaking are to be provided by the Great-Western Railway Company, who are authorised from time to time, as may be necessary, to create new shares for the purpose, which new shares are to form part of the capital stock of the Great-Western Company. Besides, the return does not state that the company cannot now obtain the subscription contract. Lastly, the application is not too late. The writ of mandamus was issued on the 8th May, and the compulsory powers did not expire till the month of July.

The Solicitor-General, contrà.—In this case nothing whatever had been done towards making this branch line, except surveying the land; but after the decisions in the cases mentioned, it must be assumed for the present that a primâ facie case of obligation appears by the writ. But, assuming that the return is an answer, by sec. 16 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, the company cannot exercise the compulsory powers of taking land until a contract has been signed by the promoters, binding them to pay the capital. The object of that provision was to prevent the interference with property, unless there was some security to the owners that the necessary funds should be forthcoming; and although the special Act provides for the creation of new shares by the Great Western Company, it does not dispense with the necessity for a subscription contract. [Coleridge, J.—The Great Western Company may apply its funds in hand to the purpose of making this line. Lord Campbell, C.J.—Sec. 16 certainly seems confined to cases in which the funds were to be raised after the passing of the Act.] The material point is, not how the money is to be raised; but that the parties interested should have a binding contract for the payment in some manner of the whole capital. 3. As the compulsory powers have now expired, a peremptory writ of mandamus, which cannot be obeyed, ought not to be awarded.

Fitzherbert, in reply.—The special Act gives the company no power to execute a subscriber's contract (Colman v. The Eastern Counties Railway, 10 Beav. 1; 16 L. J. 73, Ch.; Cohen v. Wilkinson, 18 L. J. 411, Ch.); and as to the last point, the case of R. v. York and North Berwick Railway, 6 Rail. Cas. 652, disposes of it.

Lord Campbell, C.J.—I am of opinion that the prosecutors are entitled to our judgment. As to the general question, we have already expressed our desire that it should be carried before a superior tribunal as speedily as possible; but in the meantime I must adhere to my opinion, that as soon as the Act of Parliament is passed, it imposes upon the company the obligation of making the railway. We must assume, therefore, that the writ in this case is good. Then what is the return? It is founded on the 16th section of the Lands Clauses Act; but in the first place, I am of opinion that that section does not apply to such an undertaking as this. [His lordship read the words of the section.] Now, is this an undertaking intended to be carried into effect by means of a capital to be subscribed for and raised under a contract signed by the promoters, and binding them, their heirs, executors, and administrators, for the payment of the subscribed capital? I think it is not. It is only necessary to refer to sec. 4 of the special Act, which shews that funds already in the hands of the Great Western company may be applied to this undertaking, and that the capital of the branch line is to be raised by the old Company by the creation of new shares from time to time. This is a totally different mode of proceeding from that contemplated by sec. 16, which supposes a raising of the funds prospectively by subscription. But even if this case fell within sec. 16, my present opinion is that this return would be bad, because it does not shew that the company ever have been or now are unable to obtain a subscription, which would satisfy the terms of sec. 16. The return merely states that the whole capital has not been subscribed for under any contract binding the parties thereto, their heirs, &c.; and, therefore, that it is not lawful for the company to put their compulsory powers in force. They do not shew any incapacity to put those powers in force. We now come to the last point. If, when the mandamus nisi issued, there was not then time to obey the writ before the compulsory powers would expire, that might be a good return. Such returns have frequently been made, and the truth of them tried, at Nisi Prius; but in this return there is no such allegation; and now the Solicitor-General relies upon the circumstance that the compulsory powers have expired as a reason for not issuing the peremptory mandamus. But if there was time, the company ought to have obeyed the writ; and they cannot now be permitted to take advantage of their own wrong in disobeying it.

Coleridge, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the 16th section does not apply to this case; and I may remark, that the special Act only incorporates such provisions of the Lands Clauses Act as are not inconsistent with it. It seems to me that the Great Western Company would have no authority to execute a subscription contract; and that if they executed one, it would not be binding, because the special Act points out another mode by which they are to raise the capital.

WIGHTMAN, J. concurred.

ERLE, J.—As to the general question, I adhere to the opinion which I expressed in the former case; but I concur in the opinion that the prohibition in sec. 16 of the general Act does not apply to the powers conferred by this special Act.

Judgment for the Crown.

Monday Nov. 22.

REG. v. NEWMAN.

Criminal Information—New trial—Time for moving—Evidence.

In future, when it is intended to apply for a new trial after verdict on a criminal information, an intimation of such intention must be given to the Court within the first four days of Term.

A review published some time before the libel in a criminal information, and containing charges against the prosecutor, alleged to be identical with those in the information, is not admissible on the part of the defendant to shew that the prosecutor had silently submitted to them, even when the evidence as to the truth or falsehood of the charges strongly conflicts.

Where a judgment of the Court of Inquisition at Rome was put in evidence, and it consisted of two parts, first the grounds of the statement, which appeared to be the work of a notary, and then the decree of the Court, and the judge directed the jury that it was not to be taken as conclusive evidence of the truth of the facts stated therein: Held, that the direction was right.

Criminal information against Dr. Newman for the publication of a libel on Dr. Achilli.

Pleas.—1. Not guilty; 2. Justification.

The verdict, which was for the prosecutor, on the plea of not guilty, and on the justification, except as to the 19th charge in the justification, which alleged that on the 16th of June, 1841, Dr. Achilli was suspended by the Court of Inquisition from the celebration of mass and from the cure of souls, and from the preaching and hearing of confessions, and from exercising the sacerdotal office. That allegation in the justification the jury pronounced to be proved.

The Attorney-General (with whom were the Solicitor-General and T. F. Ellis) now moved that the defendant be brought up for judgment.

Dr. Newman accordingly appeared.

Sir A. Cockburn said that he now, if he might be permitted to do so, moved for a new trial.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In my mind, it is never too late to move to set right a verdict, if it has been erroneously given.

The Attorney-General said that the application for a new trial was contrary to the usual and uniform course of things. It was always the practice, where a new trial was intended to be moved for, that the notice of that intention should be given by mentioning the case in the first four days of term, when the Court generally directed that the application should be postponed till the party was brought up for judgment.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—That certainly has been the usual course, and the party has always been supposed to be ready to move on one of the first four days of term.

Sir A. Cockburn could not say that he had been ready then, but he submitted that he ought now to be allowed to move. It was not long since his lordship had himself said that it was a mere matter of form, and could not be of use to any party. The reason on which the practice rested in civil cases did not apply here.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—So far as my opinion goes, it is not too late now to point out where the party thinks that injustice has been done.

COLERIDGE, J.—There is nothing done in such a case till the defendant is brought up for judgment. I recollect a case on the Western Circuit where the defendant was out, and a process of outlawry was sued out against him, and he was brought in under that process. My brother Wilde appeared for him, and obtained a rule for a new trial when the party was brought, and ultimately that rule was made absolute.

Sir A. Cockburn remarked again on the difference between crown and civil cases in this respect. There was no necessity here for the party signing judgment after the first four days, as in civil cases.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—What is it that you intend to move?

Sir A. Cockburn had now to move for a rule to shew cause why there should not be a new trial on the grounds of, first, the improper rejection of evidence; next, misdirection; and, thirdly, that the verdict was against the evidence.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J. said the Court seeing the great inconvenience which might arise if the practice now asked to be permitted should be established, but, at the same time, not seeing any general rule in which it was laid down that this motion could not be permitted, would not shut out the defendant from the benefit of making the present application; but, in future, it must be understood that an intimation of an intention to apply for a new trial must be made to the Court within the first four days of term, and that the party must be then prepared to make the application, otherwise the application could not be made.

Sir A. Cockburn then moved, with respect to the rejection of evidence. There were two matters on which the defendant's counsel were not allowed to put questions to the witness. One matter was as to the question addressed to Achilli on the subject of acts of incontinence committed by him with particular women subsequent to the plea.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I said I must interpose here, and you assented to my interposition. You asked as to acts of incontinence with particular women not named in the plea. I said that I thought such a question was inadmissible—that it would be most unfair to the prosecutor—and you assented to my observation and forebore to press the question. That matter cannot, therefore, be discussed again now.

Sir A. Cockburn said that he would not utter another word on that subject; but would go to the other question, though as to the justice of the question he had wished to put, he had no doubt, for Dr. Achilli came as any other witness might do, subject to examination as to his credit. The other question related to the admissibility of the Dublin Review.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—You will bear in mind that it was admitted on the other side, that if the charges were true, it must be taken that they were made for the good of the public. When the issue was to prove the truth of the charge it would have been unfair to allow evidence that that charge had been made by some one else at a prior time; for if it was in the Dublin Review it might have been in any other publication.

Sir A. Cockburn said that the ground on which he was prepared to contend that the Dublin Review was admissible was this:—There was a conflict of evidence between the witnesses, who came to support specific charges, and Achilli, who appeared on his own behalf to deny the truth of them. Morally and legally it was well worth consideration, when the weight of probability and of truth was to be found on one side or the other, to see whether the accusing party had silently submitted for a long period of time to the charges which had been made against him, and with the existence of which he was acquainted. In that point of view, if a man was charged with anything, and he denied it, the question was whether it would not be proper to ask him if he had not submitted to have that accusation existing for months and years without making an attempt to answer it. So considered, the publication of the Dublin Review, or of any other book containing the accusation, might be brought to his knowledge, to see whether the charge of which he did complain and that which he had left so long unanswered, were not identical.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I entertain the opinion which I did at the trial, that it is inadmissible; but when Sir A. Cockburn stated, as he did again and again, that the charges had already appeared in the Dublin Review, I did not interpose.

Sir A. Cockburn wished that his lordship had interposed, for then he should clearly have understood his own position. He pressed the admissibility of the evidence, for there was an admission in Achilli's own book that charges of this sort did exist against him in the Dublin Review; but what he wanted to prove was, that these were the identical charges with the names of the same women mentioned in them. If he could have established that, he could have gone strongly, and he believed effectually, to the jury on that point, and where the question was whether certain alleged facts were true if Achilli submitted in silence to have those facts stated of him, it would have gone far to shew the truth of them.

ERLE, J.—Your argument is, that the production of another libeller is a justification of the libel under discussion. With what limitation do you put such an argument?

Sir A. Cockburn said it was so where it became material with a view to enable the jury to see on which side the truth lay. There the submission to one libel was itself something which tended to shew the truth of the charges contained in it.

ERLE, J.—That would apply to every case of an anterior publication.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion with my lord and my brother Erle. The question here was the truth or falsehood of a charge. Evidence of the fact, that the statement has been made by many persons, is no proof of the truth of it. This book was sought to be put in evidence with relation to the conduct of the party, and to shew his knowledge of the charge and his submission to it. But in the first place it must be observed that it is not everything that would strike a person out of doors, that can be received as evidence in a court of justice, and the strong proof of that is to be found in the extreme extent to which my brother Erle has shewn the doctrine, if admitted in this case, must be carried. If it is said on the one hand, that it is probable that the charge is true, because in another publication the charge has already been made and has not been noticed; the answer is, that that is far too vague to constitute evidence which could be admitted in a court of justice. It is said that the truth of one statement may be established by the production of another of the same kind or identical with it, because when the same facts, persons, and things are mentioned in both, the submission to one is the admission of the other. The fallacy is in the use of the term "submission," when it ought simply to be said that the party accused did not prosecute the accuser; but he might not have done so for many other reasons besides those of submission to the accusation or admission of the truth of the statement. The article might have been anonymous, the author unknown, the person against whom it was directed unable to fix on any particular person as the author; he might not know whether the charge was made by a man of character or of no character, or whether he was in such a state of poverty as to render a prosecution very undesirable. It is not always the first charge that a man finds it expedient to prosecute; it may be the result of passion or malice, and may die away, or it may be utterly false and be deemed to demand only contempt. But the repetition of the charge may force the person against whom it is directed to notice it. I cannot think that this earlier publication is admissible in evidence here.

WIGHTMAN, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. Sir A. Cockburn contends that to prove the truth of the plea he was at liberty to shew that there was a similar libel in similar terms, or rather, as he says, they were identical, the one being published in a work antecedent to the libel in question, and for which no proceeding was had with a view to prove that it was false. On this ground it was proposed to be admitted in evidence. It seems to me infinitely too vague a species of evidence to be admissible in a court of justice for such a purpose, and it would render necessary another inquiry which could never be satisfactorily answered—namely, what was the reason why it had not been prosecuted?

ERLE, J.—I do not think that there is any principle whatever in favour of the admission of this evidence.

Sir A. Cockburn said the next point was that the Lord Chief Justice had not properly directed the jury on the subject of the judgment of the Inquisition. There were two parts of that document—the decree and the grounds of the statement. The grounds were set forth in the first part, and they appeared to be the work of the notary of the court:—

Sworn before me at Rome, this 17th day of Nov. 1851,
JOHN FREDBORN,
British Consular Agent, Rome.

I, the undersigned, notary of the Holy Roman and Universal Congregation of the Inquisition, do testify that, after a complete investigation of the proceedings instituted in the holy office against Father Hyacinth Achilli, priest, religious professor of the order of preachers, it is proved from the same acts that the said Achilli, having been examined by the established authorities, confessed himself guilty of having held carnal intercourse whilst he was living at the monastery of Viterbo with many women; also of having deflowered another, who was a virgin, in the city of Mount Falisque; and of having carnally known two other women at Capua. Moreover, it is discovered that he made another girl at Naples a mother; and that the superior of the order of preachers paid fifty scudi to another woman who had been corrupted by the same Achilli, in order to make amends for the injuries done. Lastly, I attest that, on account of the crimes of the above-named and of the crimes of which mention is made in the acts, after mature and deliberate examination of the heavy charges resulting from the acts, after having weighed the charges put forth, and considered other matters according to custom, and after having mercifully accepted the confession of the accused himself, and his own declaration, of the following tenor:—"I do not ask not to be chastised; nay, rather, I desire to be severely dealt with on my own shewing, according as justice demands. I will receive with resignation whatever punishment may be determined upon, and supposing there were wanting sufficient reason for proceeding with greater rigour, I desire that my confession be considered sufficient grounds for punishing me as the said tribunal shall think best." Their eminences, the Inquisitors-General, on Wednesday, June 16, 1841, in the convent of Santa Maria Super Minervam, decreed that the accused Father Hyacinth Achilli, after having been for ever suspended from the celebration of the sacrifice of the mass, and for ever disabled from any sort of direction of souls, and preaching the word of God, and deprived of active and passive voice in the government of his order, and after having salutary penances imposed upon him, be condemned to remain for three years in some religious house of his order of the more strict observance.

Given in testimony of all these facts for the Chancellor's office of the holy office, on this day, Sept. 22, 1851.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. said that the decree could not be considered as a judgment in rem pronounced by a competent Court, and binding upon all the world.

Sir A. Cockburn said that the distinction he took was this,—that while he did not say that this was a judgment which would be conclusive against all the world, what he did say was, that this being one entire document, coming from an office which must be taken to be the proper office for framing and issuing such documents, it must be taken to be the truth, and though it was not conclusive, was entitled to carry faith with it as an authoritative declaration under the seal of a Court. The whole of the document had been received in evidence and read, but the Lord Chief Justice had made a distinction between that which was the decree and that which was the rest of the document.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I said that the statement must not be taken as conclusive evidence of the facts stated in it.

Sir A. Cockburn thought that his lordship had gone further than that—that he had said that it was a statement which might be taken for what it was worth, but that it was not clothed with any authority. The decree here given must be taken to be the usual form of judgment, drawn up in the proper office, and sealed with the proper seal. The judgment was pronounced on the grounds stated by the Court, and which were introductory to the judgment itself. That being so, the grounds and the judgment must be taken as essentially constituting one document.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—If I said that that document did not primâ facie prove the issue that there had been a judgment of that Court against Achilli, I was wrong; but I think that what I said was that the statement of the facts must not be taken conclusively to prove that what was there stated was true.

Sir A. Cockburn said that that was the principle on which his objection rested. This Court, as a rule, gave credit to the documents of other courts, and ought to do so here.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—But this statement is not the statement of the Court, but of a notary.

COLERIDGE, J.—All the statement is antecedent to the judgment of the Court. The notary says, "I attest so and so," and then the Court gives judgment.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—It is clearly not a proceeding in rem.

Sir A. Cockburn admitted that it was not, but said that it was a proceeding in personam, which was admissible in this case.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—You must contend that we are bound to presume the whole of the allegations in it to be true.

COLERIDGE, J.—Suppose there was no other evidence than that, what would be the case then?

Sir A. Cockburn should say that it was primâ facie evidence of the matter.

COLERIDGE, J.—Or suppose that the only issue was not guilty?

Sir A. Cockburn.—Then he should say that he might put this document in proof as a primâ facie proof of the guilt of the person to whom it related. This Court seemed to put the recital as having no higher authority than Achilli's own statement; but he said, that whenever there was a Court of competent jurisdiction, and that Court made a statement on which it founded its judgment, that judgment must primâ facie be taken as shewing the real facts of the case, unless there was reason to believe that there was no common form in which the judgments of that Court were drawn up, or that the officer had departed from that form, and had violated his duty.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—There are two classes of judgments: one to which entire confidence is given; the other which is only admissible, subject to all just observations.

Sir A. Cockburn admitted that this was not in the first class, but still it was clothed with great authority, and was entitled to more weight than that of an ordinary statement by an individual who looked on and stated what was the result of his observations. Yet the Lord Chief Justice had merely treated it in that manner. It was not conclusive evidence of the facts stated in it, but it was conclusive evidence that the Court had proceeded on the facts there stated; yet the Chief Justice had said that it was more probable that Achilli was deprived for heresy than for the things stated in this document. Now this was one of the great questions between the parties, for Achilli had obtained the rule on an affidavit in which he stated on oath that he had never been accused of crimes before the tribunal of the Inquisition. It was most material, therefore, to shew that he had stated an untruth; that he was not a person to be believed; and the document was admissible, not to prove the charges against him, but to prove that there had been such charges, and that he was guilty of untruth in denying that fact. The document ought, therefore, to have been left to the jury, not for the jury to find the facts as there stated, but to find that the deprivation of office had arisen from facts such as were there stated. The learned counsel then argued as to the verdict being against the evidence.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—You may take a rule on the ground that the verdict is against the evidence, and on that ground only. Rule nisi.

Tuesday, Nov. 23.

KERNOT v. CURTIS.

Amending plea after verdict—15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 222—New Procedure Act.

This was an action on a bill of exchange for 50*l.* tried in Term before Crompton, J. and verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded that the bill was given on account of two other bills, and that the consideration for the present bill had failed. Upon the evidence it appeared that the bill was given to enable the drawer to get furniture for the acceptor, which he had failed to do.

At the trial the learned judge was asked to amend, but thinking he had no power to do so under 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 33, he refused.

Udall now moved for a new trial, and for leave to amend the plea under sec. 222 of the Common Law Procedure Act. The final words, "and all such amendments as may be necessary for the purpose of determining in the existing suit the real question in controversy between the parties shall be so made," were relied on in support of the application.

Rule nisi, &c. on payment of costs.

PIGGOTT v. JACKSON.

Practice—New Procedure Act.

A writ of summons was issued, and appearance entered for defendant sec stat. before the Common Law Procedure Act came into force; then a declaration was filed, with notice to plead in eight days endorsed, but no notice of its being so filed was given to the defendant, and the plaintiff subsequently signed judgment for want of a plea, and then issued execution:

Held, that the judgment and subsequent proceedings were irregular, and that the defendant was entitled to notice of the declaration being filed.

Macnamara shewed cause against a rule nisi to rescind an order of Crompton, J. setting aside the judgment, execution, and subsequent proceedings, for irregularity. It appeared that the writ of summons was issued on the 23rd of September (before the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation); that the plaintiff entered an appearance for the defendant sec stat. on the 2nd of October; that the declaration was filed with eight days' notice to plead endorsed, but no notice of its being so filed was given to the defendant; that judgment was then signed for want of a plea, and execution issued on the 6th November. It was now submitted that notice of the filing of the declaration ought to have been given. Entering an appearance for the defendant sec stat. is now abolished (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 26); and the writ having been issued before the Common Law Procedure Act came into force, could not have been specially under sec. 26. Then sec. 28 does not entitle the plaintiff to judgment for non-appearance, as that provision is prospective only. (Goodliffe v. Neaves, see p. 101.)

Streeten, contrà.—There is great difference between an appearance by the defendant, and an appearance entered by the plaintiff for him. The word "non-appearance" in the Act means non-appearance by the defendant; and here the defendant did not personally enter an appearance, but it was done by the plaintiff for him. Sec. 62 was not brought to the notice of the Court of Ex. in the case referred to. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Sec. 62 only dispenses with a rule to plead, or demand of plea, but leaves everything else the same as it was before.]

By the COURT.—The rule must be discharged.

CORNISH v. HAWKINS.

New Procedure Act—Amendment of copy of writ served—Statute of Limitations.

Quære, whether, under sec. 222 of the New Procedure Act, the Court has power to amend a mistake in the endorsement upon a copy of a writ served upon a defendant.

M. Chambers moved for a rule calling upon the defendant to shew cause why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to amend an endorsement on the last writ of summons in this action, issued on the 28th May, 1851, and also on the copy of the same served on the defendant, by altering the date of the first writ from the 22nd October, 1849, to the 13th October, 1849, the former having been inserted by mistake; and why the defendant should not produce the copy of the writ for that purpose. This application was made to Mr. Justice Crompton at chambers, and was by him referred to the Court. The action was on a promissory note for 200*l.* which became due the 22nd October, 1843, by the indorsee against the maker. The first writ against the defendant was in fact issued on the 13th October, 1849; and another writ against another party to the note on the 22nd. The present action was kept alive by subsequent writs, the last of which was on the 28th May, 1851; but on that writ, and in the copy of it served upon the defendant, the endorsement by mistake gave a wrong date to the first writ; viz. the 22nd October, 1849, instead of the 13th October, 1849. In consequence of that mistake, leave to amend the endorsement on the writ and on the copy is now sought; but it was contended before Mr. Justice Crompton, that sec. 222 of the New Procedure Act(a) gave no power to amend the copy served; and that even if it did in any case, it did not in this, because that statute was not retroactive in its operation; and this copy-writ was served before the 24th October. But it is submitted that this case is within the mischief intended to be remedied; and that the words are large enough to include this case. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—You do not ask that the power should be exercised retrospectively.] As soon as the statute came into operation, this power of amendment became applicable to all existing proceedings. [ERLE, J.—According to the Uniformity of Process Act, the Statute of Limitations had barred this action previously to the 24th October, 1852, because the copy of the writ served did not comply with the requirements of that statute; and you seek now to amend the copy by virtue of an Act, which became law after the copy had been served. Surely, that is giving it a retrospective operation?] It can hardly be said that the statute had barred the debt, because the copy of the writ is not the continuance of the process; and even before the recent statute, there was the power of keeping the process alive in such a case by amending the writ, though the Courts would not amend the copy served. (Campbell v. Smart, 5 C. B. 196; Medlicott v. Hunter, 5 Ex. 34.) Rule nisi.

REG. v. THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE.

Notice of grounds of appeal against order of removal—Service on Sunday—Sending by post.

Service of notice of grounds of appeal against an order of removal on a Sunday is void; and it makes no difference in this respect that the notice is sent through the Post Office. Where, therefore, the time for serving grounds of appeal expired on a Sunday, and the notice was posted on Saturday, and delivered in the usual course on Sunday morning,

Held, that the notice was a nullity; and the Sessions right in refusing to hear the appeal.

Whigham moved for a rule for a mandamus to the Justices of Lancashire to enter continuances and hear an appeal against an order of removal. When the appeal came on to be heard, it was objected that the appellants had not given due notice of the grounds of appeal fourteen days at least before the Sessions. The Lancashire Sessions commenced on Monday, Oct. 18; and it appeared that the appellants had posted their notice on Saturday, the 2nd Oct.; and that it was delivered in the usual course of the post on Sunday morning. The Sessions held that the service on the Sunday was a nullity, and dismissed the appeal. They were wrong in so doing. The appellants having posted the notice on Saturday, and everything subsequent to that being done under the Act of Parliament and by officers of the Government, the service on Sunday was sufficient.

(a) Section 222 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, after reciting that the power of amendment now vested in the courts, and judges thereof, is insufficient to enable them to prevent the failure of justice, by reason of mistakes and objections of form, enacts, "that it shall be lawful for the Superior Courts of Common Law, &c. at all times to amend all defects and errors in any proceeding in civil causes, whether there is anything in writing to amend by or not, and whether the defect or error be that of the party applying to amend or not," &c.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—We have held that the service is supposed to be at the moment when in the ordinary course of the post the notice would be put into the hands of the party to whom it was addressed (R. v. Stawstone, 21 L. J. M. C. 145); but if a service by the overseers on a Sunday would not be valid, how can a service through the post be valid?

Whigham.—It may be taken as a service at the first moment of Monday.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—Service on the Monday is too late.

ERLE, J.—The notice must be given fourteen days at least before the Sessions; and the rule of practice is to reckon one day exclusive.

Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—To grant this rule, we must repeal the statute of Charles, which renders invalid the service of all process on a Sunday.

FORD v. SMEDLEY.

Right to vote—Non-payment of assessed taxes. By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 90, no person shall be entitled to be registered on the list of voters, unless on the 20*th of July he shall have paid all assessed taxes which shall have become payable by him previous to the* 5*th of January preceding. By* 43 Geo. 3, c. 161, s. 23, the assessed taxes are made payable, and are to be paid quarterly on the 20*th of July, September, December, and March.* 48 Geo. 3, c. 141, s. 1, rule 3*rd of class* 3*rd, directs the collectors to collect the assessed taxes in equal moieties, within twenty-one days after the* 10*th of October and the* 5*th of April, but with a proviso that nothing in that Act should be construed to alter the times when the duties were payable according to the previous Acts.*

A. did not pay previous to the 20*th of July, the assessed taxes due from him on the* 20*th of December preceding. They were not demanded till April:*

Held, that to entitle him to a vote he ought to have tendered payment, the duties being payable without a demand having been made, and that not having done so he had no right to a vote.

This was an appeal from the decision of Mr. Macqueen, the revising barrister, for the borough of Westminster. The appellant claimed to vote in the election of members for the city of Westminster, in respect of property occupied by him in the parish of St. Clement Danes. His vote was objected to on the ground that he had not paid the assessed taxes, "payable" previously to the 5th of January last. By 2 Wm. 4, c. 15, s. 27, no person is entitled to be registered unless he has paid on or before the 20th of July, all assessed taxes which should have become payable from him previously to the 5th of April preceding. By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 90, it is only necessary to have paid the assessed taxes which had become payable previously to the 5th of January. The appellant was returned a defaulter under the Registration Act, 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 12, for not having paid on or before the 20th of July, 1852, the quarterly house-tax of the 20th of December, 1851. The barrister held the objection fatal.

Kinglake, Serjt. (with whom was Keene), argued that the tax was not payable within the meaning of the Acts, for the purpose of disfranchisement, until it had been demanded. That it was in fact the practice to collect the tax by half-yearly instalments, and no one ever thought of paying it, or was expected to pay it, except half-yearly. 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, ss. 1, 3, and 12, regulate the collection of taxes; 43 Geo. 3, c. 161, s. 23, made the taxes payable quarterly; 48 Geo. 3, c. 141, s. 1, rule 3, class 3, directed these taxes to be collected in equal moieties, within twenty-one days after the 10th of October and the 5th of April in each year; but the collectors were directed in some cases, as when an execution was in the house, to collect the duties quarterly. This, however, was to prevent loss, and for all common purposes they were to be collected in moieties. Before any levy could be made, it was necessary that demand should have been made, and payment refused. The claim, therefore, should have been admitted, on the ground, first, that the taxes for the purposes of disfranchisement were payable half-yearly, on the 10th of October and 5th of April; and, secondly, that they were not payable until after demand made.

JUDGMENT.

JERVIS, C.J.—It seems to me in this case the revising barrister put the proper construction on the statutes which are applicable to the collection of these taxes, and that, accordingly, he properly rejected the vote; therefore, we must affirm the decision. This case is one of great importance, because, perhaps, in the present state of opinion, or want of information, as to the general bearing of the Acts, if they had been rigidly enforced, they might have disfranchised a great number of household voters of this country, because a person's attention is not drawn to the payment of taxes of this sort until they are demanded; and they do not go as, in my opinion, under the construction of the Act, they are bound to go, to pay the tax quarterly. The difficulty of the case has arisen from the framers of the recent statute (11 & 12 Vict. c. 90) intending to confer, as they undoubtedly wished to confer, a longer time for the payment of the taxes, without practically bearing in mind the period when they became payable. My talented friend General Evans, the member for Westminster, who, I believe, brought in the Bill, has thus not done that which he intended. Now, the Reform Bill was framed with a different view, and it was directed to the practical collection of taxes. The taxes, though payable quarterly, are demanded half-yearly, in September and in March; accordingly, the day selected by the Reform Bill was a day applicable to the real state of things, because it says, "you shall not be entitled to your household franchise unless you have paid on or before the 20th of July the taxes payable previously to the 5th of April;" that is, which are due on the 20th of March, of which you will have a demand; because the taxes which are due in the March quarter, with those due in the quarter before, are demanded half-yearly, between March and April, and are payable, by the Reform Bill, between March and the 20th of July. The framer of the Reform Act bore these minute matters in mind; not so, unhappily, the framer of the other Act, because, supposing you can extend back the time of the amounts payable from March to January, you either include in another quarter that due in December, or you are preventing the party having notice by the demand. But the effect of it is this, that you are still only to pay on the 20th of July. If before the 20th of July, you pay the taxes demanded between March and April, you in truth do pay the tax which was due in January. If you choose to wait for notice you must pay the tax due for the quarter ending on the 20th of March, as you did under the old Act; but if you choose to avail yourself of the recent Act, you must not wait for notice, but must go to pay to the collector the tax due in January. That is the practical bearing of the two Acts. The real question is, is the tax payable on the 20th of September, or is it payable only on the 20th of March? Or, further, is it only payable on demand? And when you come to look to the Acts of Parliament, there is no difficulty in it whatever. Even the words of the statutes explain their meaning. The assessment is made by the year. Under the original Act it was to be demanded within ten days after the receipt of the warrant. The second Act fixes the periods specifically when it is to be payable, and expressly says it shall be paid by quarterly instalments, on the 20th of July, the 20th of September, the 20th of December, and the 20th of March, and then, in order to avoid what might appear to be a hardship, by enabling the collector instantly to pounce on the tax payer and put his powers in force without further notice, the subsequent statute of 48 Geo. 3 says, there shall be a certain demand in a certain time after the debt becomes due, before the levy or execution by seizing the goods; and in order that there may be no difficulty and (if there had been there scarcely would have been a word necessary to be said upon the subject,—in order to make it plain), there is an express provision that the compulsory power of making the distress shall not interfere with the liability of the tax-payer. It is said that there are words in the Act which deal with the levy and payments, and that the time of payment can only be after the half-year has expired. What was said by my brother Maule, in the course of the argument, answers that: he said, if you levy, that means you compel payment by compulsory means, and payment so enforced necessarily involves a previous notice of demand, because it is used in reference to the form of proceeding in the Act of Parliament, by which there can be no levy without a demand. As to there being a previous demand, that question follows the other. If the tax is payable quarterly, as the Act says it is, you can enforce it; if it is payable without demand, the voter has not paid the taxes in due time, and is not entitled to vote. Therefore, the revising barrister was right in rejecting the claim.

MAULE, J.—I entirely agree with the Lord Chief Justice. I think he has pointed out how it is that the Act of Victoria is so worded, as perhaps not to have given to the voter all the relief that may have been intended. That, however (though very probably of a serious nature), could only be taken into consideration in considering this Act, if the words were obscure, or the meaning of them, on a mere inspection of them, would be doubtful, or there was a manifest contradiction, and great inconveniences arose from the words construed in their natural sense, such as to induce the mind to believe that the words must have been used in some different sense. I do not think that there is any inconvenience of that kind here. The words are, that the voter must have paid, before the 20th of July, all the taxes which have become due from him before the 5th of January; and then the question is, what tax is payable then? That depends upon the Act of Parliament imposing the tax; and that Act, in express terms, provides that the tax "shall be paid," and "shall be payable" quarterly. Then, there are some provisions in another part of the Act with respect to calling upon the collector to collect them half-yearly; that is, not to let them go over the half-year. Now, there is nothing to hinder him collecting them quarterly, if he pleases. Whenever it is that they are to be collected, they may be paid, and would be received if they were offered at the time when, according to the Act which imposes them, they are directed to be paid and described as being payable. Now these are the words, which have a clear, simple, and plain sense, which ought to be given to them in construing the Act, unless you could not possibly understand them in that sense without some such inconvenience as would justify you in departing from the ordinary sense of the words and introducing an extraordinary meaning for them. I doubt whether anything could justify this, without saying that by "paid" and "payable," something different was meant. There are some words in the Act so plain in themselves that you cannot give them any different meaning without doing violence to the language used. If the Act of Parliament says there shall be so many things, viz. three or four, you cannot contend that it means thirty or forty. If the Act of Parliament says twenty shillings are to be paid, you cannot call it twenty-five shillings, or fifteen shillings, without doing violence to the language of the Act itself. If one Act of Parliament says that the taxes shall be payable in December, and another says, that all taxes payable before the 5th of January shall be paid, you must use those simple words, and understand them in the same sense in both Acts of Parliament. The consequence is, the voter has not complied with the condition which the Act of Parliament imposes on the right to vote, and therefore he is not entitled to exercise it.

TALFOURD, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. It seems that the words are plain and clear, and no inconvenience can ever arise from them.

Decision affirmed with costs.

REGISTRATION APPEAL.

COLLINS v. THOMAS.(a)

Borough franchise—Meaning of the word "therewith."

The word "therewith," in the 27th section of the Reform Act refers to time, and not to locality.

Therefore, where the claimant occupied a house and garden of the same landlord, at one rent, but the garden was separated from the house by a public road, it was Held, to be a good qualification.

This was an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister of the borough of Tewkesbury. The facts were as follow:—The respondent occupied a house and garden, which he held of the same landlord, at a rent of 10*l.* a year. The garden did not, however, adjoin the house, but was situate at some distance, and separated from it by a public road. The revising barrister held it to be a sufficient qualification.

Kerr, for the appellant, said, that for the first time the Court was now called upon to put a construction upon the meaning of the word "therewith," in the 27th section of the Reform Act. The doubt had been suggested both by Mr. Rogers and by Mr. Elliot, in their treatises on the statute. [MAULE, J.—The question is, Does it refer to time or to place?] Precisely so, and he submitted that it referred to locality. It was a rule of construction of a statute, that every word should have a meaning and value, if possible. Now, if the word "therewith" were construed to mean a holding of the land contemporaneously with the building, it was surplusage, for the same meaning would have been conveyed without it by the other words, "occupied by him as tenant under the same landlord." Again, if it be construed as referring to time, and not to locality, this absurdity follows; that if there were a building upon the land, it would not confer the franchise, and thus the better qualified the claimant became in point of fact, the less would he be qualified in point of law. Thus, the house and garden together in this case are just worth 10*l.* per year, but neither is worth that alone. But if the respondent were to put an inclosed shed upon the garden, although he would in fact make the whole more valuable, he would disqualify himself; for he could not join the buildings, although he can join the land. These difficulties would be removed by putting upon the word "therewith" that which appears to be its common sense and obvious meaning, a connection with the building in point of locality, as part of the same premises.

The respondent was not called upon.

The COURT, without assigning reasons, expressed themselves to be unanimously of opinion that "therewith" meant an occupation in point of time, and not of locality.

Decision of the revising barrister affirmed.

(a) This case was briefly and erroneously reported last week owing to the confusion which prevailed in the court during the discussion. A full and correct statement of it is now given.

Prohibition.

On application for a writ of prohibition on the ground that defendant had no notice of a decree which had been made against him, the Court will not grant the writ if it appears that the defendant has had notice of and appeared in the suit.

In this case Parry moved for a writ of prohibition on an affidavit, stating that the suit was one promoted by his wife for restitution of conjugal rights, that a decree had been made pendente lite for alimony, and that a considerable time afterwards, on receiving notice of motion, he attended before Dr. Lushington, and found to his surprise that a decree had been made ordering him to take his wife home, and that he was now about to be pronounced in contempt for not obeying that decree. He, defendant, protested against this proceeding as not having had notice of the decree nor summons to attend when it was pronounced, and of this he offered to make affidavit. The judge, however, refused to have him sworn, but allowed him till next court day to comply. He stated that in the event of his not so complying he should pronounce him in contempt, and report him to the Lord Chancellor, and this (the affidavit proceeded to say) he verily believes will be done unless this Court shall interfere by granting the prohibition.

Parry argued that a writ of prohibition would lie for want of jurisdiction to make a decree in the absence of the party interested, and that such a proceeding was contrary to the general law of the land. [MAULE, J.—How are we to know that it is not the business of the defendant, according to the practice of those courts, to be present on all judicial days without special notice?] It such be the practice of the courts that might be an answer, but your lordships will not affirm that to be so at once. Even in that case I am prepared to argue that such a practice is unconstitutional. [MAULE, J.—If a person has once appeared by his proctor (who seems to represent his clients more fully than an attorney) it may be that no special notice of future proceedings would be required by the course of the court.] The case of Capel v. Child, 2 Cr. & Jer. 558, is an authority in this matter. [MAULE, J.—In that case the suit seems to have gone on without any notice or knowledge on the part of Capel, the present case is only one of a further step in a suit.] The decree for alimony was made pendente lite; the decree to take his wife home must be looked upon as something quite fresh, and he ought to have had an opportunity of opposing. The cases of Harper v. Carr, 7 T.R. 270, and Ex parte Smyth, 719, were referred to in the course of the argument.

MAULE, J.—I am of opinion that there should be no rule in this case. The suit appears to have been duly instituted, and the judgment properly pronounced, the defendant's complaint being that he had no notice of such judgment. There is no case where a Court has interfered with a suit so circumstanced. Where, as in Capel's case, a person has never been called into court at all, this is against natural justice, and the Court will interfere; but in this case, Story was regularly summoned, which he does not deny, nor does he object to the competency of the tribunal. He must shew, in the first instance, that the Ecclesiastical Court was proceeding in a way liable to a prohibition, and this he has not done.

TALFOURD, J.—I think there is not sufficient ground for a prohibition in this case. Unless that Court were going against the fundamental principles of the Common Law, the writ could not be issued. The defendant having been once properly before the court, might take that as a sufficient notice in subsequent proceedings.

Rule refused.

MOORE v. THE OVERSEERS OF CARISBROOKE.

*A. claims to be registered on the list of county voters in respect of land of the value of 5*l.* per annum, which, together with other land of the value of 50*l.* per annum, is mortgaged for 300*l.* at the rate of 5 per cent.:*

Held, that the mortgage is to be apportioned, and that, therefore, the land is worth more than 40s. a year, and the claim valid.

In this case it appeared that a vote was claimed in respect of land of the claimant of the value of 5*l.* per annum, subject, together with other land of the value of 50*l.* per annum, to a mortgage of 300*l.* The revising barrister retained the vote.

Poulden, for the appellant. The barrister went into the value of other lands, which he had no jurisdiction to do.

MAULE, J.—If a man has two plots of land in two adjoining counties worth each 4*l.* per annum, and has mortgaged the two together for a sum of money, the interest of which amounts to 3*l.* per annum, according to your doctrine he would have a vote for neither. Deduct in this case 15*l.* the mortgage interest, from the total value of 55*l.* that leaves 40*l.*—the eleventh part of that is more than 10s. per annum.

Decision affirmed.

Appeal from a County Court—Ferry—Liability of ferryman.

A lessee of a ferry receives on board of his ferry-boat a mare of B.'s, who keeps charge of her on board. Slips for landing are provided by the owner of the ferry; one of these has a damaged handrail, known to the ferryman, which injures the mare:

Held, that the ferryman was bound to provide the means of landing, and having negligently provided a slip with a broken handrail, by reason of which the mare was injured, he was liable for the loss;

Held also, that where an objection is raised on the argument of the appeal, but was not urged at the trial, the Court will not send the case back to the judge to be amended, so as to give the means of deciding upon such objection.

This was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the County Court of Birkenhead. The case stated that the defendants were lessees of a steam-boat ferry for the carriage of passengers and goods between Birkenhead and Liverpool, and that it was part of their duty to find accommodation for embarking and landing; that it was not their custom to take charge of live cattle on board their boat; that the plaintiff brought a mare on board of the ferry-boat, and himself kept charge of her; that the defendants did not by themselves or their servants interfere with her; that the landing-pier being some feet higher than the boat, slips with handles were used for landing passengers, and also for cattle; that on the day in question the handrail of the slip used for landing the mare,—having been some days previously broken,—was fastened with a piece of cord; that it was again broken that morning, and, although the defendants were cautioned by a policeman against using it, it was fastened together again and used for landing the plaintiff's mare; that the mare pressing against the damaged handrail, it was again broken, and a piece of iron of which it was formed entered into the side of the mare, and injured her so much that she was obliged to be put to death. By the plaint, the plaintiff sought to recover the sum of 31*l.* 10s. the value of the mare, for that the defendants as carriers were entrusted with the mare of the plaintiff to carry from Birkenhead to Liverpool, and that they, by their negligence, caused an injury to the mare, &c. The defence urged at the trial was, that the defendants had not the care of the mare, but only contracted to find steam-boat carriage. The judge held them liable.

James, for the appellants.—The judge has found that the mare was not entrusted to the defendants, i. e. that they were not carriers. But this plaint is against them as carriers, and therefore the decision must be reversed, for by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 59, the substance of the action is to be contained in the summons and plaint, and by the 75th section no evidence shall be given of any demand or cause of action except such as is contained in the summons. [MAULE, J.—The case does not shew the summons. JERVIS, C.J.—No; and the substance of the summons may be the negligence of the defendants.] The judge drew the case, and we could not interfere. But the defendants are not liable at all. The ferry is for the conveyance of passengers and goods, and it is not a part of their duty to provide accommodation for embarking and landing. But even if it is, the plaintiff having the care of his mare should have looked to the sufficiency of the slip; and the defendants are not liable.

Tomlinson for the defendants, was not called upon.

JERVIS, C.J.—I am of opinion that the judge of the County Court was correct. I do not think he is subject to the observations which were made upon him for not setting out the summons. At the trial the objection now sought to be raised, that the defendants were not liable as carriers, was not taken; the objection then urged was that they were not liable, because they had not the personal care of the mare. It does not appear from the particulars that the action was brought against them merely as carriers, it might have been for actual and aggressive negligence; it might mean that the defendants for hire took a mare, and by their negligence it was staked. If that is so, it will do. It is their duty to provide everything necessary for the conveyance of passengers and goods from the one side to the other. If they stop six feet from the shore, they might as well stop in the middle of the Mersey,—the horses cannot jump from the boat on to the pier, and it is their duty to provide the means of their being landed. The slip had an iron spike disguised as a handrail; on the slightest pressure it gave way, and the spike entered into the mare. If the plaintiff could have seen it, perhaps he would have demanded another rail. I think for this injury the defendants are liable.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. As to the point of form, if it had been raised at the trial, and the case did not give us the means of deciding it, we might perhaps send it back to be amended, but, not having been raised at the trial, it ought not to be raised here. As to the second point, if the plaintiff had himself been guilty of negligence, he might not perhaps have been entitled to recover, as having contributed to the injury; but there is nothing of the kind here.

HARRIS v. THIRKELL.

Distress—Pound breach—Stats. 2 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 4; 11 Geo. 2, c. 19 - Verdict against evidence—Penal action—New trial.

Where goods fraudulently removed by a tenant, from his premises, to avoid a distress for rent in arrear, are followed and distrained, within thirty days, on the premises of a third party, by virtue of the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 1, and are rescued by such third party:

Quære, whether an action for treble damages, on the 4th section of 2 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, will lie against such third party.

Semble, per Jervis, C.J. that the Court ought to be guided by the same rules in considering whether they will grant a new trial in a penal, as they would in a remedial action.

The declaration stated that one John Goodman held certain premises, with the appurtenances, as tenant to the plaintiff from year to year, at a yearly rent of 50*l.* payable on the 1st October, 1st January, 1st April, and 1st July; of which rent 37*l.* 10s. became due on the 1st April, 1852. That the plaintiff, on the 10th April, 1852, by William Tompsett, her bailiff, had, according to the form of the statutes in such case made and provided, seized and taken as a distress for the said rent in arrear, a horse and cart and certain harness, which had been theretofore, and within thirty days next before the seizure and distress, fraudulently removed by the said John Goodman from the said premises, to avoid a distress for rent, and then were in and upon the premises of the defendant, and in the lawful custody and possession of the said William Tompsett, as such bailiff as aforesaid, in order that he might appraise and sell and dispose thereof, according to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, whereupon the defendant, with force and arms, &c. rescued, seized, took, and drove away, the said horse and cart, and harness, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided; whereby the plaintiff, &c. hath been put to great expense, to wit, amounting to 10*l.* &c.

1st plea.—Not guilty.

2nd plea.—That Goodman was not tenant.

3rd plea.—That the goods had not been fraudulently removed.

4th plea.—That the said rent was not in arrear at the time of the removal of the goods.

5th plea.—That Goodman was indebted to the defendant, and sold the said horse, cart, and harness to the defendant bonâ fide, and for valuable consideration, and that at the time of the sale, the defendant was not privy to any fraud in the removal of the goods from the premises held by Goodman. Verification.

Issue was taken on all the pleas except the 5th, to which de injuriâ was replied, and issue taken thereon.

At the trial, which took place before Jervis, C.J., at the last Kent Summer Assizes, the jury found a general verdict for the defendant. It was agreed that the value of the goods was 16*l.* A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the verdict, and for a new trial,—on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence, Bramwell and Barrow now shewed cause.—[The point to which the argument was first directed was whether, on the facts stated in the declaration, an action would lie on the statute 2 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 4, which enacts, that "upon any pound breach or rescous of goods or chattels distrained for rent, the person grieved thereby shall, in a special action upon the case, for the wrong thereby sustained, recover treble damages and costs against the offenders," as if no such action would lie then, the damages being under 20*l.* the Court would not in their discretion grant a new trial.] The statute 2 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 4, does not apply to the case of goods followed and distrained off the premises. Sec. 4 might be read thus: that "upon any pound breach, &c. of goods or chattels distrained on the premises for rent due, &c." Then comes the statute 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, the first section of which enacts, that "in case any tenant shall fraudulently or clandestinely convey away, or carry off or from such premises his goods or chattels, to prevent the landlord or lessor from distraining the same for arrears of rent, it shall and may be lawful for every landlord or lessor, &c. within the space of thirty days next ensuing such conveying away, &c. to take and seize such goods and chattels wherever the same shall be found, as a distress for the said arrears of rent; and the same to sell or otherwise dispose of in such manner as if the said goods and chattels had actually been distrained by such lessor or landlord in and upon such premises, for such arrears of rent." What would be the consequences of extending this first section of 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, to the former Act of William and Mary? A person may bonâ fide have goods deposited with him. Another person distrains them; the first has no notice that the distrainor has a right to distrain. The argument on the other side is, you shall be punished, if you rescue the goods, for what is primâ facie the wrong of the man distraining. It is said that, if I resist, the distrainor shall not only recover for damage, but for treble value. The reason for the application of the penal statute does not extend to the case of goods removed. (Sec. 10 was referred to, which enacts, that "it shall be lawful for any person lawfully taking any distress for any kind of rent to impound or otherwise secure the distress, in such place, or on such part of the premises chargeable with the rent, as shall be most fit and convenient for the impounding and securing such distress; and to appraise, sell, &c. upon the premises, in like manner, &c. as any person taking a distress for rent may now do off the premises; and that if any pound breach or rescous shall be made of any goods and chattels, or stock distrained for rent, and impounded or otherwise secured by virtue of this Act, the person aggrieved thereby shall have the like remedy as is given by the said statute (2 Wm. & Mary, sess. 1, c. 5.)" [MAULE, J.—By sec. 1, the distrainor might seize wherever he found the goods; that section does not say that he may impound or otherwise secure. JERVIS, C.J.—What is done with goods followed and distrained?] [Needham.—I believe they are always taken back to the demised premises.] [MAULE, J.—It is hard to say that a tenant fraudulently removing his goods shall not be liable to all he would have been liable to if they had not been removed.] He is already sufficiently punished by sec. 3 of 11 Geo. 4, c. 19. The tenant would be sufficiently punished by the penalty of double value. [JERVIS, C.J.—At common law there was an indictment for breaking pound.] [Needham referred to Piggott v. Birtles (1 M. & W. 441).] [MAULE, J.—The defendant here rescues some goods which are not his.] They cited R. v. Handy, 6 T.R. 286. [MAULE, J. referred to Thomas v. Harries, 1 Scott N.R. 521.] (Com. Dig. "Distress," D. 1, was cited.) Before the passing of 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, the goods must have been taken on the premises, and driven to some pound off the premises. Previous to the passing of 2 Wm. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, the landlord could only deprive the tenant of the use of the goods distrained until he paid the rent. Then the statute of Wm. & M. entitled him to sell, and then came the penalty for rescue from the bailiff driving them to pound off the premises. Then came the statute of Anne, allowing a following, which was repealed, and the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, allowed a following within thirty days. The penalty imposed by the statute of Wm. & M. was such as applied to the then state of the law, viz. to the case of when the goods distrained were on the way to the pound from the premises, or in the pound. Independently of R. v. Hardy, on looking at the statutes of Wm. & M. and 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, it may be seen that the penalty in the first does not apply to the latter. If it applied, there would be no use in the reservation of remedy in the 10th section of the latter. If the Legislature had meant that it should apply to the 1st section, they would have seen that it applied to the 10th section also. The facts of this case do not bring it within sec. 10.—The Court intimated their opinion that the question whether the action for treble damages would lie, was at all events so doubtful, that they would not determine it in the negative as a preliminary objection. The question was then argued, whether the verdict was against the evidence. [MAULE, J.—In Oppermann v. Smith, 4 Dow. & Ry. 33, it is laid down, on the authority of Best, J. that the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, applies to all cases where the landlord is, by the conduct of his tenant, in removing his goods, turned over to the barren right of bringing an action for his rent; and that, where a tenant openly, and in the face of day, and with notice to his landlord, removed his goods without leaving sufficient on the premises to satisfy the rent then due, and the landlord followed and distrained the goods: that, although the removal might not be clandestine, yet, as it was fraudulent (which was a question for the jury), the landlord was justified under the statute. He also referred to Furneaux v. Fotherby, 4 Campb. 136. JERVIS, C.J.—In John v. Jenkins, 1 C. & M. 227, the Court held that it is a question for the jury, whether a removal was fraudulent within 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, although it be admitted at the trial by the tenant that the removal was to avoid a distress.] They cited Williams v. Burgess, 10 A. & E. 499. If this case is within the statute of Wm. & Mary, it is a penal action, and your lordships ought not to grant a new trial. [JERVIS, C.J.—If the law gives a man a right to recover the penalty, he ought to recover it by law; and I never could understand the reason why a different practice should prevail in a penal from that in a remedial action.] Such is the law. [JERVIS, C.J.—No. Such is the practice.] This must be considered a penal action. It was formerly considered remedial. (Stanley v. Wharton, 9 Price, 301.) But this was first shaken by a case of The Earl of Spencer v. Swannell, 3 M. & W. 154: that was an action of debt for treble value of tithes not set out. Parke, B. there says, "A penal law is a statute which imposes a penalty; and the statute of Edward 6 does impose a penalty, for it trebles the original duty by way of punishment, thus making the defaulting party liable to a forfeiture beyond the amount of the duty withheld. It is true that it is an action not barely penal, for, on the principle that it is for a duty also, such action lies by executors within the equity of the statute de bonis asportatis in vita testatoris; and after a recovery in this action, the plaintiff cannot recover the tithe in any other suit; nor is it purely penal within the rule adopted by the Courts as to granting new trials after a verdict for the defendant." In this case, if treble damages are recovered, the single damages are the remedy, and according to Parke, B. the rest are penal, and if the rest are not recovered; then the damages are under 20*l.* and no new trial will be granted. In Jones v. Williams, 4 M. & W. 375, an action of debt on the 11 Geo. 2, c. 19, for the double value of goods fraudulently removed from the premises of a tenant was held to be a penal action. So in Robinson v. Learoyd, 7 M. & W. 48, where Parke, B. says that an action of debt on the statute 4 Geo. 2, c. 28, for the recovery of double value against a tenant holding over, is penal, and is to be construed strictly. In support of the proposition, that where a new trial is moved for in a penal action, on the ground of the verdict for the defendant being against evidence, the Court will not grant it, see Fouereau v. ——, 3 Wilson, 59; Brook v. Middleton, 10 East, 268; and Gregory v. Tuffs, 1 C. M. & R. 310.—Parry v. Duncan, 7 Bing. 243, and Bach v. Meats, 5 Mau. & S. 200, were also cited.

Montague Chambers and Needham were heard in support of the rule. Lord Selsea v. Powell, 6 Taun. 297, was cited.

MAULE, J.—The evidence of fraud was greatly preponderant, and the jury probably made some mistake; therefore we think there ought to be a new trial.

By the COURT.—If the plaintiff get a verdict, he must not remit the treble damages, except by consent of the defendant, in order to raise the point as to whether the action for treble damages will lie.

Rule absolute on payment of costs.

APPEAL FROM REVISING BARRISTER'S COURT.

Nov. 17 and 20.

(Before JERVIS, C.J. and MAULE, WILLIAMS, and TALFOURD, JJ.)

BARROW and OTHERS, Appellants; and BUCKMASTER, Respondent.

Where two pieces of freehold land, A. and B. are both overridden by the same rent-charge, and the owner of A. has a remedy against the owner of B. to indemnify himself for any part of the rent which he may be obliged to pay over and above an apportioned part of it, then, in order to ascertain the value of A. for the purpose of conferring a county vote, such apportioned part only of the rent is to be deducted from the annual value of A.

This was an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the Southern Division of county of Lancashire. The appellant (Barrow) and seven other persons whose appeals were consolidated, claimed to be entitled to a county vote in respect of a piece of freehold land which was part of a plot of land which was charged with a perpetual yearly rent of 14*l.* 1s. 7d. The owners of the whole plot of land, who held it in fee-simple, subject to the above-mentioned rent-charge, by the terms of the deed of conveyance of that part of it in respect of which the votes were claimed, conveyed that part subject only to a proportion, viz. 4*l.* 5s. of the said yearly rent, and covenanted to pay the remainder, viz. 9*l.* 16s. 7d. and indemnify the grantees for all loss which might arise by reason of the nonpayment of the 9*l.* 16s. 7d.

They further covenanted that if default should be made in payment of that sum, and the grantees should be required to pay the same or any part thereof, that, thereupon it should be lawful for the grantees to enter and distrain, for so much as should have been required to be paid, upon the remainder of the said plot of land. The grantees covenanted to pay the 4*l.* 5s. and gave a similar indemnity and power of distress. [It was admitted on the argument that the residue of the land which was given as a security was sufficient to produce the sum secured upon it.] It was found by the case that if no more than 4*l.* 5s. was to be deducted from the yearly value of the land, it would be sufficient to confer a vote.

The barrister disallowed the claim.

Byles, Serjt. with whom was Aspland, for the appellant. The question in this case depends on the old statutes. 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, limits the right of voting to persons, "whereof every one shall have free land or tenement to the value of 40s. by the year above all charges," and describes them subsequently as persons "that may expend 10s. by the year." 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, contains the words "of the clear yearly value of 40s." The revising barrister held that in ascertaining the clear yearly value of that for which the vote is claimed, the charges primarily imposed must be looked to. But that is not so, it is sufficient if it be of the clear yearly value of 40s. after all legal remedies have been worked out. Between these terre-tenants there would be contribution certainly in equity, and it is submitted also at law. In the case of rent-service, if a lessor lets to a lessee, and he divides the land among several, the rent-service would be apportioned. (Vide the dictum of the Chief-Justice, in Curtis v. Spilly, 1 Bing. N.C. 756.) A jury at Common Law or a Court of Equity would apportion it. (Story's Equity Jur. s. 475; Cary's Reports, 3, anon.) If a man were worth 500*l.* a year, and devised the whole to five persons in equal moieties, but subject to a rent-charge of 100*l.* they would, according to the decision of the barrister, be all disfranchised. If it had been a mortgage, the Court has to-day decided, in the case of Moore v. The Overseers of Carisbrooke, that it would be apportionable.

Cowling, for the respondents.—The decision of the revising barrister was correct. Before the passing of the 8 Hen. 6, c. 7, the qualification was in respect of freehold property, however it might be charged. That statute introduced a general rule. The statute must be construed as it would have been construed in the time of Hen. 6. Real property was then considered as the chief source of income; and the words of the Act are, that every voter "shall have free land or tenement to the value of 40s. by the year at the least, above all charges." It is said, on the other side, that this means, "free of all charges after all legal remedies have operated;" but that is not so. The statute applies to cases where the rent-charge overrides other land. The sheriff was, by the statute, merely to inquire if there was a charge issuing out of the land. What is the sheriff to do? It may be, that there is no arrangement between the voter and the person holding the other land by which the rent-charge is overridden. The sheriff would have to inquire the value of the other land, and would have to examine other witnesses; but the Act of Parliament only says he shall examine the voter. The power of distress given to the voter to indemnify himself only applies to the other land out of which the rent-charge issues. All these complicated inquiries it never could have been contemplated that the sheriff should go into. What is the meaning of the words "that may expend?" In the present case, the sum which the claimant may expend is found after deducting 14*l.* 1s. 7d.; and then he cannot expend 40s. The 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 5, enacts that "No person shall vote in any such election without having a freehold estate in the county of the clear yearly value of forty shillings over and above all rents and charges payable out of or in respect of the same, or without having been in the actual possession or in receipt of the rents and profits thereof, for his own use, above twelve calendar months." In Gilbert on Rents, 154, it is said, "But when a rent-charge is granted out of land, the rent issues out of every part of the land, and consequently every part of the land is subject to a distress for the whole rent." The construction of the statute of Hen. 6, which has been adopted up to the present time, is, that the voter must have the legal estate. (See Heywood on County Elections, 62, 63.) The judges extended this law. Then, how stood the law as to a mortgage after the passing of 8 Hen. 6, and up to the passing of 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25? Why, if a person had a mortgage on his land, he could not vote; therefore the question is, what has the party legally a right to expend? A mortgagor's right to vote depends altogether on 7 & 8 Wm. 3, c. 25, s. 7. What Heywood says with regard to the construction of 8 Hen. 6, is to be found in all the text-writers. It is immaterial to what extent the property is mortgaged. (He cited the Middlesex Cases, 2 Peckwell's Election Cases, 103.) In the case of an equitable right, equity would say, You shall only execute your right over a particular part of the land, for a proportional part of the rent. [Jervis, C.J.—What is the voter to be examined about? Maule, J.—The sheriff is to examine the voter as to how much he expends by the year. Jervis, C.J.—Suppose that before the statute of Wm. 3 there was a mortgage on the land not in fee, who would have the vote?] Probably then the sheriff would have to inquire.

Byles, Serjt. (Aspland with him), in reply.—The true meaning of the 8 Hen. 6 was, "Satisfy the sheriff that you, on taking the proper account, have 10s. a year, all legal remedies having operated." (Lee v. Hutchinson, 2 Lutwyche's Reg. Cas. 159, was cited.) The sheriff will have no difficulty here, because by the title-deeds the rent is apportioned.

Jervis, C.J.—I think the revising barrister's decision was incorrect, and that the voter's names ought to be placed upon the register. The case does not state, but it is admitted that the residue of the land is sufficient to answer the balance of the charge beyond the 4*l.* 5s. It seems to me that the value to be deducted from the annual value of the land, in respect of which the vote is claimed, is 4*l.* 5s. and not 14*l.* 1s. 7d.; which latter sum is no doubt distrainable for out of every inch of the land. The voter, by the original statute, must have 40s. above all charges. The proper view of the statute is, as taken by my brother Byles, that there must be a sufficient sum to qualify after exhausting all legal remedies. If the rent-charge were apportioned, the voter would be able to expend 40s.; but it is said he cannot expend that, because his land is charged with 14*l.* 1s. 7d. But when he comes to take account with the other owners over whose land the rent-charge extends, he would be able to expend 40s. When you take the equitable estate of the statute of Wm. 3, instead of the legal one of the statute of Hen. 6, the same rule attaches. In Lee v. Hutchinson the Court looked to the substantial value, after all legal remedies were exhausted.

Maule, J.—I am of the same of opinion. I think this voter is in a position where he may expend 10s. by the year. It was pointed out by my brother Byles, and not disputed by Mr. Cowling, that although he might be distrained upon for 14*l.* 1s. 7d. yet the claimant may, by virtue of certain rights, which he has, and which he may put in force, expend 40s. out of the land. This appears to satisfy the statute of Hen. 6. Mr. Cowling says he must have 10s. beyond what may be primarily charged on the land; but he has not shewn why that should be the meaning of the statute. The words of the statute are not of a technical description, but of a popular nature. They are: "that may expend 10s.;" words less technical I cannot imagine. The statute, therefore, seems to me to be properly expounded by my brother Byles. Mr. Cowling's argument goes on the statute of Wm. 3; but the scope of that argument is an analogy between this case and a case of a mortgagor. Lee v. Hutchinson bears a strong analogy to this case.

Williams, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think we ought not to look further than the amount of charge which can ultimately fall on the terre-tenant.

Talfourd, J.—I am of the same opinion. Lee v. Hutchinson is a case the exact converse of, and in harmony with, this.

Decision reversed without costs.

Monday, Nov. 22.

(Before Jervis, C.J. and Maule, Williams, and Talfourd, JJ.)

Harris v. Thompson.

Slander—Privileged communication—Absence of malice.

A director of a company having learned, in his capacity of director of another company, that the plaintiff had been dismissed from the office of secretary of the said company, on the ground of gross misconduct, states this at the board of the first-mentioned company: and in answer to a question from the chair, said that the charges were for obtaining money under false pretences, and for giving an I O U for a petty cash debt. At a subsequent meeting, held for the purpose of investigating the conduct of the plaintiff, he refuses, in the presence of the plaintiff and his attorney, to state the charges against him. An action had been commenced against the other company, of which he was a director, by the plaintiff:

Held, that the communication was privileged; and that the conduct of the defendant being consistent with bona fides, that must be presumed; and that the case ought to have been withdrawn from the jury.

The declaration in this case alleged that the plaintiff had been secretary of the Brewers', &c. Company, and that the plaintiff, at the time of the grievances complained of, was auditor, and the defendant was a director, of the London Necropolis, &c. Company; that at a board meeting of the last-mentioned company, the defendant moved a resolution, that the plaintiff having been dismissed from the office of secretary to the Brewers', &c. Company for gross misconduct, was no longer fit to be an auditor of the said London Necropolis, &c. Company; that the defendant, maliciously intending to injure the plaintiff, and to cause him to be dismissed from his said office, and to cause it to be believed that the plaintiff had been guilty of obtaining money under false pretences, in answer to a certain question then and immediately after the defendant had moved the said resolution, put by the chairman of the meeting, and maliciously spoke of and concerning the plaintiff, the defamatory words following: that is to say, "Mr. Harris (thereby meaning the plaintiff) has been dismissed from the Brewers' Company (thereby meaning, &c.) for gross misconduct. The charge was obtaining money under false pretences from the solicitors (thereby meaning, &c.) and taking up a bill of his own," by means whereof, &c. the plaintiff was damaged.

Plea—Not guilty.

It appeared that the defendant was a director of the two companies mentioned in the declaration, and that the plaintiff was secretary of the one and auditor of the other. He remained secretary of the Brewers', &c. Company up to the 9th of February, 1852; on the 28th of January preceding, a vote of thanks to the plaintiff was carried at the meeting. On the 29th there was a private meeting of the directors, from which the plaintiff was excluded. At this meeting there were various charges made against the plaintiff. On the 4th of February they were gone into, and the board by their minutes acknowledged that they were satisfactorily answered. On the 9th of February these minutes were confirmed, the defendant signing them as chairman. The plaintiff was then requested to leave the room, and was afterwards informed that he was suspended. On the 11th the plaintiff received notice of a meeting to be held on the 12th, to consider his case. He did not attend, and was dismissed. On the 23rd of February there was a meeting of the London Necropolis, &c. Company, at which the alleged slander was uttered.

The defendant having said, in answer to a question from the chairman, that the charges were obtaining money under false pretences from the solicitors, and giving an I O U for a petty cash debt, the chairman said he thought the plaintiff should have an opportunity of vindicating himself, and it was resolved that an inquiry should take place.

On the 8th of March, the plaintiff, accompanied by his attorney, attended a meeting held to investigate the charges, and they asked the defendant to state the charges that he made. He answered that he did not come there as an accuser, but as a judge in the matter, and refused to make any charge in the presence of the plaintiff's attorney, saying that an action had been commenced by the plaintiff against the Brewers', &c. Company.

At the trial it was objected, on the part of the defendant, that the communication was privileged, and there was no evidence of malice to go to the jury. Jervis, C.J. however, held that there was evidence of malice, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, leave being reserved to the plaintiff to have it set aside and entered for him. A rule had been obtained by Byles, Serjt. and Wilkins, Serjt. and R. J. Browne now shewed cause.—There was abundant evidence of malice. The defendant knew all the circumstances, and that the charges had been refuted. As to the meaning of the words used, "he was discharged for gross misconduct," that meant that he had been guilty of gross misconduct, and the jury have found that he meant to say that the plaintiff was guilty of obtaining money under false pretences.

Byles, Serjt. and Willes, contrà.—The comunication was privileged, and the evidence of malice must be clear, there being a presumption that it was bonâ fide. The only evidence was that defendant declined to go into the charge. [Maule, J.—The second question is, whether the words are capable of the meaning imputed to them, and if so, whether there was evidence of their being used in that meaning.] What the defendant said is consistent with malice and with bonâ fides, and that is for the defendant. (Somerville v. Hawkins, 10 C. B. 582.)

Jervis, C.J.—I am satisfied I was wrong in not withdrawing the case from the jury, there being no evidence of express malice. (His lordship stated the circumstances as above.) The circumstance of a man being dismissed for misconduct justifies a director in acting as the defendant did. In answer to a question, he tells what the charges were. Whether he meant that they were true or not, it is not necessary to inquire, for whether he meant so or not, it would be a privileged communication. Even if he had said, "and I believe them to be true," it would still be privileged. The question was, whether there was any evidence of express malice. The only evidence I saw at the trial was, that the defendant refused to enter into a detailed statement of the charges on the 29th of February. I think the circumstance of actions having been commenced and threatened, was sufficient to account for that. He says, it is enough for me to have brought under the notice of the board the fact of the plaintiff's dismissal. There must be something inconsistent with innocence, or more consistent with guilt than innocence. Here his conduct was quite consistent with good faith.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. That the defendant might make the communication there can be no doubt, it being for the purpose of protecting the interest of himself and the company. Taking it to impute the commission of an offence, or that he believes it to be true, he might reasonably believe so, and it is still privileged. The plaintiff must shew malice, i. e. that the defendant was actuated not only by what he thought right and fit, but also by some evil intention towards the plaintiff to injure him. It must be presumed, in the absence of evidence of the opposite intention, that he was actuated by a proper sense of duty. I don't think there was evidence of his being actuated by anything else. There was good ground for his believing that he was saying what was true. When called on to go over the proofs he declined to do so. He might decline to do so on many grounds. He might have said, I believed him guilty, but I am not called upon to shew the grounds of my belief further than what I have shewn, viz. that a charge was made, on which he was dismissed. He also relied on the fact of an action having been brought against him. That was a good reason for his acting as he did. And all this is consistent with his having no malice at all. On the principle, therefore, laid down in the cases, I think there is no evidence to turn the scale on the presumption of the absence of malice.

WILLIAMS, J. referred to Blagg v. Sturt, 10 Q. B. 905 (cited by Brown), and said, that falsehood, in fact, is no proof of malice, unless the party knew of the falsehood.

FISHER v. RONALDS.

Questions tending to self-crimination of witness—Propriety of judge's interference.

In an action on a bill of exchange, the defence was that the money for which the bill was given had been lost in a gambling transaction. The person who let the room in which the gambling took place was asked a question tending, if answered, to render him liable to an indictment under stat. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, when the judge interposed. The Court, on a motion for a new trial on the ground of a misdirection, held the judge to have been right, and the rule was refused.

This case, tried before Cresswell, J. in London, was an action by the indorsee against the acceptor of a bill of exchange. The material pleas were, that the bill was given for money lost in gambling, and for money lent to gamble with.

At the trial, John Hicks, a livery stable-keeper, was called, who stated that he knew a set of persons called the Bath and Bristol Club, that they came to Plymouth races, that he let a room to some of the officers at Plymouth, and to that room came some of the club. He was then asked by Collier, (who with M. Chambers, Q.C. was for the defendant), whether he saw any gaming in that room? He replied that he did not. He was next asked whether there was a roulette table in the room, whereupon,—Byles, Serjt. for the plaintiff, suggested that the judge ought to interfere, on the ground that these were questions tending to render the witness indictable under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, for keeping, or conspiring with others to keep, a gaming-house. The judge interposed accordingly, and the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff.

Chambers now moved for a new trial on account of this interposition of the judge, and contended that after the witness had said he saw no gaming, his answering the next question in the affirmative would not prove that he kept a common gaming-house.

JERVIS, C.J.—He might not know what gaming was, and so might be led on, question after question, until the gaming was established.

Chambers.—At all events the interposition was too early.

MAULE, J.—If the judge had decided that the answer would not criminate the witness, and he, the witness, afterwards got a severe punishment, it would be very awkward. If a man believed that answering would render him liable to a prosecution, would the judge be justified in forcing him to answer?

Chambers.—Supposing the judge incorrect in holding that the question would criminate the witness, there is no remedy for us.

MAULE, J.—The judge never decides whether a question will criminate or not, he only tells the witness, as in Lord Cardigan's case,—"Do not answer any question which you think may tend to criminate you."

Chambers.—What I say is, it is impossible that this question can have any tendency to criminate the witness.

MAULE, J.—Then on that ground you can have no rule.

Chambers.—Taking that the witness refused to answer the question as tending to criminate him, was it not the duty of the judge to say—It has no tendency that way? Garbett's case, 1 Davison, Cr. C. Res. p. 236, was referred to in the argument.

JERVIS, C. J.—I think my brother Cresswell was right in his interposition, and that there should be no rule. A judge, seeing the tendency of a question, is right in warning the witness at once, otherwise question after question might be put, having a tendency to criminate.

MAULE, J.—The rule laid down in Phillips on Evidence is correct. If it were otherwise, a witness might be asked how many persons were in a room where a murder was committed, and then by an exhaustive process of questioning, brought to criminate himself. It would be difficult to put a case in which an application for the interposition of the judge would be more proper than in the present.

WILLIAMS and TALFOURD, JJ. concurred.

Rule refused.

ERRATUM.—By a typical error, the name of the case upon construction of the 4th section of the Statute of Frauds, reported in our number of November the 13th, page 68, was not stated. As it is an important case, deciding that a foreign parol contract not to be performed within a year, although good according to the lex loci, cannot be enforced in this country, readers are requested to insert the name "Leroux v. Browne," at the head of the report.

BUSINESS OF THE WEEK.

Saturday, Nov. 13.

MITCHELL v. READ.—Needham moved to enter appearance after distringas, according to the reservation in the 24th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, in the case of pending proceedings. Rule granted.

BLACKMAN v. ASPLIN.—Horn shewed cause against a rule to set aside judgment as in case of a nonsuit. The action was one of trover for mere nominal damages, and a rule had been obtained for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, which was discharged on a peremptory undertaking to try. It appeared, however, that plaintiff's attorney, ignorant of the practice, did not have the rule drawn up, hence the suit was not proceeded with. A rule for judgment as in case of a nonsuit was again obtained, to set aside which Prentice had obtained a rule nisi. After Prentice had been heard in support of his rule, MAULE, J. said that as the practice in drawing up the rule was what plaintiff's attorney might not have been aware of, the rule for setting aside the judgment as in case of a nonsuit might be made absolute, &c. on a peremptory undertaking being given, and the payment of costs within four days.

Doe dem. BOLTON and OTHERS v. ROE.—Combe moved for judgment against the casual ejectors. Granted.

The new trial paper was not taken, in consequence of the absence of JERVIS, C.J. and CRESSWELL and WILLIAMS, JJ.

Friday, Nov. 19.

Doe dem. LAW and OTHERS v. ———.—Skinner applied to have an order of reference made a rule of court. The order of reference had been lost by the arbitrator, and the plaintiffs had now only a copy of it made at the judge's chambers, and not having the signature of the judge. The defendants had a duplicate of the order, but on application to their attorney it was said to have been mislaid. The parties had attended upon it. [JERVIS, C.J.—It would stand then as an agreement sanctioned by the parties submitting to it. But then it will be objected that you have proceeded partly on one submission and partly on another.] But it is to be a rule of this Court, and they will have proceeded upon it as such. JERVIS, C.J.—They will say there is no enlargement. There are many difficulties in your way, but you may take a rule.

Re JOHN MATHEWS, an Attorney.—Taylor applied for a rule to have the name Chamberlain attached to the name of Mathews on the roll of the court.

Rule granted.

Saturday, Nov. 20.

PARKER v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Channell, Serjt. moved on behalf of the defendants for a rule calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the Master's taxation of costs in this cause should not be reviewed, on the ground that the Master had allowed certain charges to the plaintiff which he ought not, the fact being that a great portion of the work in the cause was done by the plaintiff himself, and not by his attorney, and that this was not known to the Master, or to the defendants, at the time of taxation. Rule nisi.

This is not the case of Parker v. The Great Western Railway Company, in which cross rules were moved for in the last Term.

Monday, Nov. 22.

HOLMES v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—In this case, which was argued on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, the verdict which had been found for the plaintiff was set aside, and entered for the defendants on the material issues. To be reported.

WHITE v. BINSTEAD.—Watson moved for a rule to shew cause why an order made by Cresswell, J. for the payment of 25*l.* should not be set aside. In this case, an interpleader had been directed to be tried on an execution by the sheriff of London, who was ordered to sell the goods and pay the money into court, which he did. After the interpleader order had been made, but before the goods were sold, the sheriff received a notice from the landlord that 25*l.* was due for rent, and this he paid. At the trial of the issue, the jury found for the claimant, and the judge, considering that the sheriff could not keep back the money, ordered the 25*l.* to be paid up. The question was as to the right of the landlord in the case where the goods were those of a third party. (Forster v. Cookson, 1 Q. B. 419.) Rule nisi granted.

Re LIVERPOOL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY v. PRITCHARD.—Dowdeswell moved for a rule to shew cause why an award made in an arbitration between these parties should not be set aside. It appeared that Pritchard had for some time been in partnership with one Forsyth, during which time the firm had contracted loans with the company, and that afterwards a dissolution took place, and Pritchard carried on the business by himself, and contracted other loans. Two separate accounts were delivered, and on those arose the dispute referred to arbitration. The grounds of the motion were, that an important item in the accounts had not been investigated,—that a wrong construction had been put upon a letter,—and that certain resolutions had been altered by two of the arbitrators without consulting the third. After a long discussion, during which the cases of Re Perring v. Haymer, 8 A. & E. 215; Little v. Newton, 2 M. & G. 351; and Stalworth v. Inns, 13 M. & W. 466, were referred to, the COURT granted a rule nisi, in order that they might more clearly see how the matter was.

HOLMES v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—In this case, which was an action for the infringement of a patent, Watson, who shewed cause, resumed and concluded his argument, and was followed by Hindmarch, on the same side.

ROWE v. TIPPER.—In this case Hawkins moved for a rule to shew cause why a verdict for the defendant on the sixth issue should not be set aside and entered for the plaintiff. The action was on a bill of exchange at four months' date, drawn by Green on Knight and Co. endorsed by Green to the defendant, by him to Abley, and by Abley to the plaintiff. The bill became due on Saturday, the 15th December, 1851. The other plea was a traverse of the notice of dishonour, and on this plea arose the issue on which the present motion was made. The plaintiff, being called, proved that he had the bill in his possession till maturity; that it was presented and dishonoured; that notice of this was at once given to Abley, who neglected to give notice to defendant, his immediate indorsee, whereupon plaintiff sent defendant notice on the 18th. The case of Turner v. Leech, 4 B. & A. 451, was referred to and distinguished. The learned judge thought that this was not sufficient notice of dishonour, and directed the jury to find for the defendant. MAULE, J.—Supposing plaintiff had given immediate notice to the defendant, thinking Abley not worth taking any trouble about, would the defendant have been damnified? He was not bound to have recourse to Abley, though he had a right to; he might have gone at once to the defendant.

Rule nisi granted.

SAME v. SAME.—Shee, Serjt. moved for a rule to shew cause why a verdict for the plaintiff should not be set aside, and a verdict for the defendant entered on the third issue: that issue being, that defendant did not endorse. The COURT, after hearing a short statement of the facts, said that they would consider it with the other motion.

Shee took another point as to a refusal to admit a certified copy of the schedule of an insolvent (Knight), but the Court at once dismissed it. Rule on the first point.

Wednesday, Nov. 24.

COLE v. STACEY.—M. Lloyd moved for a rule calling on the judge of the County Court of Wiltshire, holden at Bradford, to shew cause why he should not be prohibited from proceeding in the action, on the ground that in order to reduce the debt below 50*l.* an allowance by way of set-off for goods supplied was made in the particulars, contrary to the rule laid down in Berwick v. Copper, 7 C.B. 669. There was an affidavit shewing that no balance had been struck, and that the sum sought to be set-off had never been agreed upon. Rule nisi.

ALEXANDER v. ———.—In this case a verdict had been taken subject to a reference. The arbitrator had died. Channell, Serjt. had obtained a rule calling on the other side to shew cause why the verdict should not be set aside, and why the costs of the trial should not abide the event of the cause. Byles, Serjt. appeared to shew cause, but on the recommendation of the Court it was agreed that another arbitrator should be named, and that the costs of the reference before the deceased arbitrator should be paid by the parties.

Re JOHN HAWK.—Wordsworth moved for a rule to shew cause why John Hawk, an attorney's clerk, should not be discharged from his articles of clerkship with an attorney, who was stated to have absconded in insolvent circumstances, and to have left no one at his office to instruct the applicant. The attorney himself was desirous that the applicant should be discharged. The attorney's letters were to be sent to Copthorn-court, and the Court was asked to make it part of the rule that service of the rule should be made there. Rule nisi.

GAPP v. ELWES.—Lush shewed cause against a rule obtained by Pearson for setting aside an award on the ground that the arbitrator had awarded more than the amount of the verdict, or why the amount of the award should not be reduced to that sum. The action was for debt for 100*l.* Damages 20*l.* The associate, by mistake, took the verdict for 20*l.* debt, damages 1*s.* subject to the award of the arbitrator. Verdict to be entered as he should think proper. All matters in difference were referred to the arbitrator. The defendant attended the reference, and the arbitrator made his award, by which a verdict was to be entered for the plaintiff for 39*l.* 12*s.* damages 1*s.* to be paid by the defendant on the 1st of October, and the plaintiff was ordered on the same day to return a certain watch to the defendant. This was done at the defendant's own instance, and the defendant also paid half the arbitrator's costs. The COURT said that the defendant having voluntarily paid the money and received [illegible] watch under an award which he at the time must have known to be bad, could not now be heard to say that the award was bad, when he had acted upon it, and as it appeared himself insisted upon acting upon it.

Rule discharged with costs.

WORCESTER COLLEGE v. REEVE.—Willes moved for a rule for a prohibition to the judge of the County Court holden at Brackly, on the ground that the title to a tenement came in question. The action was for five years' rent. The defence was that the defendant's father had occupied the cottage forty years ago without paying any rent, and defendant himself had lived in it for twenty-three years without paying rent. Rule nisi.

FREDDON v. SAWYER.—In this case, which was an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister at Carlisle, judgment was given; but the judges differing, delivered their opinions seriatim.—MAULE, J. holding that the decision of the revising barrister was wrong; JERVIS, C.J. and TALFOURD and WILLIAMS, JJ. that it was correct.

To be reported.

HARRIS v. THIRKILL.—Needham mentioned this case decided on the 20th. The costs of a count in trover, which the Court had recommended to be struck out, were charged in the rule to the plaintiff. [The COURT.—We made no such order.] Also the costs of the rule were charged without having been mentioned by this Court. By the COURT.—The practice in this Court is, that the costs of the rule shall be costs of the day.

DALY v. HARDING.—Hemming moved for a rule to shew cause why a writ of trial should not be issued to the sheriff in this case. They had been before the Chief Baron, who had refused the rule, on the ground of an affidavit that the case had been tried in the County Court. This was now denied on affidavit. Rule nisi granted.

Tomlinson moved to enter up judgment in a case of ejectment under sec. 210 Common Law Procedure Act. The affidavit stated the demise and provision for re-entry, that search had been made, that no sufficient distress had been found, and that half a year's rent was due. The COURT granted the order.

DOE dem. EVANS v. EDWARDS and WIFE.—Grove moved to enter a suggestion on the record of the death of Edwards, the husband; but an affidavit being headed as above, the COURT held it wrong, and directed it to be amended.

Re PARKER v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.—Mr. Parker appeared in Court, and took an objection to the motion for the review of taxation; that there had been no allocatur by the Master, and, therefore, there could be no review. Channell, Serjt. endeavoured to shew that there had been an allocatur in substance; but the COURT discharged the rule.

DUNNETT v. HOWARD.—Couch moved to enlarge the time for giving an award in this case, the arbitrator having neglected to do so. He referred to Leslie v. Richardson, 6 C.B. 378; and Browne v. Collyer, 2 Lowndes, M. & P. 470. Honeyman consented. Rule granted.

LIDDELL v. NEWPORT, HEREFORD, and ABERGAVENNY RAILWAY COMPANY.—In this case a rule nisi had been obtained to shew cause why a verdict which had been given for the plaintiff on the second count of the declaration should not be set aside and a verdict entered for the defendants. Crowder, Q.C. Byles, Serjt. Barstow, and Shee, of the Equity Bar, now shewed cause. The COURT, without hearing the other side, made the rule absolute. This case will be reported in the next number.

TODD v. KELLAGE.

Governess—Domestic servant—General hiring.

Governesses are not within the rule applicable to menial or domestic servants, viz. that upon a general hiring the service may be determined by a month's warning or by payment of a month's wages. (a)

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, a governess, for that part of a year's salary alleged to be due up to the time of action brought from the defendant on an engagement entered into between the parties. The declaration was framed as upon a general hiring for a year. The facts were stated to be, that the plaintiff and defendant had agreed upon the 15th June, 1851, that the plaintiff should enter into the defendant's service as a governess, the salary to be 60*l.* a year, the plaintiff upon her cross-examination stating that she understood her engagement would continue up to the month of March following; the defendant, on the other hand, proving that the engagement with the plaintiff was monthly only, payable at or after the rate of 60*l.* a year. The sort of instruction by the plaintiff to the defendant's children not being quite approved of on the part of the defendant's family, and for that alone, the plaintiff was dismissed at a month's notice, receiving the month's salary. Subsequently this action was brought for the remainder as for a yearly hiring, and was tried at Guildford, before Jervis, C. J. when the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for 35*l.*

James, Q.C. now moved, pursuant to leave reserved, to set aside that verdict and enter a nonsuit, and also on the ground that the verdict was against the evidence. [PARKE, B.—Is not this a question of fact, whether there was a hiring for a year or any less period?] The declaration was drawn as upon a general hiring for a year, and it would be no doubt contended, on behalf of the plaintiff, that the plaintiff could not be dismissed at a month's notice with a month's wages; if a governess is to be considered as within the rule applicable to menial or domestic servants, the custom is that menial or domestic servants may be discharged at a month's notice or with a month's wages, so therefore may a governess. The defendant had no character with the plaintiff, and it would be hard indeed in principle if a family were to be obliged to retain a person as governess in their house, or pay such a person for a twelvemonth who may be found, after a very short interval, in no respect to suit the situation or expectation of the parties engaging her. The plaintiff lived in the house in this case, but it was due to her to say there was no fault whatever found with her, except as to the tuition. The verdict here was clearly against the evidence; in fact, there was no evidence of a hiring for a year, as the plaintiff herself stated that she understood the engagement was from June, when the arrangement, whatever it was, was entered into until the following month of March; and the defendant contradicted that, and said it was from month to month only. Nowlan v. Ablett, 2 C. M. & R. 54; and Beeston v. Collyer, 4 Bing. 309, were cited. Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 13.—POLLOCK, C.B. delivered judgment.—In this case, which was tried before Jervis, C. J. we think there ought to be no rule. We are of opinion that the question which was intended to be presented by the learned judge himself was, whether the agreement with a governess was within the meaning of the rule as to menial or domestic servants, and liable to be discharged at a month's notice, with a month's wages. We are of opinion that a governess is not within the meaning of the rule, or subject to the terms to be placed on "menial or domestic servants." The position in which a governess is placed, the station she occupies in the family, usually speaking, a person of respectable means and situation in society, is a very different situation from that of a menial or domestic servant. Looking, however, to the point reserved, as far as it is a matter of law, we are of opinion that a governess is not within the rule as to menial and domestic servants. Treating the application as a verdict against evidence, the learned judge before whom the case was tried is not dissatisfied with the verdict, and we, who have read through the notes he has furnished to us, are not dissatisfied with it; therefore there will be no rule. Rule refused.

(a) See ante, p. 58.—The Court intimated that would see Mr. Justice Maule, and consider the question before granting the rule.

GODDLIFFE v. NEAVES.

Common Law Procedure Act—Notice of declaration being filed—Irregularity.

Where the plaintiff had entered an appearance, see stat. before the Common Law Procedure Act came into operation, and afterwards filed a declaration, endorsed with a notice to plead within eight days, and in default signed judgment without serving any notice on the defendant, the Court set aside the judgment, and all subsequent proceedings, for irregularity.

T. Jones shewed cause against a rule, calling on the plaintiff to shew cause why the judgment signed by him, and all subsequent proceedings, should not be set aside, and why the sum of 21*l.* 12*s.* 2*d.* paid by the defendant to the Sheriff of Middlesex in respect of a levy made by him on the defendant's goods under a fi. fa. issued by the plaintiff, should not be repaid to the defendant, together with the costs of this application. The writ was served on the 30th of September, and an appearance entered sec stat. on the 8th of October. The declaration was filed on the 27th of October, and judgment signed on the 5th of November. The declaration was endorsed with the usual notice to plead in eight days, and the question was whether there should have been any further notice than that endorsed on the declaration. The plaintiff in this case has complied with all that is required by the 62nd section of the Common Law Procedure Act; that section says, that "no rule to plead or demand of plea shall be necessary, and the notice to plead endorsed on the declaration, or delivered separately, shall be sufficient." It is said on the other side, that the case comes within the provisions of the 28th section, but that section the plaintiff has also complied with. That section provides for judgment for nonappearance, where the writ is not endorsed specially, which is the case here; by it the plaintiff on nonappearance may, on filing an affidavit of personal service of the writ, or a judge's order for leave to proceed under the provisions of that Act, and a copy of the writ of summons, file a declaration endorsed with a notice to plead in eight days, and sign judgment by default at the expiration of the time so endorsed; and the only question therefore is, whether the copy writ of summons is to be filed when there is an affidavit of service, or only when there is an order of a judge. Here no copy was filed with the affidavit of service, and it is true, if that is necessary, the plaintiff is irregular, but no purpose is served by filing a copy of the writ when the writ has reached the defendant; but when a judge's order is obtained there is good reason why a copy of the writ should be filed. [PARKE, B.—We must consider the proceedings after an appearance, not in the case of a non-appearance; here there has been a perfectly good appearance under the old law. J. Brown.—I contend, on behalf of the defendant, that they ought to have given us notice of having filed this declaration, otherwise we have no notice.] If, under the old law the plaintiff gave notice to plead, demand of plea, and rule to plead, that was all that was necessary, and judgment would be perfectly regular without any further notice of having filed the declaration, except inasmuch as the notice to plead was also a notice of the declaration having been filed. [PARKE, B.—I think the 28th section of the new Act only applies to future cases when there is no appearance, and that the 62nd only applies to cases when the notice mentioned in the 28th section has been given: look at the inconvenience,—the defendant in this case would never get any notice.] Under this Act the plaintiff may proceed to judgment without an appearance, à fortiori he may when, as in this case, an appearance has been entered. [ALDERSON, B.—But when he does appear, he is to have notice by the service of the proceedings, and you ought to give him something substantially the same as if he had appeared, for in this case he is in court. [PARKE, B.—I think you will find that this Act does not provide for appearance according to the old law, and therefore it seems to me that you should have proceeded without reference to this Act.] The policy of this Act is to give plaintiffs further facilities to obtain their rights; and the meaning of it is, that when the defendant does not come into court, and by so doing facilitate the proceedings against him, the plaintiff shall have a more speedy and simple means of proceeding.

P. Brown, contrà, was not called on.

POLLOCK, C.B.—We are of opinion that this rule should be absolute. It appears to me that the new Act does not apply to the state of things as presented by this case: what should have been done is another question, and I should be unwilling to give any opinion unless the question was raised; as it is, I think we must deal with this case as if the Act had not passed.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion; and I think this new Act does not apply. The 26th section abolishes appearance according to the provisions of the 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, and 2 Wm. 4, c. 39, "except so far as may be necessary to support proceedings heretofore taken;" but this being a proceeding heretofore taken it is valid, and there is a good and regular appearance, but the sections of the statute cited apply to where there has been no notice. The effect would be that the defendant in this case would be without notice; I think the judgment is, therefore, irregular.

ALDERSON, B.—It is clear that either the defendant has appeared or he has not; well then, he has not appeared himself, but by Act of Parliament the plaintiff has placed him in the same position as if he had. Then, what is there in this new Act to say he shall be treated as if he had not appeared? The plaintiff's course, therefore, is clearly irregular,—whether he ought to have proceeded according to the old or new law, I give no opinion; he clearly ought to have brought himself within one or the other.

TAYLOR v. ROGERS.

Common Law Procedure Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 17—Substitute for distringas to compel appearance—Affidavit.

Hodgson moved for leave to proceed as if the service of the writ had been effected. The affidavit stated that various calls had been made, and that the answers were that defendant was out of town, and his return uncertain. That on the 21st October a copy of the writ of summons was left with defendant's wife at his dwelling-house, and that on the 25th of the same month another copy was left with the servant. That on the 3rd November the person who left the copies called and asked the servant if she had given the defendant the copy, and she replied that she had; and that subsequently the party applied at the house and saw the servant again, who said that her master had left town on the Wednesday previous.

The COURT thought this sufficient to shew that the writ had come to the knowledge of the defendant, and granted the application. Granted.

YOUNG and OTHERS, assignees, v. WAUD.

Bankruptcy—Assignment of goods to defeat creditors.

A trader sold goods, and being unable to get cash for them, took bills, which he procured to be discounted, giving a mortgage upon his machinery to secure the amount; the mortgage was upon not half of the trader's effects:

Held, to be no evidence to go to a jury that the mortgage, under the circumstances, was an act of bankruptcy.

This was an action of trover brought by the plaintiffs as assignees of one Normanton, a bankrupt, to recover from the defendant the value of certain machinery and other property, assigned to him by the bankrupt before his bankruptcy, for securing a debt due from the bankrupt to the defendant, the plaintiffs contending that the assignment in question was itself an act of bankruptcy, and that the value of the goods belonged to them as such assignees. The cause was tried at York before Campbell, C.J. when a verdict was found for the plaintiffs for 756*l.* 17s. 9d. with liberty to the defendant to move to enter a verdict for him. It appeared that Normanton, the bankrupt, was a manufacturer in Bradford, and having supplied certain goods to one Brookes, whose bills he took in payment, and being in want of ready money to carry on his trade, he discounted the bills with the defendant at twenty-five per cent. and gave him an assignment dated 2nd of July, 1851, by way of mortgage of his machinery and implements of manfacture, as a collateral security, with power to defendant, in default of payment of the bills, to sell and dispose of all the property so assigned. At this time the bankrupt, besides the machinery, &c. thereby assigned, was possessed of other property, about equal in value to that so mortgaged. Lord Campbell directed the jury, that as the effect of the deed was that the defendant might, in case default was made in payment at the time specified, seize the property assigned and put a stop to the trade of the bankrupt, the deed was an act of bankruptcy, and the property assigned thereby vested in his assignees by relation, his bankruptcy having subsequently occurred. A rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the plaintiff's verdict and enter it for the defendant, or for a new trial,—

Hugh Hill, Q.C. (Hall and West with him), shewed cause.—The verdict in this case was warranted by the evidence. The question now is, whether there was any evidence of an act of bankruptcy, and evidence to go to the jury. The deed of assignment by the bankrupt to the defendant was sufficient. There was no one provision in that deed binding him to advance 1s.; and the deed was made in secret. The 67th section of the Bankrupt Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106) provides, that if any trader liable to become bankrupt shall make, or cause to be made, either within this realm or elsewhere, any fraudulent grant or conveyance of any of his lands, tenements, goods, or chattels, or make, or cause to be made, any fraudulent gift, delivery, or transfer of any of his goods or chattels, every such trader doing, suffering, procuring, executing, permitting, making, or causing to be made, any of the acts, deeds, or matters aforesaid, with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, shall be deemed to have thereby committed an act of bankruptcy. Graham and Others v. Chapman, 21 L.J. 173, C.P. where all the previous authorities are collected, and was a considered judgment of that Court, is in the plaintiff's favour; as also Wedge v. Newlyn, 4 B. & Adol. 831, where it was held that a trader conveying away property to such an extent as will prevent him from continuing his business, and render him insolvent, commits an act of bankruptcy (those who rely upon such act of bankruptcy, on a trial, shewing that it was calculated to have the alleged effect, by evidence of the general state of the party's affairs at the time of such conveyance); and it is not sufficient to prove that the trader, under pecuniary pressure, disposed of some article essential to the carrying on of his business; as that a miller, by bill of sale, transferred his waggon and horses to a creditor who had arrested him. Here the seizure of the machinery, &c. so assigned by the bankrupt to the defendant, would have stopped his trade, and prevented him from continuing his business; and the jury so found.

Watson, Q.C. (Tomlinson and Hamerton with him), contrà.—Even admitting that the deed in question might have had the effect of preventing the bankrupt from continuing his business, yet that which was assigned was scarcely half of his property. He had as much again in value as that which was mortgaged; so that he did not thereby become insolvent, nor was the deed made with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, but on the contrary; and although his trade might be put an end to, in the event specified, for a short period, yet he might have been enabled to resume and carry it on again out of his other resources, and meet all demands upon him. In the case relied upon, Graham and Others v. Chapman, the whole appeared to have been assigned; here it was about one-half only, and with no intent to defeat creditors; the deed was made to secure payment of the bills then running, and there was no evidence of any act of bankruptcy to be left to the jury. There are two distinct classes of cases in reference to acts of bankruptcy: 1st, where there is an assignment of the whole, with a mere colourable exception only of part; and 2nd, an assignment of part with an intention to delay or to defeat creditors. Neither of these cases occurred here. Gibbord v. Phillips, 7 B. & C. 534, was cited.

Pollock, C.B.—The question before us is, whether the verdict found for the plaintiff should be set aside and entered for the defendant instead. On reference to the notes, it is "verdict for the plaintiff for 756*l.* 17s. 9d. with liberty reserved to the defendant to enter it for him, if the Court should think there was no evidence to go to the jury of any act of bankruptcy." If the learned judge had thought there was no evidence to go to the jury, he would have directed a nonsuit; but the plaintiff got the verdict, and we think he ought not to be in a worse position now than if he had been nonsuited at the trial. The deed assigned, by way of mortgage, about half the assignor's personal property, to secure the sums that would become due upon bills then running, and the deed was to become absolute three days after demand of the amount due thereon. We all think this would not amount to an act of bankruptcy. The question put to the jury appears to have been whether, if the deed had been put in force, it would have prevented the business going on. They determined that it would; and it was then held to be an act of bankruptcy. I think this is not correct in point of law, to say, under the circumstances, that it was an act of bankruptcy; nor, from the evidence before us, does there appear to be any other proved or shewn. I think the rule ought to be absolute to set aside the plaintiff's verdict, and enter a nonsuit.

Parke, B.—I am of the same opinion. We are to take it that the property assigned by the bankrupt, under the deed in question, did not constitute above one-half of his effects, and I agree with Lord Campbell as to his construction of the deed. It is to secure future advances, when a trader therefore assigns over to a creditor less than half of his property, does that constitute it an act of bankruptcy? I am clearly of opinion there is no case to be found that goes to that extent in the absence of all fraudulent intent. Neither Wedge v. Newlyn, nor any other of the cases, decide it to be so. It is not by disabling a trader from carrying on his business for a short time that creates an act of bankruptcy; and a conveyance of less than one-half of his effects without any fraudulent intent is not, in my opinion, an act of bankruptcy. The question whether such a state of things would or would not produce insolvency, is not a question which requires to be left to a jury. A fraudulent transfer of property by a trader, with the intent to delay or defeat his creditors, or the whole, with a mere colourable exception, is an act of bankruptcy. Graham v. Chapman is one of the last description (the learned judge stated that case); but this is not the present case, or anything like it; and I think a nonsuit ought to be entered.

Alderson, B.—I am of the same opinion. The bankrupt in this case sold his goods to Brookes, and wished to have cash for them, but not being able to get it, took bills; the bankrupt then puts his name on the bills, and gets them discounted, whereupon this mortgage of the machinery was then given as a further security, for the satisfaction of the person who discounted the bills. The only question, therefore, is, whether such a security, so given, being for less than half of the mortgagor's effects, amounts to an act of bankruptcy; and I think it does not.

Platt, B.—I agree with the observations of my brother Alderson as to the deed. If the bankrupt had had any distrust in Brookes, he would not probably have given the mortgage security; but he evidently expected Brookes would pay the bills when due. If this be so, how can it be said that he really intended to defeat or delay his creditors? or how is it an act of bankruptcy? He had it appears property to the amount of 3,200*l.* and pledged 1,500*l.* worth of his machinery, to remain as a security for the payment of these bills. Had it been an assignment of his whole property, with a colourable exception, which in fact would be no exception, the case may have been different; but this is not so here: this was rather to meet, as it seems to me, the demand of his creditors.

Rule absolute to enter a nonsuit.

Patent Law Amendment Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 83) —Sufficiency of particulars required to be delivered with pleas.

Webster moved in this case for a rule to shew cause why the particulars of objections required by the Patent Law Amendment Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 41,* should not be set aside or amended. That section required, in actions for infringement of letters patent, certain particulars to be delivered, and no evidence is to be allowed of matters not mentioned therein. There are a great number of pleas here, and the Court will have now to determine what degree of particularity is necessary under the Act before mentioned. To the fourth and fifth no objection is offered, as those appear to be a compliance with the object of the statute; but all the others are too vague and indefinite. [Platt, B.—By setting aside these particulars, you will in fact set aside the pleas delivered.] Yes, that would be the effect. [Pollock, C. B.—You may take a rule to shew cause why the particulars you object to may not be amended.]

Crowhurst and Ux. v. Laverach.

Agreement—Bastard child—Consideration.

A. the father of an illegitimate child, agreed in writing to pay to her 45*l. by certain instalments. The first instalment was paid; but the mother having obtained an affiliation order from the justices, the future payments were not made:*

Held, that no action would lie on the agreement, there being no sufficient consideration.

Tried at York, before Lord Campbell, C.J. when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff. The first count of the declaration was for meat, drink, washing, and lodging supplied by the female plaintiff, before her marriage, to a female child; and the second count was for meat, drink, washing, and lodging supplied by the plaintiffs to the said child, after their marriage. The defendant pleaded non assumpsit and payment; and the jury had assessed the damages at 8*l.* 10s. on the first count, and 16*l.* 10s. on the second count.

It appeared at the trial that, in 1846, the female plaintiff, then being unmarried, gave birth to an illegitimate child, and the defendant, who was the father, entered into a written agreement with her on the 14th of March, 1846, by which he undertook to pay her 45*l.* in the following sums: 12*l.* to be paid down, and the residue in three equal yearly instalments. The 12*l.* were paid down; but the female plaintiff, hearing that the defendant had got possession of the agreement, and had refused to give it up, applied in December of the same year to the magistrates for an order of affiliation, which was duly made, and the defendant was ordered to pay 2s. 6d. per week. With this order the defendant complied till the mother of the child married, when he discontinued the weekly payment; and this action was commenced by the mother and her husband. At the trial the agreement was put in; and it was objected by the defendant that it was not binding, either because no consideration was expressed on the face of it, or, if there was any, that which did appear was insufficient in law. His lordship overruled the objection, and the case went to the jury on the question, whether the mother had not abandoned the agreement when she resorted to the magistrates for an order.

A rule having been obtained for a new trial, on the ground of misdirection or in arrest of judgment on the second count,

Pearce now shewed cause, and contended that the agreement bore on its face, in connection with the admitted facts, a sufficient consideration; and also, that if it did not, it did not require any, as it need not necessarily have exceeded a year before it was carried into completion, for the death of the child might have put an end to it altogether. Next, as to the second count, he argued that the mother was properly joined with the husband, as she was the meritorious cause of action, and might be joined or not, as the husband chose. He cited Bull, N. P. 136; Com. Dig. tit. Baron and Femme, X.; 1 Chit. on Plead. 705, and contended that even if this were a defect, it was aided by the verdict. (Ashton's Entries, 61; Prance v. White, 1 M. & G. 731.) The payments under the order were deducted by the jury from the damages given on the first count.

Watson, in support, contended that the agreement required that a consideration should be expressed on the face of it; and that the consideration which was expressed was insufficient in law. If there was any consideration, it was, that the mother should support the child. Now, this she was bound to do by the new Poor Law Act (4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 71; and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, ss. 1, 2); so that that was not a sufficient consideration for the agreement of the defendant to pay this money. But the real consideration was, doubtless, the undertaking of the mother not to affiliate her child on the defendant; and that was not expressed on the face of the agreement. Now, if the Court should think that the agreement imported that consideration, then it was clear that the Chief Justice ought to have nonsuited the plaintiffs, for the mother had broken the agreement.

* The 41th section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, enacts that "In any action in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, at Westminster or in Dublin, for the infringment of letters patent, the plaintiff shall deliver with his declaration particulars of the breaches complained of in the said action, and the defendant on pleading thereto, shall deliver with his pleas, and the prosecutor in any proceedings by scire facias to repeal letters patent shall deliver with his declaration particulars of any objections on which he means to rely at the trial, in support of the pleas in the said action, or of the suggestions of the said declarations in the proceedings by scire facias respectively, and at the trial of such action or proceeding by scire facias, no evidence shall be allowed to be given in support of any alleged infringment, or of any objection impeaching the validity of such letters patent, which shall not be contained in the particulars delivered as aforesaid: Provided always, that the place or places at or in which and in what manner the invention is alleged to have been used or published prior to the date of the letters patent, shall be stated in such particulars: Provided also, that it shall and may be lawful for any judge at chambers to allow such plaintiff, or defendant, or prosecutor respectively, to amend the particulars delivered as aforesaid, upon such terms as to such judge shall seem fit: Provided also, that at the trial of any proceeding by scire facias to repeal letters patent, the defendant shall be entitled to begin and to give evidence in support of such letters patent; and in case evidence shall be adduced on the part of the prosecutor, impeaching the validity of such letters patent, the defendant shall be entitled to the reply."

When once she applied for an affiliation order, there was an end of the agreement, and this verdict could not be sustained.

PARKE, B.—According to the literal construction of this agreement, the female plaintiff is only to maintain the child; and in that case there is no consideration, as she is bound by law to do that. Then if it be said that she was also to abstain from affiliating the child, then, although that would be a good consideration, still she has not adhered to that condition, and the defendant is therefore entitled to a rule absolute for a new trial. But probably the justice of the case will be best met by the plaintiffs consenting to enter a stet processus; for although they have got a verdict this time, it is not likely they will be so fortunate again.

Rule absolute, unless a stet processus is entered in a month.

ASH v. DAWNAY.

Sheriff—Remaining in possession an unreasonable time—Trespass.

A sheriff taking possession under a writ of fi. fa. and remaining in possession an unreasonable time, is liable to an action of trespass.

This was an action of trespass for breaking and entering the dwelling-house of the plaintiff, and staying therein, &c. The defendant pleaded a justification for entering, &c. as sheriff under a writ of fi. fa. to him directed, issued out of the Court of Ex. &c. The plaintiff new assigned that the trespass complained of was other and different to that justified, for that (in substance) after the alleged seizure, he remained in possession more than a reasonable time in that behalf requisite or necessary. Plea to the new assignment, justifying under the warrant, and that the fi. fa. &c. was running all the time. The cause was tried before Lord Campbell, at the last assizes at York, when a verdict was returned for the plaintiff, and a rule nisi having been obtained to arrest the judgment,

Watson, Q.C. (Kemplay with him), shewed cause. The jury have found the fact that the sheriff did remain in possession for a longer period than was reasonable. The question, then, is, whether that is not a trespass. Winterbourne v. Morgan, 11 East, 395, is a leading case upon the subject. There it was held that where a person entered under a warrant of distress for rent in arrear, continued in possession of the goods upon the premises for fifteen days, during the last four of which he was removing the goods, which were afterwards sold under the distress, he was at any rate liable in trespass, quare clausum fregit, for continuing on the premises and disturbing the plaintiff in the possession of his house after the time allowed by law. Playfair v. Musgrave, 14 M. & W. 239, is directly in point. That was an action of trespass against the sheriff for breaking and entering the plaintiff's dwelling-house. Plea, that the defendant entered under a fi. fa. and seized and took in execution a lease of the plaintiff's of the said dwelling-house under which the plaintiff held and was possessed of the same, and before the return of the writ sold the term, and continued in possession of the house for the further execution of the writ. The plaintiff new assigned that the defendant continued in possession an unreasonable time after he had seized and taken in execution and sold the lease. To this new assignment the defendant pleaded that the dwelling-house in the new assignment mentioned was not, at the time of the committing of the trespass newly assigned, the dwelling-house of the plaintiff. At the trial it appeared that the sheriff had sold the lease by auction, but that no assignment had been executed by him to the vendee. It was held that the seizure did not vest the term in the sheriff, but that it remained in the debtor until the sheriff executed an assignment to the purchaser, and that whether the word "sold" imported an actual assignment or not the sheriff could not justify remaining an unreasonable time in the house, and therefore that the plaintiff was entitled to have the verdict entered for him on the plea to the new assignment. (Peppercorn v. Hofman, 9 M. & W. 618; Aldred v. Constable, 6 Q. B. 370; Cro. Chas. 196; Shorland v. Govett, 5 B. & C. 485; Barker v. St. Quintin, 14 M. & W. 441; and Ladd v. Thomas, 12 A. & E. 117, were also cited.)

Hugh Hill, Q.C. (Crowe with him) in support of the rule. The plea in this case is an answer to the action. The sheriff cannot be a trespasser in a case like this, where he justifies the original entry under a writ of fi. fa.; unless he does something inconsistent with the writ, the sheriff ought not to have the responsibility thrown upon him of determining on the moment, as it may be, whether he has remained too long or not. [PARKE, B.—He must take care of himself and see that he does not exceed a reasonable time.] The original taking was lawful, as is admitted. The question is, whether the mere continuing in possession a longer time than he ought or is reasonable, trespass can be maintained. [PARKE, B. It is a direct wrong without any justification.] This case is analogous to those where a sheriff arrests a party, whilst the party arrested is privileged from arrest; the sheriff, in such a case, is not liable to an action, or it may be likened to that of an excessive distress. (Lyne v. Moody, 2 Strange, 851; 5 Taunt. 198; Whitworth v. ———, 1 M. & Rob. 531; Yearsley v. Heane, 14 M. & W. 322; Ewart v. Jones, ibid. 774; 2 Doug. 677, were referred to.)

POLLOCK, C.B.—I am of opinion this rule should be discharged. The case has undergone much discussion, but the only point which it is necessary for the Court to determine has been already decided by this Court in the case of Playfair v. Musgrove, reported in 14 M. & W. 239. If that case had been called to our attention when this rule was moved for I do not think we should have granted it. That case appears to me to decide this.

PARKE, B.—I am of the same opinion. The writ of fi. fa. authorises the sheriff to go into possession, and stay a reasonable time for the purposes required to discharge the duty devolving upon him; if he stays longer than a reasonable time for that purpose (and the jury have found that the defendant in this case did), the writ does not justify his doing so, and he is afterwards a trespasser. If sheriffs act fairly and promptly, perhaps juries would not say that they did remain an unreasonable time. Davis v. Copper, in 10 B. & C. 28, was a case where it was held trespass would lie against a magistrate for committing a party, charged with felony, for re-examination for an unreasonable time, but without any improper motive; and the warrant of commitment for an unreasonable time, if not wholly void, was clearly so as to the excess. The analogy of this case to those for excessive distress does not exist, as those actions are upon the statute. On principle the present case is a very clear one, and the sheriff is liable in trespass for remaining in possession longer than a reasonable time. I think, therefore, this rule should be discharged.

ALDERSON, B.—I am of the same opinion.

PLATT, B.—Under a fi. fa. a sheriff is justified in entering and taking possession, but not of remaining there longer than is reasonable to discharge the duty cast upon him. Now what are the pleadings here? [The learned judge then stated them and their effect.] The jury having found by their verdict that the defendant did remain in the plaintiff's house an unreasonable time, can any one doubt that the sheriff was a wrong-doer and a trespasser?

Rule discharged.

LUMLEY v. GYE.

Common Law Procedure Act.

Leave to demur and plead several matters under sec. 80 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76.

In this case a rule nisi had been obtained for leave to plead and demur together, under the 80th section of the Common Law Procedure Act. (See 20 Law T. Rep. 71—83.)

Hoggins (with him Bayley) now shewed cause.—The declaration alleged, that after the plaintiff had entered into a contract with Johanna Wagner to sing and perform for three months at Her Majesty's Theatre, the defendant wrongfully, with notice of the premises, entered into another contract with the said Johanna Wagner to perform and sing during two of the said three months for which she had so contracted with the plaintiff, at the Royal Italian Opera, by which the said Johanna Wagner was prevented from performing, and did not perform, her said contract with the plaintiff; and that he, the defendant, afterwards aided and enticed the said Johanna Wagner not to sing at the plaintiff's house, though he, the plaintiff, was willing that she should do so; and that the defendant further undertook to hold the said Johanna Wagner harmless for such her breach of contract; whereby the plaintiff lost her services, to the plaintiff's damage of 30,000*l.* To this the defendant proposed to demur, and also to plead, first, not guilty; secondly, a traverse of the plaintiff's contract being in force when the defendant's contract was made; thirdly, a traverse of the defendant's knowledge that the plaintiff's contract was then in force; and fourthly, a traverse of the allegation that the said J. Wagner was hindered from singing for the plaintiff by the acts of the defendant. It was now submitted that the defendant ought not to be allowed to take the course proposed by this rule. It was contended that the question of the existence and validity of the plaintiff's contract with Miss Wagner had been discussed in the proceedings in Chancery, where it was finally decided in favour of the plaintiff, and a decree pronounced, to which the defendant submitted. The traverses to be raised by these pleas were substantially gone into on that occasion, and the defendant ought not now to be allowed to dispute them again. [PLATT, B.—Can the decree of a Court of Equity deprive the defendant of his right to take the opinion of a jury on the fact, or of a Court of Error?] The defendant elected to be bound by that decision, as appears by the decree itself, which establishes the validity of the plaintiff's contract. [POLLOCK, C.B.—That is, it proceeds on that assumption; but we may go further, and assume an appeal to the House of Lords, and judgment thereon for the plaintiff; and still that would not affect the defendant's right to traverse the allegations in this declaration, and to demur to it. PARKE, B.—This is an action for damages for a bygone time: the defendant cannot be prevented by that decree from disputing this action.] The action is double. We say he wrongfully entered into the contract, and that he afterwards, that is, after the decree affirming our contract and annulling his, aided and enticed the said Joahanna Wagner not to sing at our house. [PARKE, B.—Then it is an action in part for disobeying the injunction: that is no reason for refusing the rule as far as the demurrer goes. POLLOCK, C.B.—I am not sure whether this is not the very sort of case which the recent Act was meant to meet.] Then as to the right of the defendant to plead as proposed concurrently with his demurrer. [PLATT, B.—Does the defendant pledge himself to the truth of this denial in those pleas?] As to the plea of not guilty, the affidavit of the defendant does not venture to swear that that plea is true, but says he can so swear, because he is advised that it is uncertain how much of the declaration is put in issue by it, and adds that he can swear he was not guilty of having wronged the plaintiff or any one in his negotiation with Miss Wagner. Then, as to the second plea, he swears he did not know the plaintiff's contract was in force when he entered into his; but we swear that when we entered into our contract, in November, we informed him of it, and that he afterwards made his contract with Miss Wagner in April. [PARKE, B.—If that be so, you will have a good answer to that plea, no doubt; but the plea is bad, as professing to answer the whole declaration, while it only, in fact, answers part. MARTIN, B.—It is quite new practice to me to discuss on such a rule the goodness in law of the proposed pleas.] At all events, the fourth plea ought to be rejected, as being the general issue over again.

Creasy (with him Willes) was called on to support this plea, and said that it was necessary, because the effect of the plea of the general issue was not clear, and the defendant did not wish to be made answerable for the conduct of Miss Wagner; and yet he might be told, if he sought at the trial to prove that she of her own accord refused to perform her contract with the plaintiff, because, as she had already sworn, she believed he had not paid his engagements of the last season, the plaintiff might turn round and say that defence did not arise under the plea of not guilty. He would however consent to the rejection of that fourth plea, on the understanding that the plaintiff would not raise any such objection at the trial. [PARKE, B.—You propose to cover the allegation that you indemnified Miss Wagner by your plea of not guilty. Well, I think the plea of not guilty covers the fourth plea also. POLLOCK, C.B.—Mr. Hoggins, don't you think you had better consent to the proposal of the defendant? We are all agreed, I believe, that the rule must be made absolute. PARKE, B.—All the four pleas will be allowed, unless the plaintiff will consent to Mr. Creasy's proposal. I think the defendant has a right to put on the record all the pleas. POLLOCK, C.B.—The object of the new Act being to put an end to unnecessary expense, the demurrer ought to be argued before the pleas are delivered.]

Hoggins suggested, that though the demurrer might be argued early next Term, he should not be prepared to go to trial at the sittings after, unless the pleas were delivered at once.

PARKE, B.—If you are beaten on the demurrer, the pleas cannot be tried, and need not be delivered, and so the costs of joining issue would be saved.

Rule absolute.

NOTE.—We beg to call the attention of our readers to an omission that occurred in our last number. In the report of the case of Pinhorn v. Souster, p. 82, Mr. Macnamara, in citing Mr. Wise's book on the Common Law Procedure Act, also referred to p. 87 of that work, in which the author states that the Act does not apply to cases in which a special demurrer has been delivered, and there has been a joinder on such demurrer prior to the 24th October, 1852, and suggests that there may be a power of amendment under the 222nd section.

Rule absolute; costs to abide the event.

DICKENSON v. ROOKE.—Kingdon moved, on behalf of the defendant, that the matter may be referred back to the arbitrator to be reconsidered, on the ground that the arbitrator proceeded in such a way that a third party, named Tanner, who could have shewn matter very material to be considered, had not sufficient time to instruct counsel properly to appear before him. Rule nisi.

CROWHURST and WIFE v. LAVERACK.
Part heard, and adjourned.

Monday, Nov. 23.

BATES v. ROTHERHAM.—J. Wilde moved for a rule to shew cause why an order of Martin, B. should not be rescinded. The action was on a marine policy of insurance, and the defendants had not yet pleaded. They had obtained the usual order for the production of all books, papers, and documents, and Martin, B. had now granted another order for the production of the log-book. The vessel was under American colours, and, as was customary in such cases, the log-book was left with the consul at the port into which the vessel put. The log had been written for, but it could not possibly arrive for some time, and in the mean time the cause was at a standstill. Rule nisi granted.

JONES v. MOSS.—Joyce moved to make an order of Platt, B. a rule of Court; Granted.

CROWHURST v. LAVERACK. Rule absolute.

MULHALL v. NEVILLE. Cur. adv. vult.

STRADMAN v. KNIGHT.—Crowder, Q.C. (G. Denman with him) shewed cause; Prendergast, Q.C. (Thomas, Serjt. with him) contrà.

Rule absolute, with costs; the bill of costs to be referred to the Master to be retaxed, with liberty to take evidence, and report to the Court.

WATSON v. WARD. Part heard.

PRICE v. HEWITT.—Field moved for leave to plead and demur. The declaration stated that the defendant requested the plaintiff to lend and advance him a certain sum of money, and falsely and fraudulently represented that he was of full age, &c. Parke, B.—Take your rule, only let the demurrer be argued first. Rule nisi granted.

GOLDSMID v. MUSPRATT.—Clousby shewed cause against a rule obtained that the Master review his taxation of the plaintiff's costs, referring to Dax's Book of Practice, 298. (Peppercorn v. Johnson.) Milward, contrà.

Referred back to the Master.

WATSON v. WARD. Cur. adv. vult.

ROBINSON and OTHERS v. DUGARD.—Tried at Durham, before Wightman, J. and a rule nisi having been obtained to set aside the plaintiff's verdict on the issue raised on the 5th plea, and to enter the verdict therein for the defendant, Knowles Q.C. and D. Seymour, shewed cause.—The plaintiffs were timber merchants; the defendant was a clergyman; and as one Matheson was building a parsonage-house for the defendant, the plaintiffs declined to continue supplying timber to Matheson without a guarantee for payment was given to them by the defendant; accordingly, a guarantee was given by the defendant to pay the plaintiffs out of moneys due to Matheson, upon certain terms and conditions in the guarantee specified, the proper construction of which was now to be determined by the Court. Hamilton v. Spottiswood, 4 Ex. 200, was cited on behalf of the plaintiffs. Watson, Q.C. and Jos. Addison, in support of the rule, referred to 9 Bing. 372.

Rule absolute.

TANNER v. WOOLMER and OTHERS.—Sir A. Cockburn moved to set aside a nonsuit and enter a verdict for 300*l.* pursuant to leave reserved by Martin, B. on the trial of this cause on the 19th inst. It appeared that the plaintiff, who was liable jointly with the defendants, in respect of a certain abortive railway scheme, paid to them 225*l.* to be entirely free from the concern, and took from them an indemnity. Subsequently, proceedings were taken by a claimant to bring the company within the operation of the Winding-up Act, and much litigation ensued, which resulted in an order that each of the managing directors, of whom the plaintiff was one, should pay 496*l.* The original debts sought to be wound up were 1,700*l.* but the costs of the litigation amounted to 3,019*l.* Under these circumstances, this action was brought, and 100*l.* being paid into court, Martin, B. nonsuited the plaintiff, it being his opinion that the indemnity did not provide against these costs, but merely against existing debts and claims on the directors, as set forth in two schedules attached to the indemnity. It was now contended that this ruling was erroneous, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a full and perfect indemnity at the hands of the defendants from these costs, to which he had not been a party.

Rule nisi granted.

BRANDEN v. SEWELL.—James, Q.C. moved for a rule to review the taxation of costs herein. To stand over.

SCOTTSHAUBE v. THE SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY. Cur. adv. vult.

STARKE v. MORRISON.—Hawkins moved to set aside the award herein. Rule nisi granted.

WILEY v. VARNISH.—Lush moved for a rule to inspect and take copies of certain books in the possession of the defendant. Rule nisi granted.

Re ROBINSON AND ANOTHER.

Highways—Surveyors of—Accounts—Lapse of time.

The surveyors of highways went out of office in March 1850, having, as it was alleged, a balance in their hands, which they should have paid over to their successors. Subsequently an information was laid against them under the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50, s. 42, which the justices dismissed, and afterwards two separate actions were brought in the County Court to recover such balance, in each of which cases the plaintiff was nonsuited. In the present Term (Michaelmas 1852) a rule was moved for a mandamus commanding them to pass their accounts and pay over the balance:

Held, that under the circumstances, and after so long a lapse of time, the Court would not interfere.

Pashley, Q.C. moved for a rule calling upon Thomas Robinson and William Peel to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue commanding them to pass their accounts as surveyors of the highways of the parish of Bushey, in the county of Hertford, and to pay over the balance of money in their hands as such surveyors, to their successors in office.

It appeared that the above parties served the office of surveyors from the 25th of March, 1849, to the 25th of March, 1850, during which time they received as such surveyors a sum of 442*l.* 9s. 6d. the proceeds of some gravel-pits, 300*l.* of which they had duly accounted for. On going out of office in March 1850, they rendered no detailed account of the balance, and after several vestry meetings upon the subject, an information before justices was laid against them under section 42 of the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 50 (the General Highway Act). At the hearing, the justices declined to make any order. In March 1851 an action was brought in the County Court against the surveyors for the amount claimed, when the plaintiff was nonsuited. In March 1852 another action was brought in the County Court and tried by a jury, when the plaintiff obtained a verdict, with leave reserved to the defendants to move to enter a nonsuit; and upon motion for that purpose, a nonsuit was entered, on the ground that the remedy against the defendants was under section 103 of the above Act.

CROMPTON, J.—Here is a delay of more than two years. I do not say that an action for money had and received may not be supported; but can you at this period ask this Court to interfere by mandamus? You go before the justices, you bring two actions, and then having failed in each instance, you come for the assistance of this court. I think this delay has not been sufficiently accounted for. You should have adopted this course immediately upon their going out of office. Rule refused.

Coroner's inquisition—Service of rule for certiorari—Next of kin.

In this case, which was a rule to bring up a coroner's inquisition, in order that it may be quashed (reported suprà, p. 54),

Huddleston now moved to make the rule absolute, upon an affidavit of service, which stated that a copy of the rule had been formally served upon the coroner and one Herbert, who was bound over to prosecute; and that diligent inquiries had been made in the neighbourhood as to the next of kin of the deceased, and that the result of such was that he had left none; that his master had informed deponent, that the deceased had been many years in his employment, that his wife had died many years ago, and that deceased had not married again.

His LORDSHIP, thinking this service sufficient, directed the rule to be made absolute.

REG. v. THE TOWN COUNCIL OF POOLE.—Hodges moved for a rule for a mandamus directing the town council of Poole to elect a sheriff, pursuant to the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76). It appeared that, on the 9th of November instant, the town council elected a Mr. Durant, who is a practising attorney, and who on that ground claimed to be exempt. Ex parte THE POOR-LAW BOARD.—Tomlinson moved for a rule for a mandamus commanding the guardians of the poor of the united parish of Farnborough and tithings of Gaitley and Hawley, in the county of Southampton, to appoint a medical officer for the out-door poor, pursuant to an order of the 18th June, 1852. Rule nisi.

Ex parte NUTTING.—Lush moved for a rule for a mandamus commanding the judge of the County Court of Kent, holden at Margate, to try a certain plaint of Nutting v. Nutting by a jury. This case had been already tried without a jury, when he gave judgment for the plaintiff. Subsequently a new trial was granted, and then the plaintiff gave notice of his intention to have the plaint tried by a jury. The jury were accordingly summoned, and duly appeared on the day of trial, no objection being offered on the part of the defendant. The judge, however, refused to allow the cause to be tried by a jury, as he had given no leave for the purpose, and directed the cause to be struck out. It was now insisted that the judge was wrong, and that the plaintiff had an absolute right to have his cause tried by a jury. Rule nisi.

Ex parte BURKE.—Willis moved for a rule for a mandamus to the Lords of the Treasury, commanding them to pay to Mr. Burke his salary, after the rate of 1,000*l.* a year, as Master of the Common Pleas in Ireland.

Rule nisi.

WARREN v. THOMAS and ANOTHER.—Gray moved for a rule for a procedendo in this case, and for the plaintiff to pay the costs of this application. This was a replevin in the County Court of Gloucestershire, which had been removed by certiorari by the plaintiff into this court. It was now objected that the removal was bad, inasmuch as the plaintiff had not entered into any bond, as required by the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 121. Rule nisi.

REG. v. POTTS.—In this case, which was a rule for a criminal information against Mr. Thomas Potts for printing a libel against two magistrates, Miller, Serjt appeared on behalf of the defendant, and having explained that he was merely the printer of the libel, the author of which he was ready to give up, and having also expressed his regret at the libel, and his belief of its untruth, it was arranged (Hayes, for the prosecution, consenting) that the rule should be discharged upon payment of costs.

Rule discharged upon payment of costs.

Ex parte DOWNES and ANOTHER.—Garth moved for a rule calling upon the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers to shew cause why compensation should not be awarded to Edward Downes and Edwin Collins for certain injuries done to their premises in carrying out the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 112. Rule nisi.

DOE dem. HAYNES and ANOTHER v. ROE.—Ogle moved for a rule to strike out the first count in the declaration.

Re The Ipswich Charities.

Practice—Filing of affidavits.

On this petition, which had been several times in the paper, being called on, counsel asked that it might stand over, affidavits having been filed which required answering.

The Lord Chancellor.—This petition has already stood over several times for that purpose. I will put an end to the practice, which of late has become very general, of allowing parties to file affidavits over an unlimited period of time. The business of the court is thereby delayed, and costs unnecessarily increased. Under the circumstances I will allow this petition to stand over, but it is the last time I will accede to such a request.

IN LUNACY.

Re Wilson.

Practice—Committee of the estate and person of a lunatic—Solicitor having funds in hand belonging to a lunatic—Costs.

Taylor applied in this case for the confirmation of the Master's report, finding certain persons fit to be appointed committees of the person and estate of the lunatic.

The Lord Chancellor.—I shall at present make no order on this petition. I am not at all satisfied with the manner in which the estate of this lunatic has been dealt with; his son has, without any sanction of the Court, been dealing with it as if it were his own. I am not at all satisfied either with the conduct of the solicitors. They appear to have had a large sum of money in their hands lying idle at their bankers. I shall direct that all money in their hands be paid into court within three days, and an account be taken of the sums they have received and what they have done with it. I shall make the solicitors pay their own costs, and for the present, at least, will not allow the committee to further interfere with the estate. This is the only order I shall make at present. I will inquire into the matter, and it may again be mentioned. While I sit here, the representative of the Crown, I will teach persons that they shall not with impunity so deal with the property of those who are labouring under so severe a visitation of Providence, and whose interests they are bound to protect.

SMITHSON v. POWELL.

POWELL v. SMITHSON.

Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Compensation.

Advertisement of an estate for sale by auction described as containing "coal which was then in the course of working in the adjoining estate" the vendor having no right to the coal and minerals under the surface, the conditions of sale (which did not allude to the vendor having such a right, and which at the sale was stated by the auctioneer to be in another party), stipulated that the vendor's title should be deemed accepted unless the purchaser declared within one month after the delivery of the abstract of title his dissatisfaction, and that if any error, misstatement, or omission should be discovered in the description of the property, the same should not vitiate the sale, but should be the subject for compensation. On the face of the abstract, which was duly delivered, the right to dig coals, &c. appeared not to be in the vendors. A purchaser made no objection to the vendors' title within the stipulated time. On a claim filed by the vendors for specific performance, and a cross claim by the purchaser for compensation, the Vice-Chancellor dismissed them both without costs. An appeal from that decree by the purchaser was dismissed, and, by consent, a decree was made for specific performance.

An agreement for the purchase of an estate may be specifically enforced, although an error of a trifling nature in the character of the property shall have appeared in the advertisement for sale.

This was an appeal from a decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce. The facts were briefly these:—

In the month of July, 1850, a small freehold estate, called the Heights, in the parish of Bingley, in the county of York, was advertised for sale. The land consisted of about 36 acres, and, as the advertisement put forth, "contained coal, which was then in the course of working in the adjoining estate." The land was sold by public auction, subject to certain conditions of sale, and knocked down to the defendant for the sum of 1,620*l*. The tenth condition of sale declared that the purchaser of each lot should, within one month after the delivery of the abstract of title, declare whether the title was satisfactory or not; and in case he should consider the title should be deemed accepted. In case he should, within the time aforesaid, declare himself dissatisfied therewith, the vendors should be at liberty to return the deposit-money, and to resell the premises, &c.; and the fifteenth, that if any error, misstatement, or omission, should be discovered in the description there stated or produced of the premises, the same should not vitiate the sale thereof, but the respective purchasers or vendors, as the case might be, should pay or allow a compensation or equivalent, which should, if necessary, be ascertained by two arbitrators, in the usual way.

An abstract of the plaintiff's title was delivered to the purchaser's solicitor on the 31st of July, and by it it appeared that, by indentures of lease and release, dated, &c. (being the conveyance of the property from the grantor to the persons under whom the plaintiffs claimed), the coals and minerals under the property were expressly reserved to the grantor. The purchaser, notwithstanding this reservation, took possession of the land, erected new outhouses, and made no objection to the title within the stipulated month, but in the following December he commenced a correspondence with reference to the vendor's title to the right to dig coal, &c. He refused to complete the purchase, unless he received compensation for the coal.

The vendors then filed a claim for specific performance, and the purchaser also filed a claim for compensation, and on receiving it offered to complete.

The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce at the hearing, on the authority of Townshend v. Stangroom, 6 Ves. 328, dismissed both claims without costs, and left the parties to their legal rights, holding that the plaintiffs had been guilty of culpable negligence in not stating, as they ought to have done in their advertisement, that the right to the coal under the surface was reserved, and that the defendant had been guilty of neglect and delay, which shut him out of relief.

From this decree the purchaser appealed.

Malins and E. Webster appeared for the purchaser, and urged as an excuse for the delay in objecting to the vendor's title, the indisposition of his solicitor. They cited Burrough v. Oakley, 3 Swanst. 159, as an authority that the taking of possession by a purchaser and that acts of ownership incident to that possession did not prevent his investigating the vendor's title. The right to dig coal was the inducement for the purchase. It was not a trifling error in the description. Calcraft v. Roebuck, 1 Ves. 221.

James Russell and Daniel, for the vendors, excused the announcement in the advertisement by asserting that the title-deeds were in the hands of a mortgagee at the time it was issued. The error was mentioned by the auctioneer at the time of sale and in the hearing of the purchaser. The announcement was not made mala fide. He was bound by his purchase. His acts of ownership had waived any objection to the vendors' title. The right of digging coal was apparent on the face of the abstract not to be in the vendor, but in the person under whom they immediately derived their title, and the deed by which that right was expressly reserved was recited. Having waived the objection, he had no claim for compensation. Burnell v. Brown, 1 J. & W. 168.

Malins in reply.

The Lord Chancellor.—The sole question in this case is, did the vendors represent themselves as having the right to dispose of the coal, and the mines under the surface? The advertisement did represent that there was coal under the surface, and looking at the terms of that advertisement, I should say that the vendors thought they had a right to the coal, and that they intended to sell it. Now their solicitor at the very outset of the purchase discovered that his clients had no such right, and so the purchaser was informed. Yet he insists that under the terms of that advertisement he is entitled to compensation. The vendors insist on the purchaser's liability to specifically perform his agreement, and the purchaser, on the other hand, insists that if he is bound to perform his agreement he is entitled to compensation for the loss of the coal, as being part of that which he had agreed to purchase. Then each of the parties file a claim. This case, then, is very like that of the Marquis of Townshend v. Stangroom. There Lord Eldon dismissed both bills, holding it impossible to execute an agreement which was so perfectly different from that which the purchaser had signed. The whole agreement was to be taken together, and the whole must be executed or abandoned. He dismissed both bills on the ground of the inaccuracy in all the transactions; and the Vice-Chancellor, in dealing with this case, appears to have followed the same course, and I agree with him. That case certainly applies. Now it may be stated as a general proposition, that where a man buys that which is not the vendor's to sell, the purchaser is entitled to compensation. It is difficult to say this is altogether a question of title; it is rather the withholding of information. [illegible] coal [illegible] of the purchaser did not [illegible] coal, had he done so, it would [illegible] case upon him. The evidence on that [illegible] ful. An estate, though of itself very [illegible] chaser might consider worth nothing [illegible] exercise any privilege, or enjoy any rights [illegible] that is not the only feature in this case. It [illegible] that the conditions expressly stipulate as to [illegible] acceptance of the title. The abstract was [illegible] in the stipulated time, and on the first page [illegible] abstract it is apparent that the right to [illegible] was excepted. There was no contract for the [illegible] of the coal by any particular description. The [illegible] was to be sold; and there was coal which was [illegible] working in the adjoining lands. Had the coal [illegible] the subject of, or the inducement for, the [illegible] the purchaser would doubtless have made [illegible] as to the coal, and would have then been, [illegible] afterwards, informed of the error in the [illegible] ment. This error was confined to the advertisement. There is no mention of the sale of coal in the conditions, and this very omission was of itself sufficient to put him to his inquiry. He takes no objection; but enters into possession, and commits a species of waste by pulling down buildings and erecting others more suitable to the tenant. The estate is occupied by an old tenant, who states that nothing was said to him about the coal. Now, if this purchaser had not intended to take the estate without the coal, would he not have resisted the contract? Would he have acted as owner of the estate, and laid out his money as owner? What he says is, that his solicitor was ill, and could not examine the abstract, but surely another solicitor might have been found when the time for acceptance was so limited. This case is similar to that of Burnell v. Brown. Whether the Court could grant compensation, even if it were of opinion that the case required it, is a question of some doubt. I am of opinion that it would not grant compensation for the right to take coal. It was said the coal was not worth the digging for, but it might be worth three or four thousand pounds. How then was the Court to ascertain its value? Can it be said that the purchaser ought to have two-thirds more than the whole purchase-money, as a compensation for the loss of the right to take coal under the surface of his purchase? He has chosen to enter into possession, he must take it as owner; he must take the subject of his purchase as it is. The purchaser has no right to complain. I agree with the Vice-Chancellor in thinking that the vendors ought to have been more particular in their statements as to what they had to sell. The seller has no right to fix the purchaser with the contract, neither has the purchaser any right to compensation. I shall dismiss this appeal with costs, and I advise the purchaser to complete his purchase without further litigation.

A decree was taken by consent for specific performance the purchaser paying interest according to his contract, and the vendor accounting for the [illegible] received.

Release of prisoners for contempt—Appearance.

Browne applied for the discharge of two prisoners out of the custody of the keeper of the Queen's prison. They had been committed for contempt.

Freeling, who appeared for the plaintiff (who had been served), did not oppose.

CATOR v. REEVES.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act, s. 48.

There being several incumbrancers, a decree was made for the sale of the mortgaged property under the 48th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, on a claim filed for a foreclosure.

In the year 1844, J. F. Reeves and [illegible] who were tenants in common of [illegible] and copyhold hereditaments, [illegible] plaintiff; and in the year 1850, [illegible] with the plaintiff a policy of assurance on his life as a further security. In 1850, J. F. Reeves mortgaged his moiety of the freehold and copyhold hereditaments and the policy of assurance to J. R. Wilkinson. In 1851, a joint judgment was entered up against J. F. Reeves and O. Reeves, and in 1852, a judgment was entered up against O. Reeves alone. J. F. Reeves became a bankrupt in February 1852, and O. Reeves, in June 1852. The plaintiff filed a claim against the incumbrancers and the assignees of the two bankrupts for foreclosure of the freeholds and copyholds, and of the policy of assurance. The claim came on to be heard before the Lords Justices, who took it for the Vice-Chancellor Stuart, to whose Court it was attached, and the plaintiff applied to the Court to direct a sale of the property comprised in the mortgage under the 48th section of the statute, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

The COURT thereupon made a decree as follows:—Declare, that the mortgaged property ought to be sold, and let the same be sold accordingly. Let the proceeds of the sale be paid into court, distinguishing the proceeds of the freehold and copyhold property from those of the policy. Let accounts be taken of what is due to the plaintiff and other incumbrancers, according to their several and respective priorities. Reserve further directions and costs. Liberty to all parties to apply to Vice-Chancellor Stuart.

Dauney appeared for the plaintiff.

Kaylake, for the subsequent incumbrancers.

Murray for the assignees of the bankrupt mortgagors.

YEATMAN v. MOULSEY.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act, sec. 1.

A slight alteration in writing, being only the transposition of the order of the Christian names of one of the parties, was made in a bill printed according to the provision of stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86:

Held, that it did not constitute a sufficient ground for refusing to file the bill.

Schomberg, on behalf of the plaintiff in this case, moved that the Clerk of Records and Writs should be directed to receive and file the bill, although it had been slightly altered by writing. It appeared that Vice-Chancellor Kinderaley, upon the application being made to him in the first instance, conceiving that he had no jurisdiction, refused to make any order, observing that he considered the proper course for the parties to adopt was to apply to the Lord Chancellor or to the Court of Appeal. The alteration, in writing, was of the following character:—A party to the suit, whose Christian names were Constantia Maria, was in the printed bill by mistake described as Maria Constantia, whereupon the plaintiff's solicitor altered the bill, in writing, by striking out the printed word Maria, and inserting the same word, in writing, after the word Constantia. In consequence of the alteration, in writing, the Clerk of Records and Writs refused to receive and file the bill, as he did not consider that it sufficiently complied with the requirements of the 1st section of the Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act. It was urged, on behalf of the plaintiff, that a liberal construction ought to be put upon this, as upon other sections of the Act; and although it is enacted by the 1st section that the practice of engrossing on parchment bills of complaint to be filed in the court, and of filing such engrossment, is to be discontinued, and that the clerk of records and writs of the court is to receive and file a printed bill of complaint in lieu of an engrossment thereof, it was not the intention of the Legislature to prevent the filing of a printed bill, with trifling written corrections or alterations. It was clear, moreover, that under the 8th section of the Act, a printed bill might be amended by writing.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—We think we shall not be departing from the spirit of the Act of Parliament by allowing the bill in its present state to be filed. We must not be understood, however, as intending to sanction the filing of a bill of this kind where the alteration is at all extensive or important, or where it is such as to interfere with the legibility of the bill. The alteration here being so trifling, and amounting to a mere change in the order of the names, we think we may treat the bill in its present state as a printed bill within the spirit of the statute. On certain particular occasions the Book of Common Prayer have been directed to be altered with a pen, but they remained, nevertheless, printed books.

The COURT thereupon made an order directing the Clerk of Records and Writs to receive and file the bill so altered by the writing.

ATKINSON v. PARKER.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Supplemental Order under 52nd section.

A female ward of the Court, prior to the passing of statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, married without leave of the Court. The suit was revived against the husband, and her share of the property which was in question in the cause was vested in trustees for the benefit of the female plaintiff and her issue:

Held, reversing the decision of the Court below, that such a change or transmission of the interest of the plaintiff had taken place as justified an order under the 52nd section, to the effect of the usual supplemental decree, and that it was not necessary to exhibit any bill of revivor or supplement.

In this case, a bill had been filed in behalf of a female ward of the Court, for the administration of the real and personal estate of a testator, to one-seventh part of which she was absolutely entitled under his will. During the progress of the suit, the plaintiff being still an infant, married without leave of the Court, and the suit was thereupon revived against her husband. A settlement was afterwards made of the lady's property under the testator's will, which was vested in trustees for the benefit of herself and her issue. Afterwards her husband died. An application was made to Vice-Chancellor Stuart, under the 52nd section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, for an order to the effect of the usual supplemental order, for the purpose of carrying on the suit against the trustees of the marriage settlement, upon an allegation of the before-mentioned change or transmission of interests, by the vesting of the property of the female plaintiff under the testator's will in such trustees. His Honour, however, refused to make the order, considering that the case did not come within the meaning of the statute, and suggested that an application should be made to the Court of Appeal. The application was accordingly renewed before their lordships.

Hardy, for the plaintiff, contended that the statute was to be construed liberally, in order to carry its intent into effect, and that even if it did not come within the strict letter of the statute, it clearly came within its meaning, that it was evident that when the property of the plaintiff was by the conveyance, transfer, assignment, or otherwise of herself and her late husband vested in the trustees upon the trusts of her settlement, a change and transmission of interest had taken place within the meaning of the statute.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said that both he and Lord Cranworth thought that they would be acting in accordance with the spirit of the Act of Parliament in applying it to the case then before them, especially as the new defendants, if they objected to the order, were enabled by the action of the statute to move to discharge it.

The order was accordingly made.

MARSHALL v. FOWLER.

Husband and wife—Husband's insolvency—Mortgage of wife's legacy by husband and wife—Wife's equity to a settlement.

A married woman was entitled to a share of the residuary personal estate of a testator, subject to a life interest therein. She and her husband mortgaged this share by way of collateral security for a sum of money exceeding in amount the share of the residue. The tenant for life having died, the married woman filed a claim to have the whole of her share with residue, amounting to about 2,200*l. secured for her benefit, and to have a settlement thereof, her husband being insolvent and without any means of supporting her, and there being six children, of whom three were infants, and two of these wholly dependant upon their parents for support. The Court made a decree as prayed.*

This was a claim filed by Mrs. Ann Marshall, wife of John Marshall, by Charles Tipple, her next friend, seeking to have a share to which she was entitled in the residuary personal estate of the late Lawrance Trustram, of Baldock, in the county of Herts, secured for her benefit, and a settlement thereof duly executed under the direction of the Court. It appeared that Mr. Trustram by his will, bearing date the 14th of January, 1832, after bequeathing certain specific and pecuniary legacies and annuities which have since ceased, appointed William Fowler and Mary Ann his wife, and William Hanscombe, executors of his will, and bequeathed to them the residue of his personal estate, subject to the payment of debts, legacies, and annuities, upon trust to invest the same, and pay the dividends to the said Mary Ann Fowler for life, and after her decease the testator bequeathed all the residuary personal estate to six persons (of whom Mrs. Ann Marshall, the plaintiff, was one), together with the children and grandchildren of testator's cousin Elizabeth Wand, who should be living at the time of the decease of Mary Ann Fowler, the tenant for life. The testator died in March 1837, and his will was duly proved on the 26th of April, 1837. The tenant for life, Mrs. Mary Ann Fowler, died on the 21st of October, 1851, when the interest of Mrs. Marshall fell into possession, and there were then living nine grandchildren, but no children of Elizabeth Wand, who had also departed this life. The plaintiff, Mrs. Marshall, was therefore entitled to one-fifth part or share of the testator's residuary personal estate. This, after payment of legacy duty, consists of the sum of 468*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.* Consols, 550*l.* Three and a Quarter per Cent. Annuities, and 1,213*l.* 17*s.* 2*d.* Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, together with one-fifteenth part of 4,000*l.* in reversion expectant on the decease of William Marshall. By indenture of the 21st of November, 1838, the plaintiff and her husband assigned her share in the testator's residuary estate to Henry Francis and Henry Dunkin Francis, by way of mortgage, as a collateral security for the sum of 4,000*l.* and interest, secured by another indenture of mortgage of even date. The mortgage executed by Mr. and Mrs. Marshall was assigned on the 24th of March, 1843, to John Bridges, and Joseph Margetts Pierson, having since paid the sum of 4,000*l.* to John Bridges in respect thereof, Mr. Bridges became a trustee for him. Mr. Pierson having died, J. M. Pierson has taken out administration to his estate, and claims the benefit of the security. It was alleged by the plaintiff, however, that the 4,000*l.* had been realised by means of the other security, and that nothing remained due in respect thereof. It appeared that no settlement had been made on the plaintiff; that her husband had formerly carried on a large brewery business in partnership with J. M. Pierson, deceased; that he had become embarrassed, and was now in utterly insolvent circumstances; that he had no certain means of supporting himself and family; that the plaintiff had six children, of whom three were infants; and that two of those, of the ages respectively of twelve and thirteen were wholly dependent upon their parents for support. Mrs. Marshall, therefore, claimed to have the whole of the share of the residue settled upon her.

R. Palmer and W. Morris for the plaintiff.

J. Pearson for Pierson the assignee.

R. Pryor for the trustees.

The following cases were cited: Scott v. Spashett, 21 L. J. 349 (N.S.) Ch.; Dunkley v. Dunkley, 16 Jur. 767; Re Cutler, 14 Beav. 220; Brett v. Greenwell, 3 Y. & C. Ex. 230; Napier v. Napier, 1 Dr. & W. 410.

The MASTER of the ROLLS made the order as claimed, and declared the plaintiff entitled to the whole of the fund now payable, to be settled on her as follows: to herself, for life, to her separate use, without power of appointment, remainder to the children as the husband and wife shall jointly appoint, and in default of appointment to the children equally on attaining the age of twenty-one years. The fund to be carried to the account of the wife and children. Liberty to apply generally; liberty to apply as to the reversionary interest in the 4,000*l.* The fund to be brought into court. The costs of all parties as between solicitor and client, to be taxed and paid out of the fund in court.

BALL v. CARTER.

Pryor, in this case, moved for leave to take evidence by affidavit instead of viva voce, to prove a deed.

The MASTER of the ROLLS said the proper way was to move to prove the execution of the deed by affidavit, and granted the motion.

STANSFIELD v. HOBSON.

Mortgagee in possession—Acknowledgment taking case out of Statute of Limitations.

A mortgagee of lands entered into possession in 1825, and made no acknowledgment afterwards except that on the 5th of February, 1850, he wrote a letter to the solicitor of the plaintiff in these words, "I have received yours of the 2nd inst. I do not see the use of meeting either here or at M. unless some one is ready with the money to pay me off."

Held, on the authority of Trulock v. Robey, that this was a sufficient acknowledgment to take the case out of the statute.

This was a claim by James Stansfield against John Hobson and others to redeem certain lands at Oldham, Lancashire, belonging to the subscribers in an amicable building society, called the Union Building Club, and consisting of about 7,840 square yards. This property was vested in Stansfield and others, in trust, and in November, 1824, they mortgaged it to Hobson for 1,000*l.* and afterwards charged it with a further sum of 1,000*l.* It was alleged that Hobson, who had entered into possession of the premises in 1825, rendered an account in 1836, and that he was then repaid; but these matters [illegible] could be settled upon [illegible] to the following day, the 6th February, 1850, in which there words occur:—"I have received yours of the 2nd inst. I do not see the use of meeting either here or at Manchester, unless some one is ready with the money to pay me off." This was supposed to be in reply to a letter from the solicitor, but no such letter is to be found. There were various other letters written by the defendant, and produced by the plaintiffs, but none of them were considered by the Court to be of any importance. The mortgagee had gone into possession in 1837, and had so remained and in receipt of the rents and profits ever since; and he now insisted on the benefit of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 28. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, endeavoured to avoid the bar of the statute by setting up the alleged acknowledgment contained in the letter of the 5th of February, 1850.

Bisley and Osborne, for the plaintiffs, relied on the case of Trulock v. Robey, 12 Sim. 402.

R. Palmer and Humphreys contrà. The following cases were cited:—Holdin v. Hale, 6 Madd. 180; Batchelor v. Middleton, 6 Hare, 75; Hyde v. Johnson, 2 Bingh. N.C. 677.

Saturday, Nov. 13.—The MASTER of the ROLLS.—This was a suit for the redemption of an estate mortgaged to John Hobson, and the only question now reserved for consideration is, whether the letter of the 5th February, 1850, written by the defendant to the solicitor of the plaintiffs, is such an acknowledgment as takes the case out of the Statute of Limitations. It was said at the hearing, and properly said, that if this letter has not that effect, no other can have. The words are:—"I do not see the use of meeting, either here or at Manchester, unless some one is ready with the money to pay me off." The statute only says that where formerly parol declarations were admitted, they must now be written; but what amounts to an acknowledgment is to be determined as before. Some of the cases on this subject involve very nice distinctions, but the case of Trulock v. Robey, 12 Sim. is so like the present, that it is not distinguishable from it. In both cases there is an acknowledgment of title of the mortgagor, or that the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee exists. I cannot hold this acknowledgment not to be good without overruling Trulock v. Robey; and therefore I must hold that this letter was a sufficient acknowledgment under the 28th section of the statute.

OVERBURY v. TEALE.

Partnership transactions — Account — Misrepresentations, liability of party making.

The plaintiffs were, jointly with the defendant, the solicitors of an abortive railway scheme under an arrangement to divide the profits between them in moieties: on the failure of the project certain of the directors subscribed 680*l. and deposited it with the defendant to meet the liabilities of the company. Large sums being due to plaintiffs in respect of costs, they requested the defendant to apply the* 680*l. for that purpose, but he refused, stating that the money was deposited with him conditionally. The plaintiffs then resolved to bring actions against the directors who would not contribute; the defendant, who refused to take any part therein abandoning to the plaintiffs all claims on the costs to be recovered, and being indemnified against all risk. Actions were successfully brought, and a large sum recovered, but was reduced on taxation to a small sum, the directors declaring that the* 680*l. were applicable to the payment of costs. The plaintiffs filed their claims for an account of partnership transactions, and to recover the* 680*l. from the defendant, which he had represented as not applicable to the costs. The claim was dismissed as to the* 680*l. and the usual accounts were ordered.*

This was a claim filed by the plaintiffs for the purpose of obtaining an account of partnership transactions, and to recover a sum of 680*l.* from the defendant Teale, to which he considered himself entitled under the following circumstances. In October 1845 the plaintiff Overbury, and his partner Dixon, who were London solicitors, were employed jointly with the defendant Teale as solicitors of the Newcastle and Leeds Direct Railway Company then projected, the arrangement between the parties being that Messrs. Overbury and Dixon should transact the London business, including the soliciting the Bill in Parliament, and the defendant should do the country business, and that the profits should be divided equally between the defendant and the London firm. The company did not succeed in obtaining an Act of incorporation, and the project was of course abandoned. In November 1846, an arrangement was come to between the directors to subscribe 1700*l.* more to meet the liabilities of the company if no available purchaser, and it was agreed that the London directors should deposit their subscriptions with [illegible] and Dixon, and the Newcastle directors with Mr. Ashurst, a solicitor in Newcastle. The defendant accordingly received the sum of 680*l.* from the four Leeds directors, and Messrs. Overbury and Dixon received the London subscription, but the Newcastle directors failed to perform their share of the agreement. A considerable sum being due to the London firm, they applied to the defendant to have the 680*l.* in his hand applied in liquidation thereof, but the defendant refused to do so on the ground that the money was not applicable to the purpose, being placed in his hands conditionally, and until the Newcastle directors should come into the arrangement, was to remain in his hands. The London firm then resolved to bring actions against the Newcastle directors for the amount due on the bills of costs, but the defendant declined to allow his name to be used in the actions, or to sign the bills of costs, unless the London firm would indemnify him against the expenses of the proceedings, which he expected would be very hazardous and expensive. The London firm accordingly agreed to give the indemnity on the terms of the defendant, releasing to them all his interest in the money which might be recovered. The defendant thereupon wrote a letter to the London firm, of which these words formed a part:—"I of course abandon in your favour all claims which I may have on the costs to be recovered." The London firm accordingly brought the actions against the directors, and obtained a verdict by consent for 4,000*l.* subject to be reduced by the Master of the Q.B. to the sum really due. The matter having come before the Master, the defendant stated, in conformity with his previous statement, that the 680*l.* in his hands was not applicable to the payment of the bills of costs; but the Leeds directors themselves, in their examination, admitted that the fact was otherwise, and that the money deposited by them was applicable to that purpose, and in consequence of this evidence the verdict was reduced to about 190*l.* Mr. Dixon having sold all his interest to Mr. Overbury, the latter, as plaintiff, now claimed to have the 680*l.* from the defendant, as being part of the fruits of the actions brought by him against the Newcastle directors, to which, therefore, he was entitled.

R. Palmer and Lewin, for the plaintiff, insisted that the defendant had been guilty of misrepresentation, in consequence of which the plaintiff had been misled in bringing the actions, and had lost the fruits of his proceedings against the defaulters, in which he would not have embarked had he been informed of the truth.

Selwyn, for the defendant, contended that the representations made by him were perfectly correct; that the money had been deposited conditionally; that it was only after they were satisfied that all danger was past that they took off the restriction and consented to the money being applied in payment of the costs. The defendant was ready, however, to bring the 680*l.* in to the account of the partnership transactions.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that the taking of the accounts was a matter of course, the only question being whether the 680*l.* were to be paid to the plaintiff, or included in the accounts. The sum must be claimed by the plaintiff either under an agreement or some special equity. There was clearly, however, no contract to that effect between the parties. The arrangement was that the defendant should abandon all claim upon anything that might be recovered in the actions, but nothing was agreed upon as to the sum in hand. Nor was there any special equity upon which the plaintiff could rest his claim to recover. Where one party, indeed, leads another by misrepresentation to act so as to incur loss, then the party so misrepresenting must make good his allegations. But the evidence did not prove that the defendant led the plaintiff to believe that he would recover the 680*l.* in the actions, but, on the contrary, he had always asserted the probability of his recovering nothing. The claim must be dismissed, so far as it sought the payment of the 680*l.* to the plaintiff, but the usual account must be decreed.

VICE-CHANCELLOR TURNER'S COURT.

COLE v. MUDDLE.

Purchase from one executor—Lien—Title-deeds.

A testatrix bequeathed leasehold estates to three trustees, A. B. and C. for sale, and gave one-fourth of the produce to C. She appointed her trustees executors. A bill was filed for the administration of the estate, and afterwards C. assigned the leaseholds to M. for securing a sum of money, and at that time C. was indebted to the testatrix's estate. C. went out of the jurisdiction. A. and B. then filed a bill against M. to establish their lien on the leaseholds in preference to his mortgage, and for the delivery up of the title-deeds:

Held, that the lien was established by the mortgage, and that the bill must be dismissed, but the defendant must pay the costs of the suit.

A testatrix bequeathed to her will twelve leasehold houses to Mr. Cole, Mr. Martin, and Mr. Chevaux, their executors, administrators, and assigns, upon trust to sell the same, and as to one-fourth of the proceeds upon trust for certain persons therein named, and as to the remaining three-fourths of the proceeds upon trusts for the benefit of John Townsend. The three trustees were appointed executors, and the testatrix directed that John Townsend, when he should attain the age of twenty-five years, should also be an executor, and be also a trustee, and the will bequeathed accordingly. John Townsend attained twenty-five before the death of the testatrix, and after her death Mr. Cole, Mr. Martin, and John Townsend proved the will. In 1844 a suit was instituted (Townsend v. Townsend) by the administrator of the testatrix's estate, and a decree was made, and the Master, by his report, found that John Townsend, who was a defendant, had in his hands belonging to the estate 2,060*l.* and was, therefore, indebted to it in that amount. John Townsend alone mortgaged the twelve leasehold houses and other property to Mr. Arnold, who had notice of the will under which the mortgagor claimed, for securing 300*l.* and interest, and this security became vested in Mr. Muddle. John Townsend went and remained out of the jurisdiction of the Court. The title-deeds were delivered to the mortgagee, and the present suit was instituted by Mr. Cole and Mr. Martin against Mr. Muddle (not to establish their lien as executors against the mortgage, but) simply for the delivery up of the title-deeds. At the hearing a reference was sent to the Master who reported against the validity of the mortgage, and the defendant excepted to the report, but the exceptions were overruled. The case now came on upon further directions.

C. P. Cooper, Kenyon Parker, Towry White, and J. S. Moore appeared for the parties.

The following cases were cited:—Taylor v. Hawkins, 8 Ves. 209; Forbes v. Peacock, 1 Phill. 717; and Jones v. Smith, 1 Hare, 55.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—This is a clear case, although the position in which it comes before me is somewhat singular. The bill is filed by two executors for the recovery of the possession of title-deeds now in the possession of Mr. Muddle, claiming as mortgagee. The Master's report finds in effect that there was no mortgage. That finding has been appealed from, and the Court has agreed with the Master, and decided that there is no mortgage; and yet this bill, filed for the purpose of obtaining the deed, takes no notice of the fact that there is no mortgage. John Townsend, in 1845, mortgaged the property in question, together with other property, to one Arnold, for securing 300*l.* and interest, and Muddle represents him. Arnold had at the time notice of the will under which John Townsend claimed, by which will it appeared that the property in question was not bequeathed to Townsend absolutely, but jointly with two others, and that Townsend took a beneficial interest in one-fourth part only, and that in the other three-fourths other parties were beneficially interested. The effect of Townsend's assent to the bequest in the will can only extend to one-third, he being one of three executors. The other two executors file a bill to have the title-deeds given up by the mortgagee of their co-executor and co-trustee, who was himself also beneficially interested to the extent of one-fourth in the premises mortgaged. I will try the question as if it were a bill filed by the two plaintiffs against John Townsend for these title-deeds, setting the circumstance of the mortgage at one side for the present. This way of trying it is the most favourable for Muddle. Could Townsend hold the deeds against the two other executors? First, could he hold possession of the estate? The answer to his claim to be entitled to do so would be, "We are executors equally with yourself; we have never conveyed to you; we must have a receiver." And I think it clear that on a bill filed by the present plaintiffs, stating that Townsend was a debtor to the estate and to them as executors, a receiver would be appointed. On what ground? Evidently, because of the lien on the property vested in them concurrently with Townsend in their character of joint trustees. And must it not equally follow that Townsend could not retain possession of the title-deeds, if he could not retain possession of the land? Then, supposing the title-deeds to be recovered against Townsend, in whom is the better custody, in the executors representing the estate to which Townsend is indebted, or in Muddle, to whom Townsend has conveyed with notice of the will? Priddy v. Rose, 3 Mer. 86, has decided that the equity of the estate to which the alienor is indebted will prevail over the equity of the alienee. Some of the cases may have gone to a considerable length; but this is going no further than a Court of Equity properly ought to do. The lien must prevail over Muddle's interest, which is created by a mortgage of J. Townsend to him.

...ed that Jno. Townsend executed the mortgage in his character of executor, and that one executor alone may deal with leaseholds. He certainly took for the benefit of his testator's estate; but this mortgage was given for securing an antecedent debt previously due to Muddle by Townsend; and the equity of the general estate of the testator, must prevail over the private debt of an executor. The deeds, therefore, must be brought into court with a declaration that they belong to all the three trustees, and that the estate of the testator has a lien on them in priority to Muddle, for securing the amount due by Jno. Townsend to the estate. This decree will be with costs against Muddle.

VICE-CHANCELLOR STUART'S COURT.

Reported by Geo. S. Allnutt, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Thursday, Nov. 25.

Ex parte S. T. Wood, re The Vale of Neath and South Wales Brewery Company.

Joint-Stock Companies' Winding-up Acts—Contributory—Executor.

The liability of an executor as a contributory was directed to be limited to the death of the testatrix, there being sufficient evidence of an assent by the executors to a specific bequest of the shares, an acceptance of them by the legatee, and of these things being done with the approbation of the directors of the company.

This was a motion on behalf of Samuel Thomas Wood, the surviving executor of Lydia Keene, deceased, that the decision of William Brougham, esq. the Master charged with the winding-up of the above-named company, made on the thirteenth day of July last, whereby the name of the said Samuel Thomas Wood had been included in the list of contributories of the said company, as executor of Lydia Keene, spinster, deceased, in respect of five shares in the said company, without qualification, might be reversed; and that the name of the said Samuel Thomas Wood might be struck out of the said list of contributories of the said company; or if the Court should not make that order, then that the name of the said Samuel Thomas Wood might be included in the said list of contributories of the said company, as such executor as aforesaid, in respect of the said five shares in the said company, with the following qualification, that the said Samuel Thomas Wood, as such executor of the said Lydia Keene, was liable only in respect of debts and losses (if any) up to the 8th day of July, 1842, the day of the death of the said Lydia Keene. In December 1841 Lydia Keene purchased of Joseph Rusher five shares in this company; and by an indenture dated the 14th day of December, 1841, and purporting to be made between Joseph Rusher, of the first part, Lydia Keene of the second part, and ... of the trustees of the company of the third part, the shares were transferred by Rusher to Lydia Keene. In the indenture was contained the following covenant:—"And the said Lydia Keene doth hereby for herself, her heirs, executors, and administrators, covenant, promise, and agree to and with the said Joseph Rusher, and also separately with the said ... that she, the said Lydia Keene, her executors, administrators, and assigns, shall and will in all respects, whilst she shall continue a holder of any shares of the said company, well and truly observe, perform, and fulfil and keep all the covenants, articles, stipulations, and agreements which are or ought to be observed, performed, fulfilled, and kept by her, her executors and administrators respectively, in respect thereof, or in relation to such shares for the time being remaining in her name in the books of the said company, according to the true intent and meaning of the same covenants, articles, stipulations, and agreements respectively." Miss Lydia Keene did not execute the company's deed of settlement. By her will dated the 6th of July, 1842, she specifically bequeathed the said shares to her sister Mary Cadby Keene, and appointed William Keene and Samuel Thomas Wood executors of her will. Miss Lydia Keene died on the 8th of July, 1842, and shortly afterwards a dividend on the shares was declared in respect of profits up to the Midsummer of that year, and was to be payable in September. Mr. William Keene, who had shares of his own, and who had acted as Miss M. C. Keene's agent with reference to other shares of hers in the brewery, in August 1842 wrote to the secretary of the company the following letter:—

"Trowbridge, Aug. 13, 1842.

"Dear Sir,—I duly received the notice from the directors respecting the dividend to be paid on the ... inst. and beg to inform you that my sister ... C. Keene is and will be at my house, so ... she will thank you to forward her dividend here. ... also to request that you will send the amount due to Miss L. Keene, deceased, to me as the executor under her will, to which I have just administered.

"Her shares will have shortly to be transferred to my sister M. C. Keene."

In Nov. 1842 Miss M. C. Keene was married to Mr. Kluht, and in January 1843 Mr. Keene wrote to the secretary of the company the following letter:—

"Trowbridge, Jan. 27, 1843.

"Dear Sir,—I beg to inform you that my sister (in your books Miss Mary Cadby Keene) is now Mrs. Kluht. Her address is, however, the same as before, Wall-cottage, Twickenham, near Hounslow, Middlesex. Her shares, as well as those of my deceased sister Lydia, will be transferred, I believe, when the legacy duty is paid, to Mrs. Kluht's husband, the Rev. H. B. Kluht, of which I will forward positive instructions as soon as I have paid the duty at Somerset-house.

"I am, dear Sir, yours very truly,

"Mr. W. Lowther." "W. Keene."

In consequence of this communication, the secretary wrote in pencil against the shares in the share-ledger the name "Kluht." The circulars in respect of these shares were afterwards sent to Mr. Kluht.

Mr. Keene, on his own account, and acting as agent for Mr. Kluht, accepted a bill drawn on behalf of the company in respect of the amount of calls made upon the shares of Mr. Keene and Mr. and Mrs. Kluht. In March 1845 Mrs. Kluht died. The company having been ordered to be wound up, it was sought to place Kluht in the list of contributories in respect of the shares originally held by his wife. See Ex parte Kluht, 3 D. & S. 210; 15 Law T. 84; where the clauses of the deed of settlement of the company are set out. Mr. Keene having died, the Master had placed on the list, in respect of Lydia Keene's shares, Mr. Wood, the present appellant. No claim had been made against Lydia Keene's estate in respect of these shares, from her death until January 1849.

Baron and Roxburgh appeared in support of the application.

Russell and Terrell, for the official manager Roxburgh, in reply.

The cases of Ex parte Gouthwaite, 3 Mac. & Gord. 187; Ex parte Kluht, 3 De G. & Sma. 210; Ex parte Crossfie'd, 17 Law T. Rep. 47; Ex parte Morgan, 1 Mac. & Gord. 225, were referred to.

The Vice-Chancellor, after fully stating the facts of the case, said, that in this state of things the Master had placed on the list of contributories in respect of these shares, not Mr. Kluht's name, but that of Mr. Wood, the surviving executor of Lydia Keene, and without limiting his liability. In support of this it was alleged that there was no evidence of assent on the part of the executors to the legacy to the sister of the testatrix, or of their having been accepted by Mr. Kluht or his wife. His Honour, however, considered that there was sufficient evidence of such assent and acceptance. It was then contended that the approbation of the directors of the company was necessary under the 38th and 44th sections of the deed of settlement. On referring to the 41st section it would be found that "In all cases of husbands, executors, administrators, or legatees applying to become proprietors of shares belonging to or claimed by them in those characters, and being approved of by the directors, such alterations should be made in the share register book," &c. Now in the present case all the circulars had been sent to Mr. Kluht, the name had been entered in the share register book, and, by an arrangement with Mr. Kluht, a bill of exchange had been drawn by the company upon Mr. Keene for a sum, which included the sum due from Mr. Kluht to the company in respect of a call upon the shares in question: and his Honour could not hold that the transfer of the shares had been made without the approbation of the directors. He should therefore direct that the name of Mr. Wood should remain on the list as liable only up to the death of Lydia Keene.

Winch v. The Birkenhead, Lancashire, and Cheshire Railway Company.

Injunction—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act.

The Court will restrain a railway company, the directors of which had contracted to transfer to another railway company a portion of its line, plant, and other property, from completing such transfer, so far as the same may be inconsistent with the provisions of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 8 Vict. c. 20, s. 87.

This was a motion to discharge an order, dated the 7th of October last, made by the Vice-Chancellor, to restrain the defendants, their officers, and agents from making over or transferring to the London and North-Western Railway Company the defendants' lines of railway, plant, and other property, or any part or parts thereof, until the defendants should have fully answered the plaintiff's bill. It appeared that the defendants' line was the link wanting to complete the line of traffic with Liverpool, in conjunction with the lines belonging to the London and North-Western Railway Company, and an independent line from Shrewsbury to Birkenhead was therefore contemplated; and, simultaneously, the Great Western Railway Company, the Shrewsbury and Birmingham, and Shrewsbury and Chester Railway Company, agreed conditionally to amalgamate and to purchase the Birkenhead line; but the defendants objecting to their agreement being conditional on the amalgamation, disputes arose, and the result was, that certain bills then before Parliament, both for the amalgamation and for the independent line by the London and North-Western, were withdrawn. The terms offered by the Great Western were 3½ per cent. guarantee, and the London and North-Western now offered 4 per cent. guarantee, upon the terms of an agreement which was drawn up, and a meeting called to consider the question. Among others, the plaintiff had notice of that meeting, and two days previously the injunction now sought to be dissolved was obtained, on the ground that the agreement, the terms of which did not appear, was a contemplated breach of an injunction still in force, which had been granted in this suit by the late Vice-Chancellor Sir James Parker, on the 3rd of May last, to restrain the defendants from proceeding on the footing of an agreement which was believed to be the same as that now in course of adoption.

Daniell and Selwyn, for the defendants, argued that this was nothing more than a contention between the Great Western and North-Western Companies, and as those parties were not before the Court it would not now interfere to restrain them from doing that which they might lawfully do. The injunction granted by Sir James Parker did not restrain them from doing anything but what they might legitimately do under the 87th section of the Railway Clauses Act. (a) The object was to lease their line to the London and North-Western Company, with the sanction of Parliament, the terms offered by them being better than those of the Great Western, and the supply of coke, coal, &c. necessary to work the increased traffic, being of great advantage to the defendant's line, but it never was their intention to give any control, by transfer, &c. to the London and North-Western. Under these circumstances, they urged that the Court would either dissolve the injunction, or so modify it that the defendants might be free to do what they might lawfully do. The plaintiff and another shareholder in the defendant's company were the only dissentients to the agreement, and were, it was suspected, in the interest of the Great Western Railway Company.

Malins, Stevens, and Giffard, for the plaintiff.—There was a total concealment of what was intended to be done, and the secretary of the defendants had refused to give any information upon the subject. If the defendants only intended to proceed under the 87th section of the Railway Clauses Act, or proceed to Parliament for a lease, there was no question between the parties; but the object being in fact to hand over the whole company to the North-Western, that was a thing to be restrained, and it was the consciousness of the intention of being about to do a thing which was a violation of the Act and injunction that caused the concealment. The meeting took place after the injunction was granted, but there was a total absence of any details being afforded to the meeting, the whole subject being left to the board of directors.

The Vice-Chancellor, after stating the circumstances under which this injunction was granted, and remarking that it was the pressure of time which induced him originally to grant it, in connection with the case made by the affidavits, said that although there appeared to have been no defined arrangement made as to what were to be ultimately the actual terms of the agreement to be discussed at the meeting, yet such terms as were proposed might have been more specifically set forth. The defendants said that the only intention they had was to lease to the North-Western Company, and to proceed to Parliament for that purpose under the powers given them by the 87th section. It appeared to him (the Vice-Chancellor) that any agreement, having for its object the allowing another company to work with the line, in the terms of that motion, could not be the subject of an injunction; but inasmuch as sufficient publicity had not been given to the terms of the agreement which they intended to enter into, the injunction must be continued; but, as the Court had no power to do anything to prevent a company from proceeding to Parliament, which might, however, take notice of what this Court had done, the terms of it might be modified and confined to any act inconsistent with the 87th section of the Railway Clauses Act. Order accordingly.

CATCHPOLE v. THE AMBERGATE, NOTTINGHAM, BOSTON, AND EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY.

Joint-stock company—Neglect to enter memorial of transfer of shares—Sale upon forfeiture—8 Vict. c. 16, s. 33.

A company omitting to enter a memorial of transfer of shares on the register of transfers after due notice and delivery of the deed of transfer, and then proceeding to declare the shares forfeited, and selling them to other persons, in consequence of the non-payment by the vendor of calls made after such delivery of the transfer, is liable to an action at the suit of the purchaser.

It is unnecessary to aver in the declaration in such action that a reasonable time had elapsed for the company to enter a memorial of such transfer on the register.

Case.—The first count of the declaration stated, that one W. L. Nutter appeared by a book of the defendants', kept in pursuance of the "Companies' Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845," and called the "Register of Shareholders," to be the lawful holder and proprietor of, to wit, 300 shares in the undertaking of the defendants, and was lawfully entitled to sell and transfer the same; that he agreed with the plaintiff to sell and transfer the said shares to him, and then sold to the plaintiff, and the plaintiff then bought of W. L. Nutter the same, at the price, &c. And thereupon, by a certain deed between W. L. Nutter and the plaintiff, W. L. Nutter did transfer the said shares to the plaintiff. That the plaintiff caused the deed to be delivered to the defendants, to be kept by them, and in order that the defendants might enter a memorial in the book kept by them under the last-mentioned Act, called "The Register of Transfers," and indorse such entry on the deed of transfer, and might on demand deliver a new certificate to the plaintiff, as the purchaser of the said shares, according to the last-mentioned Act. And it then became and was the duty of the defendants, and they were then required, to wit, by the plaintiff, to make and endorse such entry. Nevertheless, the defendants did not enter any memorial in the "Register of Transfers," or endorse any entry on the deed of transfer, but neglected so to do, whereby the plaintiff has been deprived of his right and title to appear in the books of the defendants as the holder and proprietor of the said shares, and whereby, and by reason of W. L. Nutter, after such delivery of the said deed of transfer still appearing by the said book of the defendants, called "The Register of Shareholders," to be the holder and proprietor of the said shares, and of calls having been made by the defendants after the committing of the said grievances upon divers persons so appearing by the last-mentioned book to be the holders and proprietors of shares in the said undertaking, and amongst others upon W. L. Nutter, and by reason of the failure of W. L. Nutter to pay the said calls (the plaintiff having received no such notice of forfeiture, as in the last-mentioned Act mentioned), the defendants, to wit, by the directors of the said company lawfully appointed, did, after the committing of the said grievances, and according to the last-mentioned Act, proceed to declare, and did declare, the said shares so standing in the last-mentioned book, in the name of W. L. Nutter, forfeited, which forfeiture having been confirmed at a general meeting of the said company, and the said shares so forfeited directed to be sold according to the provisions of the last-mentioned Act, the said shares so forfeited were afterwards sold by the defendants, to wit, by the directors, by public auction, according to the last-mentioned Act; that the plaintiff has thereby been deprived of his right to compel the defendants to make such entry and indorsement as aforesaid, and to deliver to the plaintiff, as the purchaser of such shares, such certificate; and has also been deprived of the said shares, and all benefit thereof, and all the dividends and other profits [illegible] of the benefit of selling the said shares [illegible] premium, the said shares having [illegible] of the said grievances, [illegible] to wit, to 50*l.* per share.

Second Count.—That the plaintiff was the lawful holder of, and well entitled to, to wit, 300 shares in the undertaking of the defendants, of great value. Nevertheless, the defendants, well knowing the premises, but contriving, &c. whilst the plaintiff continued the lawful holder, wrongfully, and without any lawful cause or excuse, and in pretended exercise of the powers given by the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to wit, by the directors of the said company lawfully appointed, proceeded to declare, and did declare, the last-mentioned shares forfeited, and afterwards, at a general meeting of the said company, proceeded to confirm, and did confirm, the said forfeiture, and afterwards, by the said directors, proceeded to sell, and did sell, the said shares to divers persons, whereby the plaintiff has been deprived of the said shares, and the benefits thereof, and all the dividends and other profits therefrom, and also of the benefit of selling the said shares at an increased premium, the said shares having, since the committing, &c. greatly risen in value, to wit, to 50*l.* per share.

Special Demurrer to both counts. The only grounds which it is necessary to notice are the following: that the second count shows no cause of action, nor how the plaintiff was owner of the shares, nor how nor why the alleged forfeiture and sale were wrongful, nor if wrongful that they were done by a body competent to bind the plaintiff or the defendants, nor how the wrongful act of the directors can make the company liable, nor how the plaintiff's title has been affected.

Willes in support of the demurrer. First, as to the second count, which is the simplest, that shows no cause of action. By the 8 Vic. c. 16 (Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845), sec. 14, the transfer of shares is to be by deed, and by sec. 15, when executed, the deed is to be delivered to the secretary, who is to enter a memorial in the register of transfers and indorse such entry on the deed, and until such transfer has been so delivered the vendor of the share is to continue liable for calls, and the purchaser is not to be entitled to any profits or to vote in respect of such share. Shares in a company are not chattels or land, but only give a right to a share in the profits of the undertaking and to vote at the meetings. The purchaser has no right to complain of the company for irregularity with regard to entering the memorial of the transfer, though the vendor may. The clauses relative to forfeiture of shares are those from sec. 29 to 35 inclusive. This is like the case of the sale of growing crops before they are ripe, which is wholly void. Owen v. Legh, 3 B. & Ald. 470; or it may be that the acts of the defendants amount only to slander of title, in wrongly asserting that they had a title to sell these shares, in which case no action lies. The plaintiff has his remedy to recover the price he paid for the shares. Besides it is not averred that the defendants had any reasonable opportunity of registering the transfer. These objections apply also to the first count.

Bramwell, contrà. The forfeiture is put on the other side as if it amounted to nothing at all; but the plaintiff has actually lost his shares. The title of his vendor is erased from the register of shareholders, and it is similar to the destruction of the plaintiff's title-deeds. Here the plaintiff had no notice of the intended forfeiture, and upon sec. 33 it may be a very grave question, whether the title of the vendee after the forfeiture is not complete. To what do the words "nor shall his title be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings" apply, if not to a case like this? These specific shares are gone, and the company deprive themselves of the power of giving the plaintiff notice of calls, &c. and the plaintiff of the right to receive dividends, attend meetings, &c. As to the objection that a reasonable time for entering the memorial of the transfer had not elapsed, that is unnecessary. Beer v. Beer, 21 L. J. 134, C. P. Besides, if that had not elapsed, the defendants had no right to make calls on Nutter.

LORD CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that both counts are good.—As to the second, which may be supposed to be the more defective of the two, that alleges that the plaintiff was the holder of 300 specific shares in the company—that is, as if they were numbered and earmarked; yet that the defendants, well knowing, &c. and contriving, &c. without lawful cause, and in pretended exercise of the power of the Act, proceeded to declare, and did declare, the said shares to be forfeited; and at a general meeting of the company proceeded to confirm, and did confirm the said forfeiture, and afterwards proceeded to sell, and did sell, the said shares to other persons, whereby the plaintiff has been deprived of the said shares and dividends, and of the sale thereof. Here is both injuria and damnum, for it was a wrong to declare the shares forfeited, and a wrong to sell them, and the plaintiff is deprived of the rights of a shareholder, and of having his name placed upon the register of shareholders. There is, therefore, a sufficient ground of action. It is said that all that has been done is a mere nonentity, and that it is like the case of a sale of growing crops before they are ripe, where nothing can be done by the purchaser. But that is not so, for here it is alleged that the plaintiff was deprived of his shares, and prevented making a title to them, and how can the directors say that they wrongly forfeited the shares, and that the plaintiff is still entitled to them. If, then, the second count is good, à fortiori, the first count is good. That count alleges in detail what the transaction was, and then states the forfeiture and the confirmation at a general meeting, and the sale by the defendants, and the same objections are made to it as to the second count. The judgment must, therefore, be for the plaintiff.

COLERIDGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The defendants, by their own default, have treated a third person as the shareholder, and have made calls on such third person; and by their own default have forfeited and sold these shares. The answer of the defendants is, that this is merely nothing, and that the plaintiff shews that the defendants have been doing wrong, and that what they have done is of no effect. And it is likened to the case of Owen v. Legh, 3 B. & Ald. 470; where the sale under a distress of growing crops before they were ripe was held to be wholly void. I am not sure that that is applicable to these shares if they were sold in market overt. For sec. 33, of 8 Vict. c. 16, is very material and although it is not averred that a declaration in writing was made that the call upon the shares was made and notice thereof given, and that default on payment of the call was made, and that the forfeitures of the shares was declared and confirmed, neither does it appear that they have not completed the title of the vendee of these shares; and when such a declaration has been made, and the receipt of the treasurer of the company given for the price of the shares, the vendee has a good title to the shares by the above section, and is entitled to a certificate of proprietorship, and is to be deemed the holder of such shares, nor shall his title to such shares be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such sale. The defendants in this case have done every thing on their part necessary to complete the title of the vendee, and to hold that what they have done is a complete nullity would be most dangerous, and render it necessary for a purchaser of such forfeited shares to look into the legality of the whole of the company's proceedings.

ERLE, J.—The plaintiff is entitled to our judgment. In the first count the plaintiff shews a breach of duty by acts of omission and commission. There is an act of omission when the deed of transfer from Nutter to the plaintiff was delivered to the secretary, in omitting to enter a memorial of it in the register of transfers, and there is an act of commission in the forfeiture and sale of the shares. There is also a clear damage to the rights of the plaintiff. A man has a right of action in respect of any disturbance to a flow of water past his lands, though he may never have made use of it. So here a party on the register of shareholders has certain rights, to attend the meetings, receive dividends, and others, and in respect of those rights the plaintiff is injured. With respect to the second count, that discloses a breach of duty, and it follows from what I have said that it contains a good cause of action. There was no need to allege that a sufficient time had elapsed for registering the deed of transfer.

COBBETT (a Pauper) v. HUDSON.

Party—Advocate and witness.

There is no rule of law by which a party to an action is prevented stating his case to the jury and afterwards being examined on oath as a witness in support thereof; and where the judge at the trial refused to permit a party who had so stated his case to the jury to give evidence on oath in support thereof, and nonsuited him, the Court granted a new trial.

Action on the case for a false return to a writ of habeas corpus.

At the trial before Lord Campbell, C.J. the plaintiff presented himself, as his own advocate, to state the case, and intimated that he would afterwards give evidence in support of it, and he was told that he could not do both. He then proceeded to state the case to the jury, and at the close of it tendered himself as a witness, to be examined on oath. The learned judge refused to allow him to be sworn, and the plaintiff was then nonsuited.

The plaintiff in person having obtained a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground that he was improperly excluded from giving evidence at the trial,

W. H. Watson and Unthank showed cause.—To allow a party to act as advocate, and to be examined as witness in his own case, would introduce the most mischievous consequences. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—The question is, whether a judge at Nisi Prius has any power without a rule of Court to reject a party as a witness under such circumstances.] It is for the judge to regulate the mode in which the cause is to be conducted, and the rule of practice adopted at the trial is one of great convenience, and has often been acted on. (Parker v. McWilliam, 6 Bing. 683; Stones v. Byron, 4 D. & L. 393.)

The plaintiff in person supported the rule.

Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Saturday, Nov. 20.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In the case of Cobbett v. Hudson, a question arose whether a party to the suit has a right to address the jury, and to be examined himself as his own witness. We are of opinion that this rule for a new trial should be made absolute, on the ground that the plaintiff was improperly told that he could not address the jury as his own advocate without agreeing to waive his right to be examined as a witness in his own case. We are fully aware of the inconvenient consequences that must follow from a party to a suit being alternately, during the trial, advocate and witness—and we express our strong disapprobation of such a practice; but we cannot say that the judge at Nisi Prius has sufficient authority to prevent it. Before the recent statute, the party had a right to conduct his own case in person, though he could not be his own witness; and by that statute he is rendered competent and compellable to give evidence as a witness without any abridgment of his former right to act as his own advocate. We must be careful that we do not abridge the rights conferred by the common and statute law, while we are acting merely on views of policy and expediency, with respect to which the judges may form different opinions. It was stated at the trial that verdicts had several times been set aside on the sole ground that the same person had been permitted to act as advocate, and to be examined as a witness; but when the cases alluded to are examined, it will be found that the rigid rule contended for was not laid down in them. In Stones v. Byron, 4 D. & L. 393, on the trial before the sheriff, an attorney having addressed the jury as advocate for the plaintiff, and been examined as a witness for him, Mr. Justice Patteson, who was sitting in the Bail Court by himself, on the application to set aside the verdict, said, "I must say I do not think that such a course of proceeding is proper, or consistent with the due administration of justice. It seems to me, therefore, that his evidence ought not to have been received, and having been received, that there ought to be a new trial." But there the evidence had been received after the defendant's case was closed, and after the plaintiff's advocate had replied, and this irregularity appears to have been the ground of the decision in Deane v. Backwood, very shortly reported, in a note, 4 D. & L. 395, which was likewise a trial before the sheriff. The plaintiff's attorney, after addressing the jury as advocate, was examined as a witness, and Erle, J. granted a new trial on this ground, without laying down any certain rule upon the subject, or proposing to extend the authority of Stones v. Byron. In King v. Brice, 2 B. & Ald. 606, it is laid down that on the trial of an indictment for perjury, the prosecutor shall not be permitted to address the jury, the Court observing that the prosecutor may be and certainly is a witness, and it is very unfit that he should be permitted to state, not upon oath, facts to the jury, which he is afterwards to state to them upon oath, but there the king was to be considered a party, and the private prosecutor had no right to address the jury, even if he waived his right to be examined as a witness. It was said at the trial of the present case, that it had been decided before the Chief Justice of the C. P. and the Chief Baron of the Ex. that a party cannot be permitted to act as his own advocate, and to be examined as his own witness; but after diligent inquiry, no such decision can be discovered. The validity of the rule contended for is rested on the authority of the judge at Nisi Prius to regulate the proceedings in a way that may be most conducive to the investigation of the truth of the matter. An instance was referred to of an order for witnesses to leave the court, with an intimation that no witness who remains in court or returns into court before he is called, shall be examined. But the judge must be guided by the established practice and general rules of law. With respect to the ordering of witnesses out of court, though this is clearly within the power of the judge, as he may fine a witness for disobeying that order, the prevalent opinion seems to be that this power as a power of the judge is limited to the infliction of a fine, and that he cannot lawfully refuse to permit the examination of witnesses. (Rex v. Nethercote, 6 Car. & P. 741; Thomas v. David, 7 Car. & P. 350; Rex v. Colley, M. & M. 329.) We may hope, that without any positive rule against any party addressing the jury and being examined as a witness on oath in his own case, a practice so objectionable is not likely to prevail, for it is not only contrary to good taste and good feeling, but as it must be revolting to the minds of the jury, it would generally be injurious to the party who does it. In such a case as the present, there is not the smallest colour for resorting to it, for the plaintiff, suing in formâ pauperis, had counsel assigned to him, who must be supposed to have been ready to support at the trial, the certificate he had given that the plaintiff had a good cause of action, and an offer was freely made by the defendant to postpone the trial till the attendance of this gentleman could be procured. If the practice does gain ground to a degree seriously injurious to the due administration of justice, the Legislature may interfere, or the judges, under the authority vested in them, may make a general order, whereby it may be prevented in future. But, as the law now stands, we make a judge at Nisi Prius exceed his authority in refusing to allow the plaintiff to be examined as a witness on oath after addressing the jury in his own behalf, though on a new trial he must be permitted to do both if he shall be so inclined.

Rule absolute.

REG. v. THE SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Arbitration—Award—Setting aside for error in law—Statement of arbitrator's reasons in a separate paper.

For the purpose of setting aside an award, on the ground that the arbitrator has mistaken the law, the Court will not look at a written statement of the grounds of his decision delivered by him to the parties, and of the same date with the award, unless it be made out that the arbitrator intended the reasons to form part of his award.

A rule nisi had been obtained to set aside an award, on the ground that the arbitrator had decided contrary to law. It appeared that the South-Western Railway Company had appealed to the Sessions against several rates, imposed upon the company by parishes in Surrey and Berks, through which one of their branches passed; that those appeals had been referred, and that the arbitrator had made his award; but on the same day on which he made his award, he delivered to the parties separate written statements of the grounds on which he made it, accompanied with a letter, in which he expressed himself dissatisfied with the award, and recommended the parties as speedily as possible to lay a special case before the Court of Q. B. Previously to the submission, there had been an appeal against a former rate, and in that appeal power to state a case had been reserved. The application to set aside the award was grounded upon the alleged illegality of the reasons given by the arbitrator in the separate statement; but the arbitrator had made an affidavit, in which he denied that that statement was ever intended to form any part of his award. It was merely given for the guidance of the parish officers in stating a case for the opinion of the Court of Q.B.

Pashley and Corner, for the Surrey parishes, and Keating and Smirke, for the Berkshire parishes, shewed cause against the rule.

Watson, Bodkin, and Willes supported.

Kent v. Elstob, 3 East, 18; Young v. Walter, 9 Ves. 364; Sharman v. Bell, 5 M. & S. 504; Holmes v. Higgins, 1 B. & C. 74; Pratt v. Hillman, 4 B. & C. 269; Toby v. Lovibond, 17 L.J. C.P. 201, per Wilde, C.J.; Fuller v. Fennick, 3 C.B. 705, were referred to.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—It is quite clear that we cannot look at the statement of the arbitrator's reasons as a ground for impeaching his award, unless he delivered them as parcel of his award. If he does so, then the Court will look at the two as one document, and will suppose that he has reserved the matter of law for the consideration of the Court; but if he has absolutely decided the question of law submitted to him, we cannot inquire into the legality of his decision. In the present case it is perfectly clear, not only from the affidavit of the arbitrator, but from all the circumstances of the case, that he never meant the separate statement of his reasons to be any part of his award. It was designed for the guidance of the parish officers in settling a special case, so that his award should not be the permanent basis of rating in the parishes to which it applied; and when he expresses himself dissatisfied with his award, he only means that he is dissatisfied with the state of the law then existing; but as to the particular rates embraced in the award, there can be no doubt that the award was intended to be and is final.

REG. v. ASHTON.

Conviction—Licensing Act—Gaming—Unlawful games—Dominoes.

A conviction of a publican for knowingly suffering an unlawful game, to wit, the game of dominoes, to be played in his house, contrary to the tenor of his license, is bad,—dominoes not being an unlawful game, and there being no allegation that he suffered "gaming," that is, playing for money, in his house.

Archbold, in last Term, obtained a rule nisi for a certiorari to bring up a conviction, whereby the defendant, a publican, was convicted under the Licensing Act, 9 Geo. 4, of knowingly suffering and permitting an unlawful game, to wit, the game of dominoes, to be played in his house, contrary to the tenor of his license and the statute, &c.

Whately now shewed cause.—Upon reference to the statutes of 33 Hen. 8, c. 9; 2 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 9; and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 1, it is does not appear that dominoes is an unlawful game; but that is immaterial in this case, because this is a conviction under the Licensing Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 61, which prohibits in public-houses not only the playing of unlawful games, but "any gaming whatsoever;" and that means any games whatsoever. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Is it "gaming" to play at draughts for love? If so, all the community are gamesters.] It is, in a public-house. The statute was intended to prevent the playing of all games in such places.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this conviction is bad. It alleges that the defendant knowingly suffered an unlawful game, to wit, the game of dominoes, to be played in his house. Now Mr. Whately admits that dominoes is not an unlawful game; and he is therefore driven to contend that this amounts to an allegation that the defendant permitted "gaming" in his house; but I think that it does not. The defendant might suffer people to play at a lawful game in his house if no money was staked, because that would not amount to "gaming" within the meaning of the Licensing Act. The other construction would make all classes of the community gamesters; but if dominoes were played at a public-house, and money staked upon the game, that would be gaming, and the publican might then be convicted.

ADEY v. THE DEPUTY-MASTER OF THE TRINITY HOUSE.

County Court—Prohibition—Toll.

Dues payable to the trustees of a harbour by vessels passing within certain limits are tolls, and the question whether dues are payable both on the outward and homeward voyages, is a question of title within sec. 58 of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95 (County Courts Act), and one not within the cognisance of County Courts.

The plaintiff was the owner of a vessel, that on her voyages out from Goole to Memel and back, had passed within the limits within which vessels passing became liable to pay dues to the trustees of Ramsgate Harbour. The trustees claimed the dues as payable on both the voyage out and home; the plaintiff paid the dues on both, but the dues, 1*l.* 4*s.* on the homeward voyage, were paid under protest; and the plaintiff now sued in the Dorsetshire County Court to recover back the 1*l.* 4*s.* paid on the homeward voyage.

Willes, having obtained a rule nisi for a prohibition, on the ground that a question of title came in issue within the meaning of the proviso in 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 28,

Barstow shewed cause.—The word "toll" in the proviso is not applicable to anything of this description. Besides, here the right as to who was to receive the toll, was not in dispute; it is admitted that the trustees are the parties to receive it. The quantum only is in dispute. Where a claim was set up for dues in respect of empty waggons passing along the line by a railway company, it was held that they were not within the proviso of sec. 58. (Hunt v. Great Northern Railway, 10 C.B. 900.) That was something like the present case.

Bramwell and Willes, contrà.—As the title to take the particular dues may come in question, this would seem to be a case within the proviso. [COLERIDGE, J.—The dues payable in respect of light-houses have always been considered tolls.] Hunt v. The Great Northern Railway Company was not the case of tolls, but of charges payable in respect of the use of locomotive power. The question of title involves two things, the existence of the toll and the right of the party claiming to receive it.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—The rule must be made absolute. Looking at the Act of Parliament, the proviso in sec. 58 expressly extends to cases of this sort where the existence of the toll is denied. If the proviso had been confined to cases of dispute between A. & B. as to the right to receive the toll, it would not have applied to this case; but the words here must be applied to cases where both the existence of the toll and the party to whom it is to be paid are in dispute.

COLERIDGE, J.—We ought not to adopt a refined construction to this Act of Parliament. The word title may either import the right of the party to the thing in question, or whether the thing itself exists. In common parlance, it includes both.

WIGHTMAN and ERLE, JJ. concurred.

Reg. v. Mulcock.—M. Chambers and Willes shewed cause against a rule for a criminal information for libel. The applicant, who was the attorney for the parish of St. Mary Newington, complained of a placard published by the defendant relating to certain litigation in which the parish had been involved respecting one of its charities, and which, after speaking of cormorant lawyers, called upon the parishioners, at an approaching vestry meeting, to take care that the poor were not robbed. The answer to the application was, that the applicant had attended the vestry meeting, and openly defended himself from the imputation contained in the alleged libel. Collier and Hawkins, contrà. By the COURT.—The party has chosen his own tribunal, and vindicated himself before the assembled parish. He cannot after that claim the special interference of the Court by way of criminal information.

Rule discharged without costs.

Ex parte Ford.—The Attorney-General and Ogle shewed cause against a rule obtained by Mr. Ford, as executor of Lord Kensington, and calling upon Messrs. Harrison and Tennant to shew cause why they should not deliver up to him a duplicate bill of costs relating to a mortgage transaction in which Lord Kensington had been mortgagor, and clients of Messrs. Harrison and Tennant, the mortgagees. It appeared from the affidavits, that Messrs. H. and T. had delivered a bill of their costs to Lord K. for his examination, as he, being the mortgagor, would be the ultimate paymaster; but at their request, that bill had been returned, and they had given an undertaking to supply Lord K. with a copy, if at any future time he should require it. They were now willing to furnish a copy, upon payment of a sum of 17*l.* as the expense of making it out. Chambers, contrà. By the COURT.—The undertaking of Messrs. H. and T. must be construed according to the relation of the parties; and as they were not the solicitors of Lord K. and he was not primarily liable for the costs, though he was ultimately liable for them, he was only entitled to a copy of the bill upon payment of the costs of making it out. (Sec. 10 of the Attorneys' Act, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.)

Rule discharged with costs.

Jones v. Evans.—This was a rule to review the Master's taxation, he having disallowed the plaintiff the costs of a rule for a new trial, which had been discharged upon terms, and having allowed the defendant the costs of certain witnesses called to prove a right of horseway. This was an action of trespass on foot, and with horses and carriages. Plea—Justifying under a right of way for carriages and horses, as well as on foot. At the trial, a footway was admitted; but as a trespass was proved which could only be justified by a right of way for carriages, the substantial question at the trial was as to the carriageway. A verdict was found for the plaintiff on the plea of justification as well as not guilty. A rule having been obtained for a new trial, that rule was discharged, the plaintiff undertaking to enter the verdict distributively upon not guilty. That had been done; but upon the plea of justification the verdict stood generally for the plaintiff. Morgan Lloyd shewed cause. Welsby and Bevan, contrà. By the COURT.—As the verdict stands absolutely for the plaintiff upon the plea of right, the defendant cannot have the costs of any witnesses upon that issue; but there seems to be reason for regretting that the rule for a new trial was not disposed of differently, and that a new trial was not granted unless the plaintiff would consent to enter the verdict distributively on the plea of right. As to the costs of the rule, it was discharged upon terms, and we think there ought to be no costs on either side.

Rule absolute as to the costs of the witnesses; rule discharged as to the costs of the rule.

Metcalfe v. Brown.—Edward James moved for a prohibition to the judge of the Westmoreland County Court to prevent a rehearing of a case in which judgment was given for the defendant on the 18th of May last, with, however, a reservation of the question of costs. Litigation had been going on between the same parties during the interval; but the lapse of time deprived the judge of jurisdiction to grant a rehearing. REGISTRATION APPEAL.

SOUTHERN DIVISION OF LEICESTERSHIRE.

BERESON, App. v. BURTON, Resp.

Freehold interest.

An Act of Parliament vested certain lands in elected deputies to allot them in parcels to certain freemen of a borough, to hold at a rent, observing rules, &c. so long as they (the tenants) should be willing. A subsequent section of the Act empowered the deputies, with the consent of a majority of the freemen at a meeting, to remove any tenant, and make void the uses, and sell or exchange the land:

Held, that the tenants had a freehold interest in their allotments, not being removable at the mere will of the deputies alone.

This was a consolidated appeal from the decision of Mr. Flower, the revising barrister for the southern division of Leicestershire, who had placed the respondent and twenty-eight others upon the register of voters in respect of a freehold interest in certain land claimed by them, under the following circumstances.

The resident freemen of the borough of Leicester were entitled to certain rights of common. By a series of statutes, of which the latest was the 8 & 9 Vict. c. vi. certain lands were vested in deputies (to be elected by the freemen), and by them to be apportioned into allotments, which were to be let at a rent to freemen not choosing to claim their right of common, to hold so long as they pleased, on payment of rent and observing the rules and regulations. The claimants were tenants of these allotments. The revising barrister decided that they had a freehold interest in the tenements, under the above statute, and placed their names upon the register, and the present appeal was against that decision.

E. W. Cox, for the appellant, stated the case, reading all the portions of the Act of Parliament that related to the interest of the tenants; but, as the decision ultimately turned upon a few sections only, we deem it sufficient to refer to them alone. Sec. 2 directed that deputies should be elected by the freemen to be trustees of the property, to hold it as a corporation. By sec. 8, they are directed to allot the land into parcels, in such manner that every freeman and freeman's widow who should require one might "have and be entitled to the same, of such size or extent, at such yearly rent, in such situation, and upon such terms and conditions as the said deputies, in their discretion, think fit and determine, but so that no such allotment or parcel shall contain a greater quantity than five hundred square yards, and every such allotment or parcel shall be let at an annual rent, to be fixed at the discretion of the said deputies, but not exceeding one farthing for every square yard, nor less than 1s. for every 100 square yards, and the same allotments or parcels shall be respectively held by each freeman and freeman's widow so desiring to become the occupier and obtaining the possession thereof, so long as he or she shall be willing to hold the same, and shall pay the annual rent to be fixed or reserved for the same, and shall conform to and observe the orders, rules, and regulations from time to time to be made by the said deputies." Sec. 15 vests the said lands in the deputies for the time being, and their successors for ever, "in trust for the said resident freemen and freemen's widows of the said borough, according to, and under and subject to the process and authorities, rules and regulations in this Act contained or authorised to be made." The other material section, and that upon which the question mainly turned, was the 17th, which provided that "it should be lawful for the deputies for the time being, with such consent as hereinafter mentioned," i. e. of a majority of the freemen at a meeting to be held for the purpose (sec. 22), "at any time or times after the commencement of this Act, and when and so often as may be thought expedient, to dispose of and convey, by way of absolute sale, all or any part of the said allotments, &c. and the inheritance thereof in fee simple (freed and discharged from all right, claim, and interest whatsoever of the said resident freemen and freemen's widows for the time being, and of every person and persons claiming under or in trust for them) unto any person or persons whomsoever, for such price or prices in money as to them the said deputies shall seem reasonable, &c.; and for the purpose of effectuating such sales, &c. it shall be lawful for the said deputies for the time being, by any deed or deeds, &c. to annul, determine, and make void, all and every the uses, trusts, estates, powers, provisions, rights, interests, rules, and regulations, to, for, upon, with, under, or subject to which the lands, hereditaments, and premises, which shall be so sold or agreed to be sold, as aforesaid, or any part thereof, shall then stand limited and settled, or be subject or liable to." These were the material sections of the Act under which the respondents claim a freehold interest entitling them to vote. He cited Davis v. Waddington, 7 M. & G. 37, in which it had been held that where the appointors to a charity had the power to revoke the appointment, there was no freehold. He admitted that if the 8th section stood alone, there would be considerable doubt whether it was not a freehold, for it would be agreed on all hands that land given to a man to hold so long as he should be willing, would be a freehold, even although a rent and conditions were imposed. But the statute here, by the 17th section expressly empowered the deputies to remove the tenants at their discretion whenever they desired to sell or exchange, and that brought it precisely within the law laid down in Davis v. Waddington. [MAULE, J.—Not so. Here the deputies cannot remove at their own will; they must have the consent of the freeholders, and consequently of the tenant.] No; a consent only of a majority: consequently, even if the particular tenant were to object, he would still be removeable against his will, which seems quite inconsistent with a freehold tenure. [JERVIS, C.J.—According to some early cases, I think it would still be a freehold, even although it depended upon the mere will of another. He also cited Simpson v. Wilkinson, 7 M. & G. 50.]

Hayes, for the respondents, contended that the 8th section, which entitled the tenants to hold "so long as he or she should be willing," gave them a good freehold, which was not affected by the various conditions imposed by the statute. In fact, the only question was that put by Mr. Cox, whether the power to remove given by the 17th section was inconsistent with a freehold interest. He contended, it was not because the deputies could not do it of their own mere will, which was necessary to bring it within the decision in Davis v. Waddington, but they must be set in motion and sanctioned by the freemen of whom the tenants were a portion. He cited also Ashmore v. Lees, 2 C.B. 31.

JUDGMENT.

JERVIS, C.J.—It seems to me, that the view taken by the revising barrister of the claim in the case now under consideration was correct, and that his decision must be affirmed, the claimant having a freehold interest, which entitled him to vote. It is admitted by Mr. Cox, that generally the possession of an estate of an uncertain interest would, without more, be sufficient to confer a freehold, and give a vote; but he says in this case the interest is not uncertain, because it is determinable, as he contends, upon the principle of Davis v. Waddington, at the will of persons who are trustees in the terms of the Act of Parliament. Now, in looking at the Act, by the 8th section, the allottees are to hold so long as he or she shall be willing to hold the property and pay a certain rent fixed and reserved, and conform to the rules and regulations made upon them. It is admitted, and there can be no question, that this, if there was nothing else in the Act, would give to the allottees a freehold. But it is said there are words in the subsequent sections which alter the nature of the estate. Now what Mr. Hayes has said with reference to the estate, that it is difficult to say, if this is not a freehold, what is the estate conferred, is very strong. It is plain it is not an estate for years; it is not an estate at will, because it is not contended that it is held and controlled at the absolute will of the deputies. Mr. Cox says, that it is a sort of parliamentary estate, floating between an estate at will and a freehold, but not sufficient to confer a freehold franchise. But it seems to me it would be highly inconvenient so to hold, and we cannot, consistently with the well-known and admitted rules of law, consider this as otherwise than an estate of freehold. It is plain, according to the authority of Davis v. Waddington, if the deputies had an absolute power to turn out, and they only confer an interest subject to that power, it would be an estate at will, and would not then confer a vote. But this land is not held at the uncontrolled will of the deputies: it is held at the will or concurrent will of others also, who, for this purpose, are strangers, or the body, of whom the allottee is one, and whose consent by the majority represents his consent. But I do not consider it necessary to enter upon this latter proposition. It may be possible to raise it by a refinement in the construction of the Act of Parliament, if the allottee is not a consenting party, if there is the contingency of turning him out by sale or exchange, and if the other freemen are strangers to the transaction. But if the estate is held at the will of a stranger, not under the control of the deputies and lessors or of the allottees, it is held on an uncertain event, because it is uncertain whether they will or will not consent to sell or exchange, and he therefore holds the estate, as described by Coke Lyttleton, in 42 A, upon an uncertain event, and for an uncertain time, and he has therefore by judgment of law an estate for life. In that view of the case the revising barrister is correct in his decision. The claimant had a freehold necessary to confer the franchise, and his name ought to be admitted.

MAULE, J.—This claimant has been rightly held by the revising barrister to be entitled to the franchise, if he is the holder of a freehold for an equitable or legal estate. The question is as to the quantity of the estate. Now, it is well established that an estate which may last for a man's life will be a freehold; properly speaking, an estate limited to a man for life, or given to him for life, determinable on an event which is not in the power of the lord from whom he holds the land, is an estate of freehold;—an estate determinable on a condition, which condition cannot arise from the arbitrary will of the lord, is an estate of freehold. Now, in this case, the estate is determinable upon a certain event depending upon the will of the tenant; of course, it does not interfere with the estate for life that he must observe the rules and pay the rent; it is not contended that this prevents the estate from having the character of a freehold; but the estate is capable of being determined upon an event of a very special kind, that of the deputies choosing to sell with the concurrence of a majority of a meeting of the occupiers, the allottees for the time being. Now that is an event which clearly is not dependent upon the arbitrary will of the lord, or one for which the mere will, however influenced, of the lord is sufficient. The character and the power of an arbitrary removal takes away the freehold character of the property. Now are not the events as much out of the power of the lord of whom the property is held, or in whom the legal estate may be considered as vested, as if he had no power to exercise his will? because, if there is anybody besides whose concurrence is necessary, the circumstance of that concurrence being also necessary does not make the concurrence of the other less necessary to the power of determining the estate; it does not make the tenure less independent of him, or the less confer an estate which may last for life, and which cannot be determined by anybody's arbitrary removal. It may not be brought about by any individual person, and such an estate as that is clearly, according to the well-known cases and principles of law, an estate of freehold. With respect to Davis v. Waddington, it appears to have been perfectly well decided. In that case, the person enjoying the property and claiming to vote was a person who was appointed by those who under the instrument constituting the local law in that case had the power of appointment; he was appointed to continue so long as they should think fit to allow him to continue, and that was held not to be an estate of freehold. That was quite in conformity with the current of authorities, and the common sense and ordinary understanding of mankind upon the subject. It appears clear that there was no freehold. It is equally clear that there is one here, and therefore the revising barrister is quite right.

WILLIAMS, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the estate of those who claimed the franchise in this case was a freehold, inasmuch as it was an estate for an uncertain interest, which may last the life of the tenant, and is not referred to the mere will of the tenant and the person next in succession. The case seems to me mainly to belong to that class of estates for life of which the well-known examples are of an estate to be limited to a person as long as particular trees shall stand; or as long as A. and B. continue to be justices of the peace.

TALFOURD, J.—I am of the same opinion, for the reasons that have been so fully given.

Decision affirmed with costs.

HOLMES v. THE LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

(Before JERVIS, C.J. and MAULE, WILLIAMS, and TALFOURD, JJ.)

Letters patent—Insufficiency of specification—Combination of old parts of a machine with new.

Where a patent is obtained for the improvement of a machine by the combination of old parts with new, the specification must distinguish the old from the new, so that a person possessed of ordinary skill in the matter may know which is old and which is new.

A. invents "an improved turning-table for railway purposes," and obtains a patent for it. In his specification he describes the manner in which the turning-table is formed, and its constituent parts, not saying what was old or what was new. A few weeks previous to the date of his patent B. had, unknown to A. obtained a patent for a turning-table similar in all but one part (which, however, was of great importance and utility):

Held, that the specification was bad for not distinguishing the old parts from the new.

Quære, whether a person who buys a patented article from one who is not licensed to sell it, has it put up by workmen on his premises, and uses it, infringes the patent.

This was an action for the infringement of a patent granted to one Wm. C. Harrison (whom the plaintiff represented), for "an improved turning-table for railway purposes." The specification thus described the invention:—"I do hereby declare the nature of my said invention to consist in supporting the revolving plate or upper platform of the turning-table, as also its stays, braces, arms, and supports on the top of a fixed post, well braced, and resting on or planted in the ground, the top of which post forms a pivot for the table to turn on, while support arms, radiating from a frame work (the weight of which is also sustained on the post), moving round the bottom part of the post with friction rollers, and fastened to the outer edges of the plate, stay the plate at all sides, and keep it steady to receive the superincumbent weight of carriages, or whatever is to be turned upon it."

In the declaration, four breaches were assigned,—first, that the defendants made and manufactured turning-tables protected by the patent; secondly, that they caused them to be made and manufactured; thirdly, that they did vend and put off such tables; fourthly, that they did work and use turning-tables which had been made without license, and in breach of the patent.

The turning-tables in question are those which are seen at railway stations, and are used for the purpose of turning engines and carriages. It appeared that the circumferance of the turning-tables formerly in use rested upon rollers which were themselves supported by a framework. It was found that when a heavy weight was placed upon these tables, the pressure of the circumference upon the rollers, caused the friction to be very great, and the table to be difficult to move. Harrison, therefore, sought to remedy this by the invention which he patented. In his turning-table, the support, instead of being at the circumference, was at the centre. The model of the machine was in appearance something like a basin with a rod passing through the centre, and covered with a plate. Suppose the rod fixed, and the basin turning loose round it, and you have some notion of an improved turning-table. It was a great desideratum to discover some means of preventing the table from being pressed down on one side, and thereby causing a greater and unequal friction at the centre; and Harrison succeeded in doing this by having arms or stays converging from the circumference of the table or plate, to what was called a jacket turning on friction rollers round the bottom of the post. If this had been all, the whole weight of the table, would, through the arms, have rested on the jacket, and the bottom of the post which supported it, and when there was an unequal weight upon the table, that acting through the arms unequally upon the jacket, would have caused it also to press unequally against one side of the post, and so prevent the table from turning easily. This was remedied in Harrison's turning-table by having suspending rods, fastened at the one end to the jacket, and passing perpendicularly upwards through the table, and fastened at the other end to a cap turning loosely on the top of the post. Thus the whole weight was, in the first instance, concentrated by means of the arms upon the jacket, and then through the suspending rods upon the cap and top of the post. For this very useful and ingenious invention the patent in question was granted. It appears, however, that only a few weeks before the date of his patent, a patent had been granted to one Hancock, for a turning-table precisely similar to Harrison's, with the important exception of the suspending rods. Harrison was not aware of this when he obtained his patent, and appears in consequence to have claimed as his invention, not only the suspending rods, but also the arms, stays, &c. It was proved at the trial that the defendants had ordered a turning-table with the suspending rods from a person not licensed to sell them, and had employed workmen to put it up. The material issues were, 1st, upon the plea of not guilty; 2nd and 3rd, on pleas denying the novelty of the invention; and, 4th, upon the sufficiency of the specification at the trial. The jury found everything in the patented article was old except the suspension-rods, and a verdict was entered generally for the plaintiff, with leave to the defendants to move to have it set aside and entered for them. And a rule having previously been obtained,

Watson, Q.C. Hindmarsh, and Price now shewed cause. There are two points raised by the other side: 1st, that although the machine may be new and useful, yet the plaintiff is not entitled to recover by reason of the specification not distinguishing what is new from what is old. But the specification does not claim the patented article as new in all its parts, but as new in the combination of its parts; in fact, it is a claim for a new arrangement of machinery constituting the present turning-table. There may be a patent for a combination of machinery where all the parts are new, or where only one part is new, and the latter is the case in the plaintiff's patent. The specification is not to be read as something specially demurred to, but it is to be read as an ordinary man skilled in the matter would read it; and so read, this specification shews that what is claimed is a combination of the old parts, that is, the horizontal plate, the stays, arms, braces, and post, with the new parts, that is, the suspending-rods; and it is a claim, not for any particular part or parts, but for the whole as a new combination; and in such a case it is not necessary to shew what parts are old and what new. If it were a claim for an improvement, then it would be necessary to shew in what the improvement consists, according to the rule laid down by Lord Eldon in Hill v. Thompson, 3 Meriv. 629. [JERVIS, C.J.—There must be a novelty, and it must be specified, that the public may avoid an infringement, and that after the time of the patent has elapsed, the secret may be known. Here a workman might think he must not make a turning-table with the arms mentioned in your specification.] The result of the invention patented is the suspension of the weight in the centre of the table, or the top of the post, and the workman would know that that would not be effected by the arms alone, and that he might therefore use them without infringing the patent. If I claim A B C and D, and A B C are old, I must state that; but if I claim the combination A B C D, it is not necessary for me to shew that A B C are old. As to the second point raised, that there was no proof of an infringement, there was evidence of the turning-table being on the defendant's premises, and that it was put up there by workmen by the order of the defendants, and user is an infringement.

They cited Cornish v. Reeve, Webs. 501; Propeller Patent, Webs. 656; Haworth v. Hardcastle, 1 Bing. N. C. 182; Sellers v. Dickenson, 5 Ex. 312; Newton v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 5 Ex. 317; Gibson and another v. Brand, Webst. 631; and Novello v. Sudlow (reported under the name of Novello v. Ludlow) 21 L. J. C. P. 161.

Knowles, Q.C. and Webster, in support of the rule.—The specification is bad, according to the rule laid down in many cases. There is nothing new but the suspending rods. The claim, therefore, is not for a new combination of old parts, but for a combination of old parts with one new one; and the question is, whether it is necessary so to describe the machinery that it may be seen that some of the parts are not claimed. We submit that it is. Borill v. Moor, 2 Marsh, 211, per Gibbs, C.J.; Palmer v. Playne, 11 East, ; where the specification was held to be good, because it referred to the former patent, so that the old could be distinguished from the new. Jessop's case, Dav. P. C. 203; where a patent was held to be void, because it extended to the whole watch, and the invention was of a particular movement only. Harrison has not sufficiently specified what his improvement was. He claims for an improved turning table, and the improvement is the suspending rods. He has not described the parts which existed in Hancock's. He claims all but the surface. In truth, he thought he had discovered a way for dispensing with the rollers at the circumference, and he meant to claim this, not being aware of Hancock's improvement. As to the infringement, the purchasing of a patented article from a person not licensed to sell it, is not an infringement, and the defendants in this case have done no more. (Chanter v. Dewhurst, 12 M. & W. 823.) [MAULE, J.—The plaintiff complains of his right of sole making and manufacturing being infringed, and of his monopoly being thereby interfered with. If a defendant does something which is neither working nor making, but still interferes with his monopoly, that is an infringement, though it is practically perhaps somewhat difficult to separate it from working and making. JERVIS, C.J.—The interference, however, must be direct. MAULE, J.—A man may so sell as to interfere with the monopoly. JERVIS, C.J.—Yes, and to sell once would legally be as much an infringement as an extensive sale.] This is a point which has never yet been decided. The case of Gibson and Another v. Brand is the nearest to it. Tindal, C.J. p. 631 of Webster's report of that case, says, "he that causes and procures articles to be made, may be well said to have made them himself."

JERVIS, C.J.—It is unnecessary for us to give an opinion upon the difficult point which has been raised upon the question of infringement. On the other point the rule must be made absolute. No question has been raised with reference to the rule of law which must govern our decision. Every patentee in his specification must describe his invention so that an ordinarily skilled workman may read and understand what part is old and what new. It is also free from doubt that there may be a patent for a combination of old parts with new. The rule which I have stated is not interfered with by the cases cited. It will be found to be adhered to in Russell v. Cowley and Another, Web. P. C. 465; Haworth v. Hardcastle, 1 Bing. N. C. 182; Sellers v. Dickenson, and Newton v. Grand Junction Railway Company; in all which cases the specification either distinguished, or by reference to former patents, gave the means of distinguishing what was old from what was new. It was contended by Mr. Hindmarsh that at the time of the patent Harrison did not know of Hancock's patent. How then could he point out what was old? In fact, he intended to claim what was old; and what is the meaning of what he says in his specification? [His Lordship read the specification.] None of these parts which he mentions are said to be old, and the jury have found everything was old but the suspending rods. He ought to have said he took Hancock's patent and added the rods, so as to avoid the necessity of surrounding rollers. He does not clearly distinguish the old from the new, and therefore he does not comply with the rule of law.

MAULE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The construction of the specification does not present any difficulty. It has been attempted to shew a different construction of the specification from that which, to one reading it with the desire of knowing what it means, it presents. It clearly claims an improvement of the turning-table, consisting of that part of the table which lies below the superficial part. Those lower parts are to afford support, and distribute the weight to fixed points. Those parts are all described together without any distinction between one part and another part. The whole of them, according to the plain sense of the specification, form his improvement. There is nothing to distinguish one from the other, and, therefore, what is said of the rods, that they are new, is impliedly said of the other parts. It would be wonderful if it were not so on the plaintiff's own hypothesis, because he says I never heard of Hancock's patent. I supposed the whole apparatus equally my invention. It is possible a man in that state of mind intending to take out a patent for the whole might nevertheless so describe his invention as to make a distinction between the parts, so that the true sense of what he said might only claim for one part. He might make the distinction without intending it. But though possible, it is not probable. It is manifest that he claims one part as much as another. It turned out upon testimony that the whole was not his invention. The specification would apply as much to the old parts as the new. The suspension rods are new, and it is said that that is what is described in the specification. I am of opinion that it is not. It is practically impossible that he should have meant to claim the rods alone. Therefore there is no difficulty. The paintiff has described one thing, and the evidence is about another.

WILLIAMS and TALFOURD, JJ. concurred.

JERVIS, C.J.—On the issues denying the novelty, the verdict will be for the plaintiff.

Rule absolute, to enter the verdict for the defendant on the first and fourth issues.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by FREDERICK BAILEY and C. J. B. HERTSLET, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Saturday, Nov. 13.

LOWTHER v. WILSON.

In this case, in which it will be observed by the judgment of the Court that no point of law arose, the Court had taken time to consider whether or no they would grant a rule.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B. now said.—In this case, which was tried before the Lord Chief Justice of the C. P. we think there ought to be no rule. The ground of the application was, that there were two contracts apparently opposed to each other; but, in truth, when we come to have the matter explained to us, the second contract is absolutely necessary to be performed before the first could be carried into effect; so that, in fact, they make but one contract. For that there is very good reason, which the Lord Chief Justice has fully explained to us, and therefore we think there ought to be no rule.

ALDERSON, B.—The issue was, whether or not the act of the plaintiff prevented the defendant from performing his contract. The point contended for was, that the party had not furnished proper plans; he had furnished plans of the first, but none of the second. If you could separate one from another, the ruling would be wrong; but as the first contract could not be performed till the second was completed, the non-furnishing of plans for the second was, in truth, an obstacle to the first.

Rule refused.

HENSHAW v. BRICE.

In this case the Court had taken time to consult the learned judge who tried the cause, and it will be seen that the rule nisi was granted in consequence of a misconception of the summing up.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B. said, in this case, which was tried before my brother Coleridge, at Northampton, and in which a rule for a new trial was obtained, on the ground of misdirection, we are of opinion that the rule ought to be discharged. The case was substantially this:—An action was brought (rejecting those matters of complaint that were abandoned at the trial), about some windows, or some other nuisance, and the only remaining matter that was the subject of discussion was the right of the defendant, who occupied the lower premises, to repair them, they being out of repair, doing as little mischief as possible to the superincumbent building which belonged to the plaintiff. The learned judge who tried the case told the jury, as reported by him to us, that the defendant, who occupied the lower apartment or portion of the building, had a right to repair the lower part if it was out of repair, taking all proper and reasonable caution that he should thereby do no mischief to the superincumbent building belonging to the plaintiff, but that if the plaintiff had by his own negligence permitted the building, his upper portion, to get into such a state of ruin, or defect, or damage, as that it was impossible for the defendant to do what he had a right to do, taking all proper caution without doing some injury to the plaintiff's building above, that then the defendant was not responsible for that. A new trial was moved for by Mr. Mellor, on the ground of misdirection, and misdirection only, no other point was made but this, and it was insisted that the learned judge had laid down that the defendant, under these circumstances, had a right to make alteration: we thought that he had not, and accordingly we granted the rule. When the report came in, and we received the learned judge's account of his own summing up, and when cause was shewn, and the whole of the evidence was gone through, it appeared to us perfectly clear either that the learned judge had never used the word "alteration" at all, or if he had, that it was used with reference to the evidence and the acts before the jury as applicable only to the repairs; that appears to be the way in which we think the jury must have understood him, and that was certainly the way in which, from the evidence, it appeared probable it was used, and it being quite clear, we have the learned judge's own report, that he expressed himself merely with reference to the repairs, and probably used no expressions which would mislead the jury that he intended to intimate that the party had any right to make alterations irrespective of repairs. This was the only point made before us either on the motion for a new trial, or during the course of the argument, which occupied one day and a portion of another, but no other point was made. We are of opinion that the learned judge's direction was perfectly correct, and that therefore there is no ground for disturbing the verdict; therefore we think the rule ought to be discharged.

Rule discharged.

MULHALL v. NEVILLE.

Bill of exchange—Evidence—Delivery—Filling in date—Authority.

This was an action on a bill of exchange by the holder and endorsee, for value, against the drawer. The defendant pleaded non fecit. At the trial before the Chief Baron, the defendant offered evidence to shew that the bill being drawn and accepted in blank in 1846, had been handed over to one Cannon, for the purpose of raising money for the accommodation of the acceptor, named Page. Cannon kept the bill till 1849, when he took it to the plaintiff, who filled it up as of 1847, and discounted it. This evidence was rejected, whereupon this rule was obtained for a new trial, on the ground of its rejection.

M. Chambers now appeared for the plaintiff, and argued that there was no limit in point of time to the authority acquired by Cannon when he received the blank bill from the defendant and Page, and that he was at liberty to exercise it at any time within the Statute of Limitations.

Knowles and Bovill, contrà, contended, that as to the Statute of Limitations, it was difficult to say when it would run, whether from the date of the delivery or of the filling up. On the main point, they argued that the authority was limited to a reasonable time, to be judged of by the surrounding circumstances of the case; that, therefore, the evidence was admissible. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

POLLOCK, C.B.—In the case of Mulhall v. Neville, which was tried before me in Middlesex, Mr. Knowles moved for a new trial, and cause was shewn by Mr. Chambers, we are of opinion that the point is of sufficient importance to be considered, and that there ought to be a new trial for that purpose. It is not necessary to say more than that there ought to be an opportunity of seeing whether there was any such circumstance as would justify either the Court or a jury in laying down a rule that there may be some reasonable limitation under such circumstances. The case certainly, and the evidence tendered, might have given rise to a question, and I concur with the rest of the Court in thinking that there ought to be a new trial, when an opportunity will be offered of considering the matter more fully.

Rule absolute.

CREW v. HOLROYD and ANOTHER.

County Court—Prohibition—Title to land.

Plaintiff being the owner of a cottage, underlet to one of the defendants the whole except (as he alleged) two rooms reserved thereout for himself. Defendant alleged that the plaintiff had let him the whole cottage, and he accordingly, with the other defendant, entered those two other rooms and removed plaintiff's furniture. Plaintiff brought an action against them in the County Court for doing so. The defendants contended the County Court judge had no jurisdiction, as the title to a corporeal hereditament came in question. The County Court judge decided he had jurisdiction, and gave a verdict for the plaintiff for 25l.

Held, that the County Court judge had not, in this case, jurisdiction, as title to land was in dispute, and that a writ of prohibition must issue.

A plaint had been entered in the County Court of Cheshire by the plaintiff against the defendants to recover damages from them for breaking and entering his apartments and carrying away his goods. It appeared that the plaintiff, being owner of a cottage, had underlet, as he alleged, all of it, except two rooms, which he had reserved for his own use, the defendants contending he had underlet the whole to the defendant Holroyd without any exception or reservation, and Holroyd justified entering himself, and authorising the other defendant's doing so, and removing the furniture therefrom. Under these circumstances, the defendants contended, as title to land came in question, the jurisdiction of the County Court was taken away; but the learned judge thought otherwise, and determined it to be a question of fact only, he accordingly proceeded with the case, and gave a verdict for the plaintiff for 25*l.* damages. A rule nisi for a prohibition having been obtained,

H. Hill, Q.C. (Wheeler with him) shewed cause.—The question is, whether, under the circumstances, title to land here is in question, according to the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 58, and the decisions pronounced upon its construction. The words of that Act are, "that the [County] Court shall not have cognisance of any action of ejectment, or in which the title to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments, or to any toll, fair, market, or franchise, shall be in question." A mere question of occupation is not enough; it must be something of a nature which is capable of being inherited. [PARKE, B.—The plain question is, whether title to corporeal hereditaments is in question. You will not contend that it must be a fee simple or fee tail. Can a County Court judge dispose of a question of title depending upon a valuable lease for a long term of years?] In Lloyd v. Jones, 6 C. B. 81, it was held that, to oust the jurisdiction of the County Court by reason of the proviso now in question, the claim set up must be a bonâ fide one, and the right one that can exist in point of law; and there Wilde, C.J. in delivering the considered judgment of the Court said, "Hereditament is defined in the text-books of authority to signify all such things, whether corporeal or incorporeal, which a man may have to him and his heirs by way of inheritance, and which, if they be not otherwise bequeathed, come to him who is next of blood, and not to the executors or administrators as chattels do." In Fearon v. Norvall, 5 D. & L. 439, it was held that a judge of a County Court had jurisdiction to inquire whether the tenancy was determined by a legal notice to quit, and that his decision on the fact was conclusive and could not be questioned. On a motion for a prohibition in Thompson v. Ingham, 15 Law T. 23; 19 L. J. 189, Q.B.; and 14 Jurist, 429, it was determined where a question is raised incidentally before the judge of a County Court on the trial of an action over which he had original jurisdiction under the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 58, whether title to land is in dispute between the parties, the judge has jurisdiction to inquire and decide whether title really is in dispute, but his decision is not final; and if he decides that title did not come in dispute, and the Superior Court is satisfied that title did come in dispute, a prohibition will issue against him. Should the Court think that title to land in this case did really come in question, and if title to any hereditaments be held to mean title in any hereditaments, I must say I cannot see, at present, that I have a sufficient answer to this rule.

Cowling, in support of the rule, not called upon.

Rule absolute, with costs only of this rule.

GLOVER v. JONES.

Money had and received—Privity of contract—Servant's liability.

Plaintiff and defendant were servants to Dangerfield and Co. plaintiff as a stage-coach driver, defendant as clerk and book-keeper. Defendant usually paid plaintiff his wages and made up all the accounts, entering the plaintiff's moneys in the books as being settled weekly; defendant and Dangerfield and Co. settled monthly. Plaintiff having, as he alleged, 38l. due, applied to defendant for it, admitting he had retained of Dangerfield and Co.'s eleven journeys of 40 miles each money and parcels: defendant sent him 20s. on account, and promised to pay the balance on plaintiff's calling to adjust accounts. Plaintiff afterwards wrote to Dangerfield for the balance stating he should look to Dangerfield for pay-

EXCHEQUER.

The plaintiff subsequently brought this action for it against the defendant:

Held, that the action for money had and received by the coachman against the clerk could not be maintained.

Debt.—The declaration contained counts for money had and received. Money paid and account stated.

Plea.—The general issue.

Plaintiff and defendant were both servants to the same masters (Messrs. Dangerfield and Co.), who were large coach proprietors. The plaintiff was engaged as a coachman by Dangerfield and Co. to drive one of their coaches from Gloucester to Chepstow, and back. Defendant was a clerk and book-keeper to Dangerfield and Co. at their office at Gloucester; it was the defendant's duty, as such clerk and book-keeper, to keep the accounts between the plaintiff and Dangerfield and Co. which he did, and pay the plaintiff from time to time for Dangerfield and Co. the wages due to the plaintiff, as also the money paid by him for tolls, horse-keepers, &c. The plaintiff's services terminated in April 1851, and in September 1851, he wrote to the defendant, stating that the sum due to him for wages, tolls, &c. amounted to 38*l.* but that he had received the up-road money and for parcels from the 7th March to the 29th March, besides two down journeys. Defendant, January 4, 1852, sent him 20*l.* on account by a messenger, with a letter stating that he would pay him the balance if he would call at the office to examine and see how the accounts stood. Plaintiff, 10th February, 1852, wrote to Mr. Dangerfield requesting payment of his account, and stating that he should look to him, Dangerfield, for it. Some time afterwards this action was brought for 19*l.* odd, against the present defendant; the cause was tried before the under-sheriff of Gloucester, when the above-mentioned facts and letters were proved, and also by Mr. Dangerfield, that the defendant regularly entered in his books the plaintiff's wages, &c. as paid weekly, which he (Dangerfield) allowed to him; that defendant made up his accounts with Dangerfield and Co. monthly; that plaintiff applied to him for payment, and he referred him to Jones (the defendant). The under-sheriff nonsuited the plaintiff, giving him leave to move to set the same aside; a rule nisi having been obtained for that purpose, and to enter a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount claimed, or for a new trial.

F. Bailey shewed cause.—The plaintiff and defendant both live at Gloucester, and the action being for only 19*l.* odd, should have been brought, if at all, in the County Court; but the action is clearly not maintainable. It should have been brought against Dangerfield and Co. and not against the defendant; there is no privity of contract between the defendant and the plaintiff, nor any consideration moving from the one to the other. A privity of contract may be sometimes inferred, though not directly established, to support an action for money had and received, which was at one time considered a kind of equitable action, but the equity here would depend on the state of the accounts between the plaintiff and Dangerfield and Co. and upon the evidence as given at the trial: it would appear the plaintiff's demand had been satisfied before action brought. The plaintiff, by his letter in September, says, there is due to him for tolls, wages, &c. 38*l.* and admits therein that he has received the up-road money and parcels three days a week for upwards of three weeks, besides two down journeys; there would therefore be eleven journeys, at least, of about forty miles, from Gloucester to Chepstow, the whole receipts of which the plaintiff admits he has taken and retained; this must amount to more than 18*l.*: the defendant after receiving that letter sent him 20*l.* on account, and asked him to call to settle the difference. the defendant says, therefore, the plaintiff is rather over than under paid; the receipt for the 20*l.* is given to the defendant "on account of the railway Chepstow coach." The defendant's conduct throughout is only as the mere clerk or servant (for he cannot be considered an agent) of Dangerfield and Co. and if he had paid over the whole 38*l.* seeing the plaintiff had received his master's money for eleven journeys on account and retained it, he would have violated his duty. The defendant was always willing to examine the accounts, and either pay or receive any balance, but he had not, nor was there any evidence that he had entered into any binding engagement to hold the money given him by Dangerfield and Co. for the plaintiff's use, and he is not therefore liable. In Howell v. Batt, 5 B. & Adol. 504, the defendant was office-keeper of an Exeter and London coach, and servant to C. a proprietor at Exeter, where the office kept by defendant was. Defendant from time to time made up accounts of the shares of profits due to the several proprietors and sent them to the proprietors, taking the money from a balance of C.'s, which he had in hand. On one occasion defendant sent to plaintiff, a proprietor, a packet purporting to contain 23*l.* which was due to him, but in reality containing 20*l.* only. Plaintiff sued defendant for money had and received to his use: it was held that defendant was not liable, there being no privity of contract between him and the plaintiff; and that he was not precluded from this defence by having told the plaintiff (after action brought) that the defendant had had the 23*l.* of C. and sent it to the plaintiff, and debited C. with it. [PARKE, B.—You say that the defendant to become liable should, as it were, have attorned to the plaintiff, entered into a binding contract to hold the money for him, and so induced him to have given up all claim on Dangerfield and Co. and looked solely to the defendant?] Certainly, that is the effect of your lordship's judgment in Howell v. Batt, but after the defendant here had written to the plaintiff the letter of January 4th (upon which the other side relies), the plaintiff writes, on the 10th February, 1852, to Mr. Dangerfield for payment, and gives him notice expressly that he shall look to him (Dangerfield) for payment. [PLATT, B.—If the plaintiff had sued Dangerfield and Co. they might have had an answer to it?] Yes; they would plead payment and set-off, and be enabled to prove it to defeat the action. Baron v. Husband, 4 B. & Adol. 611; Wharton v. Walker, 4 B. & C. 163; and Barlow v. Bourne, 16 M. & W. 128, are cases upon the same principle. (He was then stopped by the Court.)

Gray, contrà, called upon to support the rule.—It is clear, upon the evidence given at the trial, that the defendant had actually received the whole amount due to the plaintiff, because Mr. Dangerfield was called and examined, and he stated that the defendant regularly every week entered in his book as paid, the wages and tolls, &c. due to the plaintiff, and that he, Dangerfield, allowed it to the defendant; he therefore had received the plaintiff's money for him. The plaintiff then applies to him for it, and on January 4th, 1852, he sends him 20*l.* on account, with the letter which has been read, in which he promises the plaintiff to pay him the balance; which he has never done. That is, therefore, money had and received by him to the plaintiff's use. The receipt, too, which had been given for the 20*l.* was in form:—"Received of Mr. Joseph Jones the sum of 20*l.* on account," &c. shewing the money was received of the defendant and taking credit to himself for the payment. This receipt was drawn by the defendant. When the plaintiff found the defendant would not pay him as usual, and as he had promised, he then applied to Dangerfield, whose answer was—"I have nothing to do with it; go to Jones;" which also shews that the defendant had received or been allowed the money due to the plaintiff by Dangerfield. [MARTIN, B.—What is there to prove that Dangerfield and Co. might not, previous to the action, have countermanded their order to the defendant, who was only their servant, and requested him not to pay the money to the plaintiff for some reasons known to themselves, would they not have a perfect right to do so?] As they paid the amount owing to the plaintiff to the defendant for him which was proved, the defendant having paid a part of it to the plaintiff, with a written promise to pay him the remainder, and on application by him to Messrs. Dangerfield and Co. for payment, after he finds that he cannot get it from the defendant, they refer him to the defendant for payment; this would shew there was no such supposed countermand on their part. The plaintiff in this case had leave reserved to move, and the rule is to set aside the nonsuit and enter a verdict for the plaintiff, or for a new trial. The question then is, whether there was any evidence to go to the jury. The defendant's letter to the plaintiff of the 4th January, 1852, the form of the receipt of that date for the 20*l.* drawn by the defendant and given him by the plaintiff, with the testimony of Mr. Dangerfield and the plaintiff as given, was some evidence for the jury to support this action.

POLLOCK, C.B.—That certainly does not appear to me to be the effect of the "leave to move" written upon the undersheriff's notes before us. I think the only question intended to be reserved to the plaintiff to move was whether the under-sheriff was correct in directing a nonsuit, and I must say I think he was.

PARKE, B.—Yes; that was all that was intended. The nonsuit was quite right; besides which there was no evidence under the circumstances in this case I think that should have been left to the jury.

PLATT and MARTIN, BB. concurred.

Rule discharged with costs.

WALTERS v. HOWELLS.

Special jury—Costs of.

A declaration in trespass contained five counts. Defendant traversed the whole. A special jury was then obtained. Defendant subsequently amended his pleas, and suffered judgment by default as to the two last counts in the declaration. On the trial the plaintiff succeeded on the first issue of not guilty, but failed as to the remainder; and the jury assessed the damages at 40s. upon that which judgment went by default. The judge certified for the special jury: Held, that the plaintiff was not entitled to the costs of the special jury.

This was an action of trespass. The declaration contained five counts. As to two of them, judgment was suffered to go by default, and the three others were traversed. The cause was tried by a special jury before Martin, B. The plaintiff obtained a verdict on the first issue of "not guilty," and the defendant had the verdict returned for him on the remaining issues. As to the two counts upon which judgment was suffered by default, the jury assessed the damages thereon at 40s. The learned judge certified for the special jury, and the Master allowed plaintiff the costs thereof. A rule having been obtained for the Master to review his taxation,

Field shewed cause.—The judge has given his certificate for the special jury, and the plaintiff is entitled to the costs. When the special jury was first applied for, the defendant denied the whole of the plaintiff's case; but he subsequently amended his pleas by striking out those applicable to the two last counts of the declaration. [PARKE, B.—The defendant has substantially the whole verdict. POLLOCK, C.B.—You lost the cause, and the judge's certificate, therefore, does not help you.] But the plaintiff obtained 40*s.* on the assessment of damages upon the judgment by default. [POLLOCK, C.B.—No issue was joined there upon the assessment of damages by default.] The plaintiff would, under the circumstances of this case, be entitled to the costs of the special jury, unless there be some Act of Parliament to deprive him of them. He referred to Vickers v. Gallimore, 5 Bing. 196; Haldane v. Beauclerk, 3 Ex. 658; and see also Sharland v. Loring, 1 Ex. 375.

THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. MORGAN.—Garth moved to enlarge the rule herein. Granted.

BRAHAM v. KING.—Petersdorff shewed cause against a rule obtained herein to set aside the trial, plaintiff's verdict, and all subsequent proceedings, on the ground that the record upon which the trial took place did not correspond or agree either with the issue or the declaration. The defendant was sued as acceptor of a bill of exchange for 49*l.* which one Jay had drawn upon the defendant; but in the declaration, and in the issue, it was by mistake described as payable to the order of the acceptor, instead of the drawer,—in the record it was put right, that is, the bill was described properly as payable to the order of the drawer. [PARKE, B.—The record did not agree with the issue and declaration, and the alteration it appears was made without authority, it is clearly an irregularity.] He admitted it was an irregularity, but under the circumstances, seeing that it was a mistake purely technical, quite a technical error, what terms would the Court impose? PARKE, B.—The proceedings must be set aside, and you must pay the costs. [H. T. Cole, in support of the rule, was not called upon.]

Rule absolute accordingly; venue to be changed.

STEARMAN v. KNIGHT.—Crowder, Q.C. and Dowman, shewed cause in this case, which had been referred to the Master. The Master's report was read. Prendergast, Q.C. contrà. The attorney to pay all the costs.

MARKS v. HAMILTON.—Sir J. Cockburn shewed cause against the rule herein Creasy, contrà.

HANCOCK v. MOULTON.—Referred to Parke, B. at chambers.

BATES v. ROTHERHAM.—M. Smith shewed cause against a rule obtained to rescind an order of Martin, B. which directed the plaintiff to produce a log-book, and in the meantime proceedings to be stayed. The action was upon a policy against the defendant as underwriter. The defendant could not safely plead until he had seen the log-book. The venue is in London, and the cause cannot be tried until February. Jas. Wylde, contra.—The log-book is in the custody of the American consul; the plaintiff will do all he can to produce it; but the object of the defendant is to delay the cause. He can certainly plead first, and if it should be necessary to amend the pleas after seeing the log-book, he may then amend. He cited Goldschmidt v. Marryat, 1 Campb. 559, and notes to that case.

To stand over until 20th January, plaintiff undertaking to do all in his power to produce the log-book; if not produced then, defendant to plead.

ASTON and ANOTHER v. LEDGER and TWO OTHERS.—Tried before Martin, B. Verdict for the plaintiffs. The action was for goods sold and delivered to defendants, for the repairs of a ship, of which they were registered owners. H. Hill moved, pursuant to leave to set aside the verdict, and enter a nonsuit. He cited Wyatt v. Marquis of Hertford, 3 East, 147; and Robinson v. Read, 9 B. & C. 449. Rule refused.

LEWIS v. DANIELS.—James, Q.C. and Pearson, showed cause against a rule obtained to set aside the trial, verdict, and subsequent proceedings, on the ground that the cause had been tried in Term, as a common jury cause, notwithstanding the defendant had obtained a rule for a special jury. Although defendant had obtained his rule for a special jury, yet no jury was struck, nor any notice given even to strike it until the day after the cause had been actually tried in its turn, and disposed of by a common jury; the defendant had given no notice to the sheriff, that the cause was to be tried by a special jury, pursuant to the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76 (the Common Law Procedure Act), s. 112, nor had the cause been marked in the marshal's book as a special jury cause, which was necessary according to Dawson v. Shiels, 1 L. M. & P. 161. [PARKE, B.—The 113th section of the Act you refer to, appears to me to relate only to causes to be tried after Term, not to those intended to be tried in Term.] Then according to the old practice, the defendant should have struck his special jury, and have taken his original rule to the marshal, that it might have been properly marked in the marshal's book as a special jury cause; this was not done, and the sittings had been perfectly regular. Brunwell, Q.C. replied. The Common Law Procedure Act, as has been suggested, does not apply, and the practice of the Court previously was, that whenever a rule for a special jury had been obtained, the cause was not triable in town, it went over as a matter of course until after Term, in the absence of any special motion upon the subject from the other side; if a motion were made in reference to it, then the Court imposed such terms upon the parties as the justice of the case required,—there is an affidavit of merits. PARKE, B.—Under all the circumstances of the case, I think the rule ought to be made absolute, the costs to abide the event. Consented to.

EDWARDS and OTHERS, Overseers, &c. v. ROBERTS and OTHERS.—Appeal from the County Court of Shropshire, holden at Oswestry. The COURT, without calling on the respondent, Affirmed the decision of the Court below with costs.

EBERHARD v. BUSCHEK.—This was a demurrer to a declaration, which was heard to-day by consent and special appointment. The question turned on the construction of an agreement, and ultimately was arranged thus,—

The plaintiff to amend without costs, defendant to have leave to add a plea in the course of the following day.

ERRORS FROM THE EXCHEQUER.

(Before COLERIDGE, MAULE, WIGHTMAN, WILLIAMS, ERLE, TALFOURD, and CROMPTON, JJ.)

THE LANCASHIRE AND YORKSHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY v. THE EAST LANCASHIRE RAILWAY COMPANY.—In this case a special verdict had been taken, and ultimately the case was ordered to stand over that the special verdict might be amended.

WESSON v. ALLCARD. Judgment affirmed.

BAIL COURT.

Reported by T. W. SAUNDERS, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, Nov. 23.

(Before Mr. Justice CROMPTON.)

CLERK, Appellant, v. THE PARISH OFFICERS OF BINBROOK, Respondents.

Appeal—Arbitration—Costs—12 & 13 Vict. c. 45.

An appeal against a poor-rate was, under the provisions of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 13, referred to arbitration, the arbitrator to have the same discretion and powers as to costs as the Court of Quarter Sessions possessed. The arbitrator made his award, and ordered that the appellant should, within one month, pay the respondents their costs of the appeal and the reference:

Held, that the arbitrator should himself have ascertained the amount of costs, and that the award was bad for this reason, and was referred back to the arbitrator.

This was an appeal at the Quarter Sessions for Lindsey, Lincolnshire, against a poor-rate; and at the trial it was agreed between the parties that the matter of the appeal should be referred to arbitration, under the provisions of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, s. 13, and the arbitrator was to have the same discretion and powers as to costs as the Court of Quarter Sessions possessed. The arbitrator duly made his award in favour of the respondents, and he ordered that the appellant should, within one month, pay the respondents their costs of the appeal and the reference; but he did not himself ascertain the amount of such costs.

Manisty upon this applied, on the behalf of the respondents, for a rule calling upon the appellant to shew cause why the award should not be referred back to the arbitrator, or why it should not be set aside, on the ground that the arbitrator had not ascertained and adjudged the amount of costs to be paid by the appellant to the respondents; and in the event of the award being set aside, why the justices should not be directed to enter continuances and hear the appeal.

Boden now showed cause, and admitted that the arbitrator was wrong in not assessing the costs himself, which was a power delegated to him by the reference; and whilst he was ready to consent to the award being set aside, and the case going again to the Sessions, he objected to its being again sent to the arbitrator, unless the whole question were again open for discussion before him; and he contended that the Court has no power to send back the award merely to be amended as to a part. (Nicholls v. Warren, 2 Dowl. & L. 550; Morgan v. Smith, 1 Dowl. 617, N.S.; Webber v. Lee, 1 Dowl. & L. N.S.)

Hayes, who appeared for one of the parties, and Manisty, who appeared in support of the rule, were not called on.

CROMPTON, J. thought that the award ought to be sent back to the arbitrator, who had made a slip in awarding the costs in the wrong way. He would give no opinion as to what the arbitrator ought to do, though he should not apprehend that he would think it necessary to go into the case again, but merely to correct the mistake he had committed with reference to this one matter.

Rule absolute to refer back to the arbitrator.

REG. v. THE RECORDER OF SHREWSBURY.

Appeal—Order of removal—Notice of chargeability.

An order of removal having been made, the same was duly served, but no notice of chargeability was ever given. The appellants thereupon appealed, and one of their grounds of appeal was, that no notice of chargeability had been sent to them. At the trial of the appeal, the respondents admitted that this ground of appeal was true, but contended that, in the absence of any notice of chargeability, there was no grievance against which the appellants had a right to appeal, and that the Court had no jurisdiction, therefore, to hear the appeal. Upon this the Sessions refused to hear the appeal, and upon an application to this Court for a mandamus,

Held, that the Sessions were wrong: for that the omission to send notice of chargeability was a good ground of appeal, and that the appeal ought to have been heard.

In this case an order of removal had been made from the parish of St. Chad, Shrewsbury, to the parish of Shawbury, Salop. The respondents served the order of removal, but omitted to send any notice of chargeability or grounds of removal. The appellants in due time served a notice and grounds of appeal, and amongst the latter were, that no notice of chargeability or grounds of removal had been sent to the appellants. On the appeal coming on for trial at the Shrewsbury Sessions in July last, the appellants relied upon the foregoing omission on the part of the respondents, who at once admitted the truth of the objection, but insisted that as no notice of chargeability had been sent, no grievance had arisen against which the appellants had any right to appeal, and that the Court had no jurisdiction to hear the case. The recorder being of opinion that this was a sound objection, dismissed the appeal.

Pashley, Q.C. therefore, in this Term obtained a rule calling upon the recorder (and the respondents) to shew cause why he should not enter continuances and hear the appeal; and in support of his motion he cited Reg. v. Brixham, 8 A. & E. 375; and Reg. v. Mylor, 11 Q. B. 55; 17 L. J. 6, M.C.

Scotland now shewed cause, and contended that until the service of the notice of chargeability no grievance had arisen against which the appellants had a right to appeal, and that as no such notice had been served in this case, there was nothing against which the appellants had a right to appeal, and that their appeal was therefore properly dismissed; and that although it was held in Reg. v. Brixham, 8 A. & E. 375, that where an order of removal was served without notice of chargeability, the parish might take advantage of such omission as a ground of appeal against the order, yet that case is not an authority against the respondents, inasmuch as in that case it was assumed all through that the right of appeal had accrued, and that the non-sending of the notice of chargeability was therefore a good ground, and it was never contended that no right of appeal whatever had accrued, which, had it been, may have altered the judgment of the Court. [CROMPTON, J.—You say that the counsel in that case should have adopted a different line of argument, and then the decision of the Court would have been otherwise. I shall have to go very far to say that these cases were badly decided. I am not likely to overrule a decision of the full Court, merely because a particular line of argument was not adopted.] The point was never taken. This case may well be decided a different way without affecting Reg. v. Brixham. (He cited also R. v. The Justices of Salop, 6 Dowl. 28; 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, ss. 79, 84; R. v. The Justices of the West Riding, 2 Dowl. & L. 488, 14 Law J. 11, M. C.; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 31, s. 9; R. v. Mylor, 11 Q.B. 55; 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12.)

Pashley, Q.C. (with him Archbold), contended that the appellants were right in appealing; that the real grievance was the making of the order of removal, and that Reg. v. Brixham was an authority conclusively in his favour. (He cited Reg. v. Brixham; Reg. v. Mylor, 19 Vin. Ab. tit. "Sessions of the Peace;" and R. v. St. Mary, Whitechapel, 12 Q.B. 126.)

CROMPTON, J.—I must be guided in this case by Reg. v. Brixham, which is a distinct authority in favour of the appellants. I cannot take upon myself to overrule it. When the full Court has decided that this is a good ground of appeal (however strongly it may be put that the point now taken was not taken then),—I cannot think of overruling it. Rule absolute.

Ex parte EDWARD THOMAS ROE, M.D.

A rule for a criminal information for a libel was refused, where it appeared that the applicant had himself resorted to the press upon the subject respecting which his complaint arose.

Crowder, Q.C. (Phinn with him), on the 22nd instant moved for a rule calling upon Charles Jackson to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for having written and published in September last a libellous pamphlet reflecting upon his character. It appeared that at the last Exeter assizes, a cause was tried, in which the said Charles Jackson and Louisa his wife were plaintiffs, and Dr. Roe the defendant, the action being to recover damages for the surgical mistreatment, by the defendant, of the female plaintiff. At the trial, the defendant obtained a verdict. Afterwards, Dr. Roe published an account of the trial, in which he himself made some comments on the facts and evidence. Subsequently, the male plaintiff also published an account of the trial, and introduced it with observations very derogatory to the defendant's moral character. It was in respect of these observations that the present application was made.

CROMPTON, J. said he would look at the two pamphlets, and form his opinion from them.

Cur. adv. vult.

To-day CROMPTON, J. said he had carefully considered the application, and having read the two pamphlets, and finding that Dr. Roe had, in his publication, made comments upon the case, he thought that, having thus resorted to the press, he could not now ask for the interposition of this Court, but must be left to his ordinary remedies.

Rule refused.

County Court—Prohibition.

Upon an application for a prohibition to restrain a County Court (after trial) from proceeding with a plaint, on the ground that it involved a title to land, this Court refused the rule, it appearing that no objection of the kind was taken in the court below.

Hawkins moved for a rule calling upon the judge of the Surrey County Court, holden at Farnham, to shew cause why a writ of prohibition should not issue to restrain him from further proceeding in a certain plaint, in which Sarah Robinson was the plaintiff, and the present applicant the defendant. From the affidavit used for this motion it appeared that this was an action brought to recover the sum of 5*l.* for the use and occupation of certain premises; and that on the trial the plaintiff obtained judgment. It further appeared that the question at the trial involved a title to land; but no objection on that account was then raised before the judge of the County Court.

His LORDSHIP thought upon this, that the rule should be refused, it being quite immaterial, as far as the present application was concerned, what was the real state of the facts, if no point with reference to them was made before the County Court judge; for that the judgments of these Courts were not to be impeached without good and sufficient cause, and it could never be permitted to a party to make one case before the judge below, and failing there, to come to this court on an entirely new state of facts, and so seek to obtain a prohibition. He also thought, that if the same facts now stated in the affidavits had been brought before the Court below, the judge would have decided differently; but that on the ground that they were not, and the question was not raised, this rule should be refused. Rule refused.

AMIES v. KELSEY.

Patent—Infringement—Application for an inspection.

Under the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 42 (The Patent Law Amendment Act), an application for an inspection may be made at any time after action brought, even before declaration. The affidavit, however, upon which the application is made, should shew that such inspection is necessary, and how.

On a former day, Webster obtained a rule, calling upon the defendant to allow the plaintiff and his witnesses to have an inspection of his machinery for the manufacture of braid, which machinery the plaintiff alleges is an infringement of his patent, and for which infringement this action is brought.

By the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 42 (Patent Law Amendment Act), it is enacted, that "In any action in any of her Majesty's Superior Courts at Westminster, and in Dublin, for the infringement of letters patent, it shall be lawful for the court in which such action is pending, if the Court be then sitting, or if the Court be not sitting, then for a judge of such court, on the application of the plaintiff or defendant respectively to make such order for an injunction, inspection, or account, and to give such direction respecting such action, injunction, inspection, and account, and the proceedings therein, respectively, as to such Court or judge may seem fit."

In the present case the plaintiff had not declared.

Wednesday, Nov. 24.—Hindmarch shewed cause, dismissed, first, that the application was premature, having been made before declaration, since, until the plaintiff declared, there could be no proof of what his action was really brought for, and that, according to the practice of a Court of Equity, before an inspection would be granted, the plaintiff must have his bill upon the file. [CROMPTON, J.—If the plaintiff waited until after declaration, they might have to amend.] Secondly, it is not shewn on the part of the plaintiffs that this inspection is at all necessary, or that they in any way stand in need of it for the purpose of sustaining their case.

Webster, in support of the rule, contended that the application was not premature, and that it sufficiently appeared upon the affidavits that an inspection was necessary. Cur. adv vult

CROMPTON, J. (to-day), after stating the facts, said that on the argument, two objections were taken first, that the application was premature As regards this objection, I see no reason for limiting the application to a period after the delivery of the declaration. I think it may be made as well before as after. Then it was objected, secondly, that no case for an inspection had been made out and it was agreed on both sides, that the object of the Act was to give the parties the same rights as they would have had in a suit in Equity However it is not necessary to decide what a Court of Equity would do, nor to consider in what case it would grant an inspection, because I am of opinion that upon the affidavits there is no suggestion of what really is the information that is required from the inspection I think, therefore, that I ought to discharge this rule, but without prejudice to the plaintiff's coming again with better materials at a future time

REG v. THE JUSTICES OF DERBYSHIRE, ex parte JAMES GRIFFIN

Appeal—Entering at Sessions—Discretion of justices

Where justices at Sessions have a discretion and they exercise it, this Court will not interfere even though the parties have exercised it unwisely But in a case where it was alleged there was a rule of Sessions which had not been complied with by the appellant and, in the exercise of their discretion, the justices refused to hear the appeal this Court, on an application for a mandamus to compel the justices to hear the appeal made such rule absolute, as it was left in considerable doubt what, in fact, was the rule of Sessions with which it was alleged the appellant had not complied

In this case, one James Green had been convicted by certain justices in Derbyshire, under the Vagrant Act (5 Geo 4, c 83), and was ordered to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for three calendar months Against this conviction he gave due notice of appeal, &c The ensuing Quarter Sessions for the county of Derby were held on Tuesday the 19th of October last, the first day being entirely devoted to the general business of the county, and no trials taking place until the following day The witnesses had been bound over to attend on Wednesday the 20th. The attorney of the appellant (who was from London), early on the morning of the 20th before the sitting of the court, applied at the office of the clerk of the peace to enter the appeal, when he was told that he was too late for that it should have been entered the day before Upon this he applied at the sitting of the Court for leave then to enter it, but was refused, on the alleged ground that by the practice of the Sessions it should have been entered the day before By the affidavits used in shewing cause it was stated, that by a rule of the Sessions (made in 1830), appellants were to enter their appeals by twelve o'clock on the first day of the Sessions But in the advertisements in the public papers of the holding of the Sessions, appellants were required to enter their appeals before eleven o'clock on that day, and there was some vagueness as to whether or not appellants might not enter appeals at any time on that day

Upon these facts, Huddleston moved this Court for a rule for a mandamus, commanding the Sessions to receive and enter the appeal, and he relied upon Rex v. The Justices of Wiltshire, 10 East 404 Rex v. The Justices of Lancashire 7 B & C 691 and Reg. v. The Justices of Staffordshire, 4 A & E 849.

Boden shewed cause (22nd Nov.), and contended that as the appellant had not complied with the rule of Sessions, and had entered his appeal too late, he was not entitled as of right, to have it heard, and although the Sessions, in their discretion, may have received the appeal, yet as an application was made to them for that purpose, and they had exercised their discretion and refused the application, this Court would not interfere. He also contended that the case of R. v. The Justices of Wiltshire, 10 East, 404, had been so broken in upon by subsequent cases, that it could not now be considered as an authority. He further argued, that unless a rule of Sessions were manifestly unreasonable, or contrary to law, this Court would never interpose upon the subject. (Reg v The Justices of Montgomeryshire, 3 New Sess. Cas 78; Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, 3 New Sess. Cas 531; R. v. Monmouthshire, 3 Dowl. 306, R v The Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 5 B & Ad. 667, Parke's, J Judgment.

Huddleston, in support of the rule, argued that this Court has a kind of visitatorial power over the Sessions, and will interfere with their discretion when it has been unfairly exercised, that R v The Justices of Wiltshire 10 East, 404, is still a ruling case and is supported by the subsequent one of R v The Justices of Lancashire, 7 B & C 691, that, looking at all the circumstances of the present case, it must be admitted that the appellant had been hardly dealt by and this Court might properly say that the Sessions had not properly exercised their discretion and that the appeal ought to be heard (Reg v The Justices of the West Riding 2 Q B 705, Reg v The Justices of Merionethshire, 1 New Sess Cas 277 Cur. adv vult

CROMPTON J to day gave judgment as follows —After stating the facts and remarking that it was a case in itself of considerable hardship he said —It appears that the usage of the Sessions was for the justices to meet on the Tuesday and for the trial of matters to commence on the Wednesday and that in this case the witnesses were bound over to attend on the Wednesday On applying however to enter his appeal early on the Wednesday morning the appellant's attorney was informed that he was too late, for that it should have been entered the day before but that he might make a special application to the Court which he accordingly did and if made to the discretion of the Court there could hardly appear to be a case more strongly calling for a relaxation of the rule and I cannot but think that the discretion of the Court was improperly exercised Still I must be guided by general rules It has been argued that this Court has a kind of visitatorial power over the discretion of the Sessions and two cases were cited in support of this proposition, one Rex v The Justices of Wiltshire 10 East 404 where Lord Ellenborough says —'The magistrates certainly had a discretion to exercise with respect to what was reasonable time for giving notice of appeal but we have also a kind of visitatorial jurisdiction over them in the exercise of such a discretionary power and we think that in this case they have not exercised that discretion in a way that we ought to give effect to, but that we ought to interfere and correct it' The other case was Rex v The Justices of Lancashire 7 B & C 691 which proceeded on Rex v The Justices of Wiltshire But in shewing cause very considerable doubt was established as to whether or not this Court will interfere with the discretion of the justices and from the cases cited I take it that the old law is very much modified In Rex v The Justices of the West Riding 5 B & Ad 667 I find Mr Justice Parke stating distinctly 'We have no right to interfere with the discretionary power of the Sessions where they have that power their discretion is to be confided in,' and I perfectly concur in the law as laid down by Mr Justice Parke and if this were a question whether or not we are to set our discretion against the discretion of the justices I should not grant this rule, but should say I cannot act upon the old cases and where there is a distinct rule of the Sessions which is not unreasonable in itself I should not interfere But in this case I have looked at the affidavits and I have considerable doubts as to whether the rule of practice acted upon is clearly made out It ought to appear that there is a distinct rule of practice, and that the justices have acted upon it But I really cannot say myself what the exact practice is The clerk of the peace says that the appeal must be entered before twelve o'clock on the Tuesday but it does not appear that that has always been acted upon, for it appears that appeals have been allowed to be entered all that day Then is there a rule that the appeal must be entered before eleven o'clock or twelve o'clock on that day? And may it be entered after that day on a special application? A special application was made to the justices in this case, which was refused, not on the particular merits of the application but because the appeal had not been entered the day before I think, therefore that the rule upon the subject is so indistinct that the writ ought to go, and if the justices choose to return that there is a distinct rule of Sessions upon the subject, and that they acted in conformity with such rule they can so return it Therefore not on the ground that we will interfere with the discretion of the justices which is a very dangerous doctrine, and which I repudiate, but for the reason that sufficient doubt exists upon the affidavits to warrant the writ in going, I think this rule should be made absolute.

Rule absolute

REG v MANNING and SMITH

Larceny—Removal by a servant of his master's goods for the purpose of offering them again to the master for sale

If a servant removes his master's goods from one part of the premises to another for the purpose of enabling another person to offer them to the master for sale as the goods of that third person, and if this be done in pursuance of previous concert and arrangement between them, both may be convicted of larceny

Michael Manning and John Smith were tried at the Manchester Borough Sessions, on the 5th of August 1852 for stealing, on the 17th of July, twenty four bags the property of John Sheridan. The prosecutor was a potatoe dealer, and used bags in that trade and he also dealt largely in bags, which he bought and sold The prisoner Manning had been for several years in the prosecutor's service, and had the care of his warehouse, in which the bags were kept The prisoner Smith had for five years regularly supplied the prosecutor with bags, which he made and from time to time, when he had finished a lot his custom was to take them and put them down at the warehouse door of the prosecutor, outside the warehouse and very shortly after any bags had been so left, either he or his wife, but generally his wife used to come to receive payment for them from the prosecutor On the night of the 16th of July the prosecutor had a quantity of bags in his warehouse "marked" On the morning of the 17th of July the prisoner Manning went into his master's warehouse and brought out twenty-four of the bags which had been so marked by his master on the previous night and put them down outside the warehouse, by the door, at the place where Smith used to deposit the bags he brought for the prosecutor, and for which he had to be paid Shortly after Manning had brought the prosecutor's bags out of his warehouse, and so placed them at the door, Smith's wife came and asked for payment for them as for bags that her husband had brought that morning. Upon this Smith was sent for, and was told what his wife had said, and the bags, which were then lying where Manning had placed them, were pointed out to him, and he was asked whether he had brought those bags there, he said yes, he had brought them there an hour before, and that his wife had been working at them till twelve o'clock the night before, in order to finish them "Nay," said the prosecutor, "those bags are mine" "Yes," replied Smith, "they will be yours when you have paid for them." Upon this the prosecutor pointed out to the two prisoners, Manning being then also present, the mark that had been put upon the bags the night before, when they both turned the colour of this (holding up a piece of red blotting paper), and they were given into custody.

The recorder told the jury that if they were satisfied that Manning brought his master's bags out of the warehouse, and placed them outside by the door in the manner stated, for the purpose of enabling Smith to receive payment for them from his master, and with the intent that he should do so as if they had been new bags just then finished by Smith, and for which he would be entitled to be paid, that that would be larceny; and that if they were satisfied that this had been so done by Manning, in pursuance of previous concert and arrangement between him and Smith, that Smith, though absent when the bags were so removed out of the warehouse, would be accessory before the fact to the felony. The jury said that they were satisfied that the bags had been so removed out of the warehouse by Manning, for the purpose and with the intention aforesaid, and that the same had been done in pursuance of a previous arrangement between him and Smith, and they found both the prisoners guilty, and the recorder sentenced the prisoners to be imprisoned in the borough gaol, and to be there kept to hard labour for six months. The question for the opinion of this Court is, whether the facts stated and found amounted to larceny?

This case came on for argument before Jervis, C. J. Alderson, B. Coleridge, J. Cresswell, J. and Platt, B.

Cross appeared in support of the conviction, but was not called upon.

No counsel appeared for the prisoners.

JERVIS, C.J.—This is a clear case. The direction was quite right; and R. v. Hall, 1 Den. C. C. 381, is expressly in point.

ALDERSON, B.—Smith, though not present when the sacks were removed, was an accessary before the fact. Conviction affirmed.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

HAWKES v. EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY COMPANY.

Railway company—Contract for the purchase of land by a railway company during the pendency of a Bill in Parliament—Illegality of mutuality—Lapse of time—Specific performance—Abandonment of scheme.

The performance of agreements entered into by railway companies, considered—Observations of the Court on such.

The specific performance of an agreement entered into by a railway company with a landowner on the line of a projected railway for the purchase of his property, during the progress of the Bill in Parliament, enforced.

Specific performance will be decreed in such a case, although the company should fail to obtain its Act, or having obtained it should refuse or be unable to make or complete the line, or allow the time given to it by the Act to elapse.

Such a company will not be allowed to say that the powers introduced into an Act of Parliament enabling it to purchase property which it could not otherwise have acquired, are illegal.

The consideration for not opposing a Bill in Parliament is a good consideration to support an agreement for specific performance; although the land may not be wanted, yet the consideration being not to oppose, the agreement will be enforced.

If a contract by a company for the purchase of land on the line of a projected railway should be so worded as to make it appear that the company were not to pay unless they required the land, or to pay when they took possession, the Court would consider such a conditional contract.

In the case of a sale of land to a railway company, the Court will disregard the amount of consideration agreed to be paid. It may be of the greatest importance to such a company that it should be enabled to make purchases during the pendency of the Bill.

The projectors of a company who agree to purchase land will be bound by their contract, although they abandon the line.

A peer of Parliament has as much right to enter into a contract with the projector of a railway company for the sale of his property as any other person.

A corporation will be bound by the Act of its agent who introduces into an agreement clauses restricting the powers of the company, although such respective clauses may not be not introduced into the Act of Parliament.

The Court cannot recognize the rights of individuals interested in a corporation, apart from the rights and liabilities of the corporation itself.

The question in this case was, whether this Court will or not enforce the specific performance of an agreement entered into by a landowner on the line of a projected railway, for the sale of part of his property, during the progress of the Bill in Parliament. In the year 1847 the defendants proposed to construct a railway from Wisbeach to Spalding, and to make a diverging line to join the Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston Railway. Plans were deposited with reference to both lines, and as the latter was intended to be rejected by Parliament, it was, after reciting that on the plans deposited a line of railway was delineated diverging out of the said intended railway, and terminating by a junction with the Spalding Branch of the Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston Railway, enacted, "That nothing contained in the Act should be held or construed to authorise the Eastern Counties Railway Company to make the said railway, or any part thereof, between the point of divergence from the railway by this Act authorised, and the termination thereof, at the said Spalding Branch of the Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston Railway." There was authority to buy land not exceeding thirty acres for extraordinary purposes. The compulsory powers of the Act were to continue for three years, and five years were allowed for the completion of the works.

Whilst the Bill was in Parliament, and before the diverging line had been rejected, an agreement was entered into between the company and Mr. Hawkes, by which, after reciting that the proposed railway was intended to pass near to and at his residence in Spalding, and would most seriously damage the same and render it unfit for habitation, and that he had hitherto opposed the Bill, but consented to withdraw his opposition; the company agreed, "That in the event of the said Bill in its present or in any amended modification or altered form, or the like objects or any or either of them, and to which the said Eastern Counties Railway Company should be parties or promoters, passing into a law, the said Eastern Counties Railway Company, their successors and assigns, should and would purchase, and they did thereby in such case agree to purchase, of and from the said Henry Hawkes and his heirs, and the said Henry Hawkes and his heirs should and would sell, and he did thereby accordingly agree to sell to the said company, their successors or assigns," for the sum of 8,000*l.* and the further sum of 5,000*l.* as a compensation for the damage which had been done to him, and the inconvenience from removing his business. Mr. Hawkes carried on business on part of the property, and was the owner of a mill adjoining the proposed station of the Ambergate, Nottingham, and Boston, and Eastern Junction Railway at Spalding; it was, therefore, arranged as part of the terms of the agreement, that the company should enter into another agreement (which they in fact did), that they would, before they opened the other line to the public, make a siding from his mill to the intended station. The main line went through a small part of Mr. Hawkes's property, and the diverging line, as delineated, would also have gone through so as to take in within its deviation a still larger portion. The property was, therefore, within the powers of the Act, and might be affected by the exercise of its powers. Parliament rejected so much of the diverging line as would have enabled the Eastern Counties Company to cross the Great Northern Railway, but by continuing the proposed line of the Ambergate Railway (which would then have come to a certain point) on to another point, the Eastern Counties Railway Company would have been enabled, by passing through Mr. Hawkes's property, to get to the point they wished, so that the purchase of the whole of Mr. Hawkes's property enabled it indirectly to do that which the Act of Parliament intended to prevent it from doing.

A correspondence ensued between the solicitors of Mr. Hawkes and the solicitors of the company, by which it appeared that the company's solicitors had had notice that Mr. Hawkes, on the 18th of January, 1849, had vacated the premises, the subject of the contract, and that the company had full liberty to enter upon the property. The abstracts were forwarded; and on the 20th of the same month, the solicitors of the company, in a letter of that date, said "that a gentleman from their office would go down to Spalding on the following Tuesday, for the purpose of examining the abstracts with the title-deeds in his possession, and asking whether it would be convenient to produce them on that day." The answer to which was, that it would. They failed to keep their appointment, and on the 22nd of February, instead of attending as they had afterwards engaged to do for the examination of the abstracts with the deeds, they sent a copy of a notice, in which, reciting the Act of Parliament and the provisions of it, the secretary gave notice, on behalf of the company, to the plaintiff, that the company did not require to take and use, and would not take and use, the whole or any part or portion of the estate under their powers; they required him to remain in the undisturbed possession and enjoyment of it, but of which they were aware he was no longer in possession. They gave him notice that the company were advised they were not compellable to complete the contract, or to pay him 8,000*l.*; and that they abandoned the contract, and desired to know what sum of money he would receive by way of compensation. He informed them that he had been compelled to leave the neighbourhood, and that he had provided himself with other property. He subsequently filed his bill for a specific performance of the agreement.

The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce made a decree in the terms of the prayer of the bill (17 Law T. Rep. 301). From that decree the defendants appealed to Lord Chancellor Truro; but the appellants, having refused to receive his judgment after he had resigned the seals, the appeal was now re-argued.

The Solicitor-General, Wigram, and Follett, for the plaintiff, who opened the appeal.

Bethell, Russell, Malins, and Grove, for the defendants, the appellants.

The Solicitor-General, in reply.

The arguments of counsel, and the cases cited, are mentioned and commented on in the judgment.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—The question in this case is, is or not this gentleman entitled to a specific performance? This is a case in which there is a company formed, competent to bind itself within its powers: a corporation capable of entering into a binding contract. The property which was to be disposed of by Mr. Hawkes was property directly to be affected by the Bill as it stood at the time the agreement was entered into. As the Bill passed, the property—at least a sufficient portion of it to give jurisdiction to this Court—was made liable and remained liable to the powers of the Act. And those powers might have been executed so as to affect generally the property. It cannot, therefore, be said that if a party capable of entering into a contract with reference to a subject before Parliament does enter into that contract, and Parliament gives powers which would enable the party to enforce the contract—to call for the benefit of the contract—that that party can, by himself neglecting to exercise his powers, say that he will not perform the agreement which he has entered into, because either he has allowed his powers to lapse, and he can no longer exercise them, or because he will do an act which he now thinks proper to say, or thinks fit to say he deems illegal. On principle, I should say, that such would be a case for specific performance; and the authorities admit of no doubt. In the case of Stanley v. The Chester and Birkenhead Railway Company 1 Railway Cases, 58, the agreement was held to be good; and the consideration for not opposing the Bill was held to be a good consideration; it is, I think, a good consideration, and in that case the land was not wanted. Although the land is not wanted, yet the agreement being not to oppose, and the man being fairly in the situation of landowner, that was considered to be a contract that would probably be enforced. In Edwards v. The Grand Junction Railway, page 173 of the same book, clauses restricting the powers of the company were left to operate under the agreement, although they were not introduced into the Act of Parliament; yet that was held to be valid, and the corporation was held to be bound by the act of the agent of the projectors: with that difficulty we have not now to contend, because here the company itself has executed this agreement under its seal. In Simpson v. Lord Howden, page 326, there was an agreement by the projectors; the line was abandoned, yet the contract was enforced. There this great question was raised, as it also was in the subsequent case of Lord Petre, whether Lord Howden, who was a peer of Parliament, could properly enter into an agreement out of the House, by which he agreed to give up his opposition to the measure. It was held, as there was no pretence for imputing any attempt at improper conduct on the part of that noble lord, that a peer had as much right to enter into a contract, with reference to his property, as if he had not been a member of that House. Now, Lord Petre's case, page 462, was perhaps a still stronger one; not only was he a member of the House, but the agreement was by a committee, and that was held binding upon the corporation. The consideration paid was enormous; 120,000*l.* were to be paid for the property which the company intended to take, and for the supposed damage which had been done to the grounds, and to the view from the house of that noble lord. That has been always quoted as a case in which the consideration was enormous; but it was held not to be illegal—no hardship was held from the fact of the time which they had permitted having expired. Upon the whole, therefore, the cases establish that a bonâ fide agreement of this sort, not evading the Act of Parliament, but enabling the company to assist its views and carry its operations into effect, is perfectly valid. The amount paid, as the value of the property, is unimportant. That was not mentioned, as it was, I suppose, thought unnecessary. It is of the greatest importance to the company, that they should be enabled to make purchases during the pendency of the Bill, and before the Bill passes, because it clears the ground for them, they take that which they want, and they pay a little more for it. It is not for this Court to inquire into the amount of the consideration; there is no extortion, and, therefore, I consider it to be perfectly clear. Now several grounds were raised even upon these authorities. First of all, it was said that there was a great hardship upon the shareholders. Now in page 199 of 1 Railway Cases, that subject was dealt with. The Court said—"You cannot sever the shareholders from the general body; they must share the fate of a part of the body. The Court cannot recognise the rights of individuals interested in the corporation; but must look to the rights and liabilities of the corporation itself." That is a point which I think a very sufficient one. Then it was said that there was illegality in the concealment of this from Parliament; the answer to which will be found in Lord Howden's case:—"The same observation," the Court says, "disposes altogether of the objections which may be taken." There is this passage:—"It is alleged that the agreement was secret, and was kept secret; but both parties might be innocent of any original fraudulent understanding that the transaction should be kept secret at the time the deed was executed. As the instrument is not upon the face of it fraudulent—as no intention of making any false representation, or of concealing anything, can be collected from any part of it, the facts which make it fraudulent ought to be distinctly alleged; and no such facts are alleged. The subsequent concealment from the Legislature might indeed have been used as evidence to the jury of the prior intent to conceal, if that intent had been averred; but such subsequent concealment would be evidence only, and would by no means be conclusive evidence; it cannot be used to supply the want of such distinct averment." Now, here there is no such statement of any sort or kind. There is nothing here upon the face of the pleadings to shew that there was any intention whatever to conceal from Parliament the transaction between the company and this party. Then it was said, that there was great hardship where the time had expired. Now, that does not properly apply to this case, because at the time this bill was filed, the time had not expired, and sufficient time did remain to complete the works, even after the time when the bill was filed. The whole fault here lies upon the part of the company. Mr. Hawkes has never been guilty of any neglect—he never swerved from his readiness to perform his contract; but this company has acted with much bad faith in regard to this transaction. Now, with respect to the question of hardship from the time having expired, the Lord Chancellor, in the case of Lord Petre, says,—"The hardship complained of is, the expiration of the parliamentary time; but the company have brought that hardship upon themselves." That is exactly the same observation which I should make in this case: therefore, I think all these difficulties are removed. Now, a part of this agreement consisted of an obligation on the part of the company that they would try to obtain power in order to carry the contract into effect, inasmuch as Mr. Hawkes was entitled for life only to a portion of the property; and it was said in argument that that was a fatal objection, because you could not enforce an agreement which was to depend upon a future application to Parliament. Now, in the Great Western Railway Company v. The Birmingham and Oxford Junction Railway Company, 2 Phil. 604, 605, Lord Cottenham says—"By the appeal I am asked to treat this contract as a nullity; that is, to hold all contracts which parties enter into not having themselves the power to carry them into effect, and they therefore apply to Parliament to give them such power, are so utterly void, that this Court will not even protect the property until an opportunity shall have been afforded for an application to Parliament. The effect of such a decision would be to nullify very many family arrangements entered into, and many with the sanction of this Court, but to give effect to which the powers of Parliament are indispensable. It would also nullify all contracts by projectors of companies before an Act was obtained; but it is now nearly twelve years since, in Edwards v. The Grand Junction Railway Company, I gave effect against an incorporated company to a contract entered into by the projectors of it before the Act was passed, but in contemplation of its passing—that is, a contract with the parties at the time they had no power to carry into effect, but proposed to do so by the authority of Parliament; and there are now many cases to the same effect." That therefore disposes, to my mind perfectly satisfactorily, of the other objections. It was then insisted that subsequently to the decision in the Court below, that the cases upon which this Court had acted had been reversed. In the case of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company, 9 Hare, 129; and 19 Law T. Rep. 2; there was originally a decree for specific performance, and after the decision in this case was made—the Court having relied on that case—the decision was reversed. Now, that case was reversed upon the uncertainty of the contract; and if it were reversed upon any other ground, I should have required further time before I could accede to the doctrine that a company entering into such a contract as this is, could, upon any grounds of supposed illegality, get rid of the contract. If, as in some of the cases which have been cited, the contract had been so worded as to make it appear that the company were not to pay unless they required the land; that is, they were to pay when they took the land, the assumption would be that they were not to pay unless they took it,—that may fairly be considered a conditional contract. I have nothing to say to such cases; but where, as in this case, it is an absolute and unqualified contract to take the land, I should certainly hold that no subsequent accident, certainly no subsequent conduct on the part of the company, could relieve them from the obligation they were bound by at the time they entered into it. The Act of Parliament passing on, it was as good a contract as a man ever entered into. I must look at it at the time when it was executed—at all events at the time the Act passed. It contemplated the Act passing, and the Act did pass. The Act passed exactly in the terms pointed out in the agreement. It is, then, a valid contract. Suppose this agreement had been entered into after the passing of the Act, would any man at the Bar say that that was a contract not to be executed? If it were to be executed, why should it not be valid before the Act passed? Looking at the authorities which have concluded that question, why should it not be as binding, being entered into before, as it must be admitted it would have been if executed immediately after the Act passed? There is no magic in these things. The good faith, the truth, and the honesty of the transaction is to be looked at—there is no rule of law in it. If, therefore, Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth Railway Company is considered to decide anything adverse to the decision in this case, I should support the decision of this case, as far as my authority went. In Lord James Stuart v. The North-Western Company, 450, the Master of the Rolls decreed a specific performance upon the authority of Webb v. The Direct London and Portsmouth before it was reversed. It was said that the reversal of that therefore displaced his authority. That also was reversed: but there again there were two questions; first, a question whether there was any concluded agreement—any binding agreement—anything amounting to a positive contract; and next, there was great delay. Those cases were relied upon—and I can only say that if they are to be considered in opposition to a specific performance in a case like that before me, that I should totally disagree with them. Then it was argued that this contract was illegal, because the company was applying its funds to purposes not authorised by the Act of Parliament, and in support of that argument McGregor v. The Dover and Deal Railway Company, 19 Law T. 125, 316; East Anglian Railway v. Eastern Counties Railway, 18 Law T. Rep. 138; and the case of Baynhaw v. The Eastern Union Railway Company, 2 M. & G. 389, were quoted. Those were all cases in which the company were really going beyond their powers, and the parties contracting with them must be supposed to have known it. It has been decided they cannot be enforced, but this case does not fall within those decisions. There is nothing that has been stated to me of any sort or kind approaching to fraud. There is no such thing in the contract. I believe that the company thought that they might, by this short cut through Mr. Hawkes's property, get to a certain point; but Mr. Hawkes had nothing to do with that. The Act provided for taking this property for the very purpose authorised by the Act of Parliament itself. The cases, therefore, do not touch this question at all, and consequently I am not embarrassed by their authority. It has been said there was no mutuality; and that the company could not enforce it, because they had not the means of carrying it on; that involves the question of the expiration of the time. I have already referred to authority to shew that expiration of time in a case of this sort amounts to nothing, where, as in this case, it is the fault of the company itself that the time has been allowed to expire. They have thought proper to allow the time to expire. Their conduct, upon the correspondence, admits of no excuse. With full knowledge of all they intended to do, they are told the deeds are ready to be examined with the abstracts; they make an appointment to go down, without raising a word of complaint, to examine the abstract with the deeds. They break that appointment. They make no other appointment. They are told the vendor has vacated the possession of the property, and that it is at their disposal, and that he has sought another residence; they serve a formal notice, telling him they will have nothing to do with the contract; that they do not want the property, and do not mean to make the line. What has mutuality to do with it? There are many cases where the Court has not looked to the doctrine of mutuality as it ought to have done, but has inforced a contract against a party where that party could not have sufficiently enforced a contract against any one else. But here I must look at this contract at the time the Act of Parliament was passed, and at the time it was entered into. Where then is there any want of mutuality? Could not the company, within an hour after the Act had passed, have enforced the contract against Mr. Hawkes. It is not because a man, subsequently to his contract, chooses to introduce impediments to its performance on his own part, that there is to be a want of mutuality; but the question of mutuality arises where it is impossible to do that which he had contracted for; he cannot, therefore, turn round against the man with whom he has contracted, and throw upon that man the loss. Who is to bear the loss in this case? Who is to blame? The company; not Mr. Hawkes. The company desire to throw up the line, and endeavour to repudiate their solemn contract, and to throw the whole loss and burden on the party who is not to blame. But cases were cited, as shewing I ought not to interfere to enforce performance of the contract; Gage v. The Newmarket Railway Company, 19 L. J. 155, was one. That turns on the conditional agreement; the agreement there was, that the company, before they entered on the land which they might require, should pay, and that was not considered as an absolute agreement to pay. No doubt, the Lord Chief Justice said, if there had been a covenant to pay, or a covenant to pay a sum as a sum in gross, that the Court would have treated as void. In the other case, of Goodhay v. The Colchester and Stour Valley Railway Company, 19 Law T. Rep. 334, there was no agreement binding upon the company. I have taken the opportunity of looking into every authority upon the subject, and I can find nothing to shake the opinion I entertained when the argument was closed, that this is a very clear case for specific performance. I am very glad that the law turns out to be consistent with the equity of the case. I cannot but lament that these great companies, with an attorney always at their elbows, and every means of consulting counsel daily if they think proper, and which they resort to sufficiently, with enormous capital, should, with a full knowledge of all their powers, and with legal advice constantly at command, enter into a contract, and then turn round upon the party with whom they have contracted, and endeavour to evade it upon the ground that it is beyond their powers, and absolutely illegal on the face of it. The defence is unseemly in courts of justice. I trust we shall not hear of many more of these cases; but that these companies will take care that in entering into contracts with individuals who are not so well protected, that they do not go beyond their powers; they do not enter into a contract of this sort if it be illegal, without being perfectly aware of its illegality. Nothing can be more unseemly than for a great company to come into a court of justice, and to say that the contract—a solemn contract which they have entered into—is void on the ground of its not being within their powers, not from any subsequent accident, not from any mistake or misapprehension, but because they thought fit to enter into it, and meant to have the benefit of it, if it turned out for their benefit, and to take advantage of the illegality in case the contract should prove onerous, and they should desire to get rid of it. Such dishonourable conduct, I trust, we shall not often see in courts of justice. Fortunately, the law, justice, and equity of this case are agreed; and there is nothing to prevent my enforcing this contract. I therefore dismiss this appeal, and with costs.

Friday, Nov. 12.

HARRISON v. ROUND.

Settlement—Recovery—Tenant in tail—Shifting use—Perpetuity—Intention—Lien on an estate on account of redemption of land-tax.

Estate A. in settled (after the life estates of the father and mother) upon a first and other sons in tail male in the ordinary way; and estate B. on the second and other sons in tail male, proviso "that in case it shall happen that the second, third, or any other younger son or sons of, &c. or their issue, shall become an eldest or only son, and as such shall become entitled to the actual possession or the receipt of the rents and profits of estate A. then and in such case the use and estate of estate B. hereby limited unto and for the benefit of such of them, the said second, third, or other the younger son or sons of, &c. and their issue, who shall become entitled to estate A. shall from thenceforth cease, determine, and be void to all intents and purposes, as if the said second, third, or such other younger son or sons, or their issue, was or were respectively dead without issue, and in such case, and so often as the same shall happen, estate B. shall go over and remain unto and for the benefit of the person or persons who would be next entitled to take and enjoy estate B. in case the said second, third, or such other younger son or sons, or their respective issue, becoming entitled to estate A. was or were respectively dead without issue." The second son, by the death of his elder brother, becomes the first son, and being entitled as tenant in tail male in remainder expectant upon his father's death, not only to estate A. originally limited to the first son, but to estate B. which was originally limited to himself as the second son, he joins with his father in suffering a recovery of estate A.; the uses of which deed were declared to the joint appointment of the father and the son, and until such appointment to the uses upon and for the trusts, intents, and purposes, and with and under, and subject to the powers, provisions, agreements, and declarations, to, for, upon, with, under, and subject to which the same premises were and stood limited and settled immediately before the sealing and delivery thereof. They jointly convey, subject to the charges existing on the estate, to a mortgagee in fee for 5,560l. with a proviso for redemption and reconveyance, to the uses to which the estate then stood limited. The mortgage-money is divided between the father and the son, according to their respected estates. On the death of the father, the son pays off the mortgage: on a bill filed by the son, claiming to be entitled to both estates, alleging that under the circumstances the shifting clause had not operated:

Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the recovery had not the effect of preventing the operation of the shifting clause, and that estate B. was then vested in the third son of the marriage.

A tenant in tail of two estates redeems the land-tax on both with the money produced by the sale of part of one. One of the estates, under a shifting use, goes over:

Held, that on redemption, the land-tax merged with the ownership, and that the owner of the one estate had no right, as against the owner of the other, for an apportionment.

Where an estate has actually gone out of a settlement, although it comes back to the party to whom it was given, yet if it does not come to him in the manner in which it was intended, a proviso containing a shifting clause will not operate.

When an estate is fairly taken out of a settlement, there is an end of it. The question is not whether it does or not come back, but whether it comes back according to the mode in which it was intended according to the proviso in the settlement.

Equity considers a mortgage only as a charge, and not as a disposition of the inheritance of the estate beyond the charge, unless by the deed itself ulterior estates are created.

By indentures of lease and release, dated the 9th and 10th of December, 1783, being the settlement made on the marriage of Mr. John Haynes Harrison and Sarah Thomas Fiske (the late father and mother of the plaintiff), the Rev. John Harrison, the father of the said J. H. Harrison, in consideration of the said marriage, conveyed and assured the manor or lordship of Copford, in Essex, and other lands therein particularly mentioned, of which he was then seised in fee, unto John Cullum and James Round, and their heirs; and the said S. T. Fiske conveyed and assured to the same trustees certain estates, of which she was seised in fee, situate, &c. and also the manors or lordships of Overhall and Netherhall, and certain other estates therein mentioned; to hold all the said estates conveyed as well by the said J. Harrison as by the said S. T. Fiske, unto the said J. Cullum and J. Round, and their heirs, upon trust, for the benefit of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison, for life, and for other purposes (all of which have long since determined), and then as to all the estates to the use of H. G. Harrison and T. Ruggles, their executors, administrators, and assigns, for the term of 500 years, to be computed from the death of the said J. H. Harrison, upon the trusts therein mentioned, with remainder after the expiration of the said term of 500 years as to all the said estates, except the hereditaments conveyed by the said S. T. Fiske as aforesaid (being the Overhall and Netherhall estates), to the use of the first son of the body of the said J. H. Harrison on the body of the said S. T. Fiske to be begotten, and the heirs male of the body of such first son lawfully issuing; and, in default of such issue, to the use of the second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and all and every other son and sons of the body of the said J. H. Harrison, on the body of the said S. T. Fiske to be begotten in tail male. And so as to, for, and concerning all the hereditaments excepted out of the limitation to the first and other sons of said marriage, after the decease of the survivor of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison and determination of the uses and estates thereinbefore limited (all which have happened), in case there should be an eldest and one or more other son or sons of the body of the said J. H. Harrison on the body of the said Sarah Thomas Fiske to be begotten; to the use of the second son of the body of the said J. H. Harrison, on the body of said S. T. Fiske to be begotten, and the heirs of the body of such second son lawfully issuing, with remainder to the use of the third and other sons of the body of the said J. H. Harrison, on the body of the said S. T. Fiske to be begotten (other than an eldest son) in tail male; proviso:—"In case it shall happen that the second, third, or any other younger son or sons of the body of the said J. H. Harrison, on the body of the said S. T. Fiske to be begotten, shall become an eldest or only son, and as such shall become entitled to the actual possession, or the receipt of the rents and profits, of the Copford Hall estates, and the several other hereditaments first hereinbefore limited therewith to the first son of the body of said J. H. Harrison on the body of said S. T. Fiske to be begotten, by and under the limitations and provisions hereinbefore contained; or there shall be any issue of the said second, third, or such other younger son or sons of the body, &c. who shall become entitled to the Copford Hall estate, and the several other hereditaments so limited therewith; then, and in such case the use and estate of and in the said Overhall and Netherhall estates hereby limited unto and for the benefit of such of them the said second, third, and other the younger son and sons of the body, &c. and their respective issue who shall or may so respectively happen to become entitled to the Copford Hall estate and the said several other hereditaments so limited therewith, shall from henceforth cease, determine, and be void, to all intents and purposes, as if the said second, third, or such other younger son or sons or their issue as aforesaid was or were respectively dead without issue of his or their body or respective bodies, and then and in such case, and so often as the same shall happen, the Overhall and Netherhall estates shall go over and remain unto and for the benefit of the person or persons who by virtue of these presents, and according to the true intent and meaning thereof, would be next entitled to take and enjoy the said hereditaments last mentioned, in case the said second, third, or such other younger son or sons, or their respective issue, so as aforesaid becoming entitled to the Copford Hall estate and the said hereditaments so limited therewith, was or were respectively dead without issue of his or their respective body or bodies, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding." The trusts of the term of 500 years were to raise either by mortgage or other disposition of all or any part of the hereditaments compressed in the settlement, in manner therein mentioned, 10,000*l.* as portions for younger children.

There were ten children of the marriage; the first son died in 1811, an infant, and without having been married in the lifetime of his parents.

Fiske Goodeve Fiske Harrison (the plaintiff) was the second son of the marriage, and by the death of his brother, became the eldest surviving son. In 1821 he joined with his father in executing a recovery deed, and suffering a recovery of a considerable portion of the estates limited by the settlement to the first and other sons of the marriage, for the purpose of barring his estate tail male, and the estates limited in remainder thereupon, subject to the life estates of his father and mother, and the 10,000*l.* charge. The recovery deed declared that the recovery should enure to such uses as the father and the plaintiff should, during their joint lives, by deed or instrument in writing, executed as therein mentioned, appoint; and "in default of and until, and subject to such appointment, to the uses upon and for the trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to the powers, provisoes, agreements, and declarations to, for, upon, with, under, and subject to which the same premises were and stood limited and settled immediately before the execution" of that (the recovery) deed; the same indenture contained a clause for avoidance on nonpayment of a certain sum therein mentioned to the father on the 3rd of January then next. In 1825, the plaintiff joined with his father and mother in a mortgage of the same estates for raising the sum of 5,560*l.* which sum was divided between the plaintiff and his father, and which mortgage continued a charge on the uses comprised therein, up to and after the decease of the father, when the plaintiff became entitled in possession under the settlement.

Mrs. Harrison died in 1825, and Mr. Harrison in 1839, when Thomas Thomas Harrison as the then second son of the marriage, entered into the possession of the Overhall and Netherhall estates, which were limited originally to the second son as being entitled thereto under the shifting clause in the settlement.

Various sales were made by the trustees under a power contained in the settlement of portions of the estates limited as well immediately to the first and other sons as of those limited immediately to the second and other sons. The proceeds were invested partly in the purchase of other estates, which were settled to the same uses as the estates so sold, and in the redemption of the land-tax of the estates of both sons, as well of those originally settled as of those subsequently purchased; the residue of the money was received by the trustees and invested in the purchase of South Sea Annuities, which were then standing in the name of the Accountant-General in trust in this cause; 2,566*l.* 8s. 7d. of which were the proceeds of the sale of the estates originally limited to the first and other sons, and 2,065*l.* 6s. 6d. from originally limited to the second and other sons.

In 1843 considerable discussion took place as to the proportions in which the plaintiff and Thomas Thomas Harrison should pay the 10,000*l.* charged on all the estates under the settlement for the younger children, and during the arrangement the former was advised that he was entitled to the whole of the estates comprised in that deed on the supposition that the shifting clause had not, under the circumstances above mentioned, operated; he, therefore, filed his bill to ascertain his rights under the settlement, alleging that, by reason of the recovery suffered during his father's lifetime, the estates originally limited to the first and other sons had not descended to him in the manner intended by the settlors, and consequently that the shifting clause had not operated. In the event of the Court deciding against him on that point, the bill prayed an apportionment of the 10,000*l.* and a partition of the funds in court.

The Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce sent a case to the Court of C.P. for the purpose of ascertaining whether at law the shifting clause in the settlement had come into operation.

The Court of C.P. certified that it had, and that the Overhall and Netherhall estates had become vested in the third son.

That certificate was subsequently confirmed by the late Vice-Chancellor Parker; and this was an appeal from that decision.

Bethell and Rogers appeared for the appellant.

Sir W. Page Wood and J. V. Prior for the respondents.

Bethell in reply.

The following cases were cited:—Fazakerley v. Ford, 4 Sim. 390; Stackpoole v. Stackpoole, 4 Dr. & W. 320; Taylor v. Lord Harewood, 3 Hare, 372; Burrell v. Lord Egremont, 7 Bea. 205, 251. The material points in the arguments are alluded to in the Lord Chancellor's

JUDGMENT.

The Lord Chancellor.—This is a very difficult case; and it differs undoubtedly from any that has hitherto come before the Court. [His Lordship here stated the facts of the case.] The main question depends on the recovery deed of 1821. By that deed the father and son convey in the ordinary way to the tenant of the præcipe during the joint lives of the father and of the person to whom he conveys, so as to leave in the father a reversion of his life estate; and then there was a clause for raising 10,000*l.* for the purpose of avoiding the conveyance, so as to restore, as far as the law would allow, the father's life estate, notwithstanding the son had incumbered it; it shews that to that extent the parties intended to leave it unaffected by the operation and the uses of the recovery deed. Now, the effect of that deed was, that in this court the estate remained subject to the exercise of the power of appointment by the father and the son precisely in the same way as if no recovery had been suffered; so that, if no mortgage had been created, it is impossible to say that the strict terms of the proviso in question would not have been complied with by the son, after the death of the father, taking the estate, notwithstanding the recovery. The recovery, therefore, did not so alter the estate as to prevent the operation of the proviso. There is nothing in law which calls upon the Court to put so strict a construction upon the proviso as to prevent, where it impeaches no rule of law, the intention of the parties from having its full effect and operation. It is quite clear that, by force of that power of appointment, which would enable the father and the son to dispose of the fee, they might have disposed of it in a way that would altogether have defeated the uses of the settlement so restored, or in effect restored, by the declaration of uses subject to that power; and the question is, what is the effect of the act which they actually did perform? Now, the act which they performed was this,—they conveyed jointly to a mortgagee to raise a sum of 5,560*l.* which, upon the face of the instrument, is represented to have been paid to the father, who was tenant for life, and to the son, who was tenant in tail; both having power to defeat those limitations by the operation of the power of appointment,—they conveyed it to a mortgagee in fee with a proviso for redemption, and reconveyance upon redemption to the uses to which the estate then stood settled; so that there were no new estates created by the recovery deed. There was a charge created upon the estates which overreached and bound all the estates that could arise by way of severance; but as far as the deed operated to bind the inheritance, the uses limited by the original settlement remained just as operative, subject to the charge after, as they could have done independently of the charge before the execution of the mortgage. The question, therefore, simply is, does the charge prevent the operation of the proviso in question. Now, it was hinted that the operation of this proviso might be considered as creating a perpetuity, but no substantial objection has been attempted to be raised, or, as I think, could be raised on that ground. It was a shifting use; it would come in regularly when the event took place. It could not take place as a shifting use, and not as a remainder; but when the event happened, it did, in point of fact, operate as a remainder; that which it shifted or displaced is not material: as to time: the shifting or displacing was to take place after an estate tail, and, therefore, if capable of being barred, was clearly not within the line of perpetuity. It was then said that the terms of the proviso were such as to require a very strict construction. I agree that provisoes of this sort, which are to defeat an estate, are not to have an unnatural construction—an unnecessarily large construction—but the party who creates the estate has the same right to limit it over, or to defeat it, as he has to create it. It is part of the settlement, and, therefore, a fair construction ought to be given to the words which are used. Now, the words in effect are, "that if it shall so happen that the second son shall become an eldest or only son, and as such shall become entitled to the actual possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of the estate," &c. Now, no doubt, independently of the mortgage he has as such become entitled to the possession of the estate, and to the receipt of the rents and profits, subject to the mortgage, for it is only as second son that he acquired the estate at all; and no act has been done which prevents him from taking, and he has actually taken the estate as tenant in tail; and certainly under the settlement, for the estate was restored by the recovery deed, it is not affected by the mortgage-deed, but in the view of this Court the estates created by the equity of redemption are precisely the same estates as would operate at law under the settlement itself. Equity follows the law. Equity considers a mortgage only as a charge, and not as a disposition of the inheritance of the estate beyond the charge, unless by the deed itself estates are created beyond the charge. No doubt, therefore, he takes the estate subject to the charge; but he takes it, in actual possession under the limitations of the settlement; for the settlement gave it to him, the recovery deed restored it to him, the mortgage-deed kept it still in him, and no act has been executed to take it from him, and, as far as my opinion goes, he is at this moment tenant in tail of the estate under that settlement. It was then argued that if these estates had been sold, I must consider the purchase-money as if the estate had come to the father. On that I need give no opinion; but I much doubt whether the argument could be maintained. I entirely agree with the appellant to this extent, that I have no authority to prevent the persons entitled to the Copford Hall estate before the event happens, disposing of it just exactly as they think proper; and if they do an act which, according to law, will prevent the operation of this clause, an Act by which the Copford Hall estate never could come into the actual possession of the second son under the limitations of this deed, then I agree with the argument, that they have the right to do so, and that the Court could not cut down the effect of that act; but that argument with regard to mortgagees is carried too far. What the effect of this mortgage is, is a question which I am about to consider. It is impossible to say that every mortgage is to be put out of the question; that would be entirely to set aside Fazakerly v. Ford—to overrule it. I take the law to be settled, that generally speaking, as in Fazakerley v. Ford, the limitations of the one estate are extrinsic to the settlement in which you find the proviso; and if a charge is created, the charge is just as much taken from the estate as if a portion of the estate itself were taken. There is no magic in it. If you charge 6,000*l.* on an estate, and that estate comes to another person with that charge, the charge representing so much of the estate reduces its value in the hands of the party to whom it comes to the extent of so much as would be required to be sold or appropriated to the extinction of the debt; although, on technical points of law, a mortgagee may not be entitled to the actual receipts of the rents until he gives notice, yet those considerations have nothing to do with this case. The question here is, does the estate come to the party under the settlement in the way in which the proviso itself intended? That is the question which I have to decide, and a very important one it is. The father and son, I quite admit, might have done precisely what they pleased with the Copford Hall estate; they might have given it away to a third person, and if that third person had afterwards given it to the second son, that would not have been within the proviso; they might have settled it upon the third son; they might have sold it and disposed of the money as they thought proper. Now, without questioning the unlimited power of the persons entitled to the Copford Hall estate, and without meaning to diminish or take away their power to dispose of it, the second son (being at the time entitled in remainder to the Overhall estate, and being at the same time also entitled in remainder to the Copford Hall estate, on the death of his elder brother without issue expectant upon the death of his father) and the father enter into the covenants which I have mentioned. Now, can it be predicated that, because the son has anticipated a portion of his revenue—a portion of his estate which has descended to him, and which is vested in him,—that the estate itself has not come to him under the limitations of the deed, within the rule of this proviso? Supposing, that without the assistance of his father, he, as tenant, in tail in remainder, during the lifetime of his father, had executed this very mortgage deed, could any body have said that that anticipation of his revenue, in exercise of his right, would have prevented the operation of this proviso? Could he not, consistently with the proviso and the whole of this settlement, have exercised his right for his own benefit over his own, the Copford Hall estate, and yet not have prevented the operation of this proviso? It was on his father's death only that he would have become entitled to the Copford Hall estate; so that although this disposition might have been made while his father was living, yet, in the sense in which the words are used in this proviso, had he died without issue male in the lifetime of his father, the estate would have gone over, and therefore he would not have become entitled to it. If that would be so, which I apprehend it would, what is the effect of the father and son doing it? Now, when the father and the son, the tenant for life and the tenant in remainder, enter into the mortgage, they receive the money jointly; and as there is no evidence of the manner in which that money was appropriated, the law will consider that it was received by them in respect of their different interests; and when the estate comes into possession it cannot be asserted in a court of justice that the estate has been burthened beyond the benefit which the son himself had received from the charge. The charge was created by himself. He had had the full benefit of it. It was a charge which he had created upon his own estate. If, in a settlement, I give estate A. to the first son, and estate B. to the second son, with a proviso that if estate A. shall come to the second son, then that estate B. shall go over to the third son; if the second son, having become entitled to the first estate, living the father, chooses to anticipate part of his revenue, can it be said that, according to the intention (an intention being collected by the words), the rule of law is perfectly clear, that the son has not come into the actual possession of the property in the way in which the testator intended to apply those words? It cannot be that anticipation will prevent the operation of the right. By the concurrence and indulgence of his father the son may have got a benefit not within the exact terms of the settlement— he may have got something more, because he has been able to anticipate; he cannot now be heard to say that he had less. The charge is not thrown upon the property against the son; but in pursuance of the settlement, consistently with the settlement, the son, by anticipation, has acquired a right which, without the concurrence of his father, he never would have obtained; no charge has been thrown upon this estate which the son himself did not create, and which, if he had created the moment after he had come into possession after his father's death, would not have affected the proviso, because the estate would have gone over, and the not creating it in his father's lifetime would have been no hindrance to its operation. I am of opinion that no act has been done to take the estate out of the settlement; the son has anticipated part of that which he ought regularly to have waited for until his father's death; he has received every benefit which ever was intended for him by the author of his proviso. There is, though, another question to be decided as regards this instrument. What was the intention of the parties? Did the father and son intend to take this estate out of settlement and to defeat this limitation? Now, had they so intended, the father and the second son would have suffered a recovery of the Overhall estate; and in that way they might have defeated the operation of this shifting use. They did no such thing. But by the recovery deed, an anxious intention is exhibited to prevent the operation of the deed of recovery beyond the father's life estate; he never meant the settlement to be disturbed beyond his life estate; he took care to convey in such a manner, and to insert such a clause, as even to defeat that recovery, and to restore his own life estate. The father believed that the estate had already shifted, and accordingly, in error, no doubt, joined with a third son in suffering a recovery of the Overhall estate, and resettling that estate to other uses. The father, therefore, clearly never would have joined in any act as regards the Copford Hall estate, which would have prevented the operation of this proviso; he intended to leave, and he believed to the moment of his death that this proviso was operative. If, therefore, the rule of law compelled me, as I might have been compelled, to decide with the appellant, I must necessarily have subverted every intention which the testator himself ever had with regard to this property. They might have done, if they had wished so to do, that which it is insisted they have done. I am clearly of opinion, looking at these acts, that the father never did any act knowingly to effect that to which it is insisted his acts amount. Now, so far as the cases have gone, I think there is no difficulty. I do not entertain any opinion adverse to Fazakerley v. Ford. On the contrary, I think it was rightly decided. I think the case before Vice-Chancellor Wigram was rightly decided: where an estate has actually gone out of a settlement, although it comes back to the party to whom it was given, it does not come in the manner in which it was intended; there must be a limitation to these provisoes, and when the estate is fairly taken out of the settlement, there is an end of it. Whether it comes back or not is not the question; the question is, whether it comes according to the mode in which it was to go according to the proviso in the settlement. I am of opinion that this is a point that cannot be entertained, and that therefore I must, upon this ground, disallow the appeal; but notwithstanding the decision of the Court below and the Court of C P. I think it a point of so much nicety and so much difficulty that I shall not give costs.

Bethell.—The plaintiff, who was tenant in tail of both estates, applied the proceeds of a sale of part of one in carrying into effect two contracts—contracts for the redemption of the land-tax on both—he is entitled to an apportionment, although one of the estates goes over.

The Lord Chancellor.—At one time the same person was tenant in tail of two estates, the land-tax upon which was redeemed with the money produced by the sale of one. The question is, should there be any apportionment of that money on the shifting of one of the estates? If the effect were redemption, which I apprehend it would be, I should think it quite clear there could be no equity: I do not see how there could. A man being a tenant in tail of two estates is entitled to hold them as they were, discharged from the money. One estate afterwards goes over in a different way. I do not apprehend there could be any equity to follow that money so as to bring it back into settlement after the estate tail had determined. On the ground, then, that the same man was tenant in tail of both estates, and assuming that the land-tax had merged—that is, united with the ownership,—there would be no right afterwards to separate that, so as to give one estate a right over against the other.

The petition of appeal dismissed, without costs.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Walker v. Bentley.

Tithe Commutation Acts—Merger of tithe—Effect of parochial agreement—Apportionment and confirmation by commissioners—Title—Specific performance.

The great tithes of certain lands were merged therein by a person having no title to the tithes, the merger was confirmed by the commissioners, and the tithes were stated to be so merged, both in the agreement for the commutation of the tithes of the parish, and also in the tithe apportionment of the parish. The lands were afterwards contracted to be sold as free from great tithes:

Held, affirming the decision of the Court below, that the lands were shewn to be tithe free, and that no objection could be taken by the purchaser on the ground that the person by whom the tithes were merged had no title to them.

The intention of the Legislature was to preclude questions being raised as to the title to tithes after confirmation of merger by the commissioners.

This was an appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Turner overruling exceptions to the Master's report, finding that certain freehold hereditaments, situated in the parish of Thornton, in Lonsdale, were free from great tithes. It appeared that by indentures of lease and release, dated respectively the 27th and 28th of February, 1818, the premises in question, together with all and singular the tithes of corn, grain, and sheaves, arising, growing, accruing, or renewing upon or from the same were conveyed to Robert Burrows in fee. By his will, dated the 17th of January, 1825, Robert Burrows devised the freehold hereditaments to certain uses under which Alice Walker, the wife of George Walker, became entitled to the fee, and he devised the tithes to Edward Burrows. On the 1st of June, 1838, George Walker, by an instrument of that date, under his hand and seal, stating that Alice Walker was lawfully seised of an estate in possession in fee simple in the great tithes issuing from the premises, declared it to be his will and intent that the said great tithes should be absolutely merged and extinguished in the freehold and inheritance of the premises, according to the provision of the Tithe Commutation Act, 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71. On the 12th of September, 1839, the Tithe Commissioners confirmed this declaration. It appeared, moreover, that the agreement for the commutation of the tithes of the parish of Thornton, in Lonsdale, which was dated the 11th of September, 1840, stated (amongst other things) that the great tithes of the premises had been declared to be merged by the owner thereof, and that the merger had been duly confirmed by the Tithe Commissioners; it also appeared in the tithe apportionment of the parish, which was confirmed by the Tithe Commissioners, on the 30th of September, 1842, that the great tithes of the premises were stated to be merged. In October 1848, Alice Walker contracted to sell the premises to the defendant, free from the great tithe. A bill being filed by the vendor for specific performance of the contract, the Master, on a reference, made his report, finding that the premises were free from the great tithes. On exceptions being taken to the Master's report, they were overruled by Sir George Turner (V.C.) from whose decision the defendant now appealed.

Russell and Berkeley, for the appellant, in support of the exceptions, argued that the declaration of merger by George Walker, the husband of the plaintiff, was null and void; and his wife, moreover, had no title whatever to the tithes. That there having been no valid merger of the tithes, no proceedings under the statute by Alice Walker or her husband, nor the parochial agreement, nor the apportionment or confirmation, would have any effect, as they were all founded upon a mere nullity, viz. an invalid and ineffectual merger. That the commissioners had no power to render such an attempted merger valid. (Clarke v. Younge, 5 Beav. 523). But supposing a merger to have taken place, the owner of the tithes would be entitled to claim the payment of an equivalent sum out of the land. (Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257.) That a purchaser ought not, therefore, to be compelled by a Court of Equity to take a title, when he might eventually be held subject to such a liability.

Elmsley and C. Hall, for the plaintiff, insisted that the appellant was precluded from going into the question, as to whether the premises were or not tithe-free, by the Tithe Commutation Acts; and the declaration of merger, and other proceedings in the apportionment, and the confirmation of the commissioners made pursuant to these Acts. (Barker v. The Tithe Commissioners, 9 M. & W. 129, S. C. 11 M. & W. 320; Edwards v. Bunbury, 3 Q. B. 885; Rey. v. The Tithe Commissioners, 15 Q. B. 620; Sugd. V. & P. last ed. 227, 267.)

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH said, that the only question in the case was, whether the land was free from the great tithes. The Master, in his report, found that the land was free from great tithes, and that such was shewn to be the case on the 8th January, and that a good title was then shewn. It was clearly the intention of the Legislature, as appeared by the various Acts passed for the commutation of the tithes, that questions like the present should not be raised. Those Acts provided for the attendance of tithe-owners, land-owners, patron, parson, and all other, if any, necessary parties; and times and places were appointed for carrying into effect the machinery of the Act, so that all parties interested might have full notice of the proceedings and protect their rights, if they had any and thought them worth while protecting. The commissioners, after all this, were directed to say what lands in the parish were free from tithes altogether, and what were subject to the rent charge, which they had authority to apportion as due in respect of each parcel of land specified on the plan or map. In this case the owner had an opportunity of attending before the commissioners, and did not attend, and it was clear therefore that the land had become absolutely free from the great tithes, those tithes being alone in question. The objection of the purchaser was wholly futile. The commissioners found the land to be tithe free, whether by the operation of merger (a mode of dealing with such hereditaments created by the Act), or otherwise. The Tithe Commutation Acts, were pre-eminently laws made for those who kept their eyes open, and not for those who went to sleep on their rights. Everything in the present case had been done pursuant to the Act, proper notices had been given, and meetings held, and the merger of the tithes in question, and the apportionment of the tithes of the parish duly received the confirmation of the commissioners, and on the 1st of January following, by the operation of the 67th section of 6 & 7 Wm. 4, c. 71, the land in question became absolutely free from the great tithes. The vendor had shewn a good title, and that the land was tithe free, and as this was clear before the bill was filed, the appeal ought clearly to be dismissed with costs.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE concurred.

BANKRUPTCY.

July 17, 21, and 22.

Ex parte CURTIES, re CURTIES.

Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act 1849—Conduct as a trader—Refusal of certificate.

A trader having on two previous occasions compounded with his creditors, failing to effect a third composition by offering to pay 11*s. in the pound, was made bankrupt, having assets which would enable him to pay* 12*s. in the pound:*

Held, affirming the decision of the commissioner that as the bankrupt had made the former compositions, and attempted to make the third by imposing on his creditors as to the amount of his assets, and as he had made false and fraudulent entries in his books, consisting of fictitious accounts in the names of other persons his conduct as a trader was such as under the 198*th section of the Bankrupt Act disentitled him to a certificate, or to any protection.*

In this case, the bankrupt, Thomas Stephen Curties, of York-street, Westminster, a wholesale cheesemonger, presented a petition, praying the reversal of the decision of Mr. Commissioner Evans, who had refused him a certificate, and granted him protection for twenty-one days only. The facts of the case are sufficiently set forth in the judgment of Lord Justice Knight Bruce; it may, however, be here briefly stated, that the bankrupt had on two occasions made very profitable compositions with his creditors, and attempted to make a third previous to the issuing of the fiat. The grounds, however, upon which the commissioner proceeded in refusing him his certificate were, first, that he had made false and fraudulent entries in his books, with intent to defraud his creditors within the meaning of the 201st section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act; secondly, that he had fraudulently contracted debts within the meaning of the 256th section of the same statute; and, thirdly, that after the adjudication, he had withheld the production of books and papers relating to his trade, dealings, and estate.

Swanston and Roxburgh, in support of the petition of appeal, stated that at the time of his failure, the bankrupt had assets sufficient to pay at least 12s. in the pound, and that 10s. in the pound had been already paid, and that the official assignee had 263*l.* still in hand for payment of costs, and for a future dividend.

Malins and Bagley, for the creditors' assignees, insisted that the petition ought to be dismissed with costs.

Bury, for the official assignee, opposed the petition of appeal.

Swanston, in reply.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—This is a case of certificate arising necessarily on one or more of the sections of the Act consolidating the law of bankruptcy, of which, without entering into the 201st and 256th sections, it will be sufficient to refer to the 198th section, which directs that the court, "having regard to the conformity of the bankrupt to the law of bankruptcy, and to his conduct as a trader before as well as after his bankruptcy, and whether the allowance of such certificate be opposed by any creditor or not, shall judge of any objection against allowing such certificate, and either find the bankrupt entitled thereto, and allow the same, or refuse or suspend the allowance thereof, or annex such conditions thereto, as the justice of the case may require." The discretion here reposed in the Court is, as Mr. Swanston truly says, not an unlimited discretion: it is to be discreetly exercised on judicial grounds, with reference to the particular nature of the case in general, and also on its particular circumstances; but, before all, is to have regard, if not to be restricted to the conduct of the bankrupt as a trader, and as a trader before as well as after his bankruptcy. The question before us is, whether, having regard to the conduct of the bankrupt as a trader, before as well as after his bankruptcy, it is or is not fit that he should receive a passport (so to speak) in the world of commerce to recommence operations as a trader before paying in full the debts now due from him. The conduct of the bankrupt has been impeached on several grounds: first, that suspending his payments, intending a stoppage and a composition with his creditors, on the morning of the 27th of October, he had, on the preceding Saturday, purchased goods of tradesmen, for which he did not pay and has never paid; and it is contended that his purchase of goods on the Saturday, followed by the almost immediate stoppage in the forenoon of the Monday, was conduct unfair, untradesmanlike, and disreputable. Primâ facie it was so; and it lies on the bankrupt to explain such a state of things: and it has been said on his behalf, that it was not unfair, untradesmanlike, nor dishonest, under the circumstances in which he was placed, to buy goods, and within less than twenty-four hours, in one sense, and forty-eight hours in every sense, to proceed to effect a composition. He says he intended nothing of the kind attributed to him; that he bought the goods in the ordinary course of business; and that he intended to continue his trade: but that on the Monday morning, so early as nine o'clock, he received an invoice of one parcel of the goods from one of the tradesmen thus used, by the deduction of discount, on which it was shewn that he expected immediate payment of the amount. The invoice appears not to have been accompanied by a letter, but the bankrupt inferred, as he says, that no further supplies were to be expected from that quarter without immediate payment. In this instance there was no demand or pressure, either for that or a much larger sum due from him to the same creditor. The amount of this invoice was under 28*l.* but he says it had such an effect upon him, as shewing an intention of no longer dealing with him on credit, but to make their dealings together ready-money dealings, he being so short of supplies, his trade so much depending on this man, that the receipt of the invoice induced him to determine at once to come to a stoppage. Now certainly, this is a most extraordinary state of circumstances, and one which, although not absolutely impossible, yet is so improbable, that it requires a very great stretch of credulity to believe. It is curious, too, that in his position he should have at all desired to have stopped payment or compounded with his creditors, for it is plain he had the means of paying 12s. in the pound; indeed, he shortly afterwards offered to pay 11s. in the pound. The whole affair, therefore, wears a most mysterious aspect, as to which it is impossible to account to the mind, before we resort to the early history of the man. It appears that in December 1831, being then a linendraper, or recently an apprentice to a linendraper at Worthing, and just out of his time, he married a lady of some fortune in his own rank of life. The fortune she had appears to have been short of 1,000*l.*—about 800*l.*; a very good fortune for his rank of life. Of this sum 500*l.* were settled strictly, and are not now in question. There was no other settlement, and the fortune came into the possession of the husband; but he says, though there was a formal deed as to the 500*l.* there was an understanding (or an agreement of some kind) that he was to be a debtor for the rest of the fortune, and whether that is to be believed depends on the circumstances taken together. He appears on this occasion, with the aid of his wife's fortune, to have changed his line of business, and to have taken to the bacon and cheese trade, in which he was not long outwardly prosperous, for in 1836 he stopped payment, and paid 10s. in the pound. That was the conclusion of the first cycle of his business. Afterwards, he went on for some years without entering into any composition. But in 1847 he came to a second composition, and in that he paid 9s. in the pound. The ensuing period of trade is not so long, because the time for the third composition appears to have arrived in 1851. Looking back to these circumstances, to which others may be added, some light dawns upon the otherwise mysterious circumstances in which a man, such as he was with regard to property, should desire to stop business and compound with his creditors. I have endeavoured to account satisfactorily to my own mind for his conduct with respect to this third transaction, and I have failed in the attempt; and I regret to say that I am unable to give credit to the reasons he assigns for his stoppage,—for his last act, the attempt at composition I am unable to assign it to any motive consistent with credit to him. This is not all. He did not at this stage contemplate bankruptcy,—he intended a composition; but against his will, his creditors not wishing to accept 11s. in the pound, he was made a bankrupt, and his books and documents have undergone an adverse inspection. From the ledger he seems to have abstracted four pages, or two leaves; these, he says, were taken out by himself. The knife, also, has been in use in more than one place in the books, and must be taken to have been so used by himself; but what makes the matter the subject of graver consideration is, that the abstracted leaves and the erasures are all accompanied by suspicious accounts in the same books, and to which I must now refer. The book contains, at least, four fictitious accounts, that is they are accounts ascribed to persons with whom he had no dealing. The allegation, however, on his part is, that the transaction was fair, and this form of account was merely adopted because he did not wish his clerks and servants to know to what they really related. One of the accounts is ascribable to a man of the name of Payne, making Payne a creditor to the extent of 200*l.* That is admitted to be fictitious in every sense, but the bankrupt explains it thus: "I say, that previously to the 10th of January, 1848, I had saved 200*l.* from the sale of bacon wrappers, empty hogsheads, and preferences on compositions with my creditors, which I had kept apart from my business as a private fund; but then wanting the amount in my business, I entered the same in my books under the head of John Payne." The phrase "preferences on compositions," is one of which I never before heard. Of the other three accounts, one is a closed account, entered in the name of Maria Curties, the mother of the bankrupt. Of the other two, being open accounts, one is with

Mr. Webberley, the brother-in-law of the bankrupt; the other with Mr. Pointon, his cousin; they are all of them fictitious in point of names; but then he says they were honest accounts, merely intended for the purpose of concealment from his clerks; and he says the money all belonged to his wife. There is no pretence for saying that it belonged to his wife for her separate use; but it is said by Mr. Swanston, and said truly, that the bankrupt and his wife might so have treated the money, and this would remove any dishonest intention. I have stated the settlement on the marriage of the 500*l*. I have stated the closed account with Maria Curties. The two accounts with Webberley and Payne amount to 1,100*l*. Now that certainly is a great amount of accumulation on 300*l*. the remainder of her fortune not in settlement. This is accounted for by the interest on the 500*l*. and on other money accrued due in her right, and by her saving from the expenses of the household, which appears to have been conducted with economy. It is, however, impossible that all this should be presented to the mind of any reasonable being without exciting an exclamation of surprise. I agree that the improbable is not always the untrue; and I agree that innocent men have been convicted on circumstantial evidence, apparently most satisfactory, but which has afterwards turned out to be untrue. Those, however, who have to determine on questions of doubtful facts, must do their best to come to a conclusion, and must not avoid doing so merely on the ground of that liability to error which is incident to all. In viewing the matter in that way, I am obliged to say I cannot come to the conclusion that the history of this account is credible. I do not believe it. The matter does not rest here, for this tradesman employed an accountant, Mr. Glover In the course of the communications which passed between Mr. Glover and himself, it appears that these accounts struck Mr. Glover as seeming remarkable; but it does not appear that the bankrupt then explained to him that these accounts, as to Webberley and Payne, were accounts relating to property of his wife; but he led Mr. Glover to believe that they were true and honest accounts with persons described. The matter does not even thus end. There appears in the account under the name of Webberley, on the 27th of October, 1851, a cheque debited to Webberley, in part payment of the apparent debt due to him. This struck the accountant as being on the day of the stoppage of payment, and he remonstrated. The bankrupt, however, at first insisted on its propriety, and that it ought to stand, but at last he gave way, and withdrew it. Though there are other circumstances to which I might allude, I lay no stress on them. I find the facts already mentioned before me, and I am asked, in the exercise of a judicial discretion, and on a tribunal having, to a certain extent, to arrange the affairs of commerce. I am asked to give the passport of the tribunal to this man to enable him to enter again into trade. I am surprised that such an application should have been made with the sanction of any disinterested adviser. It is a demand without pretext, it is a demand without colour, and I do not recollect a case where a certificate has been asked, in which there were such plain, palpable, and irresistible grounds for refusal. For my part, and so far as I am concerned, I dismiss the petition; I refuse the petitioner his certificate, and I also refuse him any protection whatever.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth said that he entirely concurred in the conclusion arrived at by his learned brother. That it would be a waste of time to point out all the various and conclusive evidence in the case shewing that the whole of the history as to the wife's fortune was utterly incredible. In his former compositions and his attempted composition with his creditors, the bankrupt had clearly acted most improperly. His conduct, moreover, as a trader had altogether been such that the Court ought not to sanction his entering into business again before the payment of his debts in full. His lordship concluded by saying, that in his opinion the petition ought to be dismissed with costs, and all protection refused.

EGREMONT v. EGREMONT.

Practice—Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act—Assignment of guardian without commission.

A guardian ad litem was, on the application of the plaintiff, appointed for an infant defendant, within the jurisdiction, without a commission, on an affidavit of the fitness of the proposed guardian.

Nalder, in this case, made an application on behalf of the plaintiff, at the request of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, to whom it was originally made, for the appointment of a guardian ad litem of an infant defendant, who is within the jurisdiction of the Court, without the issuing of a commission for that purpose. In support of the application it was urged, that as, according to the 21st section of the Act for the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the practice of issuing commissions to take answers within the jurisdiction is abolished, it was very desirable to save the expense of the commission for the assignment of the guardian, which formerly used to take the answer. Drant v. Vause, 2 Y. & C. C. C. 524, before Lord Justice Knight Bruce when Vice-Chancellor, was cited, in which a similar order was made even under the old practice.

Archibald Smith, as amicus curiæ, said that the late Vice-Chancellor Parker had, after consulting with the officers of the Court, also made a similar order under the old practice.

Their Lordships considered the application might be granted, an affidavit having been made to this effect that the proposed guardian was a fit and proper person for the office and had no interest in the matter in the suit adverse to that of the infant, and they accordingly made the order sought.

JONES v. BATTEN.

Practice—Act for the Improvement of the Jurisdiction of Equity—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 6—Sections in Chancery Relief Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 12—6th Order of 25th Oct. 1852.

A written bill was stamped and filed under the 6th section of the Equity Jurisdiction Improvement Act, and afterwards a printed copy was filed as required by the same section:

Held, that as the written copy was stamped, the printed copy did not require a second stamp, under the 12th section of the Suitors in Chancery Relief Act, and the 6th of the Orders of the 25th October, 1852, and the schedule thereto.

Freeling, in this case, at the request of Vice-Chancellor Turner, made an application to their lordships with respect to a point on which, it was stated, some difference of opinion existed among the equity judges of the courts below. The question was whether, as a written bill had been stamped and filed under the 6th section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, a second stamp was necessary under the 12th section of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, and the 6th of the Orders of the 25th October, 1852. The case of Lambert v. Lomax, Jur. 1008, was cited, in which Vice-Chancellor Turner, under similar circumstances, held one stamp only to be necessary.

Lord Justice Knight Bruce said that the preliminary written bill and the printed bill formed together only one bill, and not two bills, and the stamp might as well be on the first as on the second, as his lordship presumed that the written copy would be retained on the file. [Berry, in answer to his lordship, stated that it was the practice in the Office of the Record and Writ Clerks to retain the written copy on the file.] The written copy ought to be retained on the file, and one stamp ought to suffice.

Lord Justice Lord Cranworth concurred.

SANDERS v. RODWAY.

Husband and wife—Deed of separation—Covenant—Injunction.

A separation having taken place between a husband and wife, the wife's father undertook to support her, and to indemnify the husband against all debts she might thereafter incur; and he also released the husband from a debt then due from him. The husband, on his part, consented to permit his wife to live separate from him, and not to molest her for so doing, and not to visit her or send letters or messages to her without her consent. The husband afterwards, in violation of this covenant, commenced writing letters to the wife and attempted to visit her against her will, and threatened to endeavour to obtain possession of her.

The Court granted an injunction, restraining him from infringing the covenant, without, however, throwing any impediment in his way if he chose to proceed in the Ecclesiastical Court for restitution of conjugal rights.

This was a motion for an injunction to restrain the defendant, John Rodway, from compelling his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Rodway, from whom he is living separate, to cohabit with him, and from molesting, disturbing, or troubling her for living separate and apart from him; and also from molesting, disturbing, or troubling any other person or persons for receiving, harbouring, or entertaining his said wife, and from, without her consent, visiting her, or knowingly going into any house or place where she might reside or be, or sending or causing to be sent any letter or message to her, and from endeavouring or making any attempt to get possession of the person of his said wife, and from in any manner molesting or annoying her. The marriage between the defendant and his wife took place in the year 1828, but differences having afterwards arisen between them, they separated by mutual consent in the year 1834. At the time of the separation a separation deed was executed, dated 19th February, 1834, and made between the defendant of the one part, and Mrs. Rodway, Benjamin Sanders her father, and Benjamin Sanders her brother, of the other part, wherein the defendant covenanted thenceforth to permit and suffer Mrs. Rodway during her natural life to live apart from him, and to reside, be, and remain in such places and families, and with such relations, friends, and other persons, and to follow, carry on, and pursue such trade or business as she should notwithstanding her coverture, think fit; and he also covenanted that he would not, at any time thereafter, sue her in the Ecclesiastical Court, or any other court, for living separate and apart from him, or to compel her to cohabit with him, or sue, molest, disturb, or trouble her for such living separate and apart from him or any other person or persons for receiving, harbouring, or entertaining her, nor would, without the consent of his said wife, visit her, or knowingly come into any house or place where she might reside, or be, or send, or cause to be sent, any letter or message to her; and he also covenanted that he would not in any way claim or interfere with any property which his wife then had or might subsequently acquire. By the same deed Benjamin Sanders, the father, covenanted that he would, during the remainder of his daughter's life, clothe, maintain, and keep her, and would indemnify the defendant from any debts which she might thereafter incur, and he thereby also released the defendant from a debt of 300*l*. which was then due from him. Mr. B. Sanders, the elder, died in March 1852, his son Benjamin Sanders having died previously. Mr. Sanders, the elder, by his will, dated in 1845, appointed his three surviving sons his executors, and thereby bequeathed to them a considerable sum of money upon trust to pay the income to his daughter for her life for her separate use. Mrs. Rodway had resided with her father till his death, and she then continued to live with one of her brothers in the same house, to the possession of which her brother had succeeded. During her father's life she was not in any way interfered with by her husband, but some time subsequently Mr. Rodway called at the house and wrote a letter to the family and openly expressed his determination to use every means in his power to obtain possession of Mrs. Rodway's person. Mrs. Rodway's three brothers accordingly joined with her in filing a bill on the 29th October last, in which they prayed for an injunction, and now moved as already stated.

R. Palmer and Renshaw, for the plaintiffs, contended that this case came within the principle upon which the Court acts in such cases. The bill did not seek to restrain the husband from applying to the Ecclesiastical Court for restitution of conjugal rights, but merely to restrain him from violating the covenant entered into by him in the separation deed. The principle was the same in this as in other contracts; that is, they will be supported in favour of those who give a valuable consideration for them. Now, the deed of the 19th of February, 1834, was a perfect deed of separation, for it was a covenant by the father of Elizabeth Rodway to support her, and to indemnify her husband against her debts; and, moreover, the deed has for its object a separation then existing, and not a separation thereafter to take effect. In Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405; S. C. 1 H. L. Cas. 538, the consideration in part was the staying proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court by the wife for nullity of marriage, and the husband was held to be bound. Negative stipulations were frequently carried into effect, though the rest of a contract might not be. The object of the husband was more to annoy the wife, and get her money, than to effect a reconciliation. The case came within that of Lumley v. Wagner, 1 Dea. Main. & G. 606, as to a negative covenant. There was no property at the time of the execution of the deed, and therefore no trusts to be carried out. All that is wanted is an injunction, not a decree, to carry out the trusts. The motion is in the very terms of the portion of the covenant by Mr. Rodway which is infringed, and the suit is by the party who gave the consideration. (They cited Jones v. Waite, 9 Cl. & F. 101.)

Rogers, contrà.—The question was, simply, had there ever been an instance in which the Court has interfered to prevent the husband from seeking restitution of conjugal rights? The law says, if there be a consideration the covenant is good, and you may go to law and get damages for its breach. The case of Wilson v. Wilson went upon the principle of a settlement of the wife's property on the husband, and the Court restrained her from proceeding in a suit to show that the marriage was void ab initio; but did not restrain the husband from suing in the Ecclesiastical Court for restitution of conjugal rights.

The Master of the Rolls said he would not interfere with any proceedings which might be taken in the Ecclesiastical Court, nor would he restrain the husband in the exercise of his rights in that respect; but the suit was in the nature of a suit for specific performance of the covenants of the deed of separation, and was a suit which it was competent for the representatives of one of the covenanting parties to institute. The plaintiffs were not seeking by the motion to restrain the defendant from proceeding in the Ecclesiastical Court, but merely to restrain a breach of contract. The only question was, whether the defendant had entered into the covenant; for if he had, the Court was bound to prevent him from infringing it. The injunction, therefore, must be granted in the terms of the notice of motion, that is, in the terms of the covenant in the deed of separation.

Re HARRISON'S Trust.

Trustees, appointment of—Breach of trust—Power to appoint, construction of.

A will contained a power to appoint new trustees in the place of those "who should at any time after the testator's decease, die or become unwilling or unable to act in the aforesaid trusts:" Held, that this did not apply to the case of a trustee going out of the jurisdiction, and therefore in such a case a trustee being abroad, and his address unknown, it was necessary to come to the Court for its assistance.

The Court will not, however, order a transfer to the new trustees of shares in a joint-stock company purchased with the trust-funds without authority by the original trustees, as by so doing it would be sanctioning a breach of trust.

This was an application to the Court for the appointment of new trustees, and a transfer to them of shares in the Leeds and Bradford Railway Company purchased by the original trustees with the trust-moneys. It appeared that James Harrison, by his will, bearing date the 29th of April, 1846, gave all his personal estate to certain trustees, of whom the petitioners and Henry Harrison were the survivors, upon trust to convert it into money and invest the proceeds in the public stocks or funds, or on real securities, in England, and stand possessed thereof upon certain trusts. The testator gave power to appoint new trustees in the place of any "trustee who shall at any time after my decease die or become unwilling or unable to act in the aforesaid trusts." After the death of the testator, the trustees invested part of the proceeds of the personal estate in the purchase of twenty guaranteed shares in the Leeds and Bradford Railway Company. This railway was subsequently purchased by the Midland Railway Company, and the shareholders in the former company were allowed the option of taking shares in the latter company in lieu of their shares in the former upon the terms mentioned in the agreement. The petitioners conceiving this arrangement advantageous to their cestuis que trust, were anxious to take advantage of the option, but were unable to do so in consequence of Henry Harrison, third co-trustee, having gone out of the jurisdiction, and it not being known where he was to be found. The present petition therefore was presented, praying that the petitioner might be empowered to transfer the Leeds and Bradford Railway shares, and to take a transfer of the Midland Railway shares, and that a new trustee might be appointed in place of Henry Harrison.

S. Smith, for the petitioners, admitted that a breach of trust had, in the first instance, been committed by investing the trust money in railway shares, for which the will gave no power; but contended that the Court would enable the parties to carry out the arrangement made with the Midland Company, inasmuch as it was advantageous for the cestuis que trust. With regard to the other part of the petition, the appointment of a new trustee in the place of Harrison, he submitted that the words of the power did not apply to the case of a trustee out of the jurisdiction, and that therefore it was necessary to invoke the aid of the Court. He cited Re Watts, 15 Jur. 459.

The MASTER of the ROLLS would make the order for the appointment of a new trustee on the authority of the case in the Jurist; but he would not consent to make any order as to the transfer of the shares, as by so doing he would be sanctioning a breach of trust.

VICE-CHANCELLOR STUART'S COURT.

Reported by GEO. S. ALLNUTT, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

LOW v. NASH.

Statute of Limitations—Trust.

A testator, who died in December 1826, by his will directed a leasehold estate to be sold, and that out of the proceeds a sum of 50l. should be paid to A. B. Both the executors afterwards died: and in 1852 A. B. filed a claim against the executors of the surviving executor, for payment of the 50l. and interest:

Held, that A. B.'s claim was not barred by the Statute of Limitations.

John Leeson, by his will dated the 1st of December, 1826, with respect to his leasehold in house Tottenham-court-road, in which he then dwelt, directed the same to be sold by public auction, together with everything that might be upon the same premises at the time of his decease, except certain specified furniture and effects; and out of the proceeds arising from such sale the testator, after directing payment of his debts, directed, among other things, that a sum of 50*l.* should be paid to his daughter, Mary Leeson; and the testator thereby appointed Henry Leeson and William Nash executors of his will. The testator died on the 10th of December, 1826, and his will was proved on the 13th of the same month by both the executors, the property being sworn to be under 4,000*l.* Henry Leeson afterwards died, leaving William Nash, his executor, him surviving. William Nash died on the 11th of September, 1846, having by his will appointed the defendants in this case his executors. The claim was filed by Mary Low, widow, formerly Mary Leeson, the daughter of John Leeson, the testator, and sought payment of the said legacy of 50*l.* and interest at 5*l.* per cent. from the 10th of December, 1827, and in default thereof to have the personal estate of the testator, John Leeson, administered on behalf of herself and all other the legatees of John Leeson; and that for that purpose all proper directions might be given, and accounts taken.

Welford appeared for the plaintiff.

Bevir, for the defendants, said that they had filed no affidavit; they knew nothing of the matters stated by the plaintiff, and relied upon the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 27, s. 40, as barring the claim.

Welford, in reply, contended that there was a trust for sale, and the Statute of Limitations did not apply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he would make a decree for an account of the leasehold estate and its contents, which by the will were charged with the 50*l.* and for an account of the proceeds of the sale, and he should reserve the costs and further directions.

Monday, Dec. 6.

SERGISON v. BEAVAN.

Practice—Injunction—Substituted service of bill.

An affidavit of merits is not now necessary upon an application for leave to serve upon the attorney for the plaintiff-at-law a bill to restrain proceedings in the action.

This suit was instituted by Mr. Sergison to restrain Mr. Beavan, the defendant, from prosecuting an action-at-law against him.

Prior applied for leave to serve the attorney of Beavan, the plaintiff-at-law, with the bill, Beavan himself being out of the jurisdiction. There were affidavits to prove that Mr. Beavan was out of the jurisdiction, and that the person upon whom substituted service was proposed to be made, was the attorney for the plaintiff in the action. There was, however, no affidavit of the merits upon which the injunction was sought.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that, as the common injunction could not, under the present practice, be obtained, it would be sufficient to produce an affidavit of merits when the injunction was applied for. He would, therefore, upon the affidavits which had been produced, make the order for substituted service.

HOLLAND v. KING.

Practice—Costs of reference of title.

A purchaser under a decree, being also a defendant in the cause, took a reference to the Master upon the title to the property purchased. The title was reported good:

Held, that the purchaser was not to pay the costs of the reference.

By the Master's report (dated the 5th May, 1852), the Master found that it would be fit and proper that Mr. King, one of the defendants, should be the purchaser of the partnership estate and effects, the subject of the suit, at the price or sum of 800*l.* By an order of Vice-Chancellor Parker, dated the 10th of July, 1852, this report was confirmed, and a reference to the Master was directed as to the title. By his report, dated the 22nd of November, 1852, the Master reported in favour of the title, and the present petition was presented for the confirmation of the report and consequent directions.

Prior appeared for the petitioner, and stated that he believed the only objection was, as to the expense of the reference of title, and upon this point he referred to Flower v. Hartopp, 8 Beav. 199; Thorpe v. Freer, 4 Madd.; and Camden v. Benson, 1 Keen, 671.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR mentioned also the cases of Friswell v. Moore (V.C. of Eng. 30 May, 1833); and Dallas v. Powell (V.C. of Eng. 11 Aug. 1833); and referred to 1 Sugd. Vend. & Pur. 112.

Morris, for the plaintiff, said that the reference as to the title was taken needlessly, as the purchaser was a party to the suit, and was well acquainted with the title; he should therefore pay the costs of the reference, the Master having reported in favour of the title.

Prior in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR did not think this case could be taken out of the general rule. The petitioner was entitled to the reference of the title upon the usual terms, which were, that he should not pay costs.

Wednesday, Dec. 8.

Ex parte PEARSON'S EXECUTORS, re THE MIDLAND UNION, BURTON-UPON-TRENT, ASHBY-DE-LA-ZOUCH, AND LEICESTER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Joint-Stock Companies Winding-up Acts—Provisional director—Contributory.

A. B. a member of the provisional committee of a railway company, attended certain meetings of the company. After the project had been abandoned, at a meeting of the committee of management, at which A. B. was not present, it was resolved that each of the directors should be applied to for payment of 160l. and in the letter of application it was stated that on payment of this sum he would be released from all further liability. A. B. paid the sum of 160l. accordingly. The company being ordered to be wound up, the Master placed A. B.'s executors on the list of contributories; but, on appeal, the Court directed the names to be struck off the list, and that their costs should be paid by the official manager.

This was a motion on behalf of Henry Cox and the Rev. Henry Jennings, executors of Sir William Hyde Pearson, knight, deceased, that Master Tinney might be ordered to strike the names of the said Henry Cox and Henry Jennings, executors as aforesaid, off the list of contributories of the above-mentioned company; and that the official manager of the said company might be ordered to pay to the said Henry Cox and Henry Jennings their costs of the proceedings before the said Master Tinney, and of the present application, and consequent thereon. Sir W. H. Pearson was one of the provisional directors of this company, and also a member of the committee of management. The circumstances of the company have already been stated in the case of Ex parte Hill, 19 Law T. Rep. 57. Sir W. H. Pearson was present at the meetings of the 17th, 28th, and 29th of October, 1845, the resolutions adopted at which meetings are given in Ex parte Hill. On the 22nd of December, 1845, at a meeting of the committee, at which Sir W. H. Pearson was present, it was resolved, "That in consequence of the secretary's report of the small amount of deposits the Midland Union Railway project be postponed until the next Session of Parliament, and that all further expenditure on account of this company cease from this day, except such as may be specially ordered by the Board:" "that the secretary obtain forthwith an account of all outstanding debts and liabilities of this company." Several other meetings of the committee were afterwards held, at which Sir W. H. Pearson was present. At a meeting held on the 1st of July, 1846, but at which Sir W. H. Pearson was not present, it was resolved, "That the secretary having ascertained that the present outstanding claims of this company amount to 5,763*l.* 10s. 7d. after deducting the assets; that the same be equally divided between the following provisional directors, and payment requested within fourteen days from the present date." [Then followed a list of thirty-six names.] "That the following draft of a letter which has been submitted to this meeting be adopted, and that the secretary forward a copy of the same to each of the above shareholders:—

'Midland Union Railway.

'Sir,—The total liabilities of this company having been at length ascertained, I am instructed to inform you that the amount due to creditors, after deducting sundry small sums obtained from shareholders, is 5,760*l.* and that your share of the same, as one of the provisional directors is 160*l.* On payment of the above sum you will be released from all further liability, and the balance, if any, which may accrue after the settlement of the claims upon the company, will be returned to you. As the creditors can no longer be put off, and legal proceedings against individual members of the committee may be expected, I am instructed to request that you will without delay—say within ten days—pay the above amount to the bankers of the company, Messrs. Glyn, Halifax, and Co. Lombard-street, London.

'It will be satisfactory to you to learn that the solicitor of the company has very handsomely withdrawn all claim for professional services: the aggregate amount therefore includes only his actual expenses out of pocket.

'I am, &c.

'WM. KNIGHT, Secretary.'"

A copy of this letter having been received by Sir W. H. Pearson, he paid the 160*l.* required of him. No shares had been allotted in the company, and no debt had been proved, but a claim had been made by Mr. Baxter, the solicitor, in respect of 1,300*l.* paid by him to Mr. Vignoles, the engineer of the company.

Daniel and Selwyn appeared in support of the motion, and referred to Carrick's case, 1 Sim. N.S. 505.

Roxburgh and Morris, for the official manager, cited Ex parte Hill, 19 Law T. Rep. 57; and Capt. Turner's case, 5 De G. and Sma. 182.

Daniel, in reply.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that after that letter had been received and acted upon by Sir W. H. Pearson, he did not think the persons at the meeting at which it was adopted, could call upon him for further payments. He should, therefore, grant the motion according to the terms of the notice.

Thursday, Dec. 9.

RAWLINS v. DAGLISH.

Practice—Proceedings by claim.

This was a claim for the specific performance of an agreement for a lease of mines. The case was very complicated.

Daniel and Bird appeared for the plaintiff.

Follett and W. M. James appeared for the defendant.

In the course of the argument, the Vice-Chancellor expressed his opinion to be decidedly against proceeding by claim, and that there should be but one mode of bringing a complaint before the Court. His Honour said, with reference to the present case, that he was placed in a most unfortunate and grievous situation, for he found it almost impossible to do justice. He could not decide the case properly on claim, and he could not deal fairly by the plaintiff, who himself had, in accordance with the practice of the Court, come in at a door which was intended to open a short cut. Nothing could be more distressing to a judge. His Honour added, that what he intended to do was this: he should, upon the facts and evidence before him, endeavour to do justice as well as he could, with a sense of the almost impossibility of his doing justice, and he should leave the parties to appeal to the Lord Chancellor, who would have the opportunity of seeing the situation in which litigants were placed who pursued their remedies according to the practice of the Court.

At the rising of the Court, this case, which had occupied the greater part of the day, was not concluded.

Russell and Malins complained of these claims having precedence of causes. They stated, that it had become the practice to bring causes before the Court by claim rather than by bill, although not properly the subjects of claim, merely for the purpose of obtaining a more speedy hearing.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he considered that special claims should be distinguished from ordinary claims, and he should therefore direct, that on a short cause day no claims were to be taken, except such as were certified by counsel to be short claims. All other claims would take their place in the general paper to be heard with other causes.

GROTE v. BING.

Practice—Appointment of receiver.

Bagshawe applied as to the appointment of a receiver, and stated that a doubt existed whether the application for such appointment should be made in court or at chambers.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that where a receiver was in the first instance sought to be appointed in the place of some person already in possession of the property, the motion should be made in open court. But in cases where a receiver had been already appointed and a vacancy occurred by death or otherwise, or where, as upon the death of the owner of the property, no person was in possession, the application should be made at chambers.

KIPLING v. INGRAM.

Construction of local Acts for lighting and paving—Liability to a paving rate.

This was an action of debt by the clerk to the trustees for paving and lighting the parish of St. Luke, Middlesex, to recover the amount of a paving rate, to which the defendant had been assessed; and the case came before the Court upon a special case, raising the question whether the defendant, as the occupier of a house in the City-road, situate within the said parish of St. Luke, was liable to be rated to a paving rate, under sect. 6 of 2 Wm. 4, c. xiii. "An Act to alter and enlarge the Powers of an Act of the Fiftieth Year of his Majesty King George the Third, for Lighting and otherwise Improving the Streets and other public Places in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex; and for placing under the Care of the Trustees certain Roads in the Parish, which were lately Turnpike Roads."

The following is the preamble of that Act:—"Whereas an Act was passed in the fiftieth year of the reign of his Majesty, King George the Third, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual Provision for Lighting, Watching, Paving, Cleansing, Regulating, and Improving the Streets and other public Places in the Parish of St. Luke, in the County of Middlesex," by which Act all the highways and other public places within the said parish, not being turnpike roads, were placed under the care and management of trustees appointed and to be appointed as therein mentioned, with certain powers for lighting, watching, paving, and otherwise regulating and improving the same, as in the said Act are mentioned and contained:

And whereas another Act was passed in the tenth year of the reign of his late Majesty King George the Fourth, intituled "An Act to amend an Act of the Seventh Year of his present Majesty, for consolidating the Trusts of the several Turnpike Roads in the Neighbourhood of the Metropolis north of the River Thames, and to make and maintain two new or branch Roads, to communicate with the said Metropolis Roads," by which said Act of the tenth year of his late Majesty it is provided that from and after the first day of January next after the passing of the said Act, the roads therein mentioned shall cease to be maintained, repaired, lighted, watched, or watered by the commissioners acting in the execution of the said Act of the seventh year of his said late Majesty, with the exceptions therein mentioned; and that the same roads and parts of roads which, under the said last-mentioned provision, shall cease to be maintained and repaired by the said commissioners, shall from thenceforth be deemed and considered to be common highways, and shall be maintained, repaired, watched, watered, and lighted by the parishes in which the same are respectively situate, by the respective surveyors or persons appointed, or to be appointed under and by virtue of an Act passed in the thirteenth year of the reign of his majesty king George the Third, intituled, "An Act to explain, amend, and reduce into one Act of Parliament the Statutes now in being for the Amendment and Preservation of the public Highways in that Part of Great Britain, called England, and for other Purposes;" and that the expenses thereof shall be assessed, and levied under the provisions of the said Act, upon the whole of such parish or parishes:

And whereas in consequence of the provisions contained in the said recited Act, of the tenth year of king George the Fourth, a considerable line of road, within the said parish of St. Luke, which was formerly turnpike road, under the care and management of the said commissioners, and comprising the whole of Old-street, part of Old-street-road, part of Providence-row, and part of Goswell-road, hath been thrown upon the said parish of St. Luke, and the expenses attending the maintaining and repairing of which line of road will, if effected under the direction of the said recited Act, of the thirteenth year of king George the Third, add considerably to the parochial burdens:

And whereas no surveyor of the highways within the said parish of St. Luke, hath been appointed under or by virtue of the said Act passed in the thirteenth year of the reign of his said Majesty King George the Third; and inasmuch as a very considerable saving of expense will be effected by placing the entire care and management of the said roads and parts of roads which have been so thrown upon the said parish as aforesaid, in the trustees for the time being acting under the said recited Act of the fiftieth year of King George the Third; and as thereby an effectual check and control will be given to the said parish at large over the expenditure and application of the money required for the repairs of the same, it is expedient that such roads and parts of roads hereinbefore mentioned should be placed under the care and management of the said trustees, with such and the same powers for lighting, paving, cleansing, regulating, maintaining, and improving the same as are contained in the last-mentioned Act with respect to the other highways within the said parish, and with such further powers as are hereinafter contained; and it is also expedient that the powers and provisions of the same Act should in some other respects be altered, amended, and enlarged, &c.

Sec. 1 then enacts, that the said recited Act (50 Geo. 3), and all and every the powers, provisions, &c. therein contained (save and except such parts thereof as are hereby varied, altered, or repealed), shall be as good, valid, and effectual for carrying this Act, and the several purposes thereof, into execution, as if the same had been repeated and re-enacted in this Act.

Sec. 2 that from and immediately after the passing of this Act, all and singular the said several roads, and parts of roads, hereinbefore mentioned to have been heretofore turnpike-roads, under the care of the commissioners acting under the said Act of 7 Geo. 4, but abandoned by them in consequence of the provisions of the said Act, the 10 Geo. 4, and which comprise the whole of Old-street, part of Old-street-road, part of Providence-row, and part of Goswell-road, severally situate in the said parish of St. Luke, shall be, and they are, hereby accordingly placed under the care and management of the trustees for the time being acting in the execution of the said Act of 50 Geo. 3, with such and the like powers and authorities for lighting, paving, cleansing, regulating, and improving the same, and every part thereof, as mentioned and provided for in and by the said last-mentioned Act, with respect to the other streets and public places within the said parish of St. Luke, not being turnpike roads, and with such further powers and authorities as are contained in this Act; and such said several roads and parts of roads hereinbefore described are hereby declared to be comprised within and subject to the powers and provisions of the said recited Act of the 50 Geo. 3, and shall for ever hereafter be deemed and taken to be part or parts of the streets or other public places directed or authorised to be lighted, watched, paved, cleansed, regulated, and improved by the said trustees under the authority of the same Act.

Sec. 6. That all and every the costs, charges, and expenses for and attending the lighting, watering, paving, gravelling, ballasting, draining, cleansing, regulating, and improving as well the said several roads and parts of roads hereinbefore described, as also all and every the streets, squares, lanes, alleys, courts, yards, and other public places within the said parish of St. Luke comprised in the said recited Act of the fiftieth year of King George the Third, shall from time to time, when settled and ascertained in manner directed by the said last-mentioned Act and this Act, be levied and raised by a just and equal pound rate, to be laid upon all and every person or persons who do and shall inhabit, hold, occupy, be in possession of or enjoy any messuage, tenement, land, house, shop, warehouse, or other building or hereditament within the said parish of St. Luke already lighted, watered, paved, repaired, regulated, or improved under the authority of the last-mentioned Act, or to be lighted, watered, ballasted, gravelled, drained, paved, repaired, regulated, or improved under the authority of this Act, and whether any such messuage, tenement, land, house, shop, warehouse, or other building or hereditaments, shall or shall not be situate or being within or abutting or adjoining to any of the streets, squares, lanes, alleys, courts, yards, or other open passages, ways, and places already paved under the said recited Act, or directed to be paved or repaired by this Act.

By the 50 Geo. 3, c. cxlix. s. 27, it was enacted that the vestrymen of the said parish shall yearly, and every year, assemble, &c. and make and sign two several rates or assessments, &c. one of which rates being for the lighting, cleansing, and watching the said parish, shall be laid upon all and every person or persons who do and shall inhabit, hold, occupy, or be in possession of or enjoy any messuages, tenements, lands, grounds, house, shop, coach-house, stable, cellar, vault, warehouse, or other building or hereditament within the said parish, and not exceeding, &c.; and the other or second of the said rates shall be laid upon all and every person or persons who do and shall inhabit, hold, occupy, be in possession of, or enjoy, any messuages, tenements, lands, grounds, coach-house, stable, cellar, vault, house, shop, warehouse, or other building or hereditament, situate or being within any of the streets, squares, lanes, alleys, courts, yards, or other open passages, ways, and places within the said parish, already paved under the said recited Acts, or which shall or may be hereafter paved or repaired by the said trustees, to be appointed under and by virtue of this Act, and not exceeding in any year, &c.

Sec. 66. That the said trustees shall and may order lamps, with proper furniture and burners, to be set up under the authority of the said former Acts, or any of them, to be used for better lighting the open places, squares, streets, lanes, alleys, passages, and courts within and throughout the said parish.

Sec. 77 empowered the trustees to pave "all or any part or parts of the said squares, streets, lanes, courts, yards, alleys, passages, and places, whether foot or carriage ways," comprised in or paved under a previous Act of the 11 Geo. 3, c. 46.

Sec. 81 empowered them to pave or repair, and to bring under the general provisions of the Act, such parts of the parish as were not comprised in the stat. 11 Geo. 3, except the foot pavements in Providence-row and in the City-road.

Sec. 177 provided that that Act should not be construed to invest the trustees with any powers "to encroach upon, damage, pave, dig, water, widen, turn, extend, alter, or interfere with, any turnpike-roads within the said parish, made," &c. by virtue of several Acts there mentioned, one of which (1 Geo. 3) related to the City-road.

Stat. 11 Geo. 3, c. 46, was an Act for paving and keeping in repair "the streets, lanes, and passages" in the parish of St. Luke, &c.

Stat. 33 Geo. 3, c. 83, was an Act for "the better lighting, cleansing, watching, and regulating the Squares, Streets, Lanes, Alleys, Passages, and Places within the parish of St. Luke."

Both these statutes were repealed by 50 Geo. 3, c. cxlix.

By statutes passed in 1 Geo. 3, 23 Geo. 3, 40 Geo. 3, 5 Geo. 4, c. 61, the City-road was made a turnpike-road and placed under the care of commissioners, and by 7 Geo. 4, c. cxliii. "An Act for consolidating the Trusts of the several Turnpike-roads in the Neighbourhood of the Metropolis, North of the River Thames," the City-road and many other turnpike-roads were placed under the commissioners appointed by that Act.

By sec. 71, power is given to the commissioners to light certain roads therein specified, which the trustees, under the repealed Acts relating thereto, had been authorised to light; but the City-road is not included in that section.

It appeared that, in point of fact, the trustees of St. Luke's, and not the City-road Commissioners, had lighted that part of the City-road to which the defendant's house fronted; and under the 50 Geo. 3, they had assessed the defendant's house to the lighting rate, but not to the paving rate, the City-road having been, and still continuing to be, paved by the Turnpike Commissioners. And since the passing of 2 Wm. 4, c. xiii. the same course had been pursued until recently, when the rate in question was made.

Crowder for the plaintiff.

Watson for the defendant.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rate is bad. All principle is certainly very strongly against it, because this is a paving rate imposed upon the inhabitants of the City-road, who derive no benefit from the paving, to the expenses of which the rate is to be applied. It is admitted that previously to the Act of the 2 Wm. 4, the inhabitants of the City-road were not liable to a paving rate imposed by the trustees; and the 2 Wm. 4, upon which reliance is placed to confer an additional burden, confers no additional advantage. Qui sentit commodum sentire debet onus; and until lately the trustees themselves do not appear to have considered that the Act 2 Wm. 4, gave them any right to impose a paving rate upon the City-road. Under these circumstances, we ought to find in that statute a very clear and unequivocal expression of the intention of the Legislature before we sanction a rate so imposed. Looking at the title of that Act and the preamble, I see no evidence of any such intention, no allegation of any inequality to be remedied, but a recital of other objects which are attained by the Act. It is clear, looking at the preamble and the course of legislation as to the paving and lighting of St. Luke's, that a distinction has been kept up between turnpike-roads and streets, or open places in the parish; and that the latter only have been contemplated as coming under the authority of the trustees. But sect. 6 of 2 Wm. 4, is the foundation of this rate [his lordship read it]. In order, therefore, to support the rate, it is essential to shew that the defendant's house is in a place which has been already lighted, watered, paved, &c. under the authority of the 50 Geo. 3, or that it is to be lighted, &c. under this Act of 2 Wm. 4. Mr. Crowder admits that the trustees did not pave the City-road, which was under the management of the Turnpike Commissioners; but he contends that they did light it. I can, however, find no authority in any of the Acts for the trustees to light or interfere with the City-road; and the result at which I have arrived is, that those who have to support the rate have failed in making out the liability of the inhabitants of the City-road.

COLERIDGE, J.—The only words of the 6th section which appear to be relied upon in support of the rate are these:—"Already lighted under the authority of the last-mentioned Act." Then, was the place in question lighted under the authority of the 50 Geo. 3.? It appears that, in fact, the trustees lighted it; but upon looking at the 50 Geo. 3, a distinction is clearly made between "streets, squares, lanes, or open places," and "roads," within the parish. In all the material parts of that Act the word "roads" is wanting; and although the expression "open places" is used, that will not bring "roads" under the operation of the Act.

WIGHTMAN, J.—Before the statute 2 Wm. 4, the trustees levied two rates in St. Luke's parish,—one for lighting, the other for paving; and to the latter the inhabitants of the City-road were not liable. But, under the 2 Wm. 4, there is to be one rate upon all messuages,—"in any street" must be understood—already lighted, &c. under the authority of the former Act. If it could be shewn that the City-road was lighted under the former Act, the inhabitants might be liable to this rate; but that has not been shewn, for no words in that Act have been brought under our notice which would include the City-road.

ERLE, J.—Even if it was doubtful whether the City-road was or was not lighted under 50 Geo. 3, I should still think the defendant entitled to our judgment; because I see in the 50 Geo. 3 an elaborate process of rating, whereby the lighting-rate was to be imposed universally throughout the parish, and the paving-rate only on that portion of it which derived benefit from the Act. If that mode of rating was to be altogether altered by the 2 Wm. 4, I should have expected some announcement of that intention in the preamble, and a clear expression of it in the enacting section; but the Act is altogether silent as to any such object. Whatever doubt there may be as to the fact, it is clear that the Legislature, when it passed the 2 Wm. 4, considered that the turnpike roads in St. Luke's were not to be lighted by the trustees, but by the road commissioners. The preamble recites the abandonment by the commissioners of certain turnpike-roads, and the second section vests the management of those roads in the trustees for the purposes of lighting, paving, cleansing, and the like; and sect. 4 expressly provides that the said roads so placed under the care of the trustees should thereafter be deemed to be included "under the general description of streets and other public places within the said parish of St. Luke, not being turnpike-roads, as mentioned in the same Act; and shall be deemed and taken to be such streets or public places, and lighted, watered, paved, &c. accordingly." It seems to me, therefore, that all the turnpike-roads were originally out of the jurisdiction of the trustees; that by the 2 Wm. 4, certain of those roads (the City-road not being one), which had ceased to be turnpike-roads, were brought under the management of the trustees; but that the Legislature regarded the turnpike-roads as places not previously lighted by the trustees. According to that view, sec. 6 will bear an intelligible construction, and will not reach the City-road; because it must be read as applying only to tenements situate in streets or public places, not being turnpike-roads, already lighted under the authority of the former Act, or situate in the roads thereinbefore described, as well as the streets and public places of the parish, and to be lighted under that Act.

Stamp Act — Partition-deed — Consideration for equality of partition not expressed—Bond to secure the consideration.

The stat. 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 22, which requires that on the sale of property the full purchase or consideration-money shall be truly expressed upon the conveyance, does not apply to the case of a partition, so as to render it necessary to express in the deed the consideration-money agreed to be paid for equality of partition.

Where a money bond was given to secure the payment of the true consideration for equality of partition:

Held, that though the deed of partition was not properly stamped, and did not express the true consideration, neither the bond nor the deed were void on that account.

Debt on a money bond, conditioned to be void on payment of 800*l.* and interest, at a time specified.

Plea—That the bond was given to secure the payment of a sum of 660*l.* with interest, which the plaintiff had agreed to receive as the consideration for equality of partition, upon the partition of real property between the plaintiff, the defendant, and other persons; and that the deed of partition (which was set out) expressed only a nominal consideration, whereas it ought to have expressed the true consideration, which had been agreed to be paid to the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J. now delivered the judgment of the Court.—This was an action on a bond which, in form, was a common money bond, with a condition that it should be void on payment of 800*l.* and interest at the time specified. The defendant by his plea set out a deed of partition of certain real property between the plaintiff and the defendant and other persons, by which their several shares were ascertained and divided, and upon the face of which deed a nominal consideration which was paid for the plaintiff's becoming a party to it, was stated; and the defendants alleged that the plaintiff, in fact, was to receive 660*l.* for equality of partition, which, with an arrear of interest, made up the sum of 800*l.* and that the real consideration of the plaintiff agreeing to the partition was the sum of 660*l.* which ought to have been stated as the consideration in the deed, and that the bond was given to secure the payment of that sum and interest under the statute. To this plea the plaintiff demurred, and upon the argument two points were raised upon the part of the defendant,—first, that the deed of partition was an instrument in which, under the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, incorporated for this purpose with the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, the true consideration ought to have been expressed; and, secondly, that if that were so, the plaintiff could not recover on the bond, which was given to secure the payment of the due consideration, inasmuch as if it were paid it might be recovered back under the 24th section of the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149. Upon this second point, however, it is unnecessary to give any opinion, as we do not think that the provisions of the 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, are applicable to the transaction in question, which was a partition and not a sale. By the 22nd section of that statute it is enacted, "That from and after the 10th day of October, 1808, in all cases of the sale of any lands, tenements, rents, and annuities, or other property, real or personal, heritable or movable, or of any right, title, interest, or claim in, to, out of, or upon any lands, tenements, rents, annuities, or other property, where a duty is imposed on the conveyance thereof in the schedule to the Act annexed in proportion to the amount of the purchase or consideration money therein expressed, the full purchase or consideration money, which shall be directly or indirectly paid or secured or agreed to be paid for the same, shall be truly expressed in or upon the principal or only deed or instrument, whereby the land or other thing sold shall be granted, &c. or otherwise conveyed to or vested in the purchaser or any other person by his direction." By the 55th Geo. 3, c. 184, the former duties are repealed and new duties are granted; and by the 8th section all the powers and provisions of the former Act are extended to this Act. In the schedule to the 55 Geo. 3, an ad valorem duty is imposed upon the sale of land and other property; and in the same schedule an ad valorem duty is also imposed upon a deed of partition when any sum amounting to 300*l.* or upwards is paid for equality of partition; and the statute expressly distinguishes between a sale and a partition. In the case of a sale, an ad valorem duty is to be paid, whatever the price may be, according to the scale in the schedule; but in the case of a partition, the ad valorem duty is only payable where the sum paid for equality of partition is 300*l.* and upwards. An obligation to express the consideration is by the statute imposed in cases of the sale of property and not of partition, and such obligation could only be extended by necessary intendment, for which we find no reason in the present case. In Doe dem. Manifold v. Diamond, 4 B. &. C. 243, it was decided that a conveyance of an estate by a father to a son, in consideration of natural love and affection, and also of a bond to augment the sister's portions, not being a sale by the father to the son, did not require an ad valorem stamp. In the present case an ad valorem duty would be payable on the deed of partition; but the case of Doe v. Diamond is an authority for confining the provisions of the statute relating to the imposition of duties to sales properly so called. It appears to us that the transaction in question cannot be considered a sale, and if not a sale the provisions of the 22nd section of the 48 Geo. 3, do not apply, and it was not necessary to express the consideration for equality of partition in the deed. In this view of the case we see no real objection to the right of the plaintiff; neither the partition deed nor the bond is void by reason of an improper stamp, which may be even now corrected. Mann v. Lent, 10 B. & C. 877, is a case in point, to shew that in such a case as the present the security for the consideration is valid, and may be enforced. Our judgment, therefore, is for the plaintiff.

REG. v. BARTHELEMY AND MORNAT.

Bail—Murder—Duel.

Where there is a verdict of a coroner's jury of guilty of wilful murder against parties, and there is evidence upon the depositions to support that finding, this Court will not admit them to bail, though the murder appears to have been committed in a duel, and though the evidence may not be conclusive of guilt.

Huddleston moved for a rule to shew cause why a writ of habeas corpus should not issue to bring up the prisoners, and also why a certiorari should not issue to bring up the depositions taken before the coroner and also before the magistrates for the purpose of the prisoners being admitted to bail. It appeared that the two prisoners were inculpated with two others (see Reg. v. Barbonnet and Another, ante) in a fatal duel at Egham in Surrey, and that the coroner's jury had pronounced a verdict of wilful murder against all the four prisoners, and that they had also been committed by the magistrates to take their trial at the next Assizes upon the charge of wilful murder. The principles on which bail is taken, as laid down in Reg. v. Baron- net, viz. that the Court is to consider the nature of the charge, the evidence in support of it, and the punishment imposed by law, are not disputed; but it is submitted that the case against these two prisoners differs very materially from that against the other two. There is no confession to having been present at, or acting in the duel as seconds by these two, as in the case of the other two prisoners. That bail will not be allowed where the charge is murder, and there is a confession before the committing magistrates, is supported by very old authorities. (4 Inst. c. 31, p. 177; Rex v. Poynes, 3 Buls. 113, Houghton, J.) But the evidence against these two prisoners is materially short of a confession. [Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Have you any affidavit denying the guilt of the prisoners?] No, it is not necessary, as the Court upon this application does not enter into the merits. (Rex v. Lord Baltimore, 1 W. Black. 649.) [Lord CAMPBELL, C. J.—Here there is the verdict of guilty of wilful murder by the coroner's jury, and it is indispensable to shew that the evidence of guilt on the depositions is insufficient.] In the case of Reg. v. Munro, there was a verdict of guilty of wilful murder against Munro and two others as principals in the first degree, and against Gulliver as principal in the second degree; and Captain Cuddy, one of the principals in the first degree, was held to bail, but afterwards, on the trial (Aug. 25, 1843), he was acquitted. Again, in Lord Cardigan's case, against whom and Captain Douglas a true bill was found for shooting with intent to kill, both Lord Cardigan and Captain Douglas were admitted to bail. The following authorities were also referred to. (1 Buls. 69; and Reg. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 556.) The learned counsel then recapitulated the evidence in the depositions affecting the two prisoners.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In this case there is a finding tantamount to the finding of a grand jury; from the coroner's inquisition, the prisoners may be put on their trial. If the evidence justifies that finding, we cannot interfere. We will look into the depositions. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Wednesday, Nov. 24.—Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—In this case, in which Mr. Huddleston made an application yesterday that the prisoners should be brought up to be bailed, we have carefully looked at the depositions before the magistrates and the depositions before the coroner, and having done so, we are of opinion that we should not be justified in yielding to the application. It appears that there is an inquisition which upon the face of it finds that these two prisoners are guilty of wilful murder. Looking at the depositions, it appears that the alleged murder took place in a duel, and we think there is evidence to support the finding of the coroner's inquest. We give no opinion that it is conclusive evidence. I merely say, as I said with regard to the two other defendants who are implicated in the transaction, "God send them a good deliverance;" but at present they are in the situation of persons against whom the grand jury have found a bill for wilful murder. Whether we can interfere where there is no evidence whatever to support the finding of the grand jury, in such a case we need not now consider; because, looking at the depositions, we must say, there is evidence on which we cannot say the grand jury were wrong in supposing there was a primâ facie case, shewing that the parties were implicated in the death of the deceased. It would, therefore, be contrary to the principles upon which the courts uniformly act, if we were now to grant a writ of habeas corpus. It would be calling upon us now to make a distinction between the case of murder committed in a duel and murder committed in any other way. That, it would be most inexpedient for us to do. Time was when public feeling was contrary to the law of the land upon this subject. I am happy to think public feeling now has taken a different turn, in correspondence with the law of the land, and I hope that the time is not distant when the practice of duelling may be considered not only as illegal, but absurd and ridiculous. I will say, that to grant this rule, it really seems to me, would be clashing with the decision of our learned brothers in the Court of Q. B. in Dublin, in which I entirely concur in the Six-mile-bridge case. They, looking to the inquisition and the depositions, finding certain persons guilty of murder, have refused to interfere with the inquisition upon the ground that it was contrary to the weight of evidence; and I think that that was a sound decision according to the principles of common law. If there had been anything to shew want of jurisdiction in the coroner, then the Court of Q.B. might well have quashed the inquisition; but if there was jurisdiction, and evidence to go to the jury to support the finding, I think this Court has no power whatever to interfere.

Rule refused.

DOE dem. CHILD v. ROE.

Inspection of documents—Ejectment by landlord for a forfeiture by breach of covenant—Right of tenant in possession to inspect lease.

Where ejectment is brought by the original lessor for a forfeiture by breach of covenant, and the lease is in the plaintiff's possession, the defendant, being the tenant in possession of the premises, is entitled to an inspection of the lease.

Stammers moved for a rule to shew cause why an order of Erle, J. whereby the plaintiff was ordered to allow the defendant to inspect the original lease of the premises, a portion of which was sought to be recovered in the present action, should not be rescinded. All that appeared before the learned judge was, that the defendant was tenant in possession of a house at St. John's Wood, which the plaintiff had originally leased, together with other property, to a third person, and that the ejectment was brought upon a forfeiture by breach of a covenant to repair; the lease containing the usual covenants, and a proviso for re-entry. Upon those facts the judge had no authority to make this order, either at Common Law or under the recent Evidence Act, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6. Before the recent Act, the rule was to allow inspection where it was necessary for the conduct of the party's own case, or where the one party held the document as trustee for the other; but here there is no affidavit that the production of the deeds is necessary for the defence, or that the defendant claims under them. This order in fact requires the plaintiff to produce the evidence of his title; and for that there is no authority. (Lush's Pr. 747.) Under the new Act, the Court can only grant inspection when Equity would grant a discovery; and a bill of discovery would not lie in this case. The doctrine laid down by Lord Chancellor Hardwicke in Metcalf v. Hervey, 1 Ves. Sen. 249, has been overruled by subsequent decisions. (Bowman v. Lygon, 1 Anst. 1; Bellwood v. Welherell, 1 You. & Coll. 211.) The latter case shews that in general the defendant has no right to a discovery of the plaintiff's title; and that even in the exceptional cases, in which on the ground of surprise or the like he may be entitled to some disclosure, it is to be confined to a disclosure of the nature only of his title, and cannot be extended to the evidence of his title. At all events, therefore, the present order is too large. (He referred also to 2 Story, Eq. Jur. 1490; Hare on Discovery, 194; Hunt v. Hewitt, 18 Law T. Rep. 210; 21 L. J. 210, Ex.; Pepper v. Chambers, 18 Law T. Rep. 210; 21 L. J. 81, Ex.; Rayner v. Allhusen, 15 Jur. 1060; 21 L. J. 68, Q. B.; Galsworthy v. Norman, 21 L. J. 70, Q.B.) In Hunt v. Hewitt, the Court of Ex. expressly decides that it is for the applicant to shew clearly what is the nature of the question to be tried, and that the documents are desired to enable the party to support his own case, and not to find a flaw in the case of his opponent. There is no affidavit in the present case, nor were any admissions made at chambers which satisfy these requirements.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—I think that this order was properly made, and ought to be supported. We must look to the facts in the case which we take from the affidavits; and from them it appears that such an order lawfully might and ought to have been made. The lessor of the plaintiff brings an ejectment on the forfeiture of two leases, by reason of an alleged breach of covenant, and the proviso for re-entry contained in the lease; and the defendant, against whom this action of ejectment is commenced, in effect claims under the lease which contains the clause of re-entry. This is therefore substantially an action on those documents, against the defendant as assignee of a lease, and it is only fair that the party against whom the action is brought, and who may know nothing of the original lessor, should have an opportunity of inspecting these documents, in order to see whether he has any real defence to the action. Without, therefore, taking into consideration the Act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, this order was a perfectly valid exercise of the common law jurisdiction of a judge at chambers.

WIGHTMAN, J.—In this case we need not consider the Evidence Act at all. The action is an ejectment by the lessor of the plaintiff upon a breach of covenant. The defendant sought to inspect the document in order to satisfy himself whether there was any defence to the action or not, that is, whether there really were any such clause of forfeiture in the lease as the lessor of the plaintiff relied upon.

ERLE, J.—Where there is only one copy of an instrument existing, and each party takes an interest in it, the rule has always been considered to be that the other may inspect and take a copy of the original. The defendant here was in actual occupation, not knowing who was originally entitled to the reversion. If ever there was a case in which this power should be exercised, this is one of them. All that was done was to allow the defendant to see the documents, and ascertain how the forfeiture occurred. Extracts from the deed, it is true, were offered, but I thought that insufficient, and that the defendant was fully entitled to see the documents themselves.

Lord CAMPBELL, C.J.—Over being now, by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, abolished, this doctrine becomes of more importance, and it is of consequence that we should uphold the authority of the judge, to order inspection of documents in such cases.

Rule refused.

APPEALS FROM THE COUNTY COURT.

(Before COLERIDGE and ERLE, JJ.)

PAULING v. PONTIFEX and OTHERS.

Usage of trade.

The plaintiff, a builder, sent in a tender; on application of defendant's surveyor to him among others, the tenders were all opened, and the plaintiff's turned out to be the lowest:

Held, that the judge was right, on evidence before him, in concluding that, according to the custom in the trade, and the conduct of the parties, the plaintiff's, being the lowest tender, had been accepted, although N. had no absolute authority to accept the lowest.

This was an appeal from the County Court at Bow. The plaintiff was a builder, and the defendants were white-lead manufacturers at Millwall. The particulars of demand annexed to the summons consisted of items amounting to 64*l.* as due to the plaintiff from the defendants for work, materials, &c. but the claim was limited to 45*l.* The judge, after disallowing certain items, ordered the judgment to be entered for 20*l.* It appeared that a person named Northcroft, acting as the surveyor and agent of the defendants, had forwarded to certain builders, and among them to the plaintiff, plans of certain buildings to be erected at the defendants' premises, the tenders to be sent in to him at a certain day. That the plaintiff sent in his tender, which on the day mentioned was opened in presence of the other parties who had sent in tenders, when Northcroft, and the other builders present who had sent in plans, conceived, acording to the custom of the trade in such matters, that his tender, being the lowest, was accepted; and, acting on that assumption, the unfortunate parties partook of the customary refreshment at the plaintiff's expense, as the fortunate party whose tender they conceived to be accepted. The defendants denied that they had ever accepted the plaintiff's tender, or that Northcroft, on their behalf, had any absolute authority to accept the lowest tender; they also denied the existence of the custom or usage above referred to.

The Court found as a fact that the conduct of the defendants amounted to an acceptance. The questions for the Court were—1st. Did the Court below decide rightly upon the facts and the law as to the defendants' acceptance of the lowest tender? 2ndly. Were the particulars sufficient to answer the objections which had been taken to the form of pleading? 3rdly. Whether the charges were incidental?

Bramwell (Prentice with him), for the appellants. The question here is, was there any such agreement to employ the plaintiff, i. e. was there any acceptance of his tender? The only ground is, that Northcroft conceived the plaintiff's tender to be accepted. But the case finds that Northcroft had no authority to accept the lowest tender. Was the understanding of those present that such a tender, under the circumstances, was accepted, such as to make it an absolute contract to accept the lowest tender? That would be most unreasonable, for it might be that the plaintiff's tender, although the lowest sent in, was double the amount for which the work could have been done. As to the second point, the plaintiff should have sued as upon a contract, and the complaint ought to have been that the defendants refused to allow the plaintiff to do certain work.

J. Brown, contrà, was directed by the Court to apply himself to the first point only.

COLERIDGE, J.—We are both of opinion that the judgment ought to be affirmed, subject to the reduction of damages. The question is, whether there was any evidence to warrant the finding of the judge as to the acceptance by the defendants of the plaintiff's tender. There was the evidence of the conduct of the parties, with other direct evidence of usage in the trade, such as must have gone to a jury. It must be taken that the surveyor was duly appointed, and that he was chosen as a competent judge. It does not appear that any objection was made to the plaintiff's tender, and in addition there was the opinion of all the persons in the trade then present, that there had been an acceptance of the plaintiff's tender. There was direct evidence of persons in the trade, that it was the practice or custom to accept the lowest tender, although there was certainly evidence the other way. The only matter we have to consider is, whether there was anything to go to the jury as evidence of the acceptance of the tender. There was the request to the plaintiff to send in a tender, the appointment of the parties tendering to meet for the purpose of having their tenders opened, the understanding of the parties present; and there was also direct evidence of usage in the trade, and if so, the judgment must be affirmed.

Earle, J.—No doubt there were no words or writing in this case constituting any distinct contract, but parties are often understood to make a contract, and to import terms into an express contract, according to the known usage of a particular trade. There was evidence here, that among persons conversant with this business, there was an understanding to accept the lowest tender under circumstances like these.

Judgment affirmed subject to a reduction of damages, there being an admitted error in the calculation of the judge as to the amount.

Feddon v. Sawyers.

Registration appeal—Sufficiency of notice of objection.

A. sends to B. a notice of objection to his vote, and in his notice describes himself as being "on the list of freemen for the city of Carlisle."

By 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 17, no person could object to B.'s vote, but those whose names have been inserted in some list of voters for the borough or city; and it is required that the notice to be given shall be according to the form No. 10, in schedule B, or to the like effect. The description in the form given is, A. B. of such and such a place of abode, "on the list of voters for the parish of ——;"

Held (dissentiente Maule, J.) that looking at the notice in reference to the occasion on which the notice was given, and the object of it, a man of ordinary intelligence would understand the words "on the list of freemen for the city of Carlisle," to mean, on the list of freemen entitled to vote for a member of Parliament for the city of Carlisle; and that, therefore, the notice was good:

Held, by Maule, J. that in ascertaining the meaning of the words, you must not regard the occasion on which they are used, and that the words are in themselves insufficient, and that the notice was bad.

In this case S. Temple appeared for the appellant, and Warren, Q.C. for the respondent. All the necessary facts and arguments fully appear in the respective judgments of their lordships, which were delivered after time taken to consider.

Thursday, Nov. 25.—Jervis, C.J.—In the case of Feddon v. Sawyers, which was an appeal from the decision of the revising barrister for the revision of the lists for the city of Carlisle, in which the Court took time to consider, in consequence of a difference of opinion that existed between the judges who heard the argument, we have considered the case again, and I am sorry to state that we are still not unanimous in opinion upon the subject, and I proceed to state the reasons which induce me to think that the revising barrister is right in his view of the case that the notice of objection is sufficient. The question arose in this case upon the sufficiency of a notice of objection, and the objection is to the description of the objector, who, in the notice, states himself to be "on the list of freemen for the city of Carlisle;" and it is said that in compliance with the statute he should have described himself to be on the list of freemen entitled to vote in the election of a member of Parliament for the city of Carlisle, and that unless he shews himself to be a voter for the city in his description, the notice of objection is insufficient. On the other hand it is contended that he has sufficiently described himself to be a voter and complied with the requirements of the statute; it was contended or suggested during the argument, and not disputed, that by the 17th section of the 6 Vict. c. 18, no person can object, but those whose names shall have been inserted in any list of voters for the city or borough, and the party to be entitled to object must bring himself within that description, and a form is given, No. 10 in the schedule B, and it is required that the notice shall be given "according to the form or to the like effect," shewing to a certain extent what is required on the part of the objector. That notice is applied, not to the objector, who is a freeman, but to an objector who is on the list of householders or other persons entitled to vote. He must describe himself as A. B. of such and such a place of abode, on the list of voters for the parish of ——. Now the question is, what is the construction that we ought to put on the Act with reference to this subject; and in turning to the 101st section, I think a key is given to the construction to be put on it. That section says in substance, "no notice of objection shall be void in respect of the description of any party objecting, or any other matter or thing, if the matter is so stated as to be commonly understood." And I think the fair meaning of the section is, that in construing the Act of Parliament with reference to the notice of objection and other matters mentioned in that section, we are not to put a mere technical construction on the instrument referred to, but to look at it as a man of ordinary common sense would look at it; and if, on looking at the notice of objection as a man of plain and ordinary intelligence, having reference to the subject-matter, would look at it, we see that the objector does sufficiently describe himself so as to be commonly understood as a man coming within the provisions of the 17th section, that he has complied with the provisions, and the notice of objection is good. Now, there are two classes or lists of voters; one a list of freemen, who are entitled to vote for a member of Parliament for Carlisle; another, the list of householders who are entitled to vote; and it may be in some cases there is another list to be made up of scot and lot and other franchise by the Reform Act. The second branch consists of several lists of householders, made out by the different overseers of the different parishes, and therefore I can well understand that in the notice of objection it is required that the objector should state, not only that he, as a householder, has a vote, but he should state on what list and in what parish he is a householder, in order that the party objected to should not be required to go to the various lists, but should be at once referred to the particular list made by the particular overseers to see that the objector is qualified. That does not apply to the freemen,—there is but one list made out by the town-clerk, and that is a list of all those freemen who are entitled to vote in the election of a member of Parliament, and having reference to the subject-matter of the notice, which applies only to the exercise of the parliamentary franchise, in respect of which only a notice could be given for the purpose of objecting to the exercise of the parliamentary franchise, I think, in reading this as it is to be understood by persons of ordinary intelligence, having reference to the subject-matter of the inquiry, that when you say the objection is made to a person's exercising the franchise by a person on the list of freemen for the city of Carlisle, it cannot be otherwise understood than that he is a freeman voter in respect of the parliamentary franchise. On that short ground it seems to me, taking this as the construction of the 101st section, and a liberal view of the notices and documents referred to, that this is so expressed as to be commonly understood as a notice of objection by a voter for the city of Carlisle. I quite agree that, looking at it critically and technically, we are bound, and ought to draw inferences against the objector, so that he may be bound to state with certainty everything that may be taken against himself. If the argument I have used does not apply, then he may be taken as a freeman, though not entitled to vote with parliamentary rights, but merely in the enjoyment of the municipal rights. When we look at this with respect to the parliamentary franchise, if a party says he is on the freemen's list for the city, it can only be understood that he is on the list of freemen entitled to parliamentary franchise. Mr. Temple objected that this notice required the party to do something that he was not bound to do, before he put himself in motion to establish his right to vote or resist the objection. I do not think that is a sufficient answer. It was strongly pressed, that in Quigley's case it was said to be a fatal objection, because it was not pointed out whether the voter had made inquiry to ascertain on what list the party was. The Court said it was not unreasonable that he himself, or some other parties, should inquire or ascertain to what list the notice of objection referred. In this case, if there were any ambiguity he might be required to ascertain whether the objector's name was on the list of freemen for the parliamentary franchise, and he would be put to unnecessary trouble if he had not the proper means of doing so. It seems to me that inquiry would not be necessary in this case, for having looked to the subject-matter of the notice, no man of ordinary intelligence, reading it in a fair and liberal spirit, having reference to the subject-matter of the notice, could doubt that the party giving it was a voter upon the parliamentary list for the city of Carlisle, and therefore I am of opinion that the notice of objection was sufficient.

Maule, J.—It appears to me that this notice is not sufficient. The 17th section of the Act of Parliament, which was referred to by my Lord Chief Justice, confers the power of objecting on persons whose names are on the list of voters, and such persons alone have conferred upon them the right, under this Act, if they proceed in the manner pointed out in the Act,—they have the right of putting a person whose name is on the list of voters to the proof of his title to vote. This right is annexed, by the force of the words of the statute, not to any person to whom it is naturally incident, but to the person to whom the statute thinks fit to give it—a person whose name is on any list of voters; and such a person is required by the subsequent section of the Act to give a notice in the form or to the effect pointed out by the schedule, and the latter words of the form in the schedule are, "A. B. on the list of voters for the parish of ——." The section directs that the notice shall be in the form prescribed, or to the like effect. I believe there is no difference of opinion that "the like effect" is meant mainly to point out that the form is given mainly by way of example; and inasmuch as there are those who were not on the list of any parish, but on lists, but assumed, they are to point out if they are on a list of voters, and what list of voters they are upon, if they are upon a list. There is no controversy that the form, as pointed out by the words of the statute, is applicable to the case of a person objecting not in respect of being on any list of voters for a parish only, but of a person voting in respect of the right reserved to freemen, and that the objector in effect ought to describe himself as on the list of persons entitled to vote as freemen for the borough; that, it is agreed, is the effect which the notice ought to have in this case, agreeing as the judges do upon the result of the case, as far as I understand, that the notice, in order to be a good one, should be construed in this way, that it should give information to the person objected to that the voter objecting is upon the list of freemen entitled as such to vote. Now what he does say is, that he is "upon the list of freemen;" he does not say, in terms, that he is entitled as such to vote. It is conceded that he must say that in effect, and the question is whether this notice does in effect inform the person to whom it is addressed that the objector is on the list of freemen entitled to vote. Now what he does say is, that he is "upon the list of freemen for the borough." Those words of themselves, standing alone, without reference to some circumstances, or some occasion on which they are used, convey no assertion of the right to vote, or of being on the list of persons entitled to vote; but, taken alone, without reference to any context or conclusion, a person using those words and speaking of the "list of freemen," is not to be understood as speaking of the "list of freemen entitled to vote;" that is a matter that cannot be disputed. But then it is said, taking the surrounding circumstances of this case, and taking into consideration the rule which it is said is afforded by the 101st section of the statute,—taking those circumstances into consideration,—the language here used, "on the list of freemen for the borough," contains implicitly an assertion that the person is on the list of freemen entitled to vote for the borough. That there may be, and that there is, in the nature of circumstances, a list of freemen for the borough which is not a list of freemen entitled to vote, as such, nobody denies, and it is in evidence that there is such a thing. But then it is said, that although it must be conceded that a person asking for the list of freemen, or saying that there was a list to be found in such a place, or directing a list of freemen to be made out, would not be understood to affirm the existence of a list of freemen entitled to vote, or direct the making of such a list, yet that here the words "entitled to vote" must be implied. Then the real question is, are we justified in putting upon these words a construction which really does not belong to them, or rather founded upon something extrinsic from the words themselves, inconsistent with the ordinary rules of construction that ought to be maintained? Is there any reason for putting that construction upon these words. The revising barrister has relied on what I do not think has been so much relied on in the argument before us, and which my Lord Chief Justice, in his judgment, does not expressly rely on, certain particular circumstances of fact relating to the borough that the barrister has set out, and which appear to have led him to the conclusion to which he has arrived as to the sufficiency of the notice of objection in this case; I mean, that there are certain lists made out in different titles to those in which they are described; that there does exist a list of freemen (whether entitled to vote or not), properly called the "roll of freemen." Now this list I do not think can legitimately or properly be taken into consideration by us; I do not think it ought to lead to the conclusion that the barrister has drawn. There is nothing at all equivocal in speaking of a list of freemen, as the title of all those persons who constitute the class of freemen. If there be a list, whatever it may be commonly called, whatever may be the title of the persons themselves, the notice is perfectly intelligible, and contains,—coupled with the names of the objector and the party objected to,—an assertion that the person is upon the list of freemen for the borough; that he is one of those who constitute the freemen, and are described in the list as such persons. That is all it imports. Now, I do not think that those equivocal words can be at all construed so as to mean that they signify the objector is upon the list of freemen entitled to vote. I do not think they can be construed by an extrinsic fact, which is quite consistent with their having a meaning that belongs to them independent of that fact, as there does exist a list containing not all the freemen, but some of the freemen only. You can no more restrain it than you can the list of residents within the borough or within seven miles of the borough. Supposing there were rights and duties belonging to or incumbent upon persons of those narrow classes, it seems to me it would be a very inaccurate mode of construction to say that because a person describes himself as one of those narrow classes that he describes himself as belonging to the class at large; and if you say that, you impose on the words I choose to use a meaning they have not; and if that is carried out to the proper length to which it tends, and short of which you cannot properly stop, it would restrain the words to a particularity suiting the occasion for which they were used. It seems to me that the occasion on which these words are used cannot be called in aid to restrict the plain meaning belonging to the words, when they are read by a person well conversant with the English language, and who has no desire to put any construction on them but that construction that belongs to them of themselves. If they are so read, which I consider to be the common-sense view of reading them, nobody for a moment would doubt that this person does not affirm himself to be on any list of voters: he affirms himself to be on a list which may comprehend persons who are voters and who are not voters. It seems to me, therefore, that, on looking at the words themselves—and it is not suggested that there is any doubt as to their meaning—you cannot give them any other meaning than that which is inconsistent with the revising barrister's decision. But it is said this construction is aided by the 101st section, and that the only meaning of that is, that you are to look at the thing as a man of plain common sense would look at it; that you are bound to look at these words not technically or critically. Now nobody looks at them critically; there is nothing technical or belonging to any particular art or science, that has been suggested, as affording a rule of construction upon this occasion. I think you are to look at these words, not as words of art, or words belonging to the art of law, or any other art, but to look at them at large, without any other rule than that which a person with an untechnical knowledge of the English language, without knowing any rules of law or other art, would adopt. When it is said you are to deal with them critically, I also think that they must be dealt with critically; for to deal with words critically is to deal with them with a power of judging what their sense is; and in the argument of my Lord Chief Justice, in which he is protesting against critical construction, he is using, as he always does when the occasion requires it, a very critical power himself; he is exercising a power of constructive criticism, and applying all the rules of such an art to the matter to be judged of. It is verbal criticism, too, as here are some words, "on the list of freemen," and the question is, what is the sense of those words. It is said a certain section of the same Act of Parliament enables me to impose upon them a sense different from what, without the use of that section, I have given them. Now I do not believe myself that that section does afford that rule of verbal criticism which has been extracted from it. It seems to me that the meaning of that is, that where the sense is applied to a document of this kind, if the document contains a substantial allegation of everything which it is required to contain, then the circumstance of the language which is used not being perfectly accurate, is one in which the inaccuracy may be got over. Now does this apply to this very case? It certainly does not, for there is no inaccuracy in the language used here. The person affirms of himself that he is on the list of freemen: there is nothing inaccurate in that. There is, what may be quite enough for the purpose, such a thing as a list of freemen; he affirms that he is on that list. He may have some purpose in affirming that; he may choose to affirm it; he may be desirous of trying whether it is sufficient to affirm that he is on the list; but whatever his object may be, that is what he says of himself: he says, "I am on the list of freemen," a perfectly intelligible proposition. And if it were used upon an occasion on which it would be sufficient to aver himself to be on the list of freemen, and it would not do if he averred himself to be on the list of persons entitled to vote as freemen, nobody would doubt for a moment that he must be taken to have been on the list of freemen exclusively, and not on the list of voters. Suppose an occasion arose on which it was necessary that he should state himself to be on the list of all freemen, it would not be sufficient to state that he was on the list of freemen. It would be perfectly hopeless for any one, without the assistance of rules of criticism, to say, on reading this, he was on the list of freemen entitled to vote. If you construe these words relatively to the occasion on which they are used, I do not know where you are to stop. The rule seems to me to be this, that this is a notice given to a person who is on the voters' list for the city of Carlisle. It states the intention of the party sending it to dispute his right to be on the list of voters on which he is: then the people are to be taken, to know that the right to so object belongs to persons on the list of freemen entitled to vote; it does not belong to persons on the list of freemen, and therefore you are to restrain the meaning of the words used, and impose on them a meaning that does not belong to them. I cannot think that that is a proper way of dealing with the subject. I think that the document should be looked at in the words in which the Act requires the notice to be given. Now, the Act evidently means that the power to object should belong to a certain class of persons, and it directs that the person should affirm that he belongs to it. It is false criticism to say that you must restrain the words that actually are employed (and which are unequivocal), by the occasion on which they are used. If it were otherwise, I do not see why saying "on the list," without saying on what list, would not do, because it may be said, "I object to a voter on the list," must mean "on the list of freemen," or on the list of some persons entitled to vote. Perhaps it may be said (I do not know why the principle in section 101, would help you through it), that it would not point out in any way what particular list it was; but, at any rate, it would be sufficient, I suppose, if you were to say "on the list for the parish of so and so," or "on the list for the parish," or "in the parish of so and so." Would that be sufficient? I think it would not. By section 101, coupled with the others, you might afford such a meaning to the words; and by the looseness with which they are used here, they do away altogether with what was the reason of the Legislature for enacting that the person giving notice should shew on the face of it what his title is. If words are used on an occasion on which they cannot have any meaning at all, unless you restrict them to some meaning, then it may be that the words may be restrained by the occasion. But that is not by any means the case here. There is no reason why a person who gives the notice may not describe himself in any way in which he pleases; and here he has thought fit to describe himself as on the list of freemen. Suppose he had said "I am an inhabitant of the borough," that would not mean it was anything more or less. Of course, "an inhabitant of the borough" is a thing that has a plain meaning; it involves no contradiction, no inconvenience, no inconsistency in giving those words their true construction, the possible construction that such words will bear. Then you are to reject that which is not the natural one, such as you must give it in order to make the document operative in a particular way, and to enable you to go further than the rules of construction enable you to go. There is no difficulty or inconvenience that arises from giving to these words the plain, natural, common-sense meaning that belongs to them. Looked upon in themselves, and with no reference to any set of circumstances that are given here, because they do not control the sense of the words used—but giving to the words the natural, plain, common sense meaning that belongs to them, they affirm of the objector, that he is on a list of freemen—they do not affirm that he is on the list of freemen entitled to vote, and therefore do not make the affirmation which is (as it is conceded) of the essence of the notice that ought to be given.

WILLIAMS, J.—I agree with the Lord Chief Justice, and I think that the revising barrister was right in holding the notice of objection to be sufficient. Having looked, not only to the terms of that notice, but as we are bound to look, to the subject-matter of it, and the occasion of it, I confess I think that no person of ordinary intelligence could fail to understand that the phrase in the notice, "On the list of freemen for the city of Carlisle," referred to the list of freemen entitled to vote, and not to the freemen's roll, which is kept in pursuance of the Municipal Corporation Act. Therefore, in my opinion, there is no inaccuracy of description; but if there be, that inaccuracy is cured by the 101st section of the 6 Vict. for, in my judgment, the question is to be determined upon whether the notice of objection is given in such a way as to be commonly understood.

TALFOURD, J.—I am of opinion, with the Lord Chief Justice, for the reasons he has given, that the revising barrister is right, and that the notice is sufficient. We ought not to forget that the section requires that the objector should state his title, and we should see that he truly does so with reference to the section. The 17th section requires that the objector shall have the title of being on the list of voters, or on one of the lists of voters in respect of the right to which it applies, and that the objection shall be in the form given by the section. I apprehend, by the notice itself, it affirms that he is a person entitled to give the notice—that he is a person who is on the list of voters—and that the object of the schedule is not so much that he is to state his title (which is not required for any other purpose), but that he should point out to the person to whose vote he objects on what particular list he is in the city, and where his name is to be found, that the party may go to that list and see whether he has the title he says he has. Now, for that purpose in the schedule a form is given, and that is applicable in terms to the present case,—it is, that the objector should give his name and place of abode; and further, he is to describe himself as being upon the list of voters for such a parish. Now that is clearly inapplicable to the list of freemen. I take it that the man taking upon himself to give the notice is a person qualified to do so—he may say, "I cannot comply with the form because I am not on the list;" or he may say, "I am on the freeman's list;" and if he does he means such a list of freemen as entitles him to maintain the objection. Now then if there were no other list of freemen in the city of Carlisle except the list of freemen voters, this notice would be sufficient, and the ambiguity is produced entirely by the extrinsic fact of their being another list of voters to which the objector is supposed to allude, that is the roll of freemen for the city of Carlisle. But the voter being on the list of freemen for the city of Carlisle, is pointed in the terms of the notice more to the list of persons voters than to those not voters. I think that he purports to give a notice of objection, by a person who has a title to do so in a way that would be commonly understood by the person who receives such a notice as indicating that he would be found on the freeman's list of voters; and therefore this is a case—even supposing we take into consideration those terms under the 101st section—in which, the notice being sufficient in form, we may take notice also of the other extrinsic circumstances, and balancing the one against the other, we may conclude that the person receiving the notice would perfectly well understand it, as it would be idle to describe himself to be on the municipal list alone if he did not mean to retain the title to vote. For these reasons I think that the revising barrister was right.

(Before JERVIS, C.J. and MAULE, WILLIAMS, and TALFOURD, JJ.)

LITTLE v. NEWPORT, ABERGAVENNY, AND HEREFORD RAILWAY COMPANY.

Right of railway company to deviate under Consolidation Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20.

Where a railway company had marked a tunnel on their plan and afterwards deviated their line at that spot, the question arose, whether they were bound to make a corresponding tunnel on the deviated line? The Court decided against the company on the ground that they had, under the general Act no power to deviate; but (per Maule, J.) having deviated, no duty was imposed upon them of making a tunnel.

This was an action brought by the order of the Lords Justices of Appeal in Chancery, to try the question whether, under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, the company were bound under certain circumstances to make a tunnel or not.

The facts of the case were as follow:—In order to overcome the opposition of the plaintiff to their railway, the company consented to make a tunnel at a certain part in the line running through his grounds.

They accordingly laid down on their deposited plans the line within the limits of deviation, and marked the spot where the tunnel was to be made. In making the line the company thought it necessary to deviate at that part of the line, and did not therefore make the tunnel as laid down. The plaintiff insisted that they were bound to make a tunnel in the deviated line. The case went into Chancery, and after having been heard before Vice-Chancellor Parker, and the Lords Justices, was, as above stated, sent into the Common Law Courts.

The form of the material issue in this case is peculiar.

The 1st count of the declaration states an agreement by the provisional committee, before the passing of the private Act, to make a tunnel, and a deed of covenant by the company after the passing of the Act, that they would perform the agreements made by the provisional committee. Breach—that they did not make a tunnel.

The 2nd count, which is the material one in this case, set forth the deposit by the provisional committee of a plan containing the line of railway, with the proposed limits of deviation and the site of the intended tunnel; and stated also that the plaintiff was owner and occupier of the land whereon the tunnel was to be made. It then proceeded to aver, that "after the passing of the said first-mentioned Act of Parliament, by a certain indenture made between the plaintiff of the one part and the defendants of the other part, and sealed with the seal of the defendants, they the defendants covenanted with the plaintiff that if the defendants in making the said railway should cause the same to deviate from the said line so marked and delineated on the said plan by the said centre line, and should make their said railway otherwise than in the said last-mentioned line, but within the said limits of deviation, and if at the time of the making of the said railway in the said deviated line the defendants should be bound to carry the said railway through so much of the said deviated line as should pass between the dotted lines C D and E F, marked on the said plan opposite the spot indicated on the said plan by the words and figures 'Tunnel 374 yards,' by means of a tunnel, then the defendants would carry so much of the said deviating line between the said dotted lines by means of a tunnel." It then proceeded to state a deviation, and that the defendants were bound to carry so much of the said deviated line, &c. by means of a tunnel. Breach,—that they did so otherwise than by a tunnel.

Plea to the 1st count.—That there was no agreement as alleged.

(N.B. It may be as well to observe that there was of course no deed or covenant as alleged, this being a mere fiction agreed upon for the purpose of raising an issue.)

The case was tried at Nisi Prius before Jervis, C. J. and a special jury, July 1st, 1852, and a verdict found for the plaintiff on the first issue, and for the defendant on the second, with leave to move to enter the verdict for the plaintiff on that issue also. Accordingly, on the 4th Nov. Bramwell, Q.C. obtained a rule nisi, against which Crowder, Q.C. Byles, Serjt. Barstow, and Shee (of the Equity Bar), now shewed cause. They urged that for the purpose of this argument it must be taken that the company had a right to deviate, that they had deviated at the point where the tunnel was marked, and in consequence of such deviation it was impossible to make a tunnel at the corresponding spot, unless one by cut and cover, and that it was hard the company should be forced to make a tunnel where there was no necessity for one. The defendants' point was, that if they deviated they were not bound to make a tunnel; the plaintiff's, that under the same circumstances they were bound.

The Court took a middle view, holding that the company had no right under the General Act, to deviate where a tunnel had been marked, and intimated to Bramwell, for the plaintiff, that they were prepared to give judgment in his favour on that point, subject to any observations he might choose to make.

Bramwell, under these circumstances, declined to address the Court.

Jervis, C.J.—The question is twofold, whether a company can deviate a railway where they have marked a tunnel on their plan, and whether, having deviated, they are bound to make a tunnel. I think that the rule must be made absolute on the first point. Tunnels, viaducts, and the like, are matters of great importance to the public and to proprietors, and cannot be expected to be made the subject of a general Act—they must be provided for as to deviation in the special Act. There is nothing which calls upon us to put a construction on the general Act other than the exact meaning of the word,—nor is there any hardship in this, as that Act is a mere basis for special legislation. The Act says (sec. 13) that where a tunnel is marked on the plan as intended to be made, it shall be made accordingly, that is, at that very place, and not within the limits of deviation. That being so, the 15th section, which gives the power to deviate, must be read in conjunction with the 13th, "except as before provided;" the 13th, 14th, and 15th sections together make one comprehensive rule, that, subject to exceptions, the company may deviate. These exceptions are not a hardship, as, if necessary, the power to do more than this Act allows may be obtained by the private Act.

Maule, J.—I am of the same opinion. We are not under the necessity of straining the words of the Act, and to decide on the strict meaning will be, not to interfere with, but to promote its intention. Local provisions must be regulated by local peculiarities, yet there are many things common to almost all railways. This Act, which applies to those parts of general agreement, is salutary in two respects,—it diminishes the length of the local Acts, and enables companies to adopt on this Act many wholesome provisions, and also it produces uniformity in the local Acts; whereas otherwise questions of construction would perpetually arise on the particular words in each Act, and on one Act compared with another. Tunnels, and works of a like nature, are eminently fit to be made the subjects of local Acts. The general Act (sec. 13) means that where there is a tunnel, there there must be no deviation, unless the company choose to provide for it by their private Act. Supposing, however, that the company deviate without having the power, have they the duty imposed upon them of making the tunnel? I think not. They have done a wrong by deviating, but that does not impose on them the obligation of making a tunnel. It is very clear that under the Act construed according to the words, the company have no power to deviate so as not to pass through a tunnel laid down on their plan—that being so, their deviating does not impose on them a duty.

Williams and Talfourd, JJ. concurred.

Rule absolute.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by Frederick Bailey and C. J. B. Hertslet Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Nov. 10 and 25.

Jackson v. Burnham and Uxor, Administratrix, &c.

Insolvent Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110—Plea of plaintiff's Insolvency.

To an action of debt, the defendants pleaded, that before the action, the plaintiff being a prisoner, duly petitioned the Insolvent Court, and the Court made an order vesting the plaintiff's real and personal estate and effects before his discharge in the provisional assignee. The plea then alleged that the debt had accrued after the order, and before the discharge:

Held bad on special demurrer, for not alleging that the provisional assignee had interfered to recover the debt.

The same construction should be put on similar provisions in the Bankrupt and Insolvent Acts, and the express words of a statute may be contracted and confined to meet the mischief contemplated by the Act. Per Pollock, C.B. Alderson, and Platt, BB. Martin, dubitante.

Demurrer to plea.

The declaration contained the common counts for work and labour done, &c. 3rd Plea. That before the commencement of the suit, to wit, &c. the plaintiff then being a prisoner in actual custody within the walls of a certain prison, to wit, &c. upon process at the suit of one G. G. L. for the recovery of a certain debt then due from the now plaintiff to the said G. G. L. did within fourteen days next after the commencement of the said actual custody of the now plaintiff, to wit, on the day and year last aforesaid, duly and according to the directions and provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, apply by petition in a summary way to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors in the said Act mentioned, for his discharge from such custody as aforesaid, according to the provisions of the said Act, in which petition the now plaintiff stated that he was willing that all his real and personal estate should be vested in the official assignee for the time being of the estate and effects of insolvent debtors in England, according to the provisions of the said Act, and prayed to be discharged from custody, and to have future liberty of his person against the demands for which the now plaintiff was then in custody, and against the demands of all other persons who should be, or claim to be creditors of the now plaintiff, at the time of the presenting of the said petition, and which said petition was then duly subscribed by the now plaintiff, and was forthwith, to wit, &c. filed of record, &c. And the defendants further say, that on the said filing of the said petition, and before, &c. the said Court, in pursuance of the said statute, ordered that all the real and personal estate and effects of the now plaintiff, both within this realm and abroad (except the wearing apparel, bedding, and other such necessaries of the plaintiff and his family, and the working tools and implements of the plaintiff not exceeding in the whole the value of 20*l.*), and also all the future estate, right, title, interest, and trust of the now plaintiff in or to any real or personal estate and effects within the realm or abroad, which the now plaintiff might purchase, or which might revert, descend, or be devised or bequeathed, or come to him, before he should be entitled to his final discharge in pursuance of the said Act, according to the adjudication made in that behalf, or in case the now plaintiff should obtain his full discharge from custody, without any adjudication being made by the said Court, then, before the now plaintiff should be fully discharged from custody; and all debts due or growing due to the now plaintiff, or to be due to him before such discharge as aforesaid, should be vested in Samuel Sturgis, then and still being the provisional assignee of the estate and effects of insolvent debtors in England, his successors and assigns, which said order was then duly entered of record in the said Court. And the defendants further say, that afterwards and before, &c. the plaintiff became and was entitled to be finally discharged, and was, by an adjudication and order of the said Insolvent Debtors' Court in that behalf, then duly made upon the said plaintiff in pursuance of the said statute, then finally discharged from custody as such insolvent debtor; and the defendants further say that the said debt in the declaration mentioned was, and every part thereof was contracted, and the cause of action in respect thereof, and every part thereof, accrued after the said order in this plea first mentioned, and before the plaintiff so became entitled to his final discharge, and was discharged as aforesaid, and the said moneys became and were payable before such final discharge; and thereupon, by virtue of the said first-mentioned order and of the said statute, the said debt, money, and cause of action in the said declaration mentioned, and all the right, title, and interest of the plaintiff of, in, or to the same, did then become and were and are vested in the said S. Sturgis, as such provisional assignee as aforesaid. Verification.

Hawkins, for the plaintiff, contended that this plea was bad upon the following grounds:—1st. That an insolvent debtor can sue for and recover a debt contracted with him subsequently to the vesting order (although previously to his obtaining or becoming entitled to his final discharge), unless the provisional or other assignee interfere. 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 42; Ford v. Dabbs, 3 M. & G. 309; Herberts v. Sayer, 5 Q. B. 965, 975. The judgment of Tindal, C.J. in that case, on the writ of error, is expressly in point. 2nd. That the vesting order does not of itself vest the right of action for such a debt absolutely and exclusively in the provisional assignee. 3rd. That the plea does not allege that the provisional assignee has interfered or claimed or released the debt, or that the action is brought without his consent, or the like. 4th. That the plea does not sufficiently shew that the petitioner (the plaintiff) was a prisoner within the walls of a prison in England. 5th. That the plea does not shew upon what process he was in custody. 6th. That the plea does not shew that the petition contained the statements required by law. 7th. That the plea does not shew that the debt pleaded to did not arise in respect of the prisoner's wearing apparel or other excepted articles. 8th. That the plea does not shew that the debt arose before plaintiff became entitled to his final discharge. Lastly. That the plea does not shew by what means the debt became vested in the provisional assignee.

M. Smith, in support of the plea, contended that the order of the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors, set out in the plea, vested the debt in the introductory part of the plea mentioned (which was contracted before the plaintiff was entitled to his final discharge), in the provisional assignee of the Court, and that it had so vested notwithstanding that such assignee might not have hitherto demanded the debt or sued for it. Also that the third plea is not open now to the special grounds of debt assigned. He referred to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 35, 37, 38, 69, 72. The concluding observations in the case of Herbert v. Sayer, particularly referred to uncertificated bankrupts; that case does not conclude the Court, and the Court will not interpolate words the Act does not contain. He cited Sayer v. Dufain, 11 Q. B. 325; Young v. Rishworth, 8 A. & E. 470.

Hawkins, in reply.—The words are clear and express, and the last case cited is overruled by Herbert v. Sayer. Cur. adv. vult.

JUDGMENT.

Pollock, C.B. after stating the pleadings,—The question argued before us, which we are now to decide, is substantially whether an insolvent can sue for a debt arising after the vesting order and before his final discharge, which his provisional assignee does not interfere to recover. The terms of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, are no doubt very strong and clear. I do not think it necessary now to read the whole of the sections. There is no doubt they do very clearly and unequivocally vest in the provisional assignee all the personal estate, both present and accruing due and hereafter to become due. They establish the right of the provisional assignee as against the insolvent and every other person. But the question is, whether the defendant can set up this defence without any interference by, or authority from the provisional assignee. There has not been any decision upon this point with reference to the Insolvent Debtors' Act. It has been decided that debts accruing before the discharge vest in the provisional assignee, as no doubt they do, but in the case in which that was decided the precise question before us did not arise. There is a recent decision in the Court of Error upon a similar enactment in the Bankrupt Law, by which we are of opinion that we are bound. The case is Herbert v. Sayer, 5 Q. B. Rep. 965. The seventh plea in that case was that the plaintiff was a bankrupt, and therefore the debt in question belonged to the assignees. To this there was a special demurrer, assigning for cause, as in this case, that it did not appear that the assignees had interfered. Upon the argument in the Q. B. that Court gave judgment for the defendant on the seventh plea. This judgment was reviewed in the Court of Ex. Chamber, and after taking time to consider, that Court reversed the judgment of the Court of Q. B. and gave judgment for the plaintiff. The statute on which the question depended was the 6 Geo. 4, c. 16, ss. 63 and 127; and in the 63rd section it is expressly enacted, not only that the property shall vest in the assignees, but that neither the bankrupt nor any one claiming under him, shall have power to recover the debts: yet the Court held that the bankrupt had a good right to sue, except as against the assignees, and as the plea did not allege their interference, it did not contain a complete defence. All the previous cases were adverted to in the judgment, which is binding on us as the decision of a Court of Error, and it is entitled to great respect as a very elaborate and deliberate judgment. It is contended that the words in the Insolvent Act are not precisely the same as those of this Act. In the first place, we think the words are quite as strong, if not stronger; but even if this were not so, we think it very unadvisable, in considering the construction of statutes like these, which relate to simple matters, to draw fine and minute distinctions, rendering it very difficult for suitors to know by what rule such cases are governed. We think, therefore, the same construction ought to be put upon similar provisions in insolvency as in bankruptcy. We have given as the foundation of our judgment the authority of a decision by a Superior Court, but we would add that the doctrine is by no means new that the express words of a statute may be controlled and confined to meet the mischief contemplated by the Act. In Mr. Justice Holroyd's judgment in Edwards v. Dick, 4 B. & Ald. 212, where it was held that, although the statute 9 Anne, c. 14, s. 1, makes "bills of exchange given for money won at play utterly void, frustrate, and of non effect, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary in anywise notwithstanding," an innocent endorsee of such a bill was held entitled to recover against the drawer, the winner of the money who had procured an acceptance from the loser of the money, and had endorsed it to the plaintiff. Mr. Justice Holroyd referred to the cases of Ecclesiastical Leases under the 13 Eliz. c. 10, s. 3, which, although declared to be utterly void in the same language, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, have always been held good as between the parties themselves, the object of the statute being merely to prevent any injury to the succession, not being intended to create any obligation on the parties to the instrument themselves. The judgment, therefore, will be for the plaintiff. I should, however, add that my brother Martin, who heard the case argued, along with my brothers Alderson and Platt, though he does not think it necessary to differ, yet I cannot express his entire concurrence with this judgment, as he entertains some doubt whether, although there be a decision in bankruptcy, we are not bound to take the very express language of another Act, upon which there has not been actually a positive decision, and administer the law in that way in which we should do if we merely looked at the express language of the statute. Entertaining that doubt, I am not authorised in saying this is also the judgment of my brother Martin; but he does not think it necessary to differ from us by giving a separate judgment, but merely requested me to express that he did entertain that doubt which I have adverted to.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

APPEAL FROM THE EXCHEQUER.

LORD HENNIKER v. THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Legacy duty—Power of appointment—Appointment with a condition.

A. B. by his will gives a power to C. D. to appoint to his wife an annuity chargeable upon the land of A. B. if C. D. thinks fit. C. D. exercises that power, and in the same instrument by which he appoints, he imposes on his wife the condition of relinquishing her dower:

Held, that legacy duty is payable upon such annuity, under the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 4; that it is nothing more than an appointment of the annuity or legacy upon a condition; and that if the wife takes it she does so as a gift under the power in the will of A. B. and not by purchase.

The decision of the Court below (see 19 Law T. Rep. 144) affirmed.

This was an information against the plaintiff in error, the third Lord Henniker, for the non-payment of legacy duty upon the sum of 12,578*l.* that sum being the estimated value of an annuity of 1,116*l.* 13s. 4d. in respect of which it was alleged that legacy duty was payable. The plaintiff in error having pleaded the general issue, a special verdict was taken by consent, which stated in substance that John Henniker Major, Baron Henniker, made his will on the 26th of May, 1821, and thereby appointed John Minet Henniker, Thomas Smith, and Evan Foulkes, his executors, and bequeathed the residue of his personal estate and effects, except leasehold estates, unto them, their executors, administrators, and assigns, in trust for certain purposes; and the said testator, by his will, devised his real estates at Stratford-upon-Slaney, in Ireland, and in the counties of Essex and Kent, to his said trustees, upon trust to dispose of the same by sale, and to purchase with the proceeds thereof estates in the county of Suffolk, with directions that a deed of settlement should be made of his estates, and that by such conveyance they should be limited in strict settlement, so that they might accompany the title of the barony of Henniker. "And the said testator did thereby direct, that in the said settlement there should be contained the usual power enabling the person who should for the time being be tenant for life, and entitled to the rents and profits of the estates so to be settled by deed or will duly executed, to charge by effectual ways and means all or any part of such estates, with any annual sum or sums of money not exceeding one-third part of the annual value thereof, unto or for the benefit of any woman or women with whom he or they might respectively happen to intermarry, or with whom he or they might have intermarried, as and for and in the nature of a jointure." The special verdict then proceeded to state the death of John Henniker Major, leaving the said trustees surviving him, and that they took upon themselves the execution of the will, and that the estates were sold and the proceeds were laid out in the purchase of other estates, in pursuance of the directions of the will, and that John Minet Henniker Major succeeded to the estates, and became the second Lord Henniker; that Thomas Smith and Evan Foulkes died in the lifetime of the second Lord Henniker, and that he, by his will, made on the 21st February, 1829, after appointing his eldest son and heir-at-law, John Henniker Major (the defendant), and John Lake, his executors, in pursuance of the power given by the will of Lord Henniker, the first testator, and of all other powers given, charged all the estates which he had power to charge "with the payment of the annual sum of 2,000*l.* of lawful money of Great Britain, free and clear from taxes, and without any other deduction whatsoever, unto and for the benefit of his said wife Mary Lady Henniker, during the term of her natural life, the said yearly rent or annual sum to be in the nature of and in full for the jointure of his said wife, and to be in lieu, bar, and satisfaction of and for her dower or thirds at common law, or by or on account of custom, freebench, or widow's part, which she could, should, or otherwise might have or claim of or in or out of the freehold, copyhold, or customary manors," &c. of the second Lord Henniker. And in case the said Lord Henniker "was not authorised and empowered by the said will of the said (first) testator to charge the estates thereby devised and directed to be purchased and settled respectively as aforesaid, with the payment of so large an annual sum as 2,000*l.* by way of jointure, the deficiency, if any, should be a charge upon; and the said John Minet Henniker Major, Lord Henniker, thereby expressly charged and made liable such part and parts of certain of his real estates and hereditaments in and by his said will devised, as should not be sold under the trusts in his said will contained as hereinafter mentioned, with and to the payment of such deficiency." The special verdict then proceeded to state the death of the second Lord Henniker on the 1st of July, 1832, leaving Lady Henniker, John Henniker Major (the defendant), and John Lake surviving him, and that the defendant and Lake took upon themselves the execution of the will, that the defendant succeeded to the estates, and that he entered into possession thereof, and of the receipt of the rents and profits, subject to the charge created by the will of the second testator in favour of Lady Mary Henniker, and that Lady Mary Henniker was a stranger in blood to the first testator. The special verdict then proceeded to state, that the second Lord Henniker, in his lifetime, by deeds dated the 11th and 13th May, 1822, the 7th and 8th of May, 1828, and the 7th and 9th of February, 1829, respectively, and recoveries suffered in pursuance thereof respectively, barred the entail of certain estates of which he was tenant in tail, and that Lady Mary Henniker joined in the recovery deeds and extinguished her dower in those estates, and that afterwards the defendant paid to Lady Mary Henniker four annual payments of the said annuity of 2,000*l.* without having paid legacy duty thereon. The special verdict then proceeded to set forth certain calculations in case the Court should be of opinion that there should be a deduction for the value of the dower, or thirds, or free-bench of Lady Henniker. The special verdict was argued in the Court below on February 6th, before Parke, Alderson, and Platt, BB. (reported 7 Ex. 331; 21 L. J. Ex. 293; and 19 Law T. 144).(a)

On the 7th February, 1852, the Court gave judgment, and decided that it fell within the principal of the decision of The Attorney-General v. Pickard, 3 M. & W. 552, afterwards affirmed on error, 6 M. & W. 348. That the present Lord Henniker, either as the heir of his father, who was the surviving trustee, or as the tenant for life in possession, was the person who by the Act of Parliament was bound to pay any duty either as trustee or as person in possession. That after the decision of The Attorney-General v. Pickard, this case would be considered precisely in the same view as if, instead of an annuity chargeable upon land, it had been a bequest of a sum in gross, say 1,000*l.* to be appointed, if the second Lord Henniker thought fit, to his wife. Then the only question was whether there had been such an appointment to the wife and such a taking by the wife by virtue of that appointment as to make her the recipient of a legacy. The case becomes this: A power is given by the will of the first Lord Henniker to the second Lord Henniker to appoint the 2,000*l.* to his wife if he thinks fit. He appoints it to the wife, and by the same instrument by which he appoints it he imposes upon her the condition of relinquishing her dower and thirds, and her free-bench upon all the copyhold estates. The question was, whether that was to be considered and treated as a purchase of the dower and thirds and free-bench, or whether it was merely a condition annexed to the receipt of the legacy; for that condition, if she accepted the legacy, made no difference,—she was still the recipient of the legacy. The Court were of opinion that this was nothing more than the appointment of a legacy upon a condition. She knew by the instrument by which the legacy was appointed that it was a legacy, and if she took it, she took it as a gift of the original testator; and whether the person exercising the power of appointment annexes a condition to that gift or not, did not affect the question; for it was still a gift of the testator, and was taken under the will of the testator, and as such it became liable to legacy duty. There might have been some question, if it had been a condition annexed to the legacy by the testator himself, whether the whole of the money so received by the legatee was a legacy, or whether a part of it was not a purchase of some interest, which might possibly reduce the duty to be paid upon the legacy to the extent of the difference in value between the legacy and the estate given up in consideration of it. That question did not now arise. The Court was of opinion that the person taking the legacy took the whole of it by the gift of the testator, and consequently, that legacy duty must be paid upon the whole.

This was an appeal from that decision.

Hoggins, Q.C. in support of the appeal, stated the facts before given. The question for the opinion of this Court then is, whether this is a gift within the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 4, (b) so as to make legacy duty

---

(a) The following were the points for argument on each side:—

It will be argued, on the part of the Crown, that the annuity charged and appointed by the will of John Minet Henniker Major, Baron Henniker, for the benefit of his wife, Lady Mary Henniker, under the power given by the will of John Henniker Major, Baron Henniker, so far as the same was payable out of the property charged therewith by the last-mentioned will, was a legacy by way of annuity under the said last-mentioned will, within the Acts 36 Geo. 3, c. 52, the 45 Geo. 3, c. 28, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, or some of them, and that the same is chargeable with legacy duty accordingly.

And if the Court shall be of opinion that in estimating the value of such legacy for the purpose of legacy-duty, any deduction is to be made therefrom in respect of dower, thirds, or free-bench, then that a part only of the value of such dower, thirds, or free-bench, in proportion to so much of the said annuity as is charged upon the property charged therewith, by virtue of the power contained in the will of John Henniker Major, Baron Henniker, is to be deducted from the value of the said part of the said annuity so charged upon the said property.

The points of law intended to be argued on the part of Lord Henniker, will be (amongst others) the following:—

That no legacy duty was chargeable on the annuity, because the first-mentioned testator gave the property in fee to trustees, and directed them to make a settlement which was to contain a power of jointure, so that the interest of the annuitant would have been derived from the deed containing such powers, and not from the will, and that no such deed having been executed, the annuity was not properly payable under the will.

Because the power contained in the will of the first testator was not properly exercised, more than one-third of the annual value having been charged, and a condition having been annexed to the charge, videlicet that it should be taken in lieu of dower.

Because other property besides that directed by the will of the first testator to be settled, was and is charged by the second testator with the payment of the annuity.

And because the widow could not take the annuity under the will of the second testator, without giving up her dower as a consideration for so doing; and if she did give up her dower, then she took the annuity as a purchaser, and not as a gift from the first testator, and consequently could not be liable to pay legacy duty for it.

That if legacy duty be payable at all, it can only be payable in respect of the value of the interest derived by the widow under the will of the first testator, and which must be considered as reduced by the value of the dower given up for it.

That the defendant is not the party liable to be sued for the legacy duty; or, if liable, that duty is payable according to the relationship of the second testator to the first.

That the facts stated in the special verdict, imposed by law no liability to the legacy duty, and affix none upon the defendant to pay any.

(b) Section 4 enacts, that "Every gift by any will, &c. of any person dying after the passing of this Act, which, by virtue of any such will, &c. shall have effect or be satisfied out of the personal estate of such person, or out of any personal estate which such person shall have power to dispose of payable. Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. sen. 420, is an authority in the plaintiff's favour to shew that, under such circumstances, legacy duty is not payable, and that where a legacy is given to a wife in lieu or satisfaction of dower, she is not, in case the assets should prove deficient, to abate in proportion with the other legatees. Lord Hardwicke there says, referring to Burridge v. Bradyl, 1 P. Wms. 127,—"The strong ground was, that it was a purchase of the wife's dower by giving her a sum of money in lieu and satisfaction of and upon her releasing it, and the wife may lay hold of that if she will. It is the same as if the testator says:—'I give A. 500*l.* on consideration that he conveys such an estate to my devisee or trustee.' A. has then an option to say, 'That is a contract;' he closes therewith, and makes it absolute, and will part with that estate for that money, and is not bound to abate in proportion with other legatees. So is this a purchase from the wife, and the price fixed by the husband, provided there was anything to purchase, which depends on a fact whether the wife would be entitled to dower, and had a title inchoate to dower out of his real estate." In the present case Lady Henniker took as a purchaser, for she would have taken dower out of the very estate which was charged with the legacy. She took as a purchaser for a valuable consideration. In The Attorney-General v. Pickard, relied upon by the Crown, there was the power of making the gift to any one; here the power is confined to making a gift to the wife of the donee, and the party executing the power does so upon the express terms that it is to be in bar of dower. In that case it was decided, in the case of a power created by will to charge land with an annuity, the appointee takes under the will creating the power, and not under the will that executes the power. But that case cannot decide this. The annuity is taken not only with the benefits attached to it, but with all its disadvantages,—one being, that the annuitant has to give up her dower. She takes by purchase, and if there were other legatees, and the assets were found insufficient to satisfy all the legatees, she would take priority of the others. Blower v. Morret, Burridge v. Bradyl, and other cases decide this. The word "gift," in the 4th section of the Act, must be construed as a gift without value; here a valuable consideration is given for that which is to be received. Where a party gets a benefit, then the Act no doubt applies, and imposes a duty; but not in such a case as this, where it comes, as the plaintiff in error contends, by way of purchase.

Sir W. P. Wood (Phinn with him), contrà, not called upon.

COLERIDGE, J.—We are of opinion that the legacy duty in this case is payable to the Crown, and the judgment of the Court below must be affirmed. The principle upon which The Attorney-General v. Pickard proceeded I do not understand to be disputed. It is perfectly clear, then, that where a testator by his will creates a power to enable a tenant for life in possession to appoint to any woman he might marry an annuity for her jointure, and the tenant for life afterwards by his will exercises the power so conferred upon him, that the annuity would be a legacy given by the first testator,—a gift under the 4th section of the statute; but then it is said that there must be engrafted on the first will the condition, which is, by a subsequent instrument, imposed by the party who has the privilege given him to exercise the power of relinquishing dower; and thus reading it, it is like the case of Blower v. Morret, and so turned into, or to be considered and treated as a purchase, not a mere condition annexed to the receipt of the legacy. Several members of the Court are of opinion, that, supposing this were so, it could not be held as a purchase; but looking at it as the Court below did, we all agree and think this is nothing more than the appointment of a legacy upon a condition. The original power in the will of the first Lord Henniker is that from which the donee derives the gift; that was the opinion of the Court below, and I think the case is free from doubt.

as he or she shall think fit, or which shall have been charged upon or made payable out of any real estate, or be directed to be satisfied out of any moneys to arise by the sale of any real estate of the person so dying, or which such person may have the power to dispose of, whether the same shall be given by way of annuity or in any other form, shall be deemed and taken to be a legacy within the true intent and meaning of this Act. Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to the charging with the duties by this Act granted any specific sum or sums of money, or any share or proportion thereof, charged by any marriage settlement, or deed or deeds, upon any real estate, in any case in which any such sum or sums, or share or proportion thereof, shall be appointed or apportioned by any will or testamentary instrument, under any power for that purpose given by any such marriage settlement, deed or deeds." Sec. 5 enacts, "That the duties thereby granted on legacies or charged upon or made payable out of any real estate, or out of any moneys to arise by the sale of any real estate, &c. shall be accounted for, answered, and paid by the trustee or trustees to whom the real estate shall be devised out of which the legacy or legacies shall be to be paid or satisfied, or, if there shall be no trustee, then by the person or persons entitled to such real estate, subject to any such legacy, or by the person or persons empowered or required to pay or satisfy any such legacy."

CLARKE v. GANT.

Churchwarden is overseer—Burgess-list—Signing burgess-list by churchwarden as an overseer—penalty for neglect—Municipal Corporation Act. In a parish where there were two churchwardens and two overseers, the two overseers made out and signed an alphabetical list of burgesses, pursuant to the 5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 15 (the Municipal Corporation Act). The two churchwardens did not, nor did either of them, sign the burgess-list. In an action for the penalty of 50*l. under sec.* 48, against the churchwardens for not having, as overseers, made out and signed the list:

Held, that the churchwardens were overseers within the meaning of the Act; that all the overseers should sign the burgess-list; and that this action for the penalty could be supported.

This was an action brought by the above-named defendant in error, to recover from the plaintiff the penalty of 50*l.* in pursuance of the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76, sec. 48); the plaintiff was one of the churchwardens of a parish in the borough of Harwich, and had neglected to sign the burgess-lists, it was alleged that he, being a churchwarden, was, as such churchwarden, an overseer within the meaning of that Act, and bound to sign such burgess-list, and liable to the penalty thereby imposed for not doing so. The cause was tried at Chelmsford, before Coleridge, J. who directed the jury that the defendant there being a churchwarden, was an overseer within the meaning of the Act. A verdict was returned for the plaintiff at the trial for 50*l.* and a bill of exceptions was tendered to the direction of the learned judge.

A another case precisely similar against the other churchwarden was then also tried with the same result in both cases. A new trial was moved for on the 19th of April, in the Court of Ex. on the ground of misdirection, when it was arranged that it should stand over until after judgment had been given in the Court of Ex. Chamber in the present case.

Shee, Serjt. for the plaintiff in error.—The plaintiff is one of the churchwardens of Harwich, but not an overseer, unless held constructively to be one; he being one of such churchwardens, did not sign the burgess-list for that borough as an overseer, and the present action was brought against him under the Municipal Corporation Act (5 & 6 Wm. 4, c. 76), to recover the penalty of 50*l.* by that Act imposed on overseers refusing or neglecting to sign such list. The burgess-list was signed by the two overseers, but not by the churchwardens; and the question now is, whether churchwardens are overseers for this purpose within the meaning of this Act of Parliament, and liable to the penalty of 50*l.* sought to be recovered by the present action for neglecting to sign the burgess-list; it was admitted there was no corrupt or improper motive in the transaction on the part of the churchwardens. By the 15th section, (a) overseers are directed to make lists of all persons entitled to be burgesses in their respective parishes. The list is to be called "The Burgess List," and to be according to the form No. 1 in the schedule (D) to that Act annexed. On reference to that form, which is thus required, it is teereby shewing that it was intended the two persons only who were actually the overseers should sign, otherwise it would have been very easy to have given four names indicating as many persons, or to have specifically named churchwardens as well as the overseers, had it been intended that the churchwardens should have signed the list. There are several instances in the Act of Parliament where matters are required to be done, sometimes by churchwardens or by overseers, sometimes by both, and sometimes by the one or the other only. The Legislature kept in view the distinction between them. Sec. 48 (a) imposes the penalty for neglecting to sign the list, and the 142nd section is the interpretation clause, which says:—"Overseers of the poor" shall be construed to mean all persons who execute the duties of overseers of the poor. [CRESSWELL, J.—In some places there are four persons appointed. Suppose there were two schedules sent in, one signed by A. and B. and the other by C. and D.: which would be the right one?] In either case, perhaps, some difficulty could be suggested. The other side rely upon the 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, by which it is provided that the churchwardens of every parish are to be called overseers of the poor of the same parish—13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 12, and 8 & 9 Wm. 3, c. 30, s. 1. The declaration here is bad: it contains no allegation that the list was necessary to be signed by the churchwardens, or that there were in fact any burgesses qualified to be put upon the list: there does not appear, therefore, to be any default. As the action is for a penalty, it should be made to appear clearly that he has the right to claim it.

Lush, contrà.—As to the last point, this is an objection raised, not by way of special demurrer, but is taken now for the first time after verdict; the verdict, therefore, cures it. It will be presumed that all the material facts were proved in evidence before the jury at the trial, or they would not have returned their verdict for the plaintiff to recover the penalty. As to the churchwardens being overseers, this case is almost the same as King v. Burrell, 12 Adol. & E. 460, which was an action for a similar penalty against an overseer for neglecting to sign the burgess-list, under the 48th section of the same Act. That section enacts, that if any overseer "shall neglect or refuse to make out, sign, and deliver such list as aforesaid," every such overseer, "for every such offence, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 50*l.*" to be recovered by any person who will sue for the same. Here the defendant "neglected to make out and sign" such list; he has therefore committed the offence and incurred the penalty. King v. Burrell decided an overseer would incur the penalty, although his neglect was neither wilful nor corrupt; and the Court, it would seem, was of opinion that all the overseers must sign the burgess-list. Patteson, J. there says, "In this parish, as in others, the overseers should deliver a single list, which all of them should sign. It is true that we have held the act of the majority to be the act of all in the construction of the statutes relating to the poor, and other Acts; but the language of section 48 is remarkable. It enacts that 'if any overseer' shall neglect to sign such list, then 'every such overseer' shall forfeit 50*l.* This shews that all must sign." The only question then is, whether the plaintiff in error, being a churchwarden, is not an overseer? He clearly is so, unless the schedule (D) in the Act be held to control the enactment. The 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, expressly declares that churchwardens are to be overseers, and the interpretation clause (142nd) of the Municipal

(a) Sec. 15 enacts, "That on the fifth day of September in every year the overseers of the poor of every parish wholly or in part within any borough shall make out an alphabetical list, to be called 'The Burgess List,' according to the form No. 1 in the schedule (D) to this Act annexed, of all persons who shall be entitled to be enrolled in the burgess-roll of that year, according to the provisions of this Act in respect of property within such parish, and the overseers shall sign such burgess-lists, and shall deliver the same to the town-clerk of the borough on the said fifth day of September in every year, and shall keep a true copy of such lists, to be perused by any person, without payment of any fee, at all reasonable hours between the fifth and fifteenth days of September in every year; and the town-clerk shall forthwith cause copies to be printed of all overseers' lists delivered to him, and shall deliver a copy of all such lists to any person requiring the same on payment of a reasonable price for each copy, and shall cause a copy of all such lists to be fixed on or near the outer door of the town-hall, or in some public and conspicuous situation within the borough, on every day during the week next preceding the fifteenth day of September in every year.

(a) Section 48 enacts, "That if any mayor, alderman, or assessor of any borough who shall be in office at the time herein appointed for the revision by them of the burgess-list under this Act, or for any election of councillors, assessors, or auditors which he is required to conduct or declare, shall neglect or refuse to revise such burgess-list, or to conduct or declare such election as aforesaid, every such mayor, alderman, and assessor shall for every such offence forfeit and pay the sum of one hundred pounds; and if any overseer of any parish wholly or in part within any borough shall neglect or refuse to make out, sign, and deliver such list as aforesaid, or if the town-clerk of any borough shall neglect or refuse to receive, print, and publish such lists as aforesaid, or if any such overseer or town-clerk shall refuse to allow any such list to be perused by any person having right thereunto, every such overseer and town-clerk respectively for every such offence shall forfeit and pay the sum of fifty pounds; and the said penalties hereby in such case imposed shall be recovered with full costs of suit by any person who will sue for the same within three calendar months after the commission of such offence, by action of debt or on the case in any of his Majesty's Superior Courts of Record, and the money so to be recovered shall, after payment of the costs and expenses attending the recovery thereof, be paid and apportioned as follows (that is to say), one moiety thereof to the person so suing, and the other moiety thereof to the treasurer to be appointed by virtue of this Act, to be by him applied in aid of the borough fund hereinafter mentioned."

Corporation Act assists that view. The churchwardens are overseers, they are to make borough rates, and must see them from time to time for the purpose of putting on proper names upon the lists. In Reg. v. The Justices of Cambridgeshire, 7 A. & E. 480, it was held, that a notice of application for an order of maintenance on the putative father of a bastard under the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 76, s. 73, must be signed by a majority of the aggregate body of churchwardens and overseers, and therefore such a notice signed by only two overseers of a parish, which had also two churchwardens, was bad, (See R. v. The Mayor, &c. of Harwich, 18 Law T. 261.) The direction of the learned judge at the trial was therefore correct, and the defendant in error is entitled to judgment.

Shee, Serjt. in reply.

MAULE, J.—We are of opinion that the exceptions taken in this case cannot be sustained; we are bound by the words of the Act, and think it is necessary that all should sign. As to the objection taken to the declaration, we think with Mr. Lush it certainly comes too late after verdict; we must assume there were burgesses qualified to be placed upon a list, or there would not have been a verdict for the plaintiff; and I think we may also take it, that in fact there was a list signed by two of the overseers. Certainly, after verdict the objection to the declaration is too late. The judgment will be for the plaintiff below to recover the penalty for which the action was brought.

WESSON v. ALLCARD.

Bankruptcy Consolidation Act—Arrangement Clauses.

Action on a bill of exchange by the endorsee of A. B. the drawer against the acceptor. Plea, puis darrein continuance, that the defendant was a trader; that being indebted, &c. he presented a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, &c. (setting out the proceedings); that a day was appointed for a private sitting; that prior to that day fourteen days' notice in writing was given to every one whom the defendant knew to be a creditor, and amongst others to A. B.; and that defendant did not know, nor did the Court of Bankruptcy know, nor did the assignee know, that the said A. B. had endorsed the said bill, or that any other person was entitled in respect thereof. It then alleged that defendant filed a full account of his debts, and of the debt in question, and set forth a proposal for payment of a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, and the appointment of a day for the confirmation of such proposal; and that after the first, and before the second sitting, the defendant received an intimation from the plaintiff's attorney that the bill had been endorsed to plaintiff, and that a demand of payment was then made. The plea then averred that after the first and before the second sitting a notice was served at plaintiff's residence of such second sitting; that at such second sitting three-fifths in number and value of the creditors whose debts amounted to 10l. and upwards agreed to the proposal; and that after the bill became due, and after the commencement of this action, and within eight days now last past, the Court of Bankruptcy gave the defendant a certificate, &c. in the form in schedule A. &c.:

Held, bad, for not averring notice to the plaintiff of the first sitting.

A certificate under the arrangement clauses is no defence against a creditor without notice of the several meetings.

This was an action of assumpsit upon a bill of exchange, drawn by one J. Plews upon, and accepted by, the defendant, and endorsed to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded puis darrein continuance, that he, the defendant, was a trader, and being indebted to divers persons, presented his petition to the Bankruptcy Court, in the form contained in Schedule Aa. to the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106 (the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849), annexed. The plea then set out the other proceedings under the Bankrupt Act, and stated that the Court of Bankruptcy appointed a private sitting to be held, and that fourteen days before such sitting, written notice was given to every person whom the defendant then knew to be his creditor, or whom he had any means of knowing to be his creditor, and, amongst others, to J. Plews, the drawer of the bill in question, and that the defendant did not at the time when such notices were given or sent, nor did the Bankruptcy Court, nor the official assignee, know that J. Plews had endorsed the bill, or was not the holder, or who was the holder and entitled to the proceeds, except the said J. Plews, or the address, description, or locality of such holder. The plea then stated that the defendant filed a full account of his debts, and of the debt in question, and did set forth a proposal to the effect that he would pay his creditors a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, and that at the private sitting of the Bankruptcy Court the creditors of the defendant to the amount of 10l. and upwards, proved their debts, and that three-fifths in number and value of the creditors who had so proved, did assent to the proposal of the defendant; that the Court of Bankruptcy did then propose another sitting; that after the first, and before such second sitting, the plaintiff's attorney applied to the defendant for payment of the said bill, and that such application was the first intimation that the defendant had that the plaintiff, and not the said J. Plews, was the holder of the bill, and that the plaintiff was a creditor of the defendant; that the Bankruptcy Court made a special order that service of the notice of the second sitting at the last known place of abode of the plaintiff should be deemed sufficient, and that notice was served accordingly; that such second meeting was duly held, and that four other creditors of the defendant there proved their debts, and that three-fifths in number and value of all those creditors who had proved debts to the amount of 10l. at either of those sittings, agreed to accept the proposal of the defendant, which was assented to at the first sitting; that the Court of Bankruptcy then confirmed the said proposal and agreement, and caused it to be filed of record; that after the bill became due, and after the commencement of his suit, and within eight days now last past, the Court of Bankruptcy gave the defendant a certificate under the seal of the Bankruptcy Court in the form in schedule Ac. which set out, amongst other things, that the resolution or agreement had been duly carried into effect. The plea then stated that the debt in question had not been contracted by fraud or breach of trust, or without reasonable probability at the time of contract of being able to pay the same, or by reason of any judgment in any prosecution for breach of the revenue laws, or in any action for breach of promise of marrage, seduction, criminal conversation, libel, slander, assault, battery, malicious arrest, malicious trespass, maliciously suing out a fiat in bankruptcy, or maliciously filing or prosecuting a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy. To this plea the plaintiff demurred specially, and the Court below, after consideration, gave judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant below then brought his writ of error.

Watson, for the plaintiff in error (the defendant below).—The plea is good. There are three modes of procedure under this Act. 1st. By a petition for adjudication ending in a certificate of conformity, which certificate, when obtained, discharges the bankrupt from all debts that might have been proved; and when once this certificate has been granted, the previous steps are not disputable. 2nd. There is a petition for composition with creditors, and in that case when a certificate is granted it is to have the same effect as a certificate of conformity (sec. 221); and if the commissioner shall find that the proper steps have not been taken, he has power to declare the petitioner bankrupt (sec. 223). 3rd. There are clauses providing for arrangements with creditors, and assignments of the trader's property; but under these last-mentioned clauses it is specially provided that no debt shall be discharged unless the debtor has received notice, but that is not so in the other cases referred to. It is contended that this certificate of the Court of Bankruptcy is a sufficient discharge. The effect of the 221st section is to render the certificate a bar to the plaintiff's claim, although he may not have received the notices mentioned in the 213th and 215th sections. If such had not been the intention, the want of such notices would have been mentioned in the exceptions in the Act, as a matter that would invalidate the certificate; and if that position be correct, the only question is, is the certificate properly set out. The 221st section is explicit, it says, "That so soon as the said resolution or agreement shall have been carried into effect, and the creditors of such petitioning trader shall have been satisfied, according to the tenor thereof, the Court shall give to such petitioner a certificate under the hand and seal of the commissioner, in the form," &c. "And such certificate shall henceforth operate to all intents and purposes as fully as if the same were a certificate of conformity under a bankruptcy, except—" Then come the exceptions of debts which shall not be barred by the certificate, which are set out in this plea, and within which the defendant states this debt does not come, such as a debt contracted by fraud, or a judgment for the breach of the Revenue Laws, &c.; and amongst those exceptions nothing is said of the want of notice being sufficient to exclude a debt from the operation of the certificate. In the case of outstanding bills of exchange, it is scarcely possible to give notice,—how can the trader know in whose hands the bill may be? The certificate having the effect of a certificate of conformity, discharges the debtor from all debts of creditors, whether they have come in under the arrangement or not, and a creditor cannot afterwards dispute whether or no the antecedent steps have been properly taken. The 222nd section provides, that the Court being satisfied that the official assignee has performed his duty, may give him a certificate thereof; that shews that it was intended that the certificate to the trader was intended to be final and conclusive. By the 6th section of the Act the Court of Bankruptcy is a Court of Record; and by the 12th section an appeal is given to the Vice-Chancellor; and in all cases when it is supposed that the commissioner has improperly granted a certificate on insufficient grounds, the proper course is to appeal to the Vice-Chancellor, and afterwards to the Lord Chancellor, or Court of Appeal, if it be necessary. When the certificate was granted before action you might, under the old Acts, plead that after the accruing of the cause of action and before suit the defendant became bankrupt, &c. and it is true that in pleading puis darrein continuance, it was customary to set out the whole of the proceedings, but it is submitted that it is not necessary. [CROMPTON, J.—Then why should the Act make the certificate evidence of the Act of Bankruptcy, trading and petitioning creditor's debt, if it was not necessary to allege, and to prove those facts.] The certificate being a bar to all debts, except those excepted, it is not necessary to show more than that such a certificate was obtained. It is sufficient, having once shown the initiation of a jurisdiction, to go on to state that the certificate was granted, without referrin g to the intermediate steps. [COLERIDGE, J.—It may be a question whether it is not a condition precedent to jurisdiction, that the terms of the agreement should have been carried into effect.] The commissioner may proceed inverso ordine, and still the certificate is good. He cited Levy v. Horne, 5 Ex. Rep. 257; Thomas v. Hudson, 14 M. & W. 353. In Error, 16 M. & W. 885; Heslop v. Baker, 6 Ex. Rep. 751; Reg. v. Little Bolton, Cald. 367.

H. Hill, for the defendant in error (the plaintiff below).—This plea should have set out all the proceedings, that the creditors were satisfied, and that the notices had been duly given. According to the argument on the other side, the greater part of this plea might have been dispensed with. The effect of these arrangement clauses is, that no creditors are barred by the certificate of the Court, unless they have had due notice of the private sittings. The 221st section does not apply so as to make the certificate sufficient in itself. It is always customary, in pleading puis darrein continuance, to state every particular fact; when pleading a statutable authority, every fact must be stated in its order. In this case, the defendant made an offer to his creditors of 7s. 6d. in the pound, to be paid by three instalments at three, six, and nine months; and these were not all due at the time this plea was pleaded, and until all were paid, the commissioner had no jurisdiction. The section is as express and imperative as words can make it, that notice in writing shall be given to every creditor; here no such notice was given to the plaintiff, but they say that notice was given to the drawer, because they did not know that the plaintiff was the holder. It is most important that these notices should be given to all creditors, when it is considered that the attendance of a portion may bind the whole. The 216th section provides for the second sitting, and that the agreement then come to shall be binding against all creditors who at the time of the sitting had notice, and binding against such only; and the 221st section must be read in connection with the 216th. If that were not so, a man might have one large creditor, and he might make such an arrangement with his several small creditors as should entirely exclude the man to whom he owed most from all voice in the matter, by omitting to give him notice. It is making a new law to allege what is here stated, and asking this Court to administer it. To support the argument of the other side, a clear enactment must be produced. Nothing less will suffice; and if there be any doubt, the Court will put such a construction on the Act as shall not interfere with existing rights. A man has every facility under the Act to make himself bankrupt, and a forced construction will not be put upon it. He cited Tetley v. Taylor, 21 Law J. 346, Q.B.; Christie v. Unwin, 3 Por. & D. 204; Bonneker v. Mollineux, 4 M. & G. 286; and Fletcher v. Manning, 12 M. & W. 571.

Watson, in reply.—If the arguments of the defendant in error are to prevail, these clauses could not work; and, moreover, in such cases as these, where bills of exchange are passed from one to another, it is impossible that a man should know to whom he is to give notice. Tetley v. Taylor turns upon another clause of the Act, and is not applicable to this case. The Act says distinctly that this certificate is to act to all intents and purposes as a certificate of conformity; but according to the argument on the other side, "all intents and purposes" is to be read with so many exceptions, that it would, in a majority of instances, be inoperative. These clauses do not make this certificate without these additional clauses who knew that [illegible] ; then in this case there was a [illegible] Exhibited Bamford v. Baxter, 1 S. & S. [illegible] ; and Rotheram v. Berry, 1 B. & C. 15, an analogous case.

Sir L. SHADWELL, J.—We are all of opinion that the judgment of the Court below ought to be affirmed. When this case was argued in the Court below two distinct points were relied on; the first, that there had been no sufficient notice, and the second, that it was necessary to show either that the resolution or agreement had been carried into effect or that the creditors had been satisfied, and both these points are referred to in the judgment below. It is not necessary, however, for us to refer to both, it is sufficient if we confine our judgment to the first of these points, and on the last, therefore, we say nothing, the ground of our decision being the want of notice. It seems that at the time the defendant gave the notice he did not know who was the holder of the bill for which this action was brought, and that after the plaintiff applied to him for payment he gave him notice of the second meeting. We must look to the statute itself if the language of it satisfies the language of the Act. The language of the Act is special, and the only persons to be bound by the certificate are those who were creditors at the time, and who had notice. Now the argument has been that this certificate is to have the same operation as a certificate of insolvency, and is to be a discharge to all debts, as under a commission; and the question is, is it to extend to all cases, or only those in which notice has been given? In a case of this sort there is no hardship on the trader; he has other means of being relieved from his debts,—he may become a bankrupt; but on the other hand, it would lead to the greatest injustice if these arrangements could be made to bind creditors who had no notice. The statute says, that a party shall first present his petition and make a proposal, of which notice is to be given; then, at the first sitting, the proposal is to be discussed, and in the interval a second notice is given, and when the parties come before the commissioner the matter is discussed, and, if agreed to, becomes a resolution, and is then binding against persons who are creditors at the time, and who have had notice,—otherwise we should have persons bound by the certificate, but not by the proposal.

Judgment affirmed on the one point.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. KERR, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 15, 16, and 24.

BARRINGTON v. LIDDELL.

Special case—Thellusson Act—Limit of accumulation—Portions—Intention.

The family estates of Lord B. were settled to common uses, in strict settlement, and subject to the life estate of his lordship, were conveyed to trustees for 2,000 years for raising (in the events which happened) the sum of 40,000l. as portions for his younger children, but which was not to become absolutely raisable in his lordship's lifetime unless he so directed. S. B. (his great uncle) after alluding to the settled estates and intending to benefit his lordship's family, bequeathed to his executors the sum of 15,000l. upon trust, to accumulate the interest during the lifetime of his great nephew; but if his said great nephew should die within twenty years, to be computed from his (the testator's) death, then the accumulation was to be continued for so long a period, as with the time that should elapse during the lifetime of his said great nephew would make up the full term of twenty years. And upon the completion of that accumulation, the trustees were to stand possessed of the trust moneys in trust, to pay and apply the same, or a competent part thereof, in satisfaction and discharge of the portions for his younger children, when and as the same respectively should become payable, and in exoneration of the settled estates charged therewith and subject thereto, upon and for the several trusts, intents, and purposes declared of his residuary personal estate, with a proviso, that if before the expiration of the said period of accumulation the accumulated fund should be of sufficient amount or value for answering the purposes aforesaid, then the accumulation should thereupon immediately cease. S. B. died in 1826 (a small part only of the portions having been charged). In 1847, when the period of twenty-one years after his death had elapsed, the accumulated fund amounted to 35,622l. only. At the institution of the suit it amounted to 43,643l. The limited period mentioned in the first section of the Thellusson Act, proving inadequate to effect the intention of the testator:

Held (reversing the decision of the Court below), that the trust for accumulation was not within the exception of the 2nd section of the Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98, as being a "provision for raising portions for any child or children of any person taking any interest under any such conveyance, settlement, or devise," and that the 35,622l. as soon as the 40,000l. were raised, became a fund applicable to the payment of the portions already charged, and would be applicable also to the payment of the rest of the portions as soon as they became payable.

"Any interest" given by a will to the parent for whose children portions are thereby provided, brings the case within the exception of the Act.

Although accumulations directed contrary to the Thellusson Act are by that Act declared to be null and void, yet they are only null and void pro tanto.

Whatever a "grantor, settlor, or devisor" may do with regard to his own children he may do to the children of any other person, as well as respecting past as future portions; except that the persons whose children may have portions provided for them by a "grantor, settlor, or devisor," must be persons who take an interest "under any such conveyance, settlement, or devise."

This was an appeal from a decree of the Vice-Chancellor Turner.

The facts were shortly these:—By indentures of lease and release of the 20th and 21st of April, 1823, being the settlement made on the marriage of the present Lord Barrington, the family estates of that nobleman were conveyed to the defendants Liddell and Price, for 2,000 years, and, subject thereto, to the late Lord Barrington, for his life, and then to the plaintiff, the present Lord Barrington, for his life, and, subject thereto, to the first son of the marriage in tail male, with divers remainders over. The trusts of the term of 2,000 years were declared to be in case there should be any child or children of the said intended marriage, other than an eldest son, whether born in the lifetime of the plaintiff, or after his decease, and whether there should be issue male of the said marriage or not, that then the said trustees should, after the decease of the survivor of the late Viscount and the plaintiff, or in the lifetime of them, or the survivor of them, if they or he should so direct, by any deed, &c. by demising or otherwise disposing of the hereditaments comprised in the said term of 2,000 years, or any part of such hereditaments, for the whole or any part of such term, raise for the portion or portions of such child or children, the sum or several sums of money hereinafter mentioned, viz. if there shall be only one such younger or other child, the sum of 20,000l. for the portion of such one child, to become an interest vested in and after the decease of the late Viscount, to be paid to such one child, at such age or time as the plaintiff should by deed or will, &c. appoint, and for want of such appointment, to be an interest vested in such only younger child, being a son, at his age of twenty-one years, or, being a daughter, at her age of twenty-one years, or marriage, with consent, &c. and the money to be paid to him or her, on or at the same age or day, if it should happen after the decease of the survivor of them, the said late and present Viscount; but if such day should happen in their lifetimes, or in that of the survivor of them, then to be paid within six calendar months after his decease, and if there should be two such younger or other children, and no more than the sum of 30,000l. for the portions of such children, and if three or more such younger or other children, then the sum of 40,000l. for their portion, to be divided between and among the children for whom the portions are provided in such shares, and to vest in and after the decease of the late Viscount, to be paid to them respectively on or at such ages or days, and to be subject to such limitations over for the benefit of some one or more of such children, as the plaintiff should by deed or will, &c. appoint; and for want of appointment the sums of 20,000l. or 40,000l. were to vest in such younger or other children—as to sons, at twenty-one, and as to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with consent, &c. in equal shares, and to be paid within six months after the decease of the said plaintiff.

There were ten children of the marriage, several of whom attained twenty-one years of age; so that the sum raisable under the term was 40,000l.

The family estates being thus settled, Shute Barrington, the late Bishop of Durham, by his will, dated the 10th of December, 1825, after settling so much of the said settlement as related to the portions for younger children; and after bequeathing chattels of considerable value to go as heir-looms with the settled estates, and after directing the sum of 15,000l. to be laid out in the erection of mausoleum [illegible] upon those estates, he gave to his executors [illegible] upon the following trusts—"In trust that they or he do and shall, within three calendar months after my decease, invest the same (in Government or real securities, with power to vary, &c., such [illegible] interest, dividends, [illegible] said trust moneys, [illegible] during the lifetime of the said Wm. [illegible] Barrington; or if he shall [illegible] term of twenty years to be computed [illegible] decease, then the accumulation [illegible] for so long a period as, with [illegible] elapse during the lifetime of the [illegible] Keppel, will make up the full term of [illegible] to be computed from my decease); and [illegible] completion of the accumulation aforesaid, [illegible] trustees shall stand possessed of the [illegible] moneys and accumulations in trust to [illegible] same, or a competent part thereof, in satisfaction [illegible] discharge of the portions so intended for the [illegible] and younger sons of the said William [illegible] and as the same respectively shall become [illegible] and in exoneration of the hereditaments [illegible] with, and subject thereto, upon, and for the [illegible] trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and [illegible] ject to the several powers, provisoes, and declarations hereinafter contained and concerning my residuary personal estate, or such and so many of the said [illegible] &c. as shall then be subsisting and capable of taking effect, provided that if, before the expiration of the period for accumulation, the accumulated fund shall be of sufficient amount or value for answering the purposes aforesaid, then the accumulation shall thereupon immediately cease."

The bishop died in March 1826, and the late Lord Barrington in 1829. In the years 1842 and 1843 the two several sums of 523l. and 721l. were raised with the consent of the plaintiff, for the advancement of one of his younger children.

The plaintiff and his eldest son barred the entail created by the settlement of 1823, and settled the family estates upon other uses and trusts under which all the different persons, plaintiffs in this suit, were interested.

The 15,000l. given by the testator upon trust for accumulation was duly accumulated, and attained in March 1847—twenty-one years after the death of the testator—to 35,622l. and on the institution of the suit to 43,643l.

The present question arose between the parties interested in having the estates exonerated by the settlement of 1823 exonerated, and the parties claiming under the residuary disposition in the testator's will.

On a special case being filed under the [illegible] Vict. c. 35, the following questions were submitted to the Court.

1. Whether the trust for accumulation aforesaid directed by the will of the said testator was valid for the whole of the life of the said [illegible] William Keppel Lord Barrington, or for the [illegible] only of twenty-one years from the decease of the said testator, or for any and what other [illegible] period, and to what extent is such trust for accumulation valid?

2. Whether, according to the true construction of the said will and the said indenture of settlement of the 21st of April, 1823, the said accumulated trust-fund, or any, and what part thereof, and to what amount, is now applicable, in exoneration of the estates comprised in the said term of 2,000 years, created by the said last-mentioned indenture of settlement from the said portions or sums of money or in exoneration of the said estates from the said mortgage debts, or sums of 523l. and 721l. and the interest thereof, or any other, and what part or parts of the said portion or sum of 40,000l.?

3. Whether any, and what appropriation, ought to be now made, and what part of the said accumulated trust-fund to answer, and at any and what future time, any and what part, or parts of the said portions or sum of 40,000l. so as to exonerate the residuary estate of the said testator from all further or other liability in respect of the trusts for accumulation of the said fund?

4. In what manner is the interest of the said accumulated trust-fund to be dealt with until the said estates are by means of it exonerated from the said charge of 40,000l. and who is entitled to the interest of the accumulated trust-fund since the accumulation ought to have ceased?

The Vice-Chancellor Turner, before whom the case was argued, decided,—

1st. That the accumulation of the 15,000l. was not valid beyond the period of twenty-one years from the time of the testator's death.

2nd and 3rd. That no part of the accumulated fund was then applicable to the payment either of the mortgage debts, or of any part of the portions.

4th. That the income already accrued on the fund and to accrue at the expiration of twenty-one years belonged to the residuary legatees of the testator, the death of Lord Barrington.

From this decision this suit was instituted.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—In the event of the accumulations being excessive, could the income arising therefrom follow that of the principal fund?

Sir W. P. Wood in his reply, and as bearing upon that question, cited Crawley v. Crawley, 7 Sl. 427.

The grounds on which the Vice-Chancellor's judgment was founded, the arguments of counsel, the authorities cited, and the several parts of the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, which are applicable to this case, are alluded to, and set out in his lordship's

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The first question which arises upon this will is, what is its true construction, irrespective and independent of the Thellusson Act? The testator meant the accumulation to go on, during the life of Lord Barrington, but he expressly provided that if the money,—not the 40,000*l.* but the 20,000*l.* the 30,000*l.* or the 40,000*l.* whichever it might be,—payable, should become raised during his life, that then the accumulation should cease; the object would be answered: he did not mean an accumulation during the whole life; he had no object in that, but an accumulation for a particular period in order to raise a particular charge. Then he says, if Lord Barrington should die before twenty years shall have expired, at all events the accumulation shall go on for twenty years, if that term shall be necessary in order to raise the money. Now, supposing that Lord Barrington had died within the twenty years after the death of the bishop, and that the money had not been raised, and that the remaining time to make up the twenty years from his death would have been insufficient to raise the whole, what would have happened? Why, that the fund, to whatever it amounted, would have been immediately available for such of the portions as could then be raised. He did not mean that 20,000*l.* 30,000*l.* or 40,000*l.* should be actually raised, but he meant that whatever sum could be raised within that period, should be a fund applicable, as far as it would go, to the payment of the portions. He then directs the portions to be paid when and as they respectively become payable; he directs this accumulation to go on during the life of Lord Barrington, unless the portions shall be sooner raised. It is a limitation, therefore, upon that period. If the portions could be sooner raised, then the accumulation was to cease. So in the case of the twenty years; supposing Lord Barrington to have died before the expiration of the term, the fund would have been accumulated for the remainder of it; but if the portions could be raised before its expiration, the proviso again fits itself, —joins itself to the second alternative, the twenty years would have ceased. In that, therefore, there is nothing to contravene or touch the Thellusson Act. It is a case not within the prohibition of the first section; it is a question simply of intention. The testator intended that whatever portions could be raised within the limit of his will, should be at once applicable to the payment of the fund. If 20,000*l.* or 30,000*l.* had become payable within the legal limit (as it has in point of fact), that sum would have been raiseable for the portions of the children. They would have taken their portions under this provision of the will, without touching the Thellusson Act. Lord Barrington has lived longer than the twenty years, and longer than the twenty-one years which brings the case as regards that into the Thellusson Act; 35,622*l.* only have been accumulated during the twenty-one years allowed by that Act; and the question is, what is to be the decision of the Court in regard to that state of circumstance? That that sum has been properly and legally raised, and is applicable to the portions, admits of no doubt; and the only question is, when it is applicable. I should say it was applicable to the portions, for the testator so says, when and as they become due and payable; therefore, as some are due and payable, and some may become due and payable, one would take for granted that that was the true construction; but the learned Vice-Chancellor says the portions cannot be payable during the life of Lord Barrington, because the intention of the testator was to accumulate during the whole of his lordship's life, and that as the 40,000*l.* cannot be raised according to the statute, and according to the will, within the life of Lord Barrington, the accumulation is stopped by the operation of the statute, and that as the event cannot happen by reason of the accumulation being so stopped, the fund must go in the direction pointed out by the statute, and cannot be applied to the payment of the portions. If that be the true construction of the will and of the statute, it defeats every intention which the testator had, and which he has clearly expressed, and expressed within the legal limit. The testator's intention was, that the lesser sum, if it could be raised within the period allowed by law, should be applicable at once. Can, therefore, the 35,622*l.* which have already been accumulated be now applied? The statute only stops the accumulation, and directs the application so long as the accumulation is directed contrary to the Act. What, therefore, we have to see is, what is the duration of time pending which the accumulation is directed contrary to the Act. It has been decided by Griffiths v. Vere, 9 Ves. 127, and by Longdon v. Simson, 12 Ves. 295, that although the directions are by the Act null and void, yet that they are only made null and void pro tanto. In the case of a life estate, it is good for twenty-one years if the life exceeds that term; if for twenty-four years, it is good for the twenty-one. There can be no doubt upon that point, because, although the statute says that it shall be null and void, it tells you that the fund shall only go over to the persons who would have been entitled, so long as the accumulation has been directed contrary to the intention of the Act. I cannot, therefore, see where the difficulty is in holding this to be at once a fund applicable, because, although the statute stops the accumulation, and directs that the interest shall go to the other parties during the time that the testator has contravened its provisions, yet it is not to go for any more time; and the contravention of the Act does not prevent you from measuring the time which is exceeded. Now what is the measure of time that is here exceeded? From the raising of the 35,622*l.* to the raising of 40,000*l.* as a measure of time, therefore, there is a perfect rule. The money has been accumulated; if it had not, I could have directed a computation, and there would have been no difficulty in ascertaining how far this Act of Parliament was contravened; it was contravened only so far as the time which elapsed between the accumulation of the 35,622*l.* and the 40,000*l.* If, then, the testator did not intend, as he clearly did not, that the accumulation should go on for the whole life of Lord Barrington if the portions could be sooner raised, and if the Act of Parliament steps in and cuts down the raising of that beyond the 35,622*l.* and if I give to the Act of Parliament its full operation, from the raising of the one to the raising of the other sum, I should just accomplish every intention which this testator had. That the law will enable me to carry into effect, and in doing so, I put a sensible, a sound, and rational construction upon the Act of Parliament. I give it its whole force without any strain or pressure. I take from it no operation which the words naturally and properly and legally give to it, and yet I give effect to the testator's intention. I am, therefore, clearly of opinion, with great deference, to a contrary authority, that as regards this first point, that the 35,622*l.* when and as soon as the 40,000*l.* were raised became a fund applicable in the first instance, to pay the portions of the children of Lord Barrington already payable, and would equally be a fund applicable for the payment of the rest of the portions when they became payable; in the meantime, of course, the interest of the fund would go according to the direction of the will to the residuary legatees. Then comes that very important question, what is the operation of the second section of the statute? Does that section or not include this particular case? Great difficulty has always been felt in putting a sound construction upon that section, and this is not the first time that I have had to consider it; it is very vaguely and very loosely expressed. The words are inaccurate, but they do not, I think, admit of very great doubt. The proviso is, "That nothing in this Act contained shall extend to any provision for payment of debts of any grantor, settlor, or devisor, or other person or persons, or to any provision for raising portions for any child or children of any grantor, settlor, or devisor, or any child or children of any person taking any interest under any such conveyance, settlement, or devise, or to any direction touching the produce of timber or wood upon any lands or tenements; but that all such provisions and directions shall and may be made and given, as if this Act had not passed." Now, in order to get at the true construction of this section, as it bears upon the present case, we must consider what the meaning of the former provision is. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the words, "or other person or persons," having reference to the first section, did not mean that a testator or grantor could provide for the debts of anybody but himself, but it meant that "any other person or persons" might provide for his or their own debts; that is a conclusion to which I cannot come. I am of opinion that this is all one sentence. It is a praiseworthy thing to pay debts, but a man is not likely to provide gratuitously for the debts of any indifferent person. Sons have provided for the debts of their fathers, or, what more frequently happens, fathers for the debts of their sons. The Legislature meant that a man should, within the limit allowed by law, be able not only to provide for his own debts, but for the debts of such other persons as he should think fit; that is a power which it is not very dangerous to entrust to anybody. And, therefore, I think, upon the whole construction of the Act, as well as upon the real meaning and intention of the party, that it does relate to debts—to past debts; and as a man may, by his will, under this Act of Parliament provide generally for his debts, that must include his future debts. Now, that being so, one of the grounds upon which the learned Vice-Chancellor relied, is removed. The late Vice-Chancellor of England decided, in Holford v. Staine, 16 Sl. 488, that, by the words of the second section, only portions already charged were included. Now that it does include portions already charged is not only there decided, but nobody can doubt that a man has power to provide for portions which he has already created. What is more reasonable than that a man having settled his family estate, divided into portions for his younger children, should, if he live long enough to accumulate, by saving a considerable sum of money, provide for its release and disincumberment. As, therefore, regards "a grantor, settlor, or devisor," there is no doubt that the words include portions already created, as well as future portions; or else I should rather agree that the words, but for those "for raising portions," have regard more to future portions than to portions already created. There is no break in the clause; it is all governed by the words, "or to any provision for raising portions for any child or children of any grantor, settlor, or devisor, or any child or children," not again taking up "or any provision for raising portions" anew, but "of any person taking any interest under any such conveyance, settlement, or devise." I think, therefore, it is perfectly clear that whatever a "grantor, settlor, or devisor" may do with regard to his own children, he may do to the children of any other person as regards past or future portions. There is no distinction between them, except that the persons whose children may have portions provided for them by a "grantor, settlor, or devisor," must be persons who take an interest under "any such conveyance, settlement, or devise." Then the question arises upon which the whole depends, what is the meaning of the words "child or children of any person taking any interest under any such conveyance, settlement, or devise?" These words are very inaccurate, and it is difficult to find the antecedent to the words, "such conveyance, settlement, or devise." But as the first part of the section has spoken of a man making provision by a gift or a settlement or a devise, calling him a "grantor, settlor, or devisor," the mind of the framer must be supposed to have passed on to the instrument itself, by which "the grantor, settlor, or devisor," has made the provision. Now, taking that to be so, it was said by the learned judge in the court below, that the words "any such conveyance, settlement, or devise," make it necessary that the gift to the person who is to take an interest under the "conveyance, settlement, or devise," must be by the very clause which creates the portion. That is not, I think, a sensible construction. Only see what the effect of it would be, supposing it to be necessary under this clause that the parent should take an interest in the very property out of which portions are to be raised. If an estate for life be given to a person by the first part of the will, and then by the latter part portions are directed to be raised for his children out of that very estate; to say because the estate for life is found in one part, and a direction to raise the portions in another part of the will, that he did not take under the devise, would be a most violent construction, not warranted by the words, and clearly contrary to what must have been the intention of the Act of Parliament. Now there is no magic in the word "devise." A "devise" clearly means a disposition by will. The Act of Parliament stands as representing the instrument in which it is contained. If a man takes it under a conveyance, does it signify in what part he finds it? It cannot. If under a settlement, so long as he has an interest in that settlement? It cannot. If under a devise, can it possibly matter in what part of the instrument is found the particular interest which is created? It cannot matter. But then comes the question, what is the interest which a person whose children are to be provided for is to take under "any such conveyance, settlement, or devise?" The Vice-Chancellor has held that it must be an interest in the very property which is directed to be accumulated, or out of which that property is to spring. I can collect no such intention from the Act. Nothing could have been so easy as to have expressed the intention, if had actually existed. When Parliament intended to provide for a case of that sort, it speaks in the first section of persons "entitled to the rents and profits;" and speaking of the time which was allowed or beyond which there was a prohibition, it says it may be "during the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who shall be living, or in ventre sa mère, at the time of the death of such grantor, devisor, or testator, or during the minority or respective minorities only of any person or persons who, under the uses or trusts of the deed, surrender, will, or other assurance directing such accumulations, would, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues, and profits, or the interest, dividends, or annual produce so directed to be accumulated." When, therefore, the Legislature meant to provide for the case of a person being entitled to the actual fund, they knew how to express their intention. And therefore when I find in this section that it is not to prohibit any provision for "any child or children of any person taking an interest under any such conveyance, settlement, or devise," I am compelled to say that the Legislature meant what it has expressed,—that nobody's child should be provided for unless you give an interest to the parent. Is there anything irrational in that? Or does it require any emendation or addition in order to give effect to it? They were forced under this proviso to give some definition of the parents of the children, or else, as everybody is of course the child of somebody, you would have had it apply to the whole world. The Legislature said if, upon the face of your will, you make the father an object of your bounty, you may by that same will accumulate a fund within the limit allowed by law for his children; but we will not permit you to provide for anybody. It does not, and I will put the highest, exclude the case of a man having an estate for life in a property given to him by a will where the portions are directed to be raised out of that estate for his children. But does it only apply to that case? The expression is "any interest;" there is no limit as to amount; you are yourself to be the judge of the amount and of the extent of your bounty. If there be upon the face of a will an expression, an intention of bounty, and effect given to that intention by an absolute gift to a man, there you may provide for the children of that man portions by way of accumulation; that defines who are to be the children of "other persons." I think, therefore, that I do no violence to the words, and I do not carry them beyond their plain and natural import. The subjects of this country had a right by law to accumulate within the limits which are here left at large. It was considered dangerous that that limit should in all cases be allowed to remain; it was, therefore, restrained, restricted, cut down by the Act of Parliament; but the same Act of Parliament tells you the cases in which it should not apply: and then why am I to strain beyond the words of the Act of Parliament in order not to effect an intention (which I cannot collect), but in order to do something which may be considered consistent with the usual and common course of things. My opinion upon the whole of this Act of Parliament itself with reference to the settlement is, that this is a case within the exception, and therefore that these portions may be properly raiseable as being raised within the time limited by law independent of the statute. Now as to the authorities: I do not see that any of them bear very closely upon it; I have looked into the different cases that have been referred to. In the case of Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Ke. 564, the interest which the party was to take was held not to be within the proviso; the grantors children for whose benefit the accumulation was directed were not the children of any person who took an interest under the will, and Lord Langdale besides held that the accumulations were not for raising portions properly so called. Some of the children who took interests had small annuities given to them for life out of the fund. Now, independently of the reasons given there by Lord Langdale, I should have been clearly of opinion that if all the children of parents had been provided for by small annuities out of the fund, that that would have been a clear case within the proviso. In Morgan v. Morgan, in the 20th L. J. 441, Ch. before the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, there were specific legacies of considerable value given to a mother, and legacies to the daughters of 5,000*l.* each on their marriage, with all accumulations of interest thereon from the time of the testator's death, that was held not to be within the exceptions. There was a specific legacy to the mother, and general legacies to the daughters. I could not see the grounds of the learned judge's opinion in that case, but it does not, I think, at all affect the view I take of this case. Then Mr. Justice Bosanquet in the case of Shaw v. Rhodes, 1 M. & C. 135, before the Lords Commissioners, seemed to fancy that the gift was not within the exception, but I think he was looking there rather to what was a portion than to what was the nature of the interest of the father of the children. What he said in that case amounted to nothing more than an obiter dictum: I do not think he was giving any opinion as to what was a sufficient interest in the parent. Cases may arise in which, although an interest be given to the parent, and some provision afterwards made for the children, yet not be made in the way of portions, so as to bring them within the second exception: in the case before me they are clearly portions, and therefore I am relieved from troubling myself with those cases. Now, Lord Cottenham, in giving his judgment, does not even refer to the second exception. The case was undoubtedly within it; and, when it came on in the House of Lords, Lord Cottenham simply referred to what he had before said; but Lord Lyndhurst observed, that he thought "the meaning of an interest was 'any interest,' however minute." No opinion was given upon that point; but there is no doubt that the opinions of those two law lords were, that however small the sum was, if there was a gift to the parent of the children who were to have portions, that that was an interest; it did not signify so as to bring the case within the exception of the Act of Parliament. The case of Jones v. Maggs, 9 Hare, 345, was decided on the ground that the legacy was not a portion. I do not touch any of those cases, because this is a case clearly in which the sums provided are portions, and not mere legacies. Upon the whole, therefore, I think that this case is really untouched by any decisions to which I am bound to pay any real deference; independently of the opinion of the Court below. I have come certainly to the very clear conclusion that this case falls within the second exception of the Act of Parliament; that therefore the portions have been regularly and properly raised, and are therefore to be applied in the way in which the testator directed. I therefore shall declare that so much of the fund as is directed to be raised as can be properly now applied for payment of portions already directed to be raised must be paid in satisfaction of those charges, and as soon as other portions shall be directed to be raised, they must be applied in the same way; but, beyond that, the fund must take its course. It will be like a common legacy to provide for portions, not payable at the time, with a residuary gift; the interest from time to time of so much of the fund as is not required for the portions will go to the residuary legatees. I must, therefore, reverse the decision of the learned Vice-Chancellor, and make the declaration I have.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

MARTIN v. PYCROFT.

July 17, Nov. 15, 16, 25.

Specific performance—Statute of Frauds.

A. filed a claim for specific performance of a contract by B. C. and D. The claim stated that B. C. and D. had, by agreement in writing, contracted to demise a public-house to A. for a particular term, and at a certain rent. A. at the same time agreed, by parol, to pay B. C. and D. a premium of 200*l. A. by his claim, asked for a lease, offering thereby to pay the premium according to the parol agreement:*

Held, overruling the decision of the Court below, that the Statute of Frauds was no objection to specific performance being decreed.

An objection to specific performance of the agreement was also raised, on the ground of there having been fraud and misrepresentation used on the part of the plaintiff to obtain the agreement, but upon the cause standing over for the oral examination of witnesses, the allegation of fraud and misrepresentation being disproved, specific performance was decreed.

By a lease dated in November 1831, Miss Elizabeth Pycroft, in consideration of a premium of 200*l.* demised to Mr. Charles Calvert, a London brewer, two messuages adjoining to each other, situate in Chichester-rents, Chancery-lane, for the term of twenty-one years from Michaelmas 1831, if Miss Pycroft and one William West, or either of them, should so long live, at the yearly rent of 70*l.* and under certain covenants on the lessee's part; one of which was the laying out and expending within one year from November 1831, in well and substantially repairing the demised premises, and making alterations and improvements therein, the full sum of 200*l.* under and subject to the inspection, approval, and value of a surveyor to be appointed by the lessor, her heirs or assigns. The lease contained, besides, a covenant of the ordinary kind, on the lessee's part, to repair and keep in repair. The demised property, or the chief part of it, was then and has ever since been used as an ale-house or a public-house.

Mr. Calvert, in April 1832, by a deed of that date, in consideration of a premium of 200*l.* demised the whole of the property to the plaintiff, Mr. William Martin, for the term of twenty-one years, wanting two days, from Michaelmas, 1831, if Miss Pycroft and William West, or either of them, should so long live, at the yearly rent of 70*l.* and under certain covenants on the lessee's part, including covenants between the plaintiff and Mr. Calvert, substantially, though not precisely, agreeing with those between Mr. Calvert and Miss Pycroft, contained in the lease of 1831.

The plaintiff, ever since the lease of 1832, and still is, the occupying tenant of the demised property under that lease. The cause was argued, and the case treated on the basis of both leases being still on foot, and were so considered by the Court. The estate and interest of Miss Pycroft became vested, at some time previously to August 1849, in three persons, called Joseph Pycroft, James Pycroft, and John Winter Pycroft, of whom the first and the last were defendants. James Pycroft being dead, his interest was represented by the defendant, Mr. Holmes.

An agreement dated the 1st of August, 1849, and signed by Messrs. James Pycroft, J. W. Pycroft, and Joseph Pycroft, was in the following terms:—"The said James Pycroft, J. W. Pycroft, and Joseph Pycroft, severally agree with the said William Martin, at any time hereafter, at his request, costs, and charges, by a good and sufficient deed, to demise and lease the messuage or tenement known by the name of 'The Ship Ale-house,' together with the messuage or tenement adjoining thereto, formerly used as a coffee-house, both situated in Chichester-rents aforesaid, with the appurtenances thereto belonging (as the same are now in the occupation of the said William Martin, for the term of twenty-one years wanting two days), from the expiration of the said lease under which the said William Martin holds the same, viz. from the 27th of September, 1852, at the yearly rent of 70*l.* payable quarterly, and under and subject to such and the same covenants, clauses, and agreements as are contained in the lease under which the said William Martin now holds the said premises."

Mr. Martin filed a claim for a specific performance of the agreement, which, after stating the lease from Miss Pycroft to Calvert, the lease from Calvert to Martin, and the agreement, contained the following statement:—"That it was agreed between the parties that 200*l.* should be paid by W. Martin as a premium, in consideration of the lease." The claim asked, that on payment of 200*l.* by Martin, by way of premium, which payment he was ready and willing and offered to make, a lease might be granted to him according to the terms of the agreement. On the claim coming on to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Parker, his honour dismissed the claim upon the ground that a material part of the agreement, viz. to pay 200*l.* premium, had been omitted from the written agreement, and that he could not, without acting in contravention to the Statute of Frauds, decree specific performance.

From this decision the plaintiff now appealed. In addition to the objection arising out of the Statute of Frauds, the defendant also insisted that the agreement had been unfairly obtained.

Daniel, in reply.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—The present suit is for the specific performance of this contract or contracts, to which ex facie there seems no objection, nor has any objection, but the two I am about to state, been suggested,—one being, that the plaintiff obtained the agreement unfairly, the other that the writing does not, as the defendants allege, contain all the terms to which verbally the parties to it have agreed,—a point arising or suggested in this way. The defendants contend, and the plaintiff admits, that the true and real bargain between him and the three Pycrofts was for a lease to be granted in consideration of a premium of 200*l.* which should contain, among its convenants, a covenant on the lessee's part to lay out 200*l.* besides, in a manner analogous to the covenant for laying out 200*l.* in the lease of 1832. But the defendants say, that the written agreement does not provide for these terms, a point which the plaintiff says is immaterial, because he is willing, and submits that the written agreement may be construed and shall be performed according to the true and real bargain. Now the first question that here arises seems to be whether there is a case of latent ambiguity? For patent ambiguity there is not, since the agreement on the face of it is a contract intelligible, clear, and complete in all its terms. We think that there is no latent ambiguity, for the evidence before the Court does not, in our judgment, render it impossible to construe the writing satisfactorily. The true interpretation of the writing we conceive to be that the premium is excluded, but that the covenant to lay out the 200*l.* is included. Then comes, however, the question of the true and real bargain, independent of the point which the defendants make of the mere construction of the writing, and we conceive that had the plaintiff brought an action against the three Pycrofts upon the written agreement, and they had defended themselves at law on the ground merely of the fact now in evidence, with or without the aid of any statute or statutes, the plaintiff must have recovered, at least if his case ought to be considered free from fraud. The law prohibits generally, if not universally, the introduction of parol evidence to add to a written agreement, whether respecting or not respecting land, or to vary it. How can a man say that a written contract shall be deemed bad at law for omitting a term verbally agreed upon? We exclude cases of fraud. It is said that the three Pycrofts, if plaintiffs, could not have compelled the actual plaintiff, as a defendant, to pay the premium of 200*l.* If it is so, this, we apprehend, does by no means dispose of the controversy. It happens very frequently that plaintiffs obtain decrees for specific performance of agreements, the specific performance of which could not have been compelled against them as defendants. Here the actual plaintiff, objecting to be subjected to either sum of 200*l.* would probably have barred himself from relief in equity. But he does not so object, he has never so objected; and our opinion is, that where persons sign a written agreement upon a subject, obnoxious or not obnoxious to the statute which has been so particularly referred to, and there has been no circumvention, no fraud, nor (in the sense in which the term mistake must be considered as used for this purpose) mistake, the written agreement binds at law and in equity, according to its terms, although verbally a provision was agreed to which has not been inserted in the document, subject to this, that either of the parties sued in Equity upon it may probably be entitled in general to ask the Court to be neutral, unless the plaintiff will consent to the performance of the omitted term. The present case appears to us to come under this rule; so that, in our judgment, the only substantial dispute turns on the defendant's allegation that the agreement was obtained unfairly or under circumstances that a Court of Equity must deem unfair. On this point the case of Joseph Pycroft fails completely, and in a manner not by any means creditable to him, an opinion that we should probably have held even if the receipt of February 1851 had not existed. He can only defend himself, if at all, under such case, if any, as the other defendants, or one of them, ought to be considered as having; and with regard to this part of the controversy we are not satisfied the plaintiff is right. Supposing it to stand merely on the present evidence, we consider the balance of testimony, having regard not merely to all that the plaintiff deposes, but to what he might, if his case is unassailable, have deposed, to be in favour of the proposition, that on the occasion of the agreement being signed by James Pycroft and John Winter Pycroft, but before either of them signed it, the plaintiff made a material representation to one or both as to the approval of the substance of the bargain of Mr. Bischoff, and his participation in the matter, that went beyond—materially beyond—an exact and correct representation on that subject, and that by this James Pycroft and John Winter Pycroft might have been, and were affected and influenced in their conduct. Assuming the true state of things to have been so, we conceive the claim must be dismissed, though, under all the circumstances, as we do not impute dishonest intention to the plaintiff, without costs, if dismissed now. If, however, he shall desire an inquiry, under which the persons who have made affidavits may be orally examined before the Master, or in Michaelmas Term, before ourselves, he may have it, and the inquiry in this event must substantially be, whether the signatures or signature of James Pycroft and John Winter Pycroft, or either of them, to the agreement, were or was obtained by means of any and what untrue representation made by the plaintiff, and also under what circumstances the agreement was signed by James Pycroft and John Winter Pycroft respectively. The possession must, pending the investigation, not be disturbed by the defendants, the plaintiff undertaking to abide by and perform any order respecting that possession respecting rent, and otherwise respecting the property which the Court may make. Of course all the deponents will be expressly made orally examinable generally, and the Master will be enabled to state any circumstances specially; but liberty may be taken to apply to prosecute the inquiry before us at a time when we shall clearly, by law, be enabled to take it, and the costs will be reserved.

Nov. 15, 16, and 25.—The plaintiff having elected to have the witnesses orally examined before the Court, the examination took place during Michaelmas Term, and specific performance of the agreement, as asked for by the claim, was decreed.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. Macaulay, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Friday, Nov. 19.

Ex parte Mathews.

Practice—Change of name of attorney—Alteration of the Rolls of the Court.

Bevan moved on behalf of Mr. Mathews, a solicitor of the court, who had taken the name of Chamberlain, to have his name altered on the Rolls, and in support of the application he cited Ex parte Moses, 19 L. J., N. S. 345, Q.B.; and Re Dearden, 20 L. J., N. S. 80, Ex.

The Master of the Rolls granted the motion.

Everett v. Belding.

Practice—Receiver—Occupation rent—Owner of estate—Reference to Master—Attornment.

The owner of an estate subject to charges was made a defendant to the suit in respect thereof, was compelled to attorn to a receiver appointed in the cause, and a reference was directed to the Master to fix an occupation rent.

In this case the suit was instituted in reference to an estate, subject to certain charges, of which the defendant was owner, and now in possession. A receiver had been appointed in the cause, and all the tenants on the estate had attorned; but the owner, himself the occupant of part, refused to attorn or deliver up possession to the receiver.

Morris now moved that the owner, upon whom notice had been served, should deliver up possession, and that it might be referred to the Master to fix an occupation rent. He cited Griffith v. Griffith, 2 Ves. 400, in support of the first point.

The defendant was served with notice of the motion, but did not appear.

The Master of the Rolls said he would make the order that the defendant do attorn, and would refer it to the Master to fix an occupation rent.

Evidence—Examination of defendant vivâ voce—New practice—Stats. 15 & 16 Vict. cc. 80, 86.

The Court has no power under the stats. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, to order the examination of a defendant vivâ voce in a suit already at issue.

Lloyd and H. Clarke in this case applied to the Court, on behalf of the plaintiff, to examine a defendant vivâ voce before the Master. The cause was at issue before the stats. 15 and 16 Vict. c. 80, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, came into operation, and a decree had been made directing a reference to the Master to examine the defendant on interrogatories. But notwithstanding this reference, it was contended, on the other side, that the stat. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 39 and 40, the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, ss. 7, 29, 30, and 36, gave the Court no power to direct an examination vivâ voce. Cahill v. Cooper, 16 Jur. 969, was cited.

Follett and Kinglake, for the defendant, insisted that the cause being at issue, the Acts did not apply to the case, and to grant this application would be to vary a decree upon motion.

The Master of the Rolls having consulted with the other judges, intimated that he was of opinion that the powers conferred by the Act to examine parties vivâ voce did not apply to cases where the cause was in the Master's office before the Acts came into operation, and that, therefore, he could not make the order asked.

Re Martin's Estate.

Practice—Certificate of conveyancing counsel under the new Acts—Investment of purchase-money under Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.

On an application to the Court to direct inquiries as to the title of lands in which it was proposed to invest purchase-money of other lands under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, the Court merely approves of the purchase; and allows the rest of the petition to stand over to obtain a certificate of one of the conveyancing counsel appointed under the new Acts as to the title and an affidavit of the verification of title.

The Court makes no order as to the particular conveyancer to whom the title shall be referred.

The petition in this case was presented under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act for a re-investment of a sum of money which had been paid into Court by the trustees of Greenwich Hospital. The petition was presented by the tenant for life of the property taken by the Hospital under their acts, and of course was entitled to the interest of the purchase-money, and a contract having been made for the purchase of certain freehold houses on which to re-invest it. The petition prayed that proper inquiries might be made as to the title of the estate proposed to be purchased, and that upon the certificate of one of the conveyancing counsel to whom the reference should be made the purchase-money should be paid to the vendor, and the estate conveyed upon the trusts of the settlement of the lands taken by the Hospital.

Hobhouse for the petitioner.

R. Pryor for the trustees of the Hospital.

The Master of the Rolls.—The only order I can make now is to approve of the estate proposed to be purchased and settled so far as regards its value and the propriety of the purchase and investment; but the rest of the petition must stand over till the petitioner can obtain a certificate from one of the conveyancing counsel as to the title, and an affidavit of the verification of the title must also be produced. The Court can make no order as to the particular conveyancer to whom the title should be referred; but perhaps it might be such of them as had less business than others if despatch were required.

Hughes v. Wells.

Defective execution of power—Separate use—Husband and wife—Escheat.

Money due on mortgage and in the funds, the property of a lady, was settled on her marriage for such purposes as she should, with her husband's consent, and during their joint lives, by deed attested by two witnesses, appoint, and after her death as she should by will appoint, and subject thereto to her for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with certain trusts over. Very soon after the marriage, the husband, by his will, gave all his real and personal estate to his wife, and appointed her sole executrix. The trustees never acted, and the funds were never transferred to them, but remained in the lady's name. She executed powers of attorney attested, in the common form, by two witnesses, under which part of the funds were sold out, and the produce paid to the husband's bankers to his account. The mortgage money was paid in the same manner. There was thus about 8,000*l. placed in the name of the husband. All cheques for the expenses of the establishment were drawn, at the written request of the wife, by the husband on her London bankers, out of moneys standing to her separate account. The husband permitted a legacy of* 20,000*l. given to his wife to be paid to her separate account at his bankers. Eleven years after the marriage, the husband, at his wife's request, bought an estate of the tenure of ancient demesne, and the same was conveyed to him to the ordinary uses to bar dower. The husband died without leaving an heir-at-law, and the lord of the fee claimed the estate by escheat. The surviving trustee of the settlement filed a bill against the parties, claiming, under the lord, to establish a lien on the estate for the amount of the purchase money:*

Held, that the power was not well exercised by the wife by means of the powers of attorney, nor was there any such defective execution of the power which a Court of Equity could aid, so far as related to the money invested in the purchase of the estate; but that, so far as related to the money expended by the husband in keeping up the establishment, there was a defective appointment, which the Court could aid: and it was also Held, that the estate was subject to the lien of the trustee, to the extent of the purchase money in the hands of the lord of the fee claiming by escheat.

In April 1815, in contemplation of a marriage then intended, and soon afterwards solemnised between Admiral Sir John Wells and Miss Dealtry, all her real estate was settled on herself, him, and the issue. At the same time, a settlement of her personal estate, 25,000*l.* in stock and money on mortgage, &c. &c. was assigned to three trustees, upon trust for such persons, for such estates as Lady Wells (then Miss Dealtry) should, by and with Sir John Wells's approbation, notwithstanding her coverture, during the joint lives of herself and her husband, and after his decease, as she should by any deed or deeds, writing or writings, to be sealed and delivered by her in the presence of, and attested by two or more credible witnesses, direct, limit, or appoint, and subject to such appointment upon trust for the separate use of Lady Wells for life, without power of anticipation; and after her decease, upon trust for such persons as she should appoint by will; and, in default of appointment, for her next of kin, exclusively of her husband. The deed contained powers of alteration and variation of securities, but no power to lay out the trust moneys on land. The marriage took place, but there never was any issue. The funds never were transferred into the names of the trustees, and these individuals never acted. Before the marriage Lady Wells had a separate banking account with Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths; and after the marriage the same was kept open in her new name. The rents and profits of her real property, and the interest and dividends of her personal estate, were paid into their account. Sir John Wells's only income or property was his half-pay, and during the marriage he did not make any savings. The husband and wife lived at Cuckfield, in Sussex, where they opened an account in the name of Sir John with Messrs. Harley and Co. at Lewes, and the same was kept open till Sir John's death. In November 1815 Sir John made his will, by which he gave all his property to his wife, and made her sole executrix. In 1817 a legacy of 2,900*l.* Consols was bequeathed to Lady Wells, which Sir John declined to receive, and the sum was, with his sanction, transferred into her name, and the dividends were received by Messrs. Smith, Payne, and Smiths, under a power of attorney, and carried to her separate account in their books. Lady Wells gave a written authority to them to honour Sir John's cheques out of her account, and from the date of that authority, October 1815, all the money paid to the bank of Harley and Co. was so paid by cheques drawn by Sir John on Smith, Payne, and Smiths, and all the expenses of the establishment were paid by cheques drawn by him on Harley and Co. paid out of the money so paid in. In January 1820, 500*l.* Consols, part of the 2,000*l.* legacy, was sold out, and the money was placed to her separate account with the London bankers. Soon afterwards the greater part of it was drawn out by Sir John, and lent by him, and subsequently the money was repaid to him. In January 1821 another 500*l.* Consols was sold out, and the produce was applied to the general purposes of Sir John and Lady Wells. In July 1821, a large portion of the personalty included in the settlement of 19th April, 1815, was transferred into the name of Sir John, and by this means and subsequent purchases there was, in the year 1824, standing in the name of Sir John, a sum of 7,436*l.* 19s. 7d. Consols, and 1,050*l.* Four per Cent. Bank Annuities. The dividends on these sums were always carried to the before-mentioned separate account of Lady Wells with Smith, Payne, and Smiths. In October 1825 Sir John Wells, with the concurrence of Lady Wells, contracted for the purchase of the Bolmore estate, for the sum of 5,500*l.* which purchase was ultimately completed, the deposit and whole consideration money being clearly traced to have proceeded from Lady Wells's separate estate; but the conveyance (dated 17th and 18th March, 1826) was to Sir John Wells, to the usual uses to bar dower; and the Bolmore estate, being subject to a lease, Sir John, with the concurrence of Lady Wells, bought up the tenant's interest for 1,000*l.* and his stock, &c. at 826*l.* more, and entered and commenced a series of extensive improvements on the mansion house and premises. All this expenditure was clearly proved, by means of the cheques and the bankers' books, to have been defrayed out of the principal moneys comprised in the settlement of 19th April, 1815, and other moneys derived from a sale of the real property, included in the settlement of realty of the same date.

The bill was filed by the Rev. C. W. Hughes, the surviving trustee of the settlement, against Lady Wells and the persons claiming under the lord of the fee by escheat, to establish a lien on the Bolmore estate for the amount laid out in its purchase and improvements, and for the recovery of such other part of the trust estate as had come to the hands of Sir John Wells. In January 1811 an order was made directing inquiries. Lady Wells died in April following, having by will given all her property, both real and personal, to her sister, Elizabeth Dealtry, whom she appointed sole executrix. Elizabeth Dealtry died in July following, never having proved her sister's will, but having appointed Mr. Beard, who was made a party to the suit, her executor, and who also took out letters of administration with the will annexed of Lady Wells.

Thursday, April 29.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR.—In this case the original bill was filed in the lifetime of Lady Wells against her and the parties interested by escheat. Lady Wells died, and by her will (which was so executed and attested as to be a good execution of the power in the settlement of the 19th April, 1815), reciting the settlement and the power, and expressly in exercise and execution of that power, she gave, devised, bequeathed, directed, and appointed that all her estate, legal or equitable, in the premises at Bolmore, and all right, claim, &c. either at law or in equity in or upon the same, and all the furniture, plate, books, &c. and all the stocks, funds, and personal estate belonging to her at the time of her marriage, and comprised in the said settlement, and all securities in or upon the same, or any part thereof, might be invested at the time of her decease, should go, remain, and be to and to and for the use and behoof of her sister, Elizabeth Dealtry, her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever; and she also gave to her sister, Elizabeth Dealtry, all the residue of her personal estate not comprised in the said indenture of settlement of the 19th of April, 1815. She therefore, by her will, dealt with the power as if the trust funds had never been sold out, and as if they were still standing in the names of the trustees of that settlement. Lady Wells left her sister Elizabeth her heiress-at law; and her sister's interests are all represented by the defendant Beard. The plaintiff's case is supported by Beard, and opposed by the other defendants. The first objection which was taken was to the right to maintain the suit at all. It was urged that the trustees of the original settlement of the 19th of April, 1815, never acted, and that it was not competent for them, or rather for the personal representative of the survivor of them, now to sue. But the object of the bill is to recover certain trust funds which were comprised in the settlement, to recover them as against the estate of Sir John Wells, and therefore, to justify this ground of opposition, independent of the rights acquired by those claiming under the settlement against Sir Jonn and his estate, the defendant must shew that the trusts of the settlement are determined; for, if they are not determined, then this plaintiff not merely is entitled, but is bound to sue. I am of opinion that the trusts are not at an end; and it is therefore necessary to go into the case on its merits. Three points of defence were raised in the argument to defeat the claim of the trustees to come upon the estate of Sir John. First, whether Lady Wells ever made a perfect appointment of any part of the trust fund in favour of Sir John. Secondly, whether she had power to make, and did make, any effectual disposition or appointment, not being a perfect appointment in favour of Sir John. And thirdly, whether any portion of the funds not well appointed or disposed of can be recovered from the lord of the fee. On the first point it was contended by the defendants that the power of appointment was perfectly executed by the powers of attorney for the transfer of stock, and the transfers made on them, and the assignment and release of the mortgage debt due to Lady Wells. But I am of opinion that that was no perfect execution of the power. Two things are evidently necessary for the perfect execution of a power, the observance of due formalities, and the presence of an intention to exercise the power by the particular Act. This appears from the very nature of powers; unless in pursuance of the authority, the Act is no execution of the authority, and it cannot be in execution of the authority unless it be the intention of the donee of the power that it should be so. As in the case of a conveyance by a person having a power coupled with an interest, if there be no intention to exercise the power, then the deed will take effect out of the interest, but if there be an intention, and it cannot take effect out of the interest, then it will take effect under the power. Now if we look at the acts done, and alleged to be an exercise of the power, we find that the powers of attorney are under the hand and seal of Lady Wells, and with the concurrence of Sir John. But these merely amount to authorisations to the bankers to assign and transfer certain sums of stock into the name of Sir John Wells: they are "authorities," not "directions," to do what she could have done, if present, without their intervention. But it is from directions and not from a mere authority that the intention to exercise the power must flow, and therefore the formalities must apply to the instrument containing the direction, and I therefore think that for anything contained in these powers of attorney the power of appointment still subsists. The transfers do not alter the nature of the instruments. In fact, to treat these powers of attorney as executions of the power in the settlement, would be to turn instruments of substitution into instruments of alienation. The case as to the mortgage is not different. It was a mere receipt for the mortgage money upon a transfer by Sir John and Lady Wells of the security. It had no operation as between them. There is an absence of all direct evidence of intention as to whether these instruments should operate as executions of the power. We must gather the intention, if possible, from the acts and circumstances of the parties. It is said that they were living fully up to or beyond their income, and that by an exercise of this power only could they be extricated from difficulty. But, on that supposition, it is most strange that there is no formal execution of the power. The bulk of the property was transferred into the name of Sir John in 1821, and it is not alleged that there was at that time any intention to deal with it, and in fact it was not dealt with until 1825. The income of all the settled property, on the other hand, was all carried to Sir John; and then we have his declarations and statements as to its continuing his wife's separate estate, notwithstanding the management and control being placed in his hands. These were transactions between husband and wife; and in such transactions, where it is intended to set up a gift from the wife to the husband, the evidence should be clear and unmistakeable. In the present case I cannot persuade myself that these instruments either were or were intended to be an exercise of the powers in the settlement. It was next contended that the wife had power to make and did make a gift to Sir John by some other means than a perfect exercise of her power of appointment in his favour, and that was rested on two grounds; first, because, having a life estate coupled with an absolute power of appointment, and the limitation being to her absolutely in default of any exercise of that power, this was equivalent to an absolute estate, and she was therefore capable of giving, and did give, the fund to Sir John; and secondly, it was argued that there was, at all events, such a defective exercise of the power of appointment as would be aided by a Court of Equity. The defendants argued that Lady Wells had, during the joint lives of herself and husband, a power of appointment not restrained by any formalities. But on reading the words of the clause containing the power to throw out the words, "by any deed or writing signed by her, &c." from all application to the power given her during the joint lives of herself and her husband, would be a most forced construction of the settlement. The main object of marriage settlements in general, and it might be said of this settlement in particular, is to throw the protection of formalities around the wife's interest during the coverture. But this construction would leave the wife's interest exposed to alienation by even a parol appointment during the coverture, while, immediately the coverture was at an end, Lady Wells would not be able to appoint, except by a writing under hand and seal, and attested by two witnesses, imposing cumbersome formalities, precisely when they ceased to be necessary, and omitting those formalities when they would be a useful security to the wife. Besides, a construction would be very unreasonable which required the consent of Sir John, under his hand and seal, to a parol appointment of his wife. These formalities, then, in my opinion, attaching as well to an exercise of the power in the lifetime of her husband as after his decease, is it the case that her life estate, coupled with such a power, amounts to an absolute interest, and that she had power to give, and did give, the fund to Sir John? Barford v. Street, 16 Ves. 135, and the expressions of Sir Wm. Grant, there were quoted by the defendants to shew that this was so. But in that case the power had been exercised; and the only question was, whether the instrument creating the power warranted the instrument by which it was executed; and Sir Wm. Grant's observations were in answer to the argument that the directions in the codicil in that case were inconsistent with the notion of absolute property in the donee of the power. Then Irwin v. Farrer, Holloway v. Clarkson, 2 Ha. 523, and the observations of Sir John Leach in Keith v. Seymour, were cited. But in these cases no formalities whatever were required for the exercise of the power; and they do not decide that a life estate, coupled with a power, is the same thing with an absolute estate; but only that where no formality is required for the execution of the power, any act is sufficient which shews the intention; as in Irwin v. Farrer, where the mere filing of the bill by the legatee to have the fund transferred into her own name, was held a sufficient appointment in her own favour. But some act sufficiently indicative of the intention must be done. I think, therefore, that Lady Wells could not convey this fund, except by a perfect appointment under the power. Is there, however, such a defective appointment as this Court will aid? This point was almost entirely argued upon the ground of a defective execution in favour of Sir John Wells. But the husband is not one of the favoured objects in whose behalf a Court of Equity will interfere. Moodie v. Reid decided the contrary. But it was said that Sir John must be treated as a purchaser, and this was put on the consideration of the expensive establishment which he maintained, and his abstaining from appropriating the legacy of 2,000*l.* But I apprehend that in order to establish the character of purchaser, in whose favour a defective execution will be assisted in equity, two things must be clearly shewn—either proved or to be presumed—the consideration and the intention. Expenditure, however lavish, of a wife's property by her husband, does not, I think, constitute any consideration to the wife for a purchase for the benefit of the husband with her money; and though the giving up of a legacy which was given to the wife might, under some circumstances, constitute a consideration moving from the husband, yet it could not prove any intention to purchase; nor could it lead to the presumption of any such intention, under the circumstances of the present case; and even if it could do so under any circumstances, yet in the present case, the express finding of the Master, that it was not so treated by the parties, negatives the existence of any such intention. On this ground alone, then, of a defective execution in favour of Sir John Wells, it would be difficult to maintain that Sir John took an absolute estate in the lands for his own benefit. But, independently of any appointment in favour of Sir John, I think that there is in some degree a case of a defective appointment, which a Court of Equity should aid. It cannot, I think, be said that there was any defective appointment by Lady Wells in her own favour, which the Court could aid. The powers of attorney, transfers, and assignments executed by her were not and could not be defective appointments of this description,—there was not the remotest intention on her part that they should be so. The proceeds of the funds so transferred and assigned were carried to the separate account of Lady Wells, and it was therefore to be inferred that they were considered to be affected by some trust for her separate use. But no such trust existed except the trust created by the settlement; and it cannot, therefore, be presumed that there was an intention to execute the power, and thus take the funds wholly out of the trust. And again, it is difficult to say that in the case of the exercise of the power by Lady Wells, in her own favour, there could be any such consideration as could call into action the power of this Court to aid a defective execution, there being no consideration moving to her from any other person. I think, therefore, that the proceeds of these funds, after they were placed to Lady Wells's account with Smith, Payne, and Smiths, must be considered to have remained subject to the trusts of the settlement; but these proceeds, after they had been placed to Lady Wells's account, were, in so far as they were not disposed of in the purchase of the Bolmore estate, and of the lease of that estate, and in improvements upon it, applied to other purposes; and, upon the facts found in this report, must, I think, be taken to have been applied to those purposes, and principally for the current purposes of the establishment, by the order and direction of Lady Wells, Sir John Wells being her agent in the application of them. And taking this to have been the case, I think that, as to the moneys so applied, it must be considered that there was a defective appointment, which ought to be aided by this Court. Lady Wells had the absolute power over the funds. She could not be justified in applying them to such purposes otherwise than by an exercise of her power; and she received a consideration for so applying them. For although the maintenance of the establishment by a husband would be no consideration for a purchase by him from his wife, it cannot, I think, be said, that if a wife thinks proper to keep up an expensive establishment against the wishes of her husband, by means of her separate estate, what was supplied for the establishment would be no consideration to her for payments to be made out of her estate on that account. If the trust funds had been transferred to the trustees, and Lady Wells had directed the trustees to apply them in payment of her debts, and they had been so applied, such an application of them must, I think, have been supported in equity in favour of the persons to whom the payments were made, and of the trustees, if attempted to be charged in respect of these payments; and the funds having remained in her name, subject to the trusts, the same rule must, I think, be considered to apply to them as would have applied to them if they had been transferred. The case of Routledge v. Derrill, 2 Ves. jun. 357, supports this view. In that case, some of the funds subject to the power were, by the direction of the donee, not, as it would appear accompanied by the prescribed formalities, transferred to an object of the power, and no doubt seems to have been entertained that the power was well exercised as to the funds so transferred. I am of opinion, therefore, that as to so much of the trust funds as were applied otherwise than in the purchase of the Bolmore estate, and of the lease of that estate, and of the improvements upon it, it must be held that they were well appointed and disposed of in equity, and that the plaintiff can maintain no claim in respect of them; but as to the moneys laid out in the purchases and improvements, I think the case is different. These moneys were derived from the trust; they must continue subject to it unless they were well alienated from it; they could not be so alienated otherwise than by an exercise of the power. There was no perfect execution of it, and as to these moneys, no consideration to aid a defective execution of it; and if there was a power to give them to Sir J. Wells, there was no gift of them to him. I think, therefore, that they must be held to have remained subject to the trusts of the settlement; and that the plaintiff must be held to have the right to recover them if they are at all recoverable, which depends upon the third point,—the right against the lords of the fee. Before, however, adverting to this point, it may be right that I should observe upon another most important question which was discussed in the argument of this case, viz. to what extent, if at all, the estate of Lady Wells could be affected by her acts and conduct. It was argued on the part of the defendants, that where a married woman, with a power of appointment over trust funds, has permitted those funds to be received by her husband, neither she nor her appointee could afterwards recal them; and, on the other hand, it was insisted on the part of the plaintiff that the right of the wife's appointee could be defeated only by a previous exercise of the power, modo et formâ, prescribed by the instrument creating it. I am not prepared to adopt either of these arguments to the full extent to which it was carried. The argument on the part of the plaintiff, if adopted to the full extent, would, I think, go far to contradict what was said by Lord Hardwicke in Ryder v. Bickerton, 3 Swans. 80 n.; and by Lord Eldon in Lord Montfort v. Lord Cadogan, 2 Mer. 3. Those cases, I think, shew that in the opinion of both those most eminent judges, the rights of married women might be barred, and their estates affected by active participation in breaches of trust; and if so, it would seem to follow that when their powers have been exercised, by which the trust-funds become their assets, they must be liable for those breaches of trust. But, on the other hand, to hold that the fact of a married woman having permitted her husband to receive the trust funds would preclude any right to relief by her or her appointee, would be to defeat the very purpose for which the trust was created, viz. the protection of the wife against the husband. It is not, I think, necessary to decide this question in the present case; but whenever it may become necessary so to do, I am much disposed to think the true rule to be adopted will be found to be this: the provisions of the settlement are for the protection of the wife—full effect must be given to them; and the Court, therefore, before it can hold the estate of the wife to be in any manner affected, must be fully satisfied that the husband has not in any degree influenced the acts or conduct of the wife. If, upon the most jealous investigation, the Court should be satified of this, I see no reason why the wife, having been constituted a feme sole by the terms of the settlement, her assets, including the trust funds which have become her assets by the exercise of her power, should not be bound to the same extent as the assets of any other person, not under the disability of coverture, would, under the same circumstances, be bound. The modern cases as to the liability of the estates of married women for their general engagements seem to me to favour this view, and I think it falls in very much with the opinion of the present Lord Chancellor in Mara v. Manning, 2 Jo. & Lat. 311. It is not opposed to Lord Langdale's opinion in Kellaway v. Johnson, 5 Beav. 319, which is, I think, the nearest case to the present, for in that case the acts done were for the benefit of the husband, and there was no proof of the wife's concurrence, except by a deed executed under his influence; nor is it inconsistent with Sir J. Leache's opinion in Cocker v. Quayle, 1 Russ. & Myl. 535, any further than that upon the grounds which I have suggested it might have been, though it was not argued in that case, that the dividends, when they accrued due, would have been subject to the indemnity of the trustees. But this argument, had it been advanced, might have been met by the answer, that the protection there was not against the husband merely, but against the wife herself; and that the trustees could not claim indemnity against a protection so strictly reserved to the wife,—an argument which cannot be applied to a power of appointment so long as the exercise of the power renders the fund subject to the liabilities of the appointee. I am much disposed to think that, had the trust funds been transferred to the trustees, and afterwards dealt with in the manner appearing by this report, Lady Wells's estate would, under the very peculiar circumstances of this case, have been liable to the trustees; and that upon this ground also, had it been necessary to resort to it, the plaintiff's title to recover for the benefit of her estate could not, to the extent I have mentioned, have been maintained. With respect to the last question, the right against the lords of the fee, I think it unnecessary to say much upon the subject. It is well settled that trust moneys may be followed into land; and whatever difficulty there might have been in following these moneys into land, as against the lords of the fee, is, I think, removed by the Escheat Act; and even if it were otherwise, I think that, Sir John Wells having been debtor to the trust in respect of these moneys, I should upon the authorities have been bound to hold, as in the absence of authority I should myself have decided, that the estate in the hands of the lord is liable for the debt. The decree I shall make will be to declare the lien upon the estate for the amounts which were laid out in the purchase of the Bolmore estate, and the additions and improvements upon it, and also declare the debt due from the estate of Sir J. Wells. Direct the usual accounts: there must be the usual account of the personal estate of Sir J. Wells, and also an order for the sale of the real estate for the payment of debts.

VICE-CHANCELLOR STUART'S COURT.

Reported by Geo. S. Allnutt, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 16 and Dec. 4.

Lord Middleton v. Lord.

Thellusson Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98)—Accumulations—Portions.

A testatrix by her will gave to trustees 50,000*l. upon trust for the maintenance of her son W. (who was a lunatic), and as to the surplus of the interest, to accumulate, and after the death of W. to dispose of the proceeds of the* 50,000*l. and the accumulations, or a competent part thereof, for the maintenance and education of the children of W. during their respective minorities, or until their portions should become payable under the will; and upon their attaining twenty-one, upon trust to call in the* 50,000*l. and all the accumulations, and pay and divide the same among all the children of W.:*

Held, that this was within the exception of the second section of the above Act, and that it was a valid trust for accumulation beyond the twenty-one years from the testatrix's death.

Mrs. Diana Beaumont, the testatrix in this cause, by her will directed that Lord Middleton, and her sons Richard Beaumont and Edward Blackett Beaumont, their executors and administrators, should stand and be possessed of a sum of 50,000*l.* and the interest thereof, for the benefit of her son William Beaumont, upon trusts for investment, with power to vary such investments, and upon further trust to pay, apply, and dispose of a competent part of the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of such investments for the maintenance and support of her said son William, and in providing him a suitable establishment, according to his circumstances and station in life; and also to pay and discharge all the reasonable charges and expenses of the said trustees in superintending and managing the establishment and affairs of her said son William; and upon further trust from time to time to invest and place out the surplus of the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds thereof upon Government or real security, to the intent that the same might accumulate for the benefit of the persons who under her said will should become entitled thereto; and from and after the decease of her said son William, upon further trust to pay, apply, and dispose of the interest, dividends, and annual proceeds of the said sum of 50,000*l.* and the accumulations thereof, or a competent part thereof, in the maintenance, education, and establishment of all and every the child and children of her said son William, lawfully to be begotten, during their respective minorities, or until their portions should become payable under that her will; and when and so soon as the children of her said son William, if a son or sons, should attain the age of twenty-one years, or if a daughter or daughters, should attain the said age or be married, then upon trust to call in and receive the said sum of 50,000*l.* and all interest, dividends, and annual proceeds and accumulations thereof, and to pay and divide the same unto and amongst all and every the child and children of her said son William, lawfully to be begotten, if more than one equally, share and share alike, and if but one, then to such one child, his or her executors or administrators, the share or shares of such of the children of her said son William, being a son or sons, to be paid to him or them on attaining the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters, to be paid to her or them on attaining the like age or marriage, as therein mentioned; but in case of her said son William dying without leaving issue, then the said testatrix directed that the said sum of 50,000*l.* with the accumulations thereof, should sink into the residue of her personal estate thereinafter by her disposed of for the benefit of her son Thomas Wentworth Beaumont. Diana Beaumont, the testatrix, died on the 10th of August, 1831. Thomas Wentworth Beaumont died, having by his will given the residue of his personal estate to his son W. B. Beaumont. Mr. William Beaumont was a lunatic, and the questions now discussed in this suit, which came on for further directions, were as to the accumulations of the interest of the 50,000*l.*, the period of twenty-one years since the testatrix's death having expired. It should be mentioned that the bequest by this will of the 50,000*l.* was a provision in lieu of W. Beaumont's portion under his father and mother's marriage settlement, and his father's will.

Russell and Bates appeared for the plaintiffs, who were the trustees of the will.

Bacon and Nalder for W. Beaumont, the lunatic.

Wigram, Follett, Chandless, Hardy, and Brodrick for the other next of kin of the testatrix.

Malins and J. H. Palmer for W. B. Beaumont.

The following cases were cited: Skrymsher v. Northcote, 1 Swanst. 566; Jones v. Maggs, 9 Hare, 605; Bourne v. Buckton, 2 Sim. Saturday, Dec. 4.—The Vice-Chancellor said that the questions in this case related to the construction of the Thellusson Act, as applicable to the direction in the will of Mrs. Beaumont, for the accumulation of the interest and annual proceeds of a sum of 50,000*l.* during the life of her son William Beaumont. The first question, and in his Honour's view of the case, the only question which it was necessary to consider, for the decision of the Court was, whether the trust for the accumulation was within the exception in the second section of the statute, which exempted from its operation provisions for raising portions. The first trust of the annual proceeds of the 50,000*l.* was for the maintenance and support of her son William; and as to the surplus of the annual proceeds, the trust was to accumulate them, and after the death of William to dispose of the proceeds of the 50,000*l.* and the accumulations, or a competent part thereof, for the maintenance and education of the child and children of her son William, during their respective minorities, or until their portions should become payable under that her will; and as soon as they should attain the age of twenty-one years, or if daughters, attain that age or be married, then upon trust to call in the 50,000*l.* and all the accumulations, and pay and divide the same among all the children of William, in the manner particularly directed in the will. When the testatrix spoke of the portions payable under her will to the children of William, and used the word "portion," it must refer to the gift to them of the 50,000*l.* and the accumulations. The words of the second clause in the statute, which were applicable to this case, were those which mentioned "any provision for raising portions for any child or children of any person taking any interest under such conveyance, settlement, or devise." The children provided for by Mrs. Beaumont out of these accumulations were the children of her son William, who took an interest under her will. This provision, to which the accumulations were dedicated by their grandmother, she described as their "portions," and, so far as appeared, was the only provision made for them. Therefore, if the question came to be considered without reference to decided cases upon the construction of this clause in the Act, there would seem little difficulty in holding that this was the case of a trust for accumulation on a provision for raising portions for the children of a person taking under the will which directed the accumulation; that it was within the exception in the second section, and therefore not to be restricted to the statutory period of twenty-one years from the death of the testatrix. But there were decisions recorded by judges of learning and experience which afforded countenance to the arguments urged in this case in support of the proposition, that the trust for accumulation in this will was not within the exception as to provisions for portions, and that for the excess beyond the period of twenty-one years the trust for accumulations was invalid. The decision of Lord Langdale, in Eyre v. Marsden, 2 Keen, 564; of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, in Morgan v. Morgan, 20 L.J. 109; of the Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, in Bourne v. Buckton, 2 Simons, N.S. 91; of the Vice-Chancellor Turner, in Jones v. Maggs, 9 Hare, 605, had all been quoted and relied on in the argument of the present case, to support the construction that the accumulation directed by Mrs. Beaumont's will of the 50,000*l.* was not within the exception made by the second section of the Act as to portions. And no doubt they were all authorities in support of that construction, for they had all proceeded on the principle of narrowing, on various grounds, the construction of the words in the second section as to portions. The current of decisions on these questions had set so strongly in favour of a confined and narrow construction, that in the latest case on the subject (Barrington v. Liddell, 16 Jur. 984) the Vice-Chancellor Turner, yielding to its force and pressing it to the utmost possible degree of narrowness, held, that in the meaning of the word "interest," which the parent of the portioned child must take to come within the exception in the second section, must be an interest in the same property which was directed to be accumulated. Of the cases quoted at the Bar, the decision of the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce in Beech v. Lord St. Vincent, 19 L.J. 130, alone proceeded on what seemed to his Honour a just view of the construction to be put on the exception as to portions. On the best opinion which his Honour was enabled to form, it seemed to him, after hearing the arguments and authorities in the present case, that the trust for accumulation was a valid trust to the full extent directed by Mrs. Beaumont's will, and that, notwithstanding the current of authorities in favour of the narrow principle of construction, the case was within the exception as to portions. This opinion his Honour expressed, but at the same time with a feeling of diffidence, considering the weight of authority on the other side. But as it was stated to him that the decision of Sir George Turner had within the last few days been argued on appeal before the Lord Chancellor, and his lordship's judgment was expected to be delivered in a few days, his Honour postponed the judgment in the present case that he might be guided by the Lord Chancellor's opinion. Having now had an opportunity of reading the note of his lordship's judgment, it was a great relief and satisfaction to him to find—and he was sure it would be a satisfaction to every sound and enlightened lawyer to find, that—upon a masterly review of these authorities, which so unfortunately confined, narrowed, and embarrassed the construction of the exception as to portions, the Lord Chancellor, if he had not restored, had at least established a just principle of construction, and had held the trust for accumulation in that case of Lord Barrington v. Liddell to be valid, and within the second section of the Thellusson Act. The trust in that case for the accumulation of 15,000*l.* was not created by a parent, and was not directly to raise portions, but was to accumulate a fund to relieve the family estates from portions provided by the marriage settlement of the great nephew of the testator. In the present case, where the provision was by an accumulation directed by a parent for the benefit of a son, and expressly as portions for his children, the son taking an interest in the same fund, and the whole being a provision in lieu of the son's portion under the marriage settlement and the father's will, his Honour was bound by the principle of the decision in Lord Barrington v. Liddell, independently of his own clear opinion, to hold that the trust for accumulation was valid, and was not restrained by the statute to the period of twenty-one years. The decree must, therefore, contain a declaration to that effect.

Friday, Dec. 3.

STANHOUSE v. GASKELL.

Will—Construction—Tenancy in tail.

A testator devised real estate to trustees upon trust for the maintenance of his two daughters, A. and B. until they attained twenty-one, "and then to have the estate equally betwixt them for their lives:" but in case A. and B. should die without leaving lawful issue, the testator gave the same to C. and D. A. died an infant, and unmarried. B. on her marriage, executed a settlement by lease and release, conveying the lands to trustees, &c. but no disentailing assurance was executed. E. the eldest son of B. after her death, executed a disentailing assurance, and, with his father, contracted to sell the estate:

Held, that B. could show a good title.

Matthew Gaskell, by his will, dated the 13th of September, 1817, devised his real estate in Burton's-wood to trustees upon trust for his widow during her life or widowhood, and after her decease or second marriage upon trust for the maintenance and support of his daughters, Margaret Gaskell and Catherine Gaskell, until they attained the age of twenty-one years, "and then to have the estate equally betwixt them during their lives," to their separate use; "and in case both his said daughters should die without leaving lawful issue," the testator gave his said real estate to his two brothers (both of whom died prior to 1824), equally between them, their executors, administrators, and assigns. The testator died in January 1818, leaving his widow and two daughters him surviving. Margaret Gaskell died an infant and unmarried, leaving her mother and sister her surviving. On the 4th of July, 1827, a settlement of the lands in question was executed, in contemplation of the marriage of Catherine Gaskell with Thomas Robinson. By that settlement, by lease and release, the lands were, with the approbation of Thomas Robinson, conveyed by Catherine Gaskell to trustees upon trust (subject to her mother's life interest therein) for her own separate use for life, and after her death upon trust to sell the same, and to stand possessed of the purchase-moneys to be produced thereby in trust for all and every the children and child of Catherine Gaskell, as well by the said T. Robinson as by any future husband, in equal shares. By the same deed Thomas Robinson covenanted that he and the said Catherine Gaskell would suffer a common recovery. Catherine, the wife of Thomas Robinson, having survived her mother, died in June 1842, without having suffered a recovery or executed any disentailing assurance. There were four children of the marriage, viz. two sons and two daughters. Thomas Gaskell Robinson, the eldest son of the marriage, attained the age of twenty-one years on the 16th of July, 1849, and in December of that year executed a disentailing assurance, barring the entail and all remainders in the said real estate. In March 1851 T. G. Robinson, by his father, who acted as his authorised agent in that behalf, and with the father's concurrence, contracted to sell the property to Thomas Gaskell. T. G. Robinson and Thomas Robinson afterwards conveyed the estate, subject to the said contract for sale, and assigned the benefit of the said contract, to Alexander Stanhouse. Objections to the title were raised by Thomas Gaskell, and this special case was brought before the Court for the purpose of taking the opinion of the Court upon the following questions: 1st. Whether, under the will of the testator and the events which had happened, and the subsequent dealings with the estate, T. G. Robinson did, upon the death of his mother, become tenant in tail thereof, or whether Catherine Robinson was tenant in fee simple, or what other estate and interest she had therein? 2nd. If the Court should be of opinion that T. G. Robinson did become such tenant in tail, whether the settlement did or did not take effect as a settlement of the estate during the life of the said Thomas Robinson? and 3rd. Whether in respect of the grounds of objection, the plaintiff Stanhouse could or could not make a good and marketable title to the estate in question?

Prior, for the plaintiff, contended that the two daughters of the testator were by implication tenants in common in tail with cross-remainders in tail between them; that the settlement was ineffectual to bar the entail; and that T. G. Robinson became, on the death of his mother, tenant in tail, and that he barred the entail in 1849. He referred to Parr v. Swindells, 4 Russ. 283.

Follett and W. M. James, for the defendant, contended that the daughters took life estates only; that there was no implied gift to their issue; and that in the events which had happened, the reversion in fee descended on Catherine Robinson, and was bound by the trusts of her settlement. If Mrs. Robinson became tenant in tail of the whole property, the husband by the settlement had relinquished his right as tenant by the curtesy in favour of his children; and it would be in the power of the children to set up the settlement against a purchaser.

The Vice-Chancellor, however, considered that the view taken by the vendors was correct, and that a good marketable title had been shewn.

HEXTALL v. CHEATLE.

Practice—Examination vivâ voce before the Master of a party to the cause under a decree made before the passing of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

This was a motion on behalf of the defendant, Ann Cheatle, that she might be at liberty to cross-examine the plaintiff vivâ voce before Master Tinney, to whom the causes stood referred, or that the defendant might be at liberty to cross-examine the plaintiff orally before one of the examiners of the Court in the mode prescribed by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, and the General Orders of the Court, and that if necessary the plaintiff might be ordered to attend before the Master or before one of the examiners for that purpose, or that the defendant might be at liberty to exhibit interrogatories for the cross-examination of the plaintiff before the Master, and that it might be ordered either by altering the decree made in these causes dated the 10th of July, 1851, or in such other manner as the Court should think fit, that the parties to the last-mentioned cause were to be examined upon interrogatories as the Master should direct.

By the decree of the 10th of July, 1851, a reference was directed to the Master to take certain accounts, but no mention was made of the examination of the parties. A state of facts and charges was left in the Master's-office by the plaintiff on the 27th of January, 1852, and another state of facts and charges was left by the defendant on the 5th of March, 1852. At an attendance before the Master on the 10th of July, it was arranged that the plaintiff should be examined before him vivâ voce, and that a short-hand writer should be engaged to take his evidence.

On the 30th of July the plaintiff, whose affidavit had been left with the Master, came to town to be examined, and attended before the Master for that purpose, but the plaintiff's solicitor not having engaged a short-hand writer, and having declined to do so, or to bear any part of the expense, the defendant's solicitor offered to pay the expense of the short-hand writer, if the plaintiff would consent that the costs should be costs in the cause; and this offer having been declined, the cross-examination was not proceeded with, but the Master gave leave to the defendant to exhibit interrogatories for such cross-examination of the plaintiff. The Master, however, now having a doubt whether he could, since the recent statutes, examine upon interrogatories, declined to proceed with such examination, and the present motion was accordingly made.

Wigram and Hitchcock appeared in support of the motion, and referred to 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 28, 30, 35, 40, and 41; and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 39.

Bacon and W. M. James appeared for the plaintiff.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR made an order, giving liberty to cross-examine the plaintiff viva voce before one of the examiners of the Court, and that the plaintiff should attend for that purpose, and also a supplemental order, that the parties to the cause were to be examined on interrogatories as the Master should direct.

LANCASTER v. LANCASTER.

Practice—Affidavits upon shewing cause against dissolving the common injunction.

Bacon and Giffard appeared for the plaintiff in this case to shew cause against dissolving the common injunction to stay proceedings at law. The bill was filed in August last, and it was now proposed to use affidavits filed on behalf of the plaintiff in opposition to the defendant's answer.

Malins and Goodeve, for the defendant, objected to these affidavits being read, as the new practice could not be applicable to the present case.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that his impression was, that if upon what the plaintiff was put to do, and had undertaken to do, he should be of opinion that the injunction could not be sustained, the plaintiff might come at the next seal, and move for a new injunction. His Honour did not consider that the affidavits could be read.

GREGORY v. ATKINSON.

Practice—Administration suits.

In the course of hearing this case, which was a creditor's suit for the administration of a testator's personal estate,

The VICE-CHANCELLOR observed, that it appeared to him to be a matter for consideration whether some alteration in the ordinary administration decree would not be desirable. Now that a simple contract creditor was entitled to payment out of the real estate, it seemed that the Court had not kept pace with the law upon the subject in directing the mere administration of the personal estate, where there might be real estate.

Follett suggested that in such decrees there might be directed an inquiry whether there was any real estate.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR thought some such course would be desirable.

Contributory—Conditional deposit on shares.

Where there is a special undertaking on the part of directors to return deposit, if the contemplated Act of Parliament should not pass; and on the failure of such Act passing, a circular was sent to all the allottees to attend a meeting, at which resolutions were subsequently passed reposing confidence in the directors, and A. attended such meeting by proxy:

Held, that he was not a contributory towards the preliminary expenses.

In this case Mr. Beardshaw had taken 200 shares in this project, and paid 420*l.* in deposit. A circular was sent to each allottee, containing an express undertaking from the directors, to return the whole amount of deposits in case of failure of the Act. The Act did fail, and Mr. Beardshaw, on application for his deposit, received back part. Another circular was then issued to him and other holders of shares, requesting their attendance at a meeting to express confidence in the directors, and in case of non-attendance personally, they were requested to send proxies, and the circular concluded by saying, that in order to secure the expenses which were guaranteed by the South-Eastern Railway Company, in pursuance of an arrangement, it was absolutely necessary that the directors should obtain the Act. Mr. Beardshaw forwarded a proxy, and subsequently proceeded at law for the balance of the deposits, in which he obtained a verdict, and recovered it. The Master, in whose office this company was in course of being wound up, had placed Mr. Beardshaw upon the list of contributories, and the present motion was in the nature of an appeal against such decision.

Malins and Smale appeared for Mr. Beardshaw.

Glasse and Martindale for the official manager, argued that the signing of the proxy by Mr. Beardshaw constituted a new contract, and after that the directors were not bound to return the deposits, and therefore the Master was right in his decision.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that all the authorities had decided that persons taking shares in a projected company undertook to bear no expenses incurred by those who were endeavouring to form such company. The shareholders only agreed to take shares in the company when it should be formed. There was an express agreement in this case, to return the deposit in case the Act failed; and the only question turned upon the subsequent conduct of Mr. Beardshaw in signing the proxy, whereby he enabled the directors to continue an undertaking, and whether that had rendered him liable to contribute. What were the circumstances under which that was signed? Mr. Beardshaw thought that it was absolutely necessary to obtain the Act in order to secure payment of the expenses which had been guaranteed under an arrangement with the South-Eastern Railway Company. That was most important, and Mr. Beardshaw naturally supposed that what he was doing would enable the company to obtain funds, out of which he himself would be repaid. At all events it could not be said that he did anything by which the directors were discharged from the undertaking to return the deposits in case the Act was not obtained. Under these circumstances his Honour's opinion was that Mr. Beardshaw's name ought to be struck off the list of contributories, and the Master's decision reversed.

Order accordingly.

BARTLEY v. BARTLEY.

Practice—Inspection of documents.

Where a plaintiff had obtained the usual order to inspect by himself, his solicitors, and agents, documents in one of the defendants' possession, a co-defendant has no right to attend such inspection, if the defendant in whose possession the documents are, objects.

In the course of this cause the plaintiff had obtained an order that he might by himself, his solicitors, and agents, attend at all convenient times, and inspect at one of the defendants' counting house, certain deeds and documents in his possession. The solicitor who had obtained the order attended for that purpose, and he brought with him to assist in the inspection and explanation of these documents, a co-defendant. This was objected to on the part of the defendant in whose possession the documents were, admitting the right of the plaintiff's solicitor to inspect them, but contending that such solicitor could not constitute as his agent for this purpose the co-defendant. The plaintiff now moved, on the ground of an improper interference with the plaintiff's right to inspect, that the deeds and documents might be deposited for the usual purposes with the clerk of records and writs.

Kenyon Parker for the motion.

J. H. Palmer, contrà.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, there having been an order made by the Court permitting the plaintiff, his solicitors, and agents, at all convenient and reasonable times, to inspect certain deeds and documents, he now alleges that he has not had the benefit of this order, and that the defendant had failed to comply with the exigency of that order, and so had misconducted himself to the plaintiff's prejudice; for he says, that when he went to the defendant's house to inspect the documents, and having taken with him another person, the defendant said: "I will let you, the plaintiff, or your solicitors or agents, look at them and take copies, but I object to this person, who is, in fact, a defendant, whom you have brought with you. He cannot, therefore, be either the plaintiff's solicitor or agent, and he has no right to inspect them, and you cannot depute him as your agent." The plaintiff thereupon says,—"He knows more about those documents than any one else, and I constitute him my agent." Now, the question is this,—suppose the documents had been deposited in the usual way with the clerk of records and writs, with the usual leave to inspect, and on an attendance before the clerk of the records and writs, the co-defendant had attended, and was objected to by the defendant who had so deposited them, can this co-defendant, according to the practice, be allowed to inspect them? If he would be allowed there, he ought to be allowed to do so at the defendant's house. I must, therefore, direct the motion to stand over, so that some inquiry may be made of the proper officers of the court as to what the practice under such circumstances would have been.

Tuesday, Nov. 23.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, the question here is, whether a plaintiff who has obtained such an order has a right to constitute the defendant, Robert Bartley, his agent for the purpose of inspecting and taking copies of these documents under the order which he has obtained. It rests upon what is the practice in the office, for it was contended before me on the motion that had the papers been deposited with the Clerk of Records and Writs, the plaintiff might then have taken the other defendant to assist him in the inspection and to make extracts and copies of them. Upon inquiry I have ascertained that such a course would not have been allowed if the defendant, who had been ordered to deposit the papers, had objected to his attendance. How, then, can there be a better right for a defendant to attend and inspect his co-defendant's papers, when they are to be examined at his own house? I do not see why this should be allowed. If the plaintiff could have said—"The matter is so peculiar that it is necessary to me that I should have the assistance of a particular defendant," he should have applied to the Court for a special order on that ground. I think the defendant was justified in refusing to allow the co-defendant, Robert Bartley, to be present at the examination, and that, in truth, there has been no impediment placed to prevent the plaintiff, his solicitors or agents, from having the proper inspection. With that exception there has been the fullest permission given to the plaintiff, his solicitors or agents, to have access to the documents as directed by the order of the Court.

COUNTY COURT APPEAL.

Wednesday, Dec. 1.

WILDES, Appellant; MORRIS, Respondent.

Clerk of the peace—Clerk of Second Court at Sessions—Roll of fines—Sheriff—59 Geo. 3, c. 28; 3 Geo. 4, c. 46.

The sheriff is not bound, as a mere ministerial officer, to levy all fines that may appear to be unpaid on the roll returned by the clerk of the peace, under the 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, and he ought not to levy where he has himself received the fines.

The clerk of the peace receiving fines in court will be liable (if he neglect to enter such fines as paid on the roll made out by him and delivered to the sheriff), to the party paying such fines, if he receives damage from such neglect.

Quære, whether the clerk of the peace will be liable where the fines are received in the Second Court by the person appointed to record the proceedings of the Second Court of Sessions, under the 59 Geo. 3, c. 28.

Semble, that his liability will depend on the fact whether such appointee is the assistant of the clerk of the peace or an original officer.

This was an appeal from the County Court of Kent, holden at Maidstone.

The respondent recovered 10*l.* damages from the appellant (the deputy clerk of the peace of Kent), under the following circumstances.

The plaintiff was tried and convicted upon two several indictments for misdemeanour at the Quarter Sessions for the county of Kent, in a second court holden under the statutes 59 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 1; 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, ss. 2, 3; and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 4. The plaintiff was thereupon sentenced to pay a fine to the Queen of 1*l.* upon one indictment, and another fine of 2*l.* upon the second indictment. The fines were immediately paid by the plaintiff's attorney to the person appointed by the clerk of the peace under the said statutes, to act as his deputy in recording the proceedings of the second court, and he, within five minutes after receiving the fines, handed them over, in court, to the under-sheriff.

No entry was made of the receipt and payment over the fine, and no written statement of the causes in respect of which the money was handed over to the under-sheriff appears to have been given to him. Within twenty-one days afterwards, the clerk of the peace, in obedience to the 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, s. 2, sent a roll containing a copy "of all forfeited recognisances, fines, issues, and amerciaments, and sums of money paid in satisfaction of them, set or imposed by, or lost or forfeited," to the sheriff, with writs of distringas and capias or fieri facias, and capias addressed to the sheriff for the purpose of levying the amounts.

From this roll there was omitted all mention of the money paid in satisfaction of the two fines imposed on the respondent, and, indeed, the clerk of the peace knew nothing of the matter.

The sheriff proceeded to execute the writs so sent to him by the clerk of the peace, and took the plaintiff into custody, whence, after giving security, and on the circumstances being explained, he was released. The plaintiff then brought this action.

The plaint alleged that the appellant so negligently recorded the proceedings that he neglected to make an entry of the payment of the fines; that when the record was made up, the name of the plaintiff was entered in the roll as liable, and not in the roll of those who had paid; that the defendant sent the said list to the sheriff, who arrested and imprisoned the plaintiff, and it then alleged that his arrest arose from the negligence of the defendant's assistant or servant.

At the close of the case it was contended for the appellant that no cause of action existed against him.

1st. Because the said appointee was not in law the assistant of the appellant, and that the appellant was not liable for his acts or omissions.

2ndly. That he could not be liable, as the appointee was not authorised to receive the fines.

3rdly. That it was not the appellant's duty to make an entry of money which had not come to his hands, but had at once been paid over to the under-sheriff.

The learned judge held,

1st. That the appellant was responsible for the acts of his deputy so appointed as aforesaid.

2ndly. That if the deputy had no authority to receive the fines, still, as he had in fact received them, it was no answer to say that he ought not to have received them.

3rdly. That the roll having been made up by the appellant, and sent by him to the sheriff, with a writ and an oath indorsed in the particular form, it was for the jury to say whether the appellant had not been guilty of a breach of duty in not taking care that the roll was made out correctly in every particular, because the sheriff was a ministerial officer, and bound to execute the writs sent with the roll.

By the 3 Geo. 4, c. 46 (an Act for the more speedy return and levying of Fines, Penalties, and Forfeitures, and Recognizances estreated), sec. 2, all fines, issues, &c. set, imposed, &c. by any justices of the peace, shall be certified by them to the clerk of the peace, in writing, containing the names of the parties, the sum forfeited, and the cause of each forfeiture, on or before the ensuing General or Quarter Sessions; and the clerk of the peace shall copy on a roll such fines, issues, &c. together with all fines, issues, &c. imposed or forfeited at such Court of General or Quarter Sessions, and shall, within twenty-one days, send a copy of such roll, with a writ of distringas and capias, or fieri facias and capias, to the sheriff of the county, &c. which shall be the authority to such sheriff for proceeding to the immediate levying and recovering of such fines, issues, &c. on the goods and chattels of such several persons, or for taking into custody the bodies of such persons, in case sufficient goods and chattels shall not be found whereon distress can be made for the recovery thereof.

By sec. 3, the clerk of the peace, before he shall deliver such roll to the sheriff, shall make oath, which oath shall be indorsed on the back of the writ, or of the said roll attached thereto, such clerk of the peace stating therein all such fines, issues, &c. which shall have been paid, or otherwise accounted for, and such oath shall be in the form following:—

"I, A. B. clerk of the peace for the county of B. make oath that this roll is truly and carefully made up and examined, and that all fines, issues, amerciaments, recognisances, and forfeitures which were set, lost, imposed, or forfeited, and in right and due course of law ought to be levied and paid, are, to the best of my knowledge and understanding, inserted in the said roll, and that in the said roll are also contained and expressed all such fines as have been paid to or received by me, either in Court or otherwise, without any wilful or fraudulent discharge, omission mismomer, or defect whatever.—So help me God."

The form of the writ to the sheriff required by sec. 2, and given in the schedule to the Act, requires the sheriff "of all the goods, &c. of all and singular the persons in the several extracts of this writ annexed, to cause to be levied all and singular the debts and sums of money in the same extracts severally imposed and charged, so that the money may be ready for payment at the next General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, to be paid over in such manner as any two or more of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury may direct; and if any of the said several debts cannot be levied by reason of no goods or chattels being to be found belonging to the parties, then in all cases to take the bodies of the parties refusing to pay the aforesaid debts, and lodge them in the gaol, there to await the decision of the justices, &c. unless the parties shall have given sufficient security," &c.

By the 59 Geo. 3, c. 28 (an Act to empower magistrates to divide the Court of Quarter Sessions), sec. 1, Courts of Quarter Sessions or General Sessions of the Peace may appoint two or more justices to form a Court to sit apart from them.

By sec. 3, the clerk of the peace or his deputy is to appoint a fit and sufficient person to record the proceedings so had before the justices sitting apart; such proceedings to be delivered over to the clerk of the peace, and be deemed to be a part of the records of such session, as if the same had been recorded by the clerk of the peace himself; and the justices at the quarter session are to make an order upon the county treasurer to pay to the clerk of the peace such sum as they deem a fit and reasonable remuneration to the clerk of the peace for such purpose.

The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 4, extends the power of justices at quarter sessions or adjourned quarter sessions to divide the court.

Deedes, for the appellant.—The ruling of the judge was incorrect. There is no relation of master and servant between the clerk of the peace and the person appointed to record the proceedings of the second court. The 59 Geo. 3, c. 28, authorises the clerk of the peace to appoint such person, and it is true his is the hand by which the remuneration reaches the appointee. There might be a ground of complaint against the clerk of the peace for not appointing a fit and proper person; but it is sought to make the clerk of the peace liable here for omitting to enter fines as paid, when he himself did not receive them. Nor is there the same relation here as between the sheriff and his under-sheriff or bailiffs, as in law they constitute but one person. (Cook v. Palmer, 6 B. & C. 739; Crowder v. Long, 8 B. & C. 598; Cameron v. Reynolds, Cowp. 403.) Then by the statute the appointee is to record the proceedings of the second court. The receipt of the fines, or making up the roll of fines, is no part of such duty. The fines were handed in to the appointee, who within five minutes handed them over to the sheriff, so that it is as if the fines had been paid to the sheriff in the first instance. The clerk of the peace had no knowledge of the payment when he made out the roll of fines; besides, the sheriff is the proper officer to receive fines, and it is doubtful whether the clerk of the peace can receive them at all. (Dalton's Country Justice, tit. Sessions, c. 185; Burns' Justice, "Sheriff.") The clerk of the peace only deposes to the best of his knowledge and belief as to the fines that ought to be levied; and he is to insert upon the roll the fines imposed at petty sessions as well as at the quarter sessions. And in making up the roll the proper course was to omit what the sheriff had received, because he would know of such moneys that they were in his hands, and the writ satisfied. So also of all sums which within twenty-one days the sheriff might receive of his officer. Then the 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, s. 10, imposes a penalty of 50*l.* for non-performance of the duties required by the Act, and that would seem to be the remedy that ought to have been pursued in this instance. [Coleridge, J.—That does not take away the plaintiff's common law right to damages for the false imprisonment.] Lastly, it was a clear misdirection to tell the jury that the sheriff was a mere ministerial officer, and bound to levy according to the roll.

Ribton, for the respondent.—No matter whose duty it is to receive the fines in court, the sheriff cannot proceed to levy and recover them until he is put in motion by the clerk of the peace. The clerk of the peace, therefore, is bound to make up the roll correctly, and responsible for not doing so. The oath shows that this is the duty of the clerk of the peace. It does not appear on the case that the sheriff knew that he had received the fines of the plaintiff as set out in the roll, but only that two sums of money were handed to him. [Erle, J.—The judge, by his direction, made the receipt by the sheriff wholly immaterial, as he told the jury that the sheriff was a mere ministerial officer, and bound to levy the fines according to the writ sent with the roll.]

Coleridge, J.—In this case there must be a new trial, on the ground of misdirection, for when the judge told the jury that the sheriff was a purely ministerial officer, and could exercise no discretion in the matter, he made many circumstances that were material, immaterial, and misled them. Looking at the statute 3 Geo. 4, c. 46, I think we ought not to give a strict and unreasonable construction to the language of the oath in the third section. The clerk of the peace is to make a return of the fines which have been imposed at the quarter sessions, and also those certified by the justices to have been imposed out of sessions, some of which the statute contemplates he may have received, and at a period not exceeding twenty-one days from the quarter sessions, he is to make out a roll containing an account both of the fines certified by the justices, and also of those paid or to be paid in lieu or satisfaction. He is to send a copy of this roll with a writ annexed, for levying the fines, to the sheriff, and accompanying this is the oath indorsed. The oath is positive as to all fines that have been paid to the clerk of the peace, but it is only conjectural and conditional as to those which may have been paid to the sheriff; for the words, "all fines which, in right and due course of law, ought to be levied and paid, are, to the best of my knowledge and understanding, inserted in the roll," are conjectural only; but the words, "and that in the said roll are contained and expressed all such fines as have been paid to or received by me," are absolute; and under this latter head I think the clerk of the peace has made default in not having entered these fines as paid. Some of the fines in the roll may have been paid to the sheriff between the dates of their imposition and the delivery of the roll to him. The clerk of the peace, therefore, can only say, as far as he knows, that the roll is correct as to the unpaid fines. On the receipt of this roll the sheriff's duty is not merely ministerial; he is not to act on the face of it, as that would be a very great injustice, and the words of the statute cannot be considered to go to that length; there must, therefore, be a new trial. But we may as well state now what is our opinion as to the duty of the clerk of the peace. Supposing him to have received the fine, and to have omitted to enter it as paid on the roll, and that then the sheriff, not knowing of the payment, levies, although a sheriff himself may not be quite free from negligence, particularly when, as in this case, it may be handed over, yet I think there would be a breach of duty if the fine were paid to the clerk himself. But in this case the fine was paid to the appointee and by him handed over to the sheriff; and whether any breach of duty by him constitutes negligence on the part of the clerk of the peace, depends upon the relation between the clerk and his appointee, and we have not quite sufficient facts before us to decide this point. If the case goes to a second trial, all the circumstances should be inquired into that tend to shew whether he was a servant of the defendant or not.

Erle, J.—This is an action for negligently making up the roll, and the judge considered that, although the fines had been actually levied before, yet that the sheriff was bound to levy. From that view I entirely dissent. The sheriff is supposed to be present in a criminal court, and when a prisoner is sentenced to be fined, and, in default, to be imprisoned, it is his duty, during such imprisonment, to receive the fine in order that the imprisonment may be brought to an end. The roll ought to be made up by the clerk of the peace, including all fines either paid or to be paid; but I am not clear that it is his duty to enter on the roll what he has reason to think may have been paid to the sheriff; and I by no means say it was his duty to ascertain, at his peril, the correctness of his entries on the roll. The sheriff receives this writ to enable him to have the money ready for the Commissioners of the Treasury on a certain day, and if he has obtained the money beforehand, he has nothing more to do than to pay it over at the time appointed to the commissioners. I think that, under the statute, the clerk of the peace is authorised to receive fines in court, which, if not done, and damages ensue, he is liable; but here it was paid to his deputy, and the question, therefore, is, is such an officer a statutable officer, having original authority? As far as the appointment goes it would look as if he were an original officer, but the justices at quarter sessions are to make an order on the county treasurer to pay to the clerk of the peace reasonable remuneration for such officer. If the clerk of the peace were to appoint his articled clerk to record the proceedings of the second court, that would be a strong circumstance to shew that he was merely an assistant, for whom the clerk of the peace was responsible. The facts, however, were not examined at the trial with a view to this point, and it seems to me, therefore, that there must be a new trial; and that the result will depend on the point whether the appointee was acting as an original officer, or merely as assistant to the clerk of the peace. New trial ordered. No costs.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER.

Reported by Frederick Bailey and C. J. B. Hertslet, Esqrs. Barristers-at-Law.

Wednesday, Nov. 17.

Crossfield and Others, Administrators, &c. v. Such.

Detinue—Pleading—Payment into court.

In detinue for goods, defendant pleaded — 1st, except as to part, non detinet; 2nd, as to that part, and as to the further maintenance of the action in respect thereof, that after the commencement of the suit he delivered that part to the plaintiff, who then accepted it from the defendant; and, 3rd, as to the damages, by reason of the detention thereof, payment into court of 1s. averring that no further damage was sustained by reason of such detention. General demurrer to the two last pleas:

Held, that both pleas were good. The first demurred to, because if all or any of the goods are delivered up after suit, the plaintiff should have no judgment to recover them, or their value, but only judgment to recover damages for their detention, if the plaintiff has sustained any, otherwise not; and for the residue the plaintiff may have the usual judgment to recover them, or their value, and damages for their detention. The last plea is good, because in all personal actions money may be paid into court by way of compensation or amends. Detinue is a personal action in which such compensation is sought to be recovered, although the goods, or their value, is also sought to be recovered, and such a case is within the spirit of the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42.

Detinue for goods.

Plea—except as to a certain portion of those goods—non detinet; and 2nd, as to that portion, that plaintiffs ought not further to maintain their action in respect thereof, because, after the commencement of the suit, the defendant delivered the same to the plaintiffs, who then accepted and received them; and lastly, as to the damages sustained by the plaintiffs, by reason of the detention of those goods, defendant brought into court 1s. alleging that the plaintiffs had not sustained damage to a greater amount by reason of the said detention.

General demurrer to the two last pleas.

Willes for the plaintiffs, in support of the demurrer.—The pleas are bad in substance; they merely go to the damages, and do not answer the subject-matter of the action. The action of detinue is one of a peculiar nature, and does not admit of payment of money into court. The second plea cannot be supported, inasmuch as it is not necessary, in order to maintain the action, that the defendant should have returned the goods after it was commenced. What is alleged is, that the defendant, at some time before action, detained the goods. Such detainer is admitted by the plea: it admits the cause of action, and answers only one of the consequences. In the action of detinue there are three things for the consideration of the jury—the goods themselves, the value of the goods, and damages for their detention. The jury may find that the goods have been redelivered to the plaintiffs, and excuse themselves from assessing their value, as in Williams v. Archer, 5 C.B. 318. There no plea of redelivery was on the record, and none is necessary; none, therefore, can be pleaded. [Platt, B.—Suppose those pleas were the only pleas on the record, and the jury found for the plaintiffs, the judgment would be to recover the goods which have been redelivered.] The jury at the trial may take that fact into their consideration, and confine themselves to assessing their value, and damages for their detention; there would be no judgment for their redelivery, as in Williams v. Archer. The plea merely sets up a matter to be considered by the jury in connection with the other circumstances of the case. The plea should have alleged either that the defendant had always been ready and willing to deliver up the goods, or that there was an acceptance in accord and satisfaction. Had the plea shewed that the re-delivery followed the bailment, it would have been good. (Com. Dig. tit. "Pleader," 2 X, 5.) No such re-delivery is here averred; the consequence of supporting the pleas in question would be to deprive the plaintiffs of the costs of the writ; putting aside the last plea, the second plea is to the further maintenance of the suit: then they can have no costs because no judgment, their only course being to discontinue. (Wollen v. Smith, 9 A. & E. 505.) Although therefore, they were right in bringing the action, their would be deprived of costs, because the defendant chose to put them in the wrong. [Platt, B.—Suppose they go to trial upon the sufficiency of the damages paid into court, where is the harm?] It does not follow that because the jury may assess damages for the detention, the defendant should be at liberty to plead to them; then, if the last plea is bad, the second plea being to the further maintenance of the action, is also, as, should the plaintiffs proceed, they are deprived of costs, and can only obtain costs by foregoing the legal right they possess of having the question of re-delivery determined by a jury.

Lush, contrà.—The plea was put on the record before the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852; the demurrer was after the commencement of that Act; it therefore applies, and the objections must be confined to the merits. [Parke, B.—The new Act says that the plaintiff may object to the plea that it is defective in substance. It does not enable you to plead different pleas to what you could do before. It does not enable you to plead to the damages.] The pleas taken together answer the whole cause of action, and say as to the goods defendant delivered them back, as to the damages for their detention he pays money into court; unless the pleas are good the plaintiffs may go on and recover judgment for the defendant to deliver up to the plaintiffs the identical goods which the plaintiffs have already in their possession. The second plea is perfectly good. In Vin. Ab. "Detinue," D. 5, pl. 58, it is laid down that in "detinue of divers parcels of goods, tender of part of them is a good plea of them before verdict." So in Rolls, Abr. "Detinue," E. it is said that where charters were burnt the judgment was not to recover the charters, but the value of the land as damages; and in Williams v. Archer, 5 C. B. 318, it was held that where there had been a re-delivery of the goods under a judge's order after plea, the measure of damages was the difference in value between what they were worth when they were delivered and when they were redelivered. It is a mistake to say the pleas are only to the damages, they are to the goods; he delivers all he admits he ever had, and pays the money into court for the detention of them. At all events, if they do not answer the whole cause of action, they offer a defence to part of it, and are to that extent good. (Henry v. Karl, 8 M. & W. 228.) The last plea is unobjectionable; it is a payment into court "by way of compensation or amends" within 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21; no difficulty exists as to the costs, the plaintiff may accept the money which is paid into court, and the defendant will be liable to pay him full costs. He also cited Clements v. Flight, 16 M. & M. 42.

Willes in reply. Cur. adv. vult.

Thursday, Nov. 25.—Pollock, C.B. delivered judgment.—In this case the plaintiff declared in detinue of divers goods of the value of 500*l.* and on a bailment to be redelivered on request. As to a portion of the goods, the defendant pleaded non detinet; and as to the residue, a second plea, that the plaintiff ought not further to maintain his action to recover them or their value, because he says, that after the commencement of the suit, the defendant delivered them to the plaintiff, who then accepted them from the defendant; and the defendant pleaded separately to the damages by reason of the detaining of those goods, a plea of payment of 1s. into court, and contended that the averment of damage, by reason of the detention of the goods, did not exceed that sum. This was the last plea. To the two last pleas there was a general demurrer. It was argued upon the 17th inst. and after consideration, and upon reference to the old authorities, we are all of opinion that both pleas are good. As to the second, it was to be observed that it is pleaded in bar only of the delivery of the goods specified or their value, and it seems to be highly reasonable to hold that the object of the suit being the recovery of goods in specie or their value to be assessed by the jury, and also damage occasioned by their detention, the first object is completely answered by delivery to, and acceptance by the plaintiff, of the goods since the commencement of the suit, leaving the plaintiff to recover by verdict of the jury the damage he has sustained by the goods being improperly detained. The old authorities completely bear out this view of the case. In Brooke's Abridgment, title "Tender," placitum 39 (referred to in Viner's Abridgment, "Detinue," b. 5, placit. 58), it is said, "Detinue de divers p'cels de b'ns, tend del part de eux est bo' pie dei eux ben'at v'dict; et le contra puis v'dict, ou ienq'st taxe un forum' ingrosse pur dam' del touts les biens; et ne severa les dam'." Brooke refers to Fitzherbert, 13; and Fitzherbert refers to the Year-Book, 1 Richard 3, where the case is found at length. That case was heard before all the judges. It was an action of detinue for several goods which were connected in value at one sum in the declaration before the jury; and the question was, whether any judgment could be given upon the verdict, and the majority were of opinion it could be given for the whole value; and if all the goods were not given up, and one article was withheld, the defendant was liable for the value of all. The contention on the part of the defendant having been that the different goods should have been valued separately, so that if one chattel only was withheld, the defendant would be liable for the value of that chattel only, and, according to the Year-Books, this was generally thought right, although the majority of the judges decided otherwise. In the course of the discussion, Fairfax, J. said that in detinue for two things, the defendant might at first have given up one, and plead as to the other, which seems to have been conceded, and the inconvenience insisted on on the other side might have been avoided if it took place before verdict; after verdict it was too late, and then to pay the value of all if one article was not delivered up. This is very clear and intelligible. If there is a good defence to part of the goods, by reason that the defendant was always ready to deliver, and the jury assessed the value of the residue of the goods, and we presume damages also, but none as to the other goods actually delivered up; yet if there was no defence as to the part delivered up, then the jury will assess the value as to the residue, and damages for the prior detention of the part delivered up. In another case, however, a part of the goods was produced in court, and delivered to the plaintiff. The defendant assenting to the delivery, and no damages were assessed against him, he was simply amerced; probably because the articles sought to be recovered were deeds, and no damage shewn by their having been detained. That case was in the 38 Edw. 3, fol. 36, and it is stated, "Detinue brought for deeds; some were produced; the defendant pleaded non detinet as to the remainder. Those produced were delivered up to the plaintiff; the defendant was amerced for the detainer." And in the subsequent case, 36 Hen. 6, fol. 26 b, also of detinue of deeds, the Court refused the prayer of damages for detention of the deeds, as to which the defendant said nothing, because the plaintiff had not been delayed, and they gave him judgment to recover the deeds. It seems, therefore, in detinue for goods, if all or any are delivered up after suit, the plaintiff can have no judgment to recover them or their value, for it would be actè majori, but he may have judgment to recover damages for their detention, if the plaintiff has sustained any; otherwise, not; and for the residue the plaintiff may have the usual judgment to recover them or their value, and damages for their detention; and it seems to us, therefore, that the plea as to the goods delivered up is good, and that the plaintiff ought not to have judgment to recover what he has already got. The last plea is payment of money into court on account of damages for the detention. In the 3 & 4 Wm. 4, c. 42, s. 21, there is a provision, which seems to us to apply to all actions, with the exceptions mentioned, of which detinue is not one. In all personal actions, money may be paid into court by way of compensation or amends; this is a personal action, in which such compensation or amends is sought to be recovered, although the goods or their value, is also sought to be recovered. The case is within the spirit of the Act, and we think this plea is also good. There will be, therefore,

Judgment for the defendant.

Substituted executor—Grant of probate to.

E. W. appointed C. F. W. executor of her will, but in case he should be abroad, or otherwise incapable of acting at the time of her death, then E. N. W. to act, but only during such time as C. F. W. should be abroad, or incapable of acting from any other cause. C. F. W. died in the lifetime of the testatrix. Probate was granted to E. N. W. as executor substituted.

Elizabeth Wilmott, by her will dated the 22nd day of May, 1844, after giving various legacies bequeathed the residue of her property to her nephew, Charles Foley Wilmott, and then declares as follows:—"I nominate, constitute, and appoint my said nephew, Charles Foley Wilmott, executor of this my will; but in case the said Charles F. Wilmott shall happen at the time of my decease to be abroad, or from any other cause incapable of acting as such executor, then and in such case I appoint my said nephew, Eardley Nicholas Wilmott, executor, to act only during such time as the said Charles F. Wilmott shall be resident abroad, or otherwise incapable of acting as aforesaid." Charles F. Wilmott died on the 23rd day of March, 1852, in the lifetime of the testatrix. The testatrix died in the month of September, 1852.

Pratt moved the Court to decree probate to E. N. Wilmott as substituted executor. If C. F. Wilmott had died abroad after the death of the testatrix, and probate had been granted, as it might regularly have been in that case, to E. N. Wilmott, such probate would not have been called in on the death of Charles, but E. would have continued to act; then why should he not, looking to the intention of the testatrix, and the words in which the intention is expressed, take the grant now. The case was within Swint. 5th Wills, p. 4, s. 19. "Wheresoever it is likely that tha testator would have substituted in the case not expressed, if he had remembered the same, as well as in the case expressed, there the substitution is to be admitted, as if the same case had been expressed."

Sir J. Dodson.—E. N. Wilmott is to act only during such time as Charles shall be resident abroad, or otherwise incapable of acting as expressed, that is, from any other cause. These last words are very large, and though I have some hesitation in coming to that decision, I think I may grant the motion.

Re Addis, Onions, and Lloyd, ex parte Goold.

Bill of exchange—Acceptance otherwise than in usual style of firm—Proof against joint estate—Non-liability of partnership assets upon acceptance for private debt of partner, where proper style of firm not used—Rejection of proof.

There is no implied authority in law for one partner to accept or give bills in the name of the firm so as to bind the partnership assets in any other manner than in the usual and proper partnership name, according to the style of the firm known to the world, and with which the public have been acquainted by use and reputation:

Therefore where the form of an acceptance given by one of several partners for a private debt, purporting to be the acceptance of the firm, differed from that always used by the firm, and with which new firm the public had not become acquainted; a proof tendered against the joint estate, upon an acceptance so differing, will be rejected; and this, although there is no question as to the holder having given sufficient value for the bill.

The bankrupts had been vinegar manufacturers at Gloucester, carrying on business under the name or style of "Addis, Onions, and Co."

Lucas (Bristol) tendered a proof for 100*l.* against the joint estate of the bankrupts by Mr. William Goold, the holder of a bill of exchange for this amount stated to bear the acceptance of the firm, and which he had discounted for the drawer at an unobjectionable rate of interest.

Wilkes (Gloucester), for the assignees, objected to the admissibility of the proof, and examined the creditor, from which it appeared the proof was founded on a bill drawn by one Henry J. Lloyd upon the firm, and the acceptance written by Edmund Lloyd, one of the partners who signed the name of the firm as "Addis, Onions, and Lloyd," and not "Addis, Onions, and Co." the proper style of the firm by which it was known to the world, and it was proved that the bill was given to the drawer in consideration of moneys advanced by him to Edmund Lloyd, the partner accepting for a private debt, and not for the purposes of the partnership. The bill was endorsed to Goold by the drawer for value. Before the bill arrived at maturity the firm of Addis, Onions, and Co. had become bankrupt, and it had not been presented. It appeared there had been an arrangement between the drawer and Goold, the holder, that the latter should prove on the bill against the estate of the bankrupts and receive the dividend, the drawer being responsible for any deficiency. It was now argued against the reception of the proof—1st, That the consideration for the acceptance was a private debt of the bankrupt, Edmund Lloyd, and not for a partnership liability. 2ndly, That the proof was inadmissible as against the joint estate, the acceptance being in the names of "Addis, Onions, and Lloyd," whereas the proper name and style under which the firm was trading and known to the world was "Addis, Onions, and Co." and it was therefore contended that Edmund Lloyd had no authority to accept bills to bind the partnership otherwise than that which the law implied, viz. to do so in the proper partnership name, and that this bill being accepted in the name of "Addis, Onions, and Lloyd," which was inapplicable to the real name of the firm, which was "Addis, Onions, and Co." the proof should be rejected. (Kirk v. Blurton, 9 Mee. & W. 284.)

Lucas, in support of the proof, shewed that by the articles of partnership "Addis, Onions, and Lloyd" was the style of the firm mutually agreed on between the partners, and that the bankrupt, Edmund Lloyd, had protested to his partners against the use of the style of "Addis, Onions, and Co."

Wilkes, in reply, contended that the bankrupt, Lloyd, had acquiesced in the adoption of Addis, Onions, and Co. as the style of the firm, and produced receipts given by him on behalf of himself and partners before and after the transaction in question, in which the latter style of the firm had been adopted by him. It was also elicited that the articles of partnership expressly stipulated by a mutual covenant between the parties that no acceptances of the firm should be given otherwise than for the purposes of the business. The acceptance in question having been given for a private liability of the bankrupt Lloyd, it was now insisted that it could not be admitted as a proof against the joint estate of the partners, and must be altogether rejected.

Mr. Commissioner STEPHEN observed that the form of this acceptance differed from that always used by the firm in their business, which was that of "Addis, Onions, and Co.;" and therefore it would appear that the public had never become acquainted with the firm of "Addis, Onions, and Lloyd." If it had not been for the case of Kirk v. Blurton, cited from the Ex. and decided in 1841, he should have been inclined to think that the present proof might have been sustained, but as that decision had not been appealed from, the Court was bound by it, and to hold that, if an acceptance by "Blurton and Co." could not bind a firm known to the world only as that of "Blurton," so an acceptance by "Addis, Onions, and Lloyd" could not bind a firm known only to the world as "Addis, Onions, and Co." It was very true that the only style recognised by the articles of partnership was that of "Addis, Onions, and Lloyd," but it appeared that this was a mere private agreement among the partners, which was never acted on so far as the public was concerned; besides which there was the covenant which deprived Lloyd and the other partners of all authority for using the name of the firm for any other than partnership purposes. The Court, however, considered the case was not free from doubt, and in rejecting the proof would give every facility for having the points involved brought before the Lords Justices, if it should be thought advisable to appeal from this decision. Proof rejected.

Petition—Residence.

If all the places where a petitioner has resided for six months previous to filing his petition are not fully seth forth, the petition will be dismissed.

This insolvent was opposed by Cooke, and supported by Macrae.

It appeared upon the examination of the opposing counsel, that the petitioner, who had resided in the Burlington Arcade, had, between the time of giving instructions to his attorney to prepare his petition, and the date of filing it, shut up his house in the Arcade, and removed with his goods to Buckingham-place, Pimlico. He was, however, indebted for the rent of the house in the Burlington Arcade up to this date, and, in fact, held the lease of it.

Cooke submitted, that as the petition required that all an insolvent's residences for six months previous to the date of filing it, should be stated, and as he had omitted to mention the new residence in Buckingham-place, the petition being incorrect and untrue, must be dismissed. There was no power to amend the petition.

Macrae submitted, that as the new residence was a mere lodging, and as the insolvent was still liable for the rent of his house in the Arcade, it might be a doubtful point whether that was still not his residence, as, in point of law, a new domicile was not acquired until the original domicile had been abandoned facto et animo. (See Macrae's Insolvent Practice, 106.)

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER thought the latter residence ought also to have been mentioned in the petition, and being omitted the petition was not in the form required by the Act of Parliament. As there was no power of amendment, the petition must be dismissed. Petition dismissed.

Appointment of assignee—Country case.

The Court has power to appoint an assignee under the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, in cases heard under that statute in the County Courts.

This insolvent, a clerk in the Exchequer-office, was heard and discharged at Dover, a short time since.

Cooke, to-day, applied for the appointment of an assignee, no person having been nominated by the County Court. The creditor nominated by the present proceedings was Mr. Tatham, a creditor for 185*l.* costs incurred as proctor for Mrs. Dax in obtaining a divorce, a mensa et thoro. Mr. Tatham was recommended by eleven creditors, whose debts amounted to 1,100*l.*

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER asked why some creditors had been asked to support the nomination and others not.

Clarke, of the firm of Nicholls and Clarke, attorneys for Mr. Tatham, said, that all the creditors whose debts had been considered bonâ fide, had been called upon.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER said, he did not like to make the appointment behind the backs of some of the parties, and therefore the better way would be to give notice of this application by advertisement.

Petition—Attestation.

If the petition be not duly attested, it will be dismissed.

This petitioner came up for his examination on his interim order.

Bicker Caarten, for creditors, directed the attention of the Court to the form of attestation at the foot of the petition, which was as follows:—"Signed in the presence of G. W. for T. S. The COURT held the objection fatal.

Re AGNES HACKNEY.

Creditor's petition, filed by wife of creditor—Pauper declaration.

Where a debtor is arrested at the suit of a creditor who has gone to America, and the wife of the creditor files a petition and vesting order, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 107. s. 19 [English analogous, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 36], so as to prevent the insolvent's being discharged under the Pauper Prisoners' Act, such petition and vesting order will be set aside.

The insolvent had been dealing with a Dublin shopkeeper who had gone to America, leaving his wife after him carrying on business as usual. The account having run up to a considerable amount, partly after and partly before the shopkeeper had left Dublin, the insolvent was sued in his name, arrested, and sent to prison. There is here what is called the Pauper Prisoners' Act, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 92, s. 8, which authorises the discharge of a prisoner committed for debt who makes a declaration pursuant to the statute, that he or she is without any means of support, and not entitled to property in possession, reversion, or otherwise. The discharge takes place at the expiration of twenty-one days from the making of this declaration and its publication in the Gazette, unless the creditor files a petition on which a vesting order is founded, and which has the effect of preventing the discharge of the debtor until he files his schedule and comes up to be heard under the Insolvent Act. The insolvent in the present instance, having taken the pauper declaration, was upon the point of being discharged, when the wife of the shopkeeper, at whose suit she was in custody, filed a creditor's petition, pursuant to the statute, and called upon the insolvent to file a schedule and come up to be heard.

Curran now moved to have the insolvent discharged from custody, and the petition and vesting order set aside, on the ground that it was not competent for the wife of a creditor, or any other person but the creditor himself, to file such petition or obtain a vesting order thereon. The statute provided that "If any prisoner charged in execution for any debt, damages, or any costs, or sum or sums of money, or committed for, or by reason of any contempt of any Court whatsoever, for nonpayment of any sum or sums of money, or of costs taxed or untaxed, either ordered to be paid or to the payment of which such prisoner would be liable in purging such contempt, or in any manner in consequence or by reason of such contempt, shall not within twenty-one days next after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, make satisfaction to the creditor or creditors at whose suit such prisoner shall have been so committed or charged in execution for such debt or damages, or to the person or persons entitled to the money for the nonpayment of which such prisoner shall have been in contempt, or to the payment of which such prisoner would be liable in consequence, or by reason of such contempt, or of any prisoner who after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act shall be committed to any prison or goal, and charged in execution for any debt or damages, or any costs, or sum or sums of money, or committed for or by reason of any such contempt as aforesaid, shall not within twenty-one days next after such prisoner shall be so committed or charged in execution as aforesaid, make satisfaction to the creditor or creditors at whose suit such prisoner shall have been so committed or charged in execution, or to the person or persons entitled to the money, for nonpayment of which such prisoner shall have been in contempt, or to the payment of which such prisoner would be liable in consequence or by reason of such contempt,—then, in any of the said cases, it shall be lawful for any such creditor or creditors, or persons entitled to such money as aforesaid, to apply by petition in a summary way to the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors for an order vesting the real and personal estate and effects of such prisoner in the provisional assignee for the time being of said Court, according to the provisions of this Act." It was contended that there was nothing in the foregoing section of the Act to warrant any one but a creditor who had laid on a detainer or charged the party in execution to file such petition. An analogous statute was in force in England, but in no single instance could it be shewn that the wife of a creditor, or any other but the creditor himself, had presented such petition.

Sydney contended, that the passage in the section of the Act which said that "any such creditor or person entitled to such money as aforesaid, might apply by petition," was clearly meant to include cases like the present. The wife of the creditor was the only party entitled to the money; in point of fact, a great portion of the debt was contracted with her by the insolvent after her husband left the country, and if the Court did not allow the petition to stand, the insolvent would escape from prison, and the debt would be lost. If the petition were allowed to stand, and the case to come before the Court, it would be found that the insolvent, although having taken the pauper declaration, had ample means to pay her debts. The Court had an equitable jurisdiction over every case that came before it, and the present was one peculiarly for its exercise.

The COURT said the case was a novel one,—the like had not previously come before them; but it was tolerably clear that the power of petitioning given by the statute was confined to the creditor, and that although to "persons entitled to such money" was given the power to petition, that passage had reference to cases where parties were in custody under money attachments, but that anything in the statute was never intended to authorise a married woman, the wife of a creditor, to present such a petition; it was idle to attempt to maintain such a proposition. The petition and vesting order should therefore be set aside.

Re MILNE.

Allocation order—Naval or military pay.

Where a naval or military officer, in receipt of retired pay, is brought before the Court on a creditor's petition, the Court can recommend an allocation of the pay for the benefit of creditors, although the insolvent refuses to swear to his schedule or take his discharge.

The insolvent was a major in the army, having a retired allowance or pay amounting to 228*l.* a year. He had been arrested, in July 1850, for a small debt, which he refused to pay, and having remained in prison for several months, a creditor's petition was filed, on which a vesting order had been obtained, which was followed by the insolvent filing his schedule, by which it appeared that the whole of his debts amounted only to about 75*l.* He was frequently brought up for hearing, but always refused to swear to his schedule or take his discharge, but continued in prison, where he spent his pay, but would not give his creditors even a portion of their debts. On being brought up this day, M'Nally, solicitor, said the insolvent, and he believed the Court, had been previously under the impression, that if an insolvent, having pay or pension from any civil or military department which came under the allocation clause of the Act, refused to swear to his schedule or take his discharge, the Court had no power to recommend an allocation of the pay. That question, however, was decided by two cases perfectly analogous to the present,—Re Mongay and Re Tolson, 17 Law T. Rep. 304. In one of these cases, the party, a half-pay officer, refused to file any schedule, and the Court, after a vesting order under a creditor's petition, recommended an allocation under the English Act. [The 56th section, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, is precisely same as the 44th section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 107, Rr.] The Court had, therefore, the power to recommend an allocation, and let the major stay in prison until his creditors were paid under it, if he thought proper to do so.

Mr. Commissioner CURRAN said, on looking at the section of the Act, he saw nothing to prevent the Court from pursuing the course suggested, but he would wish for an opportunity of looking into the cases in the LAW TIMES, which had been referred to.

The case was ordered to stand for a week, and on again coming before the Court, both commissioners stated that they had looked into the cases reported in the LAW TIMES,—one of them was an à fortiori case. They would therefore recommend an allocation whether the insolvent swore to his schedule or not.

The major was then examined as to the amount of his pay, and the allocation order made, though he still refused to swear to his schedule, or take his discharge.

Re CARLTON.

Allocation of pension from the Crown.

Query, does a pension or allowance from the Crown, denominated royal bounty, to a person who never belonged to any public department, come under the allocation clause of the Insolvent Act? If such pension should be regarded as future acquired property, creditors under a previous insolvency would be rateably entitled to it.

The insolvent, who is a celebrated story writer, and enjoys a pension of two hundred a year from the Crown, as a reward for merit, came up to be heard on his petition. It appeared that he had some time previously, and before he obtained the pension, taken the benefit of the Insolvent Act. He was opposed by several creditors, to whom he was indebted for goods supplied for his necessary household expenses. He stated on his schedule, that in consequence of the depressed state of the literary market, he was at present unable to earn more than about a hundred a year by his writings, and that he had a family of ten children and his wife depending on him. The opposition was with a view of obtaining an allocation order with regard to his pension. The Court observed that they could not allow a man to pass through and get a free discharge, who had a pension of two hundred a year, and could earn at least one hundred besides, unless he made a satisfactory arrangement with his creditors; they were clearly of opinion that they had the power of recommending an allocation with regard to his pension.

Levy, for the insolvent.—A fair, he would say, under the circumstances, a liberal offer had been made to the creditors, which they seemed unwilling to accept. They had been offered 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound in cash, and if they did not take it, he would resist an allocation order; he thought the income was of that character to which such an order would not apply. It was what was called a royal bounty, proceeding direct from the Crown, not for services rendered in any civil or military department, whereas the section of the Act clearly referred to a pension payable by some branch or department of the civil or military service. [Mr. Commissioner CURRAN.—Then if it does not come under the allocation clause, it is future acquired property, and will pass to the assignee.] Suppose it were future acquired property, see what the result would be to creditors. The Court, in dealing with it, would have respect to the insolvent's large family, his condition in life, and all the surrounding circumstances of the case, and would only take from him a small portion of his income, and then, upon the authority of two well-considered cases, Re Johns, 1 Cox & Macrae, 13, and Re Hooker, ib. 55, all the creditors under all the insolvencies should come in rateably, and they would not for many years get anything like 7*s.* 6*d.* in the pound. [Mr. Commissioner BALDWIN.—If the Court has not the power to make an allocation order, they would have the power to remand, if the insolvent did not consent to allocate.] He trusted the Court would not exercise that power where an offer had been made by the insolvent beyond anything that could be reached by the creditors under an order that would apply to the whole of them under all the insolvencies.

The creditors, having consulted, said they thought it prudent to accept the offer that had been made.

The COURT concurred in the propriety of their decision, and the insolvent was discharged.

Reputed ownership—Distress by landlord after arrest of insolvent.

Where a landlord distrains the goods of an insolvent the day after his arrest, and they are purchased by third parties, and still left in the possession of the insolvent, they will not pass to his assignee. The reputed ownership clause will not apply except at the time of the arrest; the property belongs to another, and is in possession of the insolvent by permission of the true owner.

In this case Armstrong shewed cause against a conditional order for an attachment obtained against the insolvent, who was a Presbyterian clergyman, for not delivering up to the assignee the possession of a certain farm and chattels, which had been returned in his schedule. The affidavits on which the application was resisted stated that the insolvent had been arrested and sent to prison on the 1st of November, 1850. There was a vesting order on the 3rd, setting forth the property of the insolvent in the usual way. On the same day, or the day previous, a distress was made for rent, and the property sold; but the parishioners of the reverend gentleman having made a subscription, purchased it, as they stated, not for himself, but for the use of his family, and left it in his possession, as it had been previously; and it was now contended that this property could not possibly pass to the assignee; that the sale by the landlord diverted it from the assignee, if it ever vested in him, and that remaining in the insolvent's possession afterwards gave the assignee no title to it. With regard to one of the denominations of land returned in the schedule, the assignee was entitled to it, and it should be given up within a reasonable time; as to the other, the insolvent had been evicted out of it, and was not at present in his possession.

M'Millan, for the assignee, contended that the sale was collusive between the landlord's agent and the insolvent. The insolvent was arrested on the 1st of November, and the distress was made the next day. The property sold never changed owners, and if it did not pass to the assignee under the 20th section of the Act 3 & 4 Vict. c. 107 [English analogous, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 37], it should be deemed to pass under the reputed ownership clause, s. 45 [English analogous, s. 56]; or at least the 20th and the 45th sections ought to be construed together. At all events, the Court possessed an equitable jurisdiction to deal with property sought to be kept from the creditors by what was evidently a contrivance, and direct that it should be given up to the assignee. The swearing with regard to the purchase of it was very ambiguous; but at all events there it remained, in the evident ownership of the insolvent, and the assignee was plainly entitled to it.

The COURT delivered judgment.—They thought the application as regarded the personal property was wholly untenable. If had not been denied that rent was due, and a distress made, and it was equally certain that the property had been purchased and paid for by third parties; and although those parties left it there for the use of the insolvent's family, they would have a right to claim it whenever they thought proper; and if they choose to bring an action of trover for it, they would have a right to recover it in that way, and that appeared to be the true test to try it by. With regard to the reputed ownership clause, it did not apply at all. At the time of his arrest, the goods were his own, and not in his possession by the permission of the true owner; he was the owner himself, and the clause did not apply to property of another that might come into and remain in possession of an insolvent after the arrest. The cause shewn should be allowed as regarded the chattels—the farm in possession of the insolvent to be given up within two months, otherwise the attachment to issue.

Re EDWARDS.

Discharge from custody before hearing—Costs of ad interim assignee.

Though an insolvent may be out of custody when his case comes on for hearing, the Court may retain his petition, and give liberty to an ad interim assignee to apply for costs of opposition out of any fund in his hand.

The insolvent was opposed by Kernan and Levy, on the ground of having contracted debts fraudulently; but when the case was partly opened, it was announced that he was out of custody, and his attorney asked for the dismissal of his petition.

Levy applied that the petition might be retained, although the insolvent was out of custody. There had been an ad interim assignee appointed, who had realised a few pounds out of the insolvent's estate. [Mr. Commissioner CURRAN.—It may be a proper case for the assignee to get his costs of opposition.] And as the insolvent chose to get himself released from a friendly arrest after the assignee had gone to the expense of instructing counsel and attorney to oppose, the Court had the power both of retaining the petition and ordering him his costs when taxed by the proper officer.

The COURT directed the petition to be retained; the case to stand adjourned till the assignee filed his account, and that he should then be at liberty to apply for the costs of the opposition, as well as his costs of appointment.

DIGEST OF SCOTCH CASES.

COURT OF SESSION—FIRST DIVISION.

Wednesday, Feb. 18.

M'DOUALLS v. M'DOUALL.

Marriage—Domicile—Legitimation.

A domiciled Scotchman having married in Edinburgh a domiciled Englishwoman, by whom he had had children born to him in England:

Held, that the doctrine of legitimation per subsequens matrimonium applied.

This was a declarator of legitimacy. The plaintiffs are the children of Colonel James M'Douall, heir of entail of the estate of Logan, in the county of Wigton, and of Bankton, in the county of Haddington. Colonel M'Douall was from his birth, and still is, domiciled in Scotland. A contract of marriage was executed between him and Mrs. M'Douall in Edinburgh in 1847. It was admitted that Mrs. M'Douall is a native of England, and never resided in Scotland till after the birth of the plaintiffs.

Defences were lodged for Colonel and Mrs. M'Douall, admitting generally the whole facts and conclusions of the summons. Defences were also lodged for Roland James M'Douall, grandson of the deceased Andrew M'Douall, formerly of Logan, and brother of Colonel M'Douall, now of Logan. These defences bore, that the mother of the plaintiffs did not reside in family with their father in England, and formed no part of his establishment, so that his domicile might be taken to be hers. It was pleaded, therefore, that the connection between the parents of the plaintiffs having been unquestionably illicit in its character originally, and with no view to marriage—their birth having taken place in England while the connection possessed that character, and their mother having been domiciled in England at and subsequent to their birth—the doctrine of legitimation per subsequens matrimonium does not apply to the case.

Proof was led by both parties, and thereafter the Lord Ordinary (Ivory), "having especial regard to the fact (admitted in the defences) that the father of the plaintiffs is a native, and has always been a domiciled Scotchman,—finds, declares, prohibits, and discharges simpliciter, in terms of the libel; but, in the circumstances, finds no expenses due, and decerns."

In a note, his lordship remarked,—"As to the paternity of the plaintiff, the proof leaves no room for doubt, while, on the question of legitimation, again (with its correlative patrimonial results), the authority of the House of Lords' judgment in the former cases of M'Douall and Munro is absolute and conclusive."

The defendant reclaimed.

Moir and Dean of Faculty for the reclaimer.

T. Mackenzie and Marshall for the respondents.

The LORD PRESIDENT.—I cannot come to a different conclusion from the Lord Ordinary. According to the decisions we have already pronounced his judgment is correct.

Lord FULLERTON.—I am of the same opinion. The whole facts of the case here are admitted. The effect of this marriage is to make the lady a Scotchwoman; and therefore the principle of legitimation per subsequens matrimonium applies.

Lord CUNINGHAME.—So many cases of importance have occurred of late in our practice, relative to the law of marriage and legitimacy, and few points in them now remain undecided. If the plaintiff's father was a domiciled Scotsman, there can be no doubt that his children, though born in England, were legitimated by the contract of marriage executed between them in Scotland in 1847. The case of Munro, as contrasted with the Strathmore and Ross case, settled that point incontrovertibly. Some countenance was given, in the case of Strathmore and Cromarty, to the rule, that bastardy in England was indelible,—but that idea is exploded by the case of Foulis. When the father is a domiciled Scotsman, who subsequently marries the woman, she follows his domicile, and the marriage is, to all intents and purposes, a Scotch marriage. In this view, the interlocutor under review is incontrovertible.

Lord IVORY also adhered to his former opinion as Lord Ordinary.

JOHN EDWARD GEILS v. FRANCES GEILS.

Divorce—International law—suit for restitution of conjugal rights—Nature of a responsive allegation—Decree à mensâ et toro in England no bar to a divorce à vinculo in Scotland—Res judicata—Domicile.

A Scotsman domiciled in Scotland, married in England an English lady, and after the marriage they went to Scotland to reside there. During the marriage he committed in Scotland acts of adultery, after which the wife separated from him, and came to live in England. Thereupon the husband instituted a suit in the Arches Court of Canterbury for the restitution of conjugal rights. To this suit the wife pleaded his acts of adultery in Scotland in the form of a responsive allegation, and prayed a sentence of separation à mensâ et toro, which was pronounced. The wife thereafter commenced an action in Scotland to obtain a divorce à vinculo, the Courts there having the power to dissolve a Scotch marriage on the ground of adultery. To this action, which was founded on the same acts of adultery as the responsive allegation, the husband pleaded in bar the sentence of separation obtained in England:

Held, that this was a bad plea, because the wife's proceeding in the Arches Court in England, and her action for divorce à vinculo in Scotland, were collateral remedies, having distinct objects and totally different effects.

When a wife is sued for restitution of conjugal rights in the Arches Court in England, and sets up as a defence adultery on the part of the husband, in the usual form of a responsive allegation, and prays and obtains sentence of separation à mensâ et toro on that ground:

Held, by St. Leonards, L.C., that she is not an actor in the ordinary sense, but merely acts in self-defence, and cannot be called an institutor of the suit:

Held, by Lord Truro, that she is as much an actor or institutor of the suit, as if she had originally promoted a suit for a divorce in the first instance.

Semble, where a domiciled Scotsman marries in England an English lady with a view to return to Scotland to reside there immediately after, the marriage may be treated either as an English or a Scotch marriage.

Quære, whether a sentence of separation à mensâ et toro in England has the effect of severing the domicile of the wife from that of the husband, and giving her a domicile of her own?

This was an appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland. The appellant, John Edward Geils, was the son of Lieut.-Col. Andrew Geils, of Dumbuck, a landed proprietor in Scotland, and entered the army in 1834, from which time till 1837 he was absent in India and elsewhere, with his regiment. From 1837 to 1838 he generally resided in his father's mansion-house. In October 1838 he married in England Frances Dickinson, the respondent, an English lady, possessed of landed property in England. Immediately after the marriage the parties went to reside in Scotland, and, with the exception of occasional visits to England, remained there for several years. In 1843 the appellant's father died, and he then succeeded to the paternal estate in Scotland. In September 1845, at which time there had been born of the marriage four children, the parties were on a visit to England, when the wife withdrew herself from her husband's society. In the following month the husband instituted, in the Arches Court of Canterbury, a suit for restitution of conjugal rights. To this suit the wife pleaded cruelty, adultery, and unnatural practices on the part of the husband. This pleading was in the form of a "responsive allegation," and concluded with a prayer, that the Court would pronounce a sentence of separation on all the three grounds. In her allegation, she set forth divers acts of adultery committed by the husband in Scotland, with two maid-servants; and ultimately, after proof was taken, the Court was satisfied that the husband had been guilty of the adultery, and accordingly a sentence of separation à mensâ et toro on that ground, was pronounced in the usual form on 26th April, 1848. (Geils v. Geils, 6 Notes on Eccl. C. 109).

On 17th May, 1849, the wife then commenced an action in Scotland, for a divorce à vinculo matrimonii, it being in the power of the Scotch courts so to dissolve Scotch marriages, on the ground of the adultery of either party. The husband pleaded to this action, inter alia, these pleas. 1. No jurisdiction. 2. "The plaintiff (respondent), having instituted a suit against defendant (appellant) in the Arches Court in England, founded on the acts of adultery, which are set forth in the present summons (or declaration), and having in that suit obtained, in April 1848, a regular sentence of separation à mensâ et toro, is barred from maintaining the present action in this court." The Court of Session at once overruled the first preliminary plea, and pronounced an interlocutor accordingly; but as to the second, which was pleaded in bar of the action, inasmuch as it disclosed matter pertaining to foreign law, the Court, before disposing of it, ordered the parties to prepare a joint case for the opinion of English counsel, as to what was the legal effect of the proceedings in the Arches Court at Doctors' Commons. Accordingly, a case was submitted to Sir J. Dodson, Queen's Advocate, and J. Stuart Wortley, Q.C. containing several distinct queries, the object of which was to ascertain how far the wife acted strictly on the defensive in the Ecclesiastical Court in England, and whether she could have acted otherwise than she did. The following parts of the joint opinion of counsel are the most material. "2. The proper form for stating a ground of adultery is by an allegation, such as was pleaded in the present case, but the prayer does not always or necessarily form a part of the allegation, and it may be brought in at the hearing. 3. We are of opinion that a wife may perhaps defend herself in such a suit on the ground of adultery without praying for a divorce, but it is not a course likely to be resorted to; and we are not aware of any case in which it has been done. The wife, having succeeded in establishing the guilt of her husband, would naturally be desirous of obtaining a sentence of divorce instead of a mere dismissal from the suit, more especially as such sentence would place her in a situation to demand permanent alimony, which, in many cases of this kind, is an important consideration. 6. Assuming that the wife could have established her defence on the ground of adultery, without her allegation containing a prayer for a divorce, the judgment would probably have merely dismissed her from the suit, and pronounced against the prayer of the husband; but (as we have said before) we believe no such case has occurred, nor is such a case likely to arise." On considering the above opinion of counsel, the Court of Session held that the second plea to the action in Scotland was bad, and pronounced an interlocutor accordingly. The husband now appealed to the House of Lords against this interlocutor, but not against the interlocutor overruling the first plea as to the jurisdiction.

Bethell, Q.C. and Anderson, Q.C. for the appellant. (Most of the points in the argument being alluded to in the judgment, we give here merely the cases cited, and the points to which they refer.)—The Court in Scotland had no jurisdiction to dissolve an English marriage, which this was. (Lolly v. Sugden, R. & R. 237; Macarthy v. De Croix, 2 Cl. & Fin. 568; Beazley v. Beazley, 3 Hagg. 639; Tovey v. Lindsay, 1 Dow, 118.) [The LORD CHANCELLOR.—As you have not appealed against the interlocutor, finding that the Scotch Court had jurisdiction, you cannot open up that question.] Then we ask leave to amend, and to include that in our appeal. [The LORD CHANCELLOR.—Since the other side objects, it will be better for you to go on, and argue upon the assumption that the Court had jurisdiction, and if afterwards the House finds that the justice of the case requires it, perhaps the House will allow you to amend.] The plea in the Court below was one of res judicata, which is a principle of universal law. (Vinn. Com. in Inst. iv. 13, s. 6.) The wife, in giving in the responsive allegation, was as much an actor or institutor of the suit as if she had commenced it. The form only was changed, and the onus probandi was shifted to her, and she became the plaintiff. (Best v. Best, 1 Add. 411.) She made her election and took her remedy in England. The causa petendi thereby became absorbed, and the same acts of adultery could not again be made the subject of redress in a court of justice. Such a plea clearly bars a second action. (Erskine's Inst. b. 4, c. 3, s. 4; Story's Conflict, 162; Allison v. Catley, 1 Dun. B. & M. 1025.

Dr. Addams and Moncreiff, for respondent.—The Court in Scotland clearly had jurisdiction, for this was a Scotch and not an English marriage. (Warrender v. Warrender, 2 Shaw & Maclean, 154; 2 Cl. & Fin. 566; 3 Lord Brougham's Speeches, 459.) The wife was not an actor or institutor of the suit in England; she was forced into court: she had only one defence, and, having pleaded it, the Court forced her to take a decree à mensâ et toro. There is no such thing as a dismissal of the suit in such circumstances, and there is no case on record where the Court has allowed it. A dismissal of the suit has often been asked, but never granted; and the Court will not consent merely to stay its hand. (Connelly v. Connelly, 7 Notes on Eccl. C. 141.) The prayer for a divorce is a mere formal part of the pleading.

JUDGMENT.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—My lords, this is the case of a marriage by a person who was a Scotchman domiciled in Scotland with an English lady of landed property in this country. The parties went to live in Scotland. I think, if it were now material to go into that question, there would be no difficulty in establishing that the domicile was originally on the part of the husband in Scotland, and that it remains a Scotch domicile. The residence was, in fact, in Scotland; the visits were to England. The result of the proceedings shews that after considerable time, and after several children were born of the marriage, a separation, in fact, took place between the husband and the wife. A settlement had been made. I think he had no property at that time in possession, but there seems to have been a jointure secured upon the Scotch estates for the lady; and the husband had 1,200*l.* a year secured to him on her English property, which consisted of an estate of between 3,000*l.* and 4,000*l.* a year. The husband, in consequence of the wife separating herself from him, instituted proceedings in the Arches Court in England praying for a restitution of conjugal rights. In answer to that demand the wife set up a case of adultery and cruelty. It appears that the nature of the defence in England must have been that which this lady set up. She had not a variety of defences, but a single defence, and that was the case of adultery. I need not go into the allegations of cruelty and the other matters. The consequence of the adultery being proved would, of course, be, that the husband would not succeed in his suit. But it appears clearly enough, from the case of Best v. Best, that formerly a cross suit was necessary by the wife, if she desired her defence to be followed up by a decree in her own favour, divorcing the husband and herself à mensâ et toro. That form, however, has long since been deemed unnecessary, and very properly so. A wife may frame her defence generally, and may rest upon her defence alone, without praying for a divorce à mensâ et toro. If she did not pray for it in her defence, she might pray for it at the hearing, and that would be equally good. The result is, that there is no case, I believe, to be found in which a wife has rested simply upon her defence, and has not coupled that defence with a prayer for a divorce from bed and board. Now if your lordships will consider for a moment, you will find that it could not in the nature of things be otherwise. We are now speaking of matters of substance and not of form. If the husband instituted a suit against the wife for the restitution of conjugal rights, what must be her defence, she living then, of course, separate from him (otherwise, of course, there could be no reason to institute the suit)? Her defence must be, that in consequence of his criminal conduct (and it is only that particular conduct that will enable her to do so), she ought to be absolved from her obligations to live with him, and that bed and board should be separate between them. If she were to rest simply upon the defensive, and then the husband's process were dismissed, the right would remain in the husband, although the remedy might be imperfect, but she would have no decree absolving her liability as a wife to consort with her husband, and give him all the priviliges and rights of a husband. It is of necessity, therefore, that the defence upon this ground should be coupled with that which so naturally and necessarily follows from it, viz. the right to continue in the situation in which she is found at the moment that the proceedings were instituted, living as a wife apart from her husband, and insisting upon the right to continue to do so. If you look at the rights of a husband, and the way in which they may be exercised, and suppose there to be no decree of divorce, you will observe how defenceless the woman must be, and therefore it appears to be a necessary portion of the defence, that she should have the relief of a sentence of divorce. The question remains to be considered, what the consequence of having that relief is. That is a totally different question. But I must here, before I proceed farther, draw your lordships' attention to the nature of the case, as regards the jurisdiction of the Courts in Scotland. Their jurisdiction has been assumed to rest, independently of any general reasoning upon the fact that this lady was a Scotch spouse. She is equally an English spouse: the marriage is both an English and a Scotch marriage. As the husband was a domiciled Scotchman when he married, there is no doubt that by the marriage the wife's domicile followed that of her husband, and she became, therefore, a Scotch spouse. There is no question about that. It is said that the divorce here got rid of the husband's domicile. But supposing that to be so, upon which I would rather not give any opinion, yet that would not create any difficulty in this case as to the jurisdiction of the Scotch Courts; because, supposing in other respects the proceedings which the wife instituted there to be right, according to the law of Scotland, the husband being domiciled in Scotland, and being a Scotchman, the crime itself having been committed in Scotland, there can be no question that the lady was entitled, as far as jurisdiction goes, to take her remedy against the husband: no question could be raised upon that point. As far, therefore, as depends upon the simple question of jurisdiction, I think the case is free from all possibility of doubt. What the effect of the proceeding is, is another question. Against the suit, therefore, in Scotland for a divorce à vinculo, the husband pleaded, first, want of jurisdiction; but that plea was overruled in the Court below, and he has not appealed to this House against the interlocutor so overruling it. And I think the appellant was well advised in not including that point in his appeal, for the jurisdiction of the Scotch Court in cases like this was clearly established beyond the possibility of a doubt by the decision of this House in Warrender's case (supra). Well then, my Lords, there is this very material difference to be considered between the law of Scotland and the law of England. By the law of Scotland you may obtain a decree for separate maintenance or a decree for separation, according as circumstances may be proved; that is, in effect, you may obtain a divorce à mensâ et toro, or you may also obtain in Scotland, from the courts there, what you cannot obtain here,—a divorce à vinculo matrimonii. Here you can do no such thing. It is necessary by our law to resort to Parliament in order to obtain that latter relief. And here that very relief cannot be obtained, speaking generally (there may be exceptions to that), unless the husband has obtained a divorce à mensâ et toro in the Ecclesiastical Court, before he comes to this House for that relief. The first step, therefore, so far from being inconsistent with this claim to have the knot untied, —the first step in loosening the knot is considered to assist this House in absolutely untying it. What is done by Parliament is considered to be in aid and furtherance of that relief, which has been obtained in the Court below. In the Courts in Scotland no such remedy is to be had, and no such remedy is necessary, because the Courts there can, either as a second step or as a first step, altogether dissolve the marriage. There is one other distinction to be attended to, which is, that in England, generally speaking, a woman cannot obtain a divorce, whereas a man can. In Scotland, the woman's rights and the man's rights are equal. The woman can maintain the same action in Scotland, and avail herself of the same process for relief against the husband, as her husband could maintain against her. Keeping these distinctions in view, I think your Lordships will be able, without difficulty, to apprehend what the point of law is in this case. The point now before the House depends on the second plea, which is, "that the wife having instituted a suit against defendant in the Arches Court in England, founded on the same acts of adultery, &c. is barred from maintaining the present action." Now, in my view, in the first place, I should say this plea is founded upon a false allegation. I do not admit that the plaintiff in this case did institute a suit against the defendant in the Arches Court. The husband instituted a suit: the wife took a defence which, by the forms of the Court, amounted to a counter process, no doubt; and, as she had to prove her case, for of course she had to prove the defence she set up, she became an actor beyond all question. But that does not justify the statement in this plea, that she instituted a suit against the defendant. She instituted no suit. She entered a defence, which, by the rules of the Court, also enabled her, and of which she availed herself, to raise a counter demand. That is, not only to sustain her defence as against his immediate demand, but to sustain her defence for all time to come, till they are reconciled. The husband says, restore to me conjugal rights. The wife says, I have a perfect defence, but it will not do for me to rest upon that defence just for this hour, and for the husband to come again (as may possibly be the case, upon which I give no opinion), he not being estopped from all the rights which he would possess as her husband. She says, I mean, as far as I can, to defend myself; and how am I to defend myself? Not simply by disposing of your immediate demand for restitution of conjugal rights, but by the Court stating now, in the way in which my defence has raised the question, that you are not to have those rights restored to you at any future time, unless we become reconciled. That is a perfect defence. Why it should not be a good defence I cannot see: it is admitted sensibly enough as a defence. They say the lady is an actor. To be sure she is. Suppose, in any personal attack, one man strikes another. The man who was first struck knocks the other down. No doubt he is an actor, but is not that action a defence? Why did he knock the other man down? Simply because he had been assaulted. It was in defence, and therefore to say that such a man is an actor, is saying nothing, but that it is necessary to his defence that he should assume the part of an aggressor, but it is simply a defence, for he did not begin the attack. Nobody can say that it was the beginning of the attack, any more that you can say here, in my apprehension, that this was the institution of a suit by the wife. It is strictly and simply a defence, with the allegation which enables her to obtain the remedy she sought, and it cannot be considered, I think, as the institution of a suit. The appellant in his case takes care, in another passage, to represent it as if the wife were the person who had commenced this proceeding, which she certainly was not. My lords, there is another reason, why the wife should be allowed to take that defence, which is, that she gets a permanent alimony by it. Of course she would be left without provision unless she were permitted to take that defence. My lords, the objection, which is taken partly in the pleadings and partly at your lordships' bar, assumes this shape. Independently of the question, which I shall presently consider more at large, namely, the effect of this divorce à mensâ et toro, it is objected upon the pleadings, and also in the argument at the bar, that, if there had been no proceeding by the wife, as they call it, in the Arches Court in this country, still she could not have sued in Scotland as the law stands there. Now, as I understand that point, which was partly argued, though not so much at large as it is stated in the papers, it depends upon two or three authorities. One of them is the case of McCarthy v. De Caix, which was before Lord Brougham in the Court of Chancery, in which I was counsel, and the other case is Lolly's case, which was also in this country. In MacCarthy v. De Caix, the question arose between the representatives after the death of the wife, upon the right to certain property which had belonged to her, and that involved the question whether the marriage had or had not been properly dissolved by the authorities in Denmark. That depended upon this. The husband was a domiciled Dane. He married an English lady. They went to Denmark, and the husband there obtained an absolute divorce, dissolving the marriage; and upon certain letters which had been written, the question arose, whether he had or had not waived the right which, as husband, he might have had to a certain portion of the wife's property. I stated that I was counsel in the case only for this reason, and I think my recollection enables me to say, that the question of the effect of the divorce was not argued in that case, and I see no trace of it in the report; on the contrary, the inference is the other way, and my strong impression is, that that point was not argued in that case, but the Lord Chancellor took up the point, and upon Lolly's case he held, that an English marriage could not be dissolved by a Danish court—that our law would not recognise such a dissolution. Now Lolly's case was of this nature. An Englishman and an Englishwoman were married in England. The man married twice in England; the first wife being alive, he was tried for bigamy. His excuse was, that the first wife had committed adultery in England, and that he had obtained a divorce in Scotland. All the judges were of opinion, that the marriage was not dissolved by the law of England. He was convicted of bigamy, sentenced, and punished by imprisonment for a very considerable period, and afterwards pardoned. That has been considered, no doubt, a solemn decision by the judges of England, upon the effect of such a divorce. But, in the first place, it does not touch this case, because that was a case of English subjects with an English domicile, the crime being committed in England, with a residence of above forty days by the husband in Scotland. It was an undefended cause on the part of the wife, I believe, but whether that was so or not, the whole object there really was to evade the law of England; and I think that is proved pretty clearly by the fact that the husband seems to have married again in England, as I collect from the dates, almost immediately after the dissolution of the marriage in Scotland. Now, taking that to be so, I am not here to advise your lordships to dispute that law, nor to enter into it, but what does it lead to? It leads to that which we know does exist, namely, an actual conflict between the laws of Scotland and of England. That is very much to be deprecated, but there is at this moment an actual conflict of laws between the two countries. What then? We have, my lords, no power by the constitution, sitting here, to decide in a Scotch case against the law of Scotland, merely because there is a conflict with the law of England. Scotland has a right to her laws, and to have them administered according to the law of Scotland, just as much as England would claim to have her rights established according to the law of England. But does that conflict affect a case of this sort, where you are sitting as in a Scotch court, and have to decide what is the Scotch law? I will shew to your lordships what was the opinion of Lord Brougham in MacCarthy v. De Caix, and who relied so much upon Lolly's case, when the same argument was pressed upon him in Warrender's case. His own opinion was constantly referred to and pressed upon him, and it was said,—How can you decide in favour of the jurisdiction in Scotland, after the opinion you have expressed, that an English marriage could not be dissolved in Denmark, and after saying, that you thought Lolly's case could be supported? In answer to that the noble and learned lord (2 Cl. & Fin. 567) says:—"I think that this judgment does not break in on Lolly's case. This is a decision in reference to the law of Scotland, a judgment founded on which we now, as a Court of Appeal, confirm. Lolly's case refers to the law of England. The note of what I said in Chancery in MacCarthy v. De Caix, may or may not be correct. Whatever opinion I may have entertained of Lolly's case in the Court of Chancery, or privately, cannot affect my judicial opinion in this House, sitting as a member of a Court of Appeal on a case from Scotland." I quite concur in that opinion. I shall therefore dismiss those cases altogether from my consideration, and I shall assume, as I am entitled to do, that the jurisdiction in this case was perfect, and that the only question is,—Has the wife lost her right to go to the Court of Scotland for further relief, in consequence of the relief which she has obtained in the courts of this country? The principal case which was relied upon in support of that doctrine, was Allison v. Catley, supra. (His lordship then examined that Scotch case in detail, and showed that it did not support the doctrine referred to.) It was contended at the Bar, that the wife in this case should at once have declined the jurisdiction of the Arches Court, or, at all events, have instantly raised her action in Scotland, and pleaded that action in defence against the English suit. Now I apprehend such a defence clearly would not have been successful. The Court in this country never would have stopped its own proceeding, because proceedings had been raised in a foreign country by an adverse party. The proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court here never would have been stopped, simply because the defendant had attempted to evade its jurisdiction, and had had recourse to another country. (His lordship then alluded to the law of Scotland as to allowing a spouse first to sue for the lesser remedy, and thereafter to sue for the higher remedy, and said:—)I think, therefore, we may safely assume it to be the law of Scotland, that the wife might first obtain in Scotland a divorce à mensâ et toro, and then afterwards maintain another suit for a divorce à vinculo matrimonii. Now, my lords, if that be so, we then come to a very important question about the analogy between the law here and the law in Scotland. But before I approach that, I will refer to an argument which was advanced at your lordships' bar on the part of the appellant, taking, by way of illustration, the case of a contract for the purchase of land in this country. It was said truly, that the party would have two remedies; one to bring an action for damages, and the other to file a bill for a specific performance; but the learned counsel asked,—Was there ever an instance of a man first bringing an action for damages, and then filing a bill for specific performance? Probably not, and for this reason, that in point of fact the two remedies are inconsistent. A man has the choice of two remedies; he may either go to law for damages, and keep his estate, or he may insist upon it, that the agreement ought to be executed in specie, and that he has a right to divest himself of the estate which the purchaser is bound to take, paying him the whole of the purchase-money, and not leaving him to require any measure of damages. The case, therefore, does not apply. But observe, that even that case is not entirely free from difficulty, for supposing a purchaser in the first instance to file a bill for specific performance, and to fail, he is left at liberty, and in many instances that liberty has been exercised with very great advantage, after having attempted to obtain a specific performance, his bill having been dismissed, to resort to law for damages, and he has often recovered very ample damages. Take the case again of a vendor. A vendor files a bill for specific performance, and his bill is dismissed: he may go to law for damages, and he may recover damages. So that in point of fact the two remedies, where they are not inconsistent, may be resorted to even in the only case which has been put by way of analogy in the law of England. If the two remedies are inconsistent, a man must take his choice of one; but if they are consistent, he may try one, and though he may fail in that trial, he may resort to the other and succeed upon that. Now, my lords, let us consider how the matter stands as regards the law of England and the law of Scotland. No man can dispute that this lady, by the law of Scotland, with which the law of England could not interfere, might have resorted to Scotland in the first instance, and have obtained a decree of divorce à vinculo matrimonii. That is beyond all question. It is equally clear, I think, that she might have gone to Scotland, and have obtained in the first instance the lesser remedy of a divorce à mensâ et toro, and afterwards have maintained a suit for an absolute dissolution of the tie of marriage. It was said at the bar, in the course of the argument, that the latter remedy could not be resorted to unless for a subsequent crime. No authority was quoted for that, and I take it to be clear, that it is not the law of Scotland. Of course subsequent crime might and would entitle the aggrieved party to the remedy, but the remedy exists without subsequent crime. If the wife, by the law of Scotland, which we are bound here to administer, could obtain a release altogether from the marriage in Scotland in the first instance, or even obtain it by steps, if the husband elects to come into the courts of this country in the first instance, and asks for a restitution of conjugal rights which she had refused to him, and which, therefore, naturally would lead him to suppose she would have resort to the remedies to which I have referred, for she had ceased to act as the wife of this gentleman—she had absolved herself from the marriage-tie, and only wanted what was necessary to obtain a legal confirmation of an act which she herself had committed, namely, the act of separating herself from her husband, as it is alleged, with sufficient cause—then can the act of the husband take away from the wife the right which she has by law to the remedies to which I have referred; and if it cannot, which clearly I apprehend it cannot, the question simply is, what is the effect of the act which she herself has committed in the suit instituted in this country? She was dragged into court. She was compelled to go. Supposing she had taken the advice, which was not offered to her at the time, to decline the jurisdiction of the English Court, there would have been a decree against her in her absence, and she would have been subject in this country to have had that decree enforced against her for the restitution of conjugal rights, which she had refused him. The decree would have gone against her beyond all question. Is she to submit to that, when she has a defence open to her, which, as I have before stated, would make perpetual that separation which has already taken place in point of fact. Can it be asserted, then, that, because she has taken the remedy which she is entitled to in the suit instituted not by her but by the husband—because she has taken the only defence that was open to her, for there is no other remedy open to her (whether she was entitled to ask for a divorce à mensâ et toro I do not trouble myself at this moment with considering)—the only defence which was open to her was that of cruelty and adultery. She makes, therefore, no other defence, but upon that defence, by the course of the Court, she is entitled to the relief she obtained. Can it be insisted that, because she took that which the Court tendered to her—because she obtained that relief which the law gave to her—she is therefore to be estopped from resorting to a higher remedy, to which she was entitled before the suit was instituted, and which she has done no act to deprive herself of the benefit of? If we look to the operation of the law of England and the law of Scotland, we shall find that, by upholding this decision, we put them perfectly upon the same footing. The law of England differs from that of Scotland as to the right of the wife being co-equal with the right of the husband, but in other respects it stands precisely, as it appears to me, upon a similar footing, with this difference only—a difference which the law of each country itself introduces—namely, that in England you must have a divorce by Parliament in order to dissolve the tie, and in Scotland the Court itself can untie the knot. But in England, as I before stated, when the husband is asking for a divorce, for the exercise of the highest power which the country can exercise, so far from its being considered an objection that he has already obtained a divorce à mensâ et toro, unless he obtains that divorce in the first instance, he is not entitled to the higher remedy. Then if the wife by the same law obtain, not herself having instituted the suit, which I do not enter now upon, as it is not before the House, and as it introduces an additional difficulty; but if she obtain that same remedy which he obtains, and if she can, in the court in that country, to which she has a right to resort—a resort which your lordships cannot prevent her from having—obtain a divorce à vinculo matrimonii, do not the parties stand upon precisely the same footing? The administration of the laws of the two countries is different, but is there any difference in degree? Is there any difference in the remedy? She has a right to dissolve the marriage altogether. She has not lost that right, and I think, therefore, as far as those points go, I ought to recommend to your lordships to affirm the decision of the Court below, which is complained of.

Lord TRURO.—My lords, though I concur with my noble and learned friend in the main in the judgment which he has moved, I should desire an opportunity of stating my own reasons for the judgment which I advise your lordships to give in this case, lest I should have misunderstood the argument of my noble and learned friend. (After adverting to points connected with the state of the record, and peculiar to Scotch practice.)—My lords, the question which has been discussed, and which has become a material incident in the decision of this case is, what is the effect of the proceeding in the English Consistorial Court? It has been correctly said, that it was foreign law to the Court in Scotland, but, in my humble apprehension, a very erroneous view was taken of the effect of these proceedings. I do not think that the error ought in any degree to affect your lordship's judgment, but certainly it would be more satisfactory if it were otherwise. It is said that, according to the course of practice and of law in the Ecclesiastical Courts of England, a husband or wife, who, by a responsive allegation in a suit, charges adultery, and prays a remedy upon that charge, is not the institutor and originator of the suit. My lords, I am satisfied myself that, upon a full and correct investigation of that question, that opinion would turn out to be utterly erroneous, and that in every view in point of law the allegation, that the lady instituted the suit, is correct. The process of every Court has but one object, which is, to bring the party before the Court, to answer the matter which is to be produced against him. The complaint is to be found in the libel. If a party is engaged in a suit before a Court with a certain individual, there wants no allegation to bring that party before the Court: he is there. We have a similar proceeding in England. If a man brings an action against a debtor for one cause, and he has another cause of action which cannot in point of form be joined with that which is first brought, he needs not to begin a new action, though he cannot engraft the second complaint upon the first, but without any new process to bring his debtor into court, he having been brought into court in the first suit, the plaintiff can, what is called, declare by-the-by against him, and he may go on, and to all intents and purposes that is just as much a suit as if it had been preceded by a process to bring the party into court. And it is impossible, as it appears to me, to attend to the judgment of the Court below in this case, or I think even to go through the cases which are cited in Best v. Best, supra, without coming to the conclusion that, if the wife or the husband advances in a responsive allegation matter which may be made the foundation of a decree, that libel is in the nature of a declaration in a new cause. What said Sir H. Jenner Fust in this very case? Why, he said—"This was originally a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, promoted by Mr. Geils against his wife, on whose behalf, in answer to his libel, an allegation was brought in and admitted, the purport of which is to charge" so and so, "concluding with a prayer, that the Court would pronounce a sentence of separation on all the three grounds. The nature, therefore, of the original cause, has been altered and changed, and the shape it now assumes is that of a cause of separation brought by the wife." The correct view of the proceedings in Doctors'-commons, therefore, was, that in every legal point of view, and according to the practice of the Court, and upon principle, this lady was as much the originator of a suit, and as much a plaintiff in a suit, as if the proceeding had been the only one. My lords, I will now pass from this point to the main question in the cause. The question is, is the defence contained in the pleas, which have been brought under your lordships' consideration, a sufficient answer in point of law to the libel of this lady, in which she prays for a divorce à vinculo matrimonii? My lords, it will be necessary to consider what is the nature of this first plea. Is it a plea by way of estoppel that the party has taken a course which estops her in point of law from prosecuting the remedy which is now sought in the Scotch Courts, or is it in the nature of a plea of judgment recovered? It seems to me to partake more of the nature of a plea of judgment recovered than of any other plea. But it is essential that your lordships should bear in mind what my noble and learned friend has stated throughout, that you are sitting in a Scotch Court of Appeal, and that you are administering Scotch law. Care, therefore, must be taken as to how far you will use authorities of English law. They may be used to illustrate the argument; they may be used to shew that any principle you lay down is worthy of consideration by reason of its being adopted in the law of another country; but English decisions are not binding authorities in questions of Scotch law. Now, my lords, I am not aware precisely to what extent the law of estoppel prevails in Scotland, but all that I have been enabled to discover on the subject leads me to the conclusion, that the principle prevails there as it does here with very little difference. Every estoppel must be precise and distinct, and to the same point. This is an application in Scotland for a divorce à vinculo matrimonii. What has been done by this lady, which is inconsistent with her prayer for a divorce, so as to put the case upon the ground of estoppel, and to enable the husband to say, you, by your conduct, have said and done that which is inconsistent with the remedy which you are now pursuing? I am not adverting now to the effect of the plea of judgment recovered, which I will consider in a moment. My noble and learned friend stated, that a divorce à mensâ et toro in Scotland might be considered as ancillary to an ultimate judgment of divorce à vinculo—shewing most distinctly, therefore, that in the Scotch law the two are not inconsistent, supposing that the proceeding had been in Scotland; and in truth nothing has been urged at the Bar which at all makes the doctrine of estoppel applicable to this case, so as to lead to the conclusion that this plea presents a good bar to the proceeding. It is more in the nature of a plea of judgment recovered. My Lords, this, I apprehend, would be found pretty much to be the law of every country, that, where a man has once sought redress for a particular injury, he is not entitled to split his complaint, and in respect of the same subject-matter of complaint to ask for one species of redress, which shall be applicable to the whole subject-matter of his complaint in one court, or at one time, and a different species of redress for identically the same wrong or matter of complaint at another time. In this case I will suppose, according to the impressions which I have presumed to state to the House, that this lady, independently of any suit on the part of the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, had commenced a suit for a divorce à mensâ et toro in England. Consider what her situation is. She is exposed to the coercion of her husband. She stands under the legal duty of cohabiting with him, and he possesses, independently of the interposition of the Court, a very considerable extent of power in the way of compelling her to do so, and of restraining her free will and inclination, and it is obvious, much distress and uneasiness might be occasioned to a woman, who, having just cause of separation from her husband, should yet omit, he desiring to continue the cohabitation, to protect herself by the authority of the law and the sentence of a Court. She is in a country where marriages are indissoluble. Remarks are made in the court below now and then (I am aware that it is a mere form of expression, and that the learned judges have a perfectly correct apprehension of the true state of the facts), but Acts of Parliament for the purpose of divorce are sometimes talked of as remedies. They are not remedies,—they are new laws. Marriage is not the less indissoluble by the law of England because Parliament, in its wisdom, will now and then annul a marriage where there is a proper case for doing so. The law stands just as free from doubt or ambiguity, and it may just as correctly be pronounced to be the law of England that marriages in England are absolutely indissoluble, although it is possible that next week a new law may be enacted which may make a particular marriage dissoluble. It is, therefore, not a remedy, or at all in the nature of a remedy. Mr. Justice Story ("Conflict of Laws") says, that the annulling of a marriage is to be considered not so much in the nature of a civil remedy as of a punishment, and as a course of proceeding tending to protect the public morals, and that the public have an interest in such dissolution of marriage on public grounds. Therefore it is not inconsistency to hold that marriages are indissoluble. In the case before your lordships the woman is in England, where she has no means by any legal mode (although an Act of Parliament may be granted, but I shall throw that out of my consideration)—she has no means of protecting herself from her husband forcing her to cohabit with him. She resorts to the law for that purpose. She states her wrong, and she prays the protection of the law, and accordingly a divorce à mensâ et toro is pronounced, until the parties shall be reconciled. She has come into a court not to ask partial relief; she has not come to divide her complaint, and to endeavour to recover by instalments the redress which she desires. She states her whole complaint, and she asks all the relief which it is in the power of the Court to give; and she has not come to the same Court to ask for any other relief, for the very valid reason, that she knows it is not in its power to afford her such relief. She goes, therefore, to Scotland, and we are dealing with a case in which the Scotch Courts have jurisdiction. She there prays for a divorce à vinculo. What authority has been cited to shew that the remedy or protection which she has obtained by the divorce granted her in the Court of Doctors' Commons is a bar to that proceeding? I am not aware that any such authority has been cited except the case of Allison v. Catley, which I will deal with presently. Has any principle been cited? Why, in England persons may have two remedies for the same complaint. It is said, can a man bring an action for damages for a breach of contract, and can he also file a bill for specific performance? I can very readily conceive that he may do both. Suppose a man has entered into a contract for the purchase of an estate. Suppose he then make a sub-contract, and that by reason of the failure of the first party, he himself not having the power of conveying the estate, which has not been conveyed to him, is subjected to an action by the other party. He may have a right to have the contract performed—he may have a right to require that he shall be placed in that situation, in which it was the object of the contract to place him, but he may also have suffered a legal injury, by which he would become entitled to a certain amount of damages. A Court of Equity may say he will not allow you to have the remedy of requiring a specific performance of the contract, but I apprehend, if it could be shewn that real injury had been sustained, the party might then proceed to recover damages for the loss of the estate. That is settled law, and is clear enough. This may be done, supposing a man covenants to pay you an annuity,—you may bring an action of debt for the annuity, or you may bring an action of damages for the nonpayment of the annuity, but you cannot split your remedy. You cannot do that which, in the case of Lord Bagot, was attempted to be done. (Lord Bagot v. Williams, 5 D. & R. 87 and 719; 3 B. & C. 235 and 772.) You cannot go to a court with an entire demand, and in that court limit that demand below its real amount and recover, and then go to some other court and recover the remainder. In Lord Bagot's case it was deemed expedient to go to a court of limited jurisdiction, the object being to obtain a judgment quickly. That court possessed jurisdiction to an amount equal to what was thought to be the amount of the defendant's property, and it was supposed, therefore, it would be of no use attempting to recover more. Lord Bagot recovered to the extent he claimed. The parties afterwards found that the defendant had more property,—then they brought an action in an English court to recover the rest. It was held that they could not do that, and so it has been held in other cases. But this is not such a case. Here the ground upon which I think in concurrence with my noble and learned friend that this is no bar is, that the two remedies are collateral—they are directed to distinct objects, and have totally different effects, and therefore the circumstance of this lady pursuing a remedy, for the purpose of obtaining protection against being compelled to cohabit with her husband either during a given time or an indefinite time, is quite consistent with the proceedings which she afterwards instituted ultimately to annul the marriage. My Lords, the question which it has been desired to raise in this case, which would be in the nature of a review of a very important case decided by the Scotch law, to the effect that an English marriage might be annulled in Scotland, will, in all probability, arise again and be brought to your lordships' Bar, because it is obvious that the legitimate object of this lady is, by annulling the marriage under the law of Scotland, to free her estates from the heavy charge of 1,200*l.* a year to her husband for his life, she at the same time having none of the comforts of marriage.

The Lord Chancellor.—That is under the settlement.

Lord Truro.—Yes, it is a settlement of 1,200*l.* Now, supposing that ultimately the Scotch Courts should pronounce a divorce, and the husband should desire to bring under the consideration of the House again the question of how far this marriage is liable to be dissolved by the Scotch Court, and he takes proceedings for that purpose under that settlement, I can readily conceive very many ways in which that question may be raised, which makes it, therefore, extremely important, not only that may be the ultimate judgment of this House, but that a correct view should be taken of the grounds of the judgment in the particular case. My lords, considering the great importance of this case, I have searched very widely, and in fact made use of all the materials that were within my reach for the purpose of seeing if I could discover any principle either in the Scotch law or in the English law, which it appeared to me this House ought to adopt as applicable to this case, but I cannot find any which would go to shew that pursuing a collateral remedy of this description is any bar to the pursuit, either in the same court or in another court, of a further remedy. The two things may well stand together, and I think that disposes of the only or the principal difficulty arising out of the case of Allison v. Catley. [His lordship then examined that case in detail, and held that it was inconsistent with the view of the House in this case, and was therefore wrong.] I therefore concur in the judgment which my noble and learned friend has recommended your lordships to pronounce in this case. Judgment affirmed.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. Kenny, Esq. of Lincoln's-inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Saturday, Nov. 20.

Hawkes v. The Eastern Counties Railway Company.

Purchase of land required by a railway company from a tenant for life—Title—Specific performance—Taking land for "extraordinary purposes" under Railway Consolidation Act.

A. being tenant in fee-simple of one part, and tenant for life with remainder over in strict settlement of another part of an estate, contracted to sell all his interest for two several sums of 8,000l. and 5,000l. to a railway company, who stipulated to obtain powers either by a Bill which was then pending in Parliament or otherwise, which would enable a good conveyance to be executed of all the property so as to vest in them an estate in fee-simple. The Bill passed without containing such powers, but the company was empowered to purchase for extraordinary purposes connected with the railway, any quantity of land not exceeding thirty acres; although the land had not been valued in the manner pointed out by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, and although the purchase-money had been thrown into one fund, a decree (the plaintiff submitting to have the two sums above mentioned treated as if the same were purchase-money arising from estates devised to the uses of the will of the plaintiff's father, and the defendant declining to state any election, or to express any wish as to what account or in what manner the said moneys should be paid, and the defendants not requiring that a valuation should be made in the manner prescribed by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act), by which the defendants, upon the plaintiff's executing and delivering to them at their expense a proper conveyance, were directed to pay the said sums into the bank to the credit of, &c. subject to the further order of the Court, was, upon appeal, affirmed.

The Lord Chancellor having affirmed the decree for specific performance in this case, 20 Law T. Rep. 117, the appeal against the decree made by his Honour the Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce, on the cause coming on on exceptions to the Master's report and further directions, was now argued.

The facts of the case and the terms of the decree will be found 17 Law T. Rep. 301.

The same counsel as appeared on the appeal against the decree for specific performance were again heard on the question of title. Their arguments are alluded to in the Lord Chancellor's judgment.

The Lord Chancellor.—The questions of title, in the way in which they are brought before the Court, were not concluded by the decree which I affirmed for specific performance in this case. But the shape which it now takes is, that although the agreement, on the face of it, was a valid agreement, and the Court has directed it to be specifically performed, yet that when you attempt to carry it out, by giving to the company that to which they are entitled,—a conveyance of the property under the Acts of Parliament,—the powers of the Acts of Parliament are not sufficient to enable the tenant for life to bind the remainder man. The question, as a question of title, is open; the exceptions were taken which cover these points; and as those exceptions came on with the further directions, and one order was made overruling the exceptions and decreeing a specific performance in the way in which the decree now stands, the defendants are entitled to enter into the discussion. But if they are not bound by the decree from entering into these questions, then, on the other hand, they are not released from any difficulties that arise on the agreement, to be executed between the parties. Now that was an absolute agreement for the purchase of property by the company from the plaintiff, if the Bill in its then present, or in any amended, modified, or altered form, should pass. The Bill did pass then, so that there was an absolute agreement to purchase this property. There was no deception as to the state of the title, because it recited expressly that he was tenant for life of the greater part of the estates agreed to be sold with remainder over in strict settlement; and the company stipulated that they would "obtain all such powers and authorities, and do and perform all acts and things, and adopt all such measures, and pursue all such courses, either in or by such Bill as aforesaid, or otherwise, as are, is, or shall, or may be necessary or required for enabling the said Henry Hawkes, and his heirs, and all other necessary parties, to sell and convey, and the said company to purchase the said hereditaments and premises from the said Henry Hawkes and his heirs, so as the same may become vested in the said company on payment of the said several sums aforesaid, for an estate of inheritance in fee simple." The company, therefore, by their contract, themselves stipulated to obtain powers, either by that Bill or otherwise, which would enable a good conveyance to be executed to them of all the property, so as to vest a good estate of inheritance in them. Now it was insisted that the Act of Parliament, as it passed, did not enable the company to carry this contract into execution. There is no doubt that the property of which Mr. Hawkes was tenant in fee simple, was within the line of deviation, and therefore upon that there could be no question. There is no doubt that that formed part of the whole estate of which this gentleman was seised, but whether the connection of that part with the rest would have enabled Mr. Hawkes to insist upon the whole being taken, is a question that has not been entered into. But the company had power to purchase any quantity of land not exceeding thirty acres, "for extraordinary purposes connected with the said intended railway." Now, the portion which is here taken, is a very small portion as compared with that—some four or five acres, instead of thirty; and the question, irrespective of others, is, whether, under that clause, that might be taken? Now, the company agreed to obtain powers which would enable Mr. Hawkes to convey the property. As soon as this Act of Parliament had passed, and the time arrived for the completion of the contract, a correspondence was entered into with the view of examining the title, and an appointment was made in order that that title might be examined with the deeds, and that appointment was accepted by the solicitor of the company, but was not kept by him; and the consequence was, that the matter went off, and then they objected altogether to executing the contract. After the passing of this Act, the company did not say—We cannot carry this contract into execution because the powers of our Act do not enable us. I must assume, therefore, that they were at that time satisfied (their powers not having been exhausted, and the time not having expired for the exercise of those powers) that they could obtain a good vested estate in fee simple under such powers as they were themselves satisfied with, and which they themselves obtained in the Bill which was carried into a law; and there is nothing to shew that, if they had desired a more extended power as to this property, they could not have obtained it. They never attempted to obtain any more extended powers. Now, there is nothing on the face of these matters to prove that the land in question could not be taken under the Act of Parliament; because, for extraordinary purposes they might take thirty acres "connected with the railway." I cannot say what those purposes were. I cannot make them disclose now what they were. They thought at the time the Act passed that they were entitled to take the land, and after they have been compelled by a decree of the Court to perform the contract, they ask me to look with the greatest suspicion and jealousy at those powers, and to hold that they do not enable them to do that which they themselves undertook to do, and which I must assume they did accomplish by the Act of Parliament itself. I am inclined to think that this was land which they might take. Of the part which was within the limits of deviation, there could be no doubt. It might come within the clause which authorises a party, part of whose land is taken, which might damage the rest, to insist upon the whole being taken. The extraordinary purposes to which this land might have been applied might have authorised its being taken. It is not necessary for the company, at the time they take it, to shew there is an extraordinary purpose just then to be executed; but a company making sidings, stations, roads, &c. want and buy land, not that it is wanted at the time, but they buy it providently to enlarge their stations, and to enable them to have many conveniences. Therefore, the purchases are constantly made, and the Court would be very unwilling to preclude the bonâ fide exercise of discretion on the part of a company in making such a purchase. It would require a very strong case indeed, after a purchase so made, and after the money is paid, to induce the Court to disturb it. But then it was said that the Act of Parliament, in order to guard persons in remainder against estates in settlement being sold by a tenant for lifeat an improper price, required that where the purchase-money was not ascertained in a particular manner pointed out by the Act of Parliament, there it should be ascertained by two valuers, and they were to ascertain, not the value, but that the price agreed upon was not less than its value. That is a sort of negative valuation. Now this has never been done, because the company did not choose to join in the act. The Act of Parliament expressly provided that one of the valuers was to be appointed by the company; and it would be a mere mockery of justice were I to hold, the company, having declined to join in that which was necessary to make a title, they were now at liberty to withdraw from making that title complete. It is not a question whether they have that power or not; they have the power, but they declined to exercise it; they say, because they have not exercised it that a good title never can be made; because this purchase-money has not been ascertained in a way that will make the purchase binding on the remainder-man, they have an insecure title. To whom will the fault be attributed? To themselves. This Court will not allow men to evade their contracts by refusing to do that which they have contracted, and to perform that which they are bound; they cannot make an objection to the title by themselves withdrawing from the exercise of those powers which they have obtained, and which they contracted to obtain. Although I agree to the argument, that in order to make a title under this Act of Parliament, the value should have been ascertained in the manner pointed out; yet as they have chosen to withdraw from that necessary act, the breach is by themselves, and I shall not permit them to take advantage of it. But it is never too late to act rightly—it is never too late to retrace a false step; and if the company now desire that the property should be valued by two persons in the way pointed out in order to make a good title, I am now ready to give them that opportunity, though it will be at their own expense. On that they will exercise their own option. Then it was said, as another objection on the Act of Parliament, that the compulsory power and the power of the tenant for life to convey were co-equal and co-existent; that if one did not arise the other could not be exercised. There, again, it is entirely owing to the company itself that it has not placed itself in a position to give effect to the powers of the tenant for life; for instead of carrying on the undertaking, they have thought fit to relinquish it, and I have already decided that they are not at liberty—by merely relinquishing that which they were bound to and ought to have performed—to withdraw, and to say that this power cannot be exercised because we have neglected to do the necessary acts. I am of opinion they are bound to do all that which is incumbent on them under these Acts of Parliament in order to enable them to obtain a good title; and if they have failed to do anything which, being done, would have rendered them competent to obtain a good title, then the fault lies at their own doors, and they cannot complain in this court. Then questions have been raised independently of these points, particularly on the decree. The plaintiff no doubt found himself in this difficulty, that he had sold the property, consisting partly of what he was entitled to in fee, and the greater part of which he was also entitled to for life and in strict settlement, for one entire sum; and if the Court had carried the contract into execution in the ordinary way, there must have been, no doubt, an apportionment, and then it would have been seen whether that apportionment would have enabled the valuers to see that it was not less than the value. The seller very wisely threw the whole sum into the settled fund, as he was at liberty to do, no doubt, and, therefore, of course, he has rendered, except for the purpose of working the machinery of the Act, a reference to surveyors a mere farce; because, of course, seeing the price which is given for the settled estate, they would instantly see it was not less, but a great deal more than the value of the land. Then it was said, that the Court was not at liberty to permit a portion of the price, which properly ought to have been attributed to the fee-simple estate to be thrown into one fund for the settled estates, for the purpose of enabling the parties to convey; no such power is given them. The money being thrown into the common fund very much increases it, but it does not increase the power of Mr. Hawkes, as tenant for life, to convey that settled property, nor does it detract from his power, it remains just as it was; therefore, I see no possible objection on that ground. I can see no difficulty in the Court accepting the sum which Mr. Hawkes thought fit to add to the settled fund, and treating that as part of the purchase money—it was part of the purchase money, and he chooses to throw his estate into the fund. Then the decree, referring to that portion of the agreement which relates to the valuation, states that the company, not requiring a valuation nor appointing a valuer, directs the contract to be executed. Now I have already offered the company the option of having the property valued. I am willing to do everything to complete the title as far as the Act of Parliament will permit, they therefore cannot escape on that ground. Then it was said, that as the money was directed to be paid into court, a title could not in that way be acquired under Acts of Parliament. It is quite clear that that is so. The money ought not to be paid under the Act of Parliament; but then the company, who ought to know something about their Acts of Parliament, have nothing to do but to desire me, which I will now accede to, to order the money to be paid into the bank or otherwise, precisely as they point out. But, although I agree with the argument of the appellant, that, generally speaking, the Court is not to go on and call on the plaintiff or defendant either to relinquish this, or to answer that, or to make this claim, or to give up the other, yet there are cases (and I think this is one) in which the Court properly addresses itself to a litigant party who has the choice of doing or not doing an act, and who objects to a thing because the act is not done. The Court says, you can do it if you please; and if you say nothing, I shall act as if you refuse. There is no hardship in that; it is a benefit. You tender the party the option, and no suitor has a right to withdraw from assisting the Court in carrying into execution its decree. He may sit silent and refuse to assist in making the decree as perfect as it might be. He may properly withhold any consent, but, generally speaking, the Court has a right to expect the assistance of the Bar, and it is the duty of the Bar to assist the Court, when the decree is pronounced, in making that decree as perfect as possible. But I deny that he can withdraw his own personal aid, where his personal aid will enable him to do an act which he contemplated to do, and which springs out of the contract, and which being done, will make the decree right and proper. I think, therefore, that the learned judge in the court below was quite right in putting that point to the parties: "Whenever they think proper, I can give to their title all the effect which a due payment into the Bank, or otherwise, can give to that contract and conveyance under the Act of Parliament." That, I think, was the meaning of the reservation which follows the direction to pay the money into court; it can have no other meaning. Therefore, they can resort to that whenever they think proper. Now, I have gone through these points cursorily to shew that there really is no great objection existing on the part of the company; my own impression of this case does not compel me to enter into them. I have gone through them for the satisfaction of the Bar and the parties; I do not feel myself driven to consider them, because, as the company did expressly contract that they would obtain powers to enable them to take a conveyance of this settled estate, as part of the property for which the whole purchase-money was to be paid; and as by the Act of Parliament they have obtained powers which, primâ facie at least, would enable them to do so, and they never objected that they had not obtained the proper powers, but they acted in regard to the contract at the time after they had obtained the Act, as if they had the power; I shall assume, therefore, that they were satisfied they had the power, and that, under the powers which they have obtained, considering them as sufficient, they were ready to perform the contract, if they could not get rid of it on general grounds. I shall hold them, therefore, to the performance of the contract on that simple ground, that they themselves were to obtain the powers, that they themselves did obtain the powers, and that after those powers were obtained, they did act towards the party with whom they contracted as if those powers enabled them to carry the contract completely into execution. If they had come early and stated, We have made a mistake; these powers are not sufficient; therefore we must go back to Parliament and wait until we get further powers,—that would have been bonâ fide and perfectly regular, and the Court would not have compelled the execution of this contract until those powers had been obtained, or would not have taken any step until it saw whether such powers could be obtained. But no such question was ever raised, and it was only as an afterthought, to get rid of this contract, that the company have raised these objections, which have been very well and elaborately argued, in order to avoid the performance of the contract. The Court has already decreed that the contract, standing by itself on the abstract view of it, ought to be performed; and I am of opinion that the objections raised cannot be sustained, and therefore I dismiss the appeal with costs.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

Reported by OWEN DAVIES TUDOR, Esq. of the Middle Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Tuesday, Dec. 7.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Ex parte EVANS, re WASS.

Covenant to pay sum—Breach of contract—Right to prove.

A bankrupt covenanted to pay the trustees of his marriage settlement 3,000l. out of the first capital moneys, or real or personal estate, or capitalised income of or to which he should be or become possessed, or in any wise entitled, within six calendar months after he should have become so possessed or entitled.

The bankrupt was possessed of personal estate, consisting of his stock in trade, goods, and capital moneys, used by him in his business, and leasehold premises, of a value greatly exceeding 3,000l. and he continued so possessed six calendar months after the marriage. The Commissioner rejected proof for the 3,000l. upon the ground that a future acquisition and saving-up of property operating as a withdrawal thereof from business, was contemplated by the covenant:

Held, reversing the decision of the Commissioner, that as the terms of the covenant included property which the bankrupt had in his possession, more than sufficient to satisfy the 3,000l. six calendar months after his marriage, and a breach of covenant had taken place by non-payment of the 3,000l. at that period, the trustees were entitled to prove for the 3,000l. as a debt due to them.

This was an appeal from the decision of Mr. Commissioner Evans, who rejected the application of the appellants, F. H. Evans and C. Hawker, the trustees of the marriage settlement of the bankrupt, Charles Wentworth Wass, who carried on the business of a dealer in pictures and works of art, to prove a debt of 3,000l. alleged to be due to them by the bankrupt under the following circumstances. By the settlement made on the marriage of the bankrupt, C. W. Wass, dated the 27th May, 1851, the said C. W. Wass, amongst other things, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, covenanted with the said F. H. Evans and C. Hawker, their executors, administrators, and assigns, that in case the said intended marriage should take effect, he, the said C. W. Wass, his heirs, executors, or administrators, would, out of the first capital money, or real or capital personal estate, or capitalised income, of or to which he should be or become possessed, or in anywise entitled after the solemnisation of the said intended marriage, pay or cause to be paid, within six calendar months after he should have become so possessed or entitled as aforesaid, unto the said F. H. Evans and C. Hawker, their executors, administrators, or assigns, the sum of 3,000l. sterling; nevertheless, upon the trusts, and with, under, and subject to the powers, provisoes, agreements, and declarations thereinafter expressed and declared of and concerning the same; that is to say, upon trust that they, the said F. H. Evans and C. Hawker, and the survivor of them, and the executors or administrators of such survivor, and their or his assigns (thereinafter called the said trustees or trustee), should, during the life of the said C. W. Wass, permit the said sum of 3,000l. to remain upon the security of his said covenant, until the said trustees or trustee should be required to call in the same by his intended wife, such request to be signified by writing under her hand, or in case of, and after her death in the lifetime of the said C. W. Wass, for and during such time as the said trustees or trustee, in their or his uncontrolled and absolute discretion, and without being accountable for the exercise of such discretion, or being considered guilty of a breach of trust for such permission, or for omitting to call in, and require payment of the same sum of 3,000l. or any part thereof, should think proper. But in case the said C. W. Wass should die whilst the said sum of 3,000l. or any part thereof should remain unpaid, or in case of such request in writing as aforesaid being made to the said trustees or trustee by the said intended wife; or in case, in the event of and after her death in the lifetime of the said C. W. Wass, the said trustees, if more than one, should unanimously, or the only trustee for the time being, should in his absolute discretion think fit, then, and in any of the said cases, upon trust that they the said trustees or trustee, should, as soon as conveniently might be after the decease of the said C. W. Wass, or after such request in writing as aforesaid should be made to the said trustees or trustee by the said intended wife, or they or he should after her death in the lifetime of the said C. W. Wass, think fit in manner aforesaid so to do (as the case might be), call in and receive, and if necessary or expedient, take and use such compulsory ways or means at law or in equity, as they should consider proper for the purpose of enforcing or compelling payment of the said sum of 3,000l. or any part thereof, which should remain unpaid by the said C. W. Wass, and should stand possessed of the same sum, and every part thereof, as and when the same should be received, upon the trusts thereinafter declared concerning the same. And it was thereby agreed and declared between and by the said parties to those presents, that the said F. H. Evans and C. Hawker, their executors, administrators, and assigns, should stand possessed of the said sum of 3,000l. secured by the covenant of the said C. W.

Wass, upon trust that they, the said F. H. Evans and C. Hawker, or the survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of such survivor, or their or his assigns, should, when and so soon as the same should have been received, invest the same as therein mentioned, and should pay the annual increase of the said moneys, stocks, funds, and securities to the said intended wife during her life, for her separate use, independently of the said C. W. Wass, and of any husband with whom she might intermarry after his death, in the event of her surviving him; so that her receipt alone should be sufficient discharge, and she should not have power to deprive herself thereof in anticipation; and after the death of the said intended wife, should hold the said trust premises, and the annual income thereof, in trust for the child, or for all or any such one or more of the children of the said intended marriage, in such manner and form in every respect as the said C. W. Wass and his intended wife should by any deed or deeds jointly appoint; and in default of such appointment, and so far as no such appointment should extend, as the survivor of the said C. W. Wass and his intended wife should by any deed or deeds appoint; and in default of any such appointment, and so far as no such appointment should extend, in trust for all the children, or any the child of the said intended marriage, who, being sons or a son, should attain the age of twenty-one years; or being daughters or a daughter, should attain that age or marry; and if more than one, in equal shares. And it was thereby declared, that after the death of the bankrupt's said intended wife, and such default or failure of issue as therein mentioned, the said trustees or trustee should hold the said trust premises and income thereof in trust for the said C. W. Wass, his executors, administrators, and assigns. The marriage took place immediately after the execution of the marriage settlement. No part of the 3,000*l.* was paid to the trustees of the marriage settlement pursuant to the covenant therein contained, at the time when the said C. W. Wass became a bankrupt under a petition for adjudication of the 15th May, 1852. It was proved by the affidavit of the bankrupt, which was uncontradicted, that after the date and execution of the settlement, he continued to carry on his business on the same footing as he had been in the habit of doing up to that time; and was and continued to be from time to time, until the time of his bankruptcy, possessed of capital personal estate, consisting of his said stock in trade for the time being, of pictures, bronzes, and other works of art, and goods, and of capital moneys used by him in his said business, and of certain leasehold premises; and that such personal estate was of a value very greatly above the value of 3,000*l.* And that for a considerable period after the 27th day of May, 1851, he was possessed of personal estate more than sufficient to pay all his debts for the time being, including the said sum of 3,000*l.* covenanted to be paid by him as aforesaid. The application of the petitioners for the proof of the debt of 3,000*l.* was rejected by Mr. Commissioner Evans, upon the ground that the expressions employed in the covenant in the said settlement to indicate the fund out of which the 3,000*l.* was to come, pointed to some future acquisition and saving up of property operating as a withdrawal of the same from business, but his Honour allowed a claim to be entered in respect of the said debt, upon the understanding that the present petitioners intended to appeal against his decision.

Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE.—Considering the very obscure language of the instrument, unlike any I ever remember, I cannot feel the least surprise that different minds should take different views of it. My impression is, that no portion of the words "be or become entitled" ought to be rejected; nor do I think that the force properly belonging to these words ought to be diminished by reason that the word "become" is used afterwards not accompanied by the word "been." Bearing that expression in mind, and the extensive range of the terms "capital moneys, or real or capital personal estate, or capital personal estate, or capitalised income," I am of opinion that there was a breach of contract six calendar months after the marriage took place before the bankruptcy. It is clear that there was property of the bankrupt to the amount of 3,000*l.* and upwards, beyond all debts, six calendar months after the marriage; and on the best construction I can put on this covenant, it appears to me, that at the end of six calendar months there was a breach of the covenant entitling the trustees to recover the 3,000*l.*

Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH.—I am of the same opinion. The question is, whether the trustees could have maintained an action at the end of six calendar months after the marriage. Now, it would have been sufficient for them to have stated that C. W. Wass was possessed or entitled to capital moneys, or real or capital personal estate, or capitalised income, to the extent of 3,000*l.* at the end of six calendar months after the marriage. Now, as he was so entitled within that period, that averment would have been made out, and the trustees have therefore a right now to prove. Costs are to come out of the estate.

BANKRUPTCY.

Ex parte BIRD, re CALNE.

Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, s. 243—Affidavit—Magistrate—Notary public.

An affidavit in bankruptcy was sworn before a magistrate at New York, whose signature was attested by a notary public, although the affidavit did not appear to have been sworn in his presence:

Held, that no objection could be taken to the reception of the affidavit, under the 243rd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, 1849, on the ground that the notary was not present when the affidavit was sworn.

In this case an affidavit had been sworn before a magistrate at New York, and there was also an attestation by a notary public that the magistrate was duly authorised. An objection was taken, that under the 243rd section of the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Act, the notary ought to have been present when the oath was sworn, and that it was not sufficient that he should merely attest the magistrate's signature.

The 243rd section is as follows:—"That all affidavits to be made or used in matters in bankruptcy, or in any matter or proceeding whatever under this Act, shall and may be sworn before the Court, or any Commissioner, Registrar, or Master thereof, or before a Master in ordinary or extraordinary of the High Court of Chancery, or before any clerk of affidavits, assistant-clerk, or second assistant-clerk of affidavits of the High Court of Chancery; or in Scotland or Ireland before such Master extraordinary aforesaid, or before a magistrate of the county, city, town, or place where such affidavit shall be sworn, or elsewhere before a magistrate, and attested by a notary, or before a British minister, consul, or vice-consul."

Bacon, Eddis, Hugh Hill, and Selwyn, appeared for the different parties.

The Lord Justice KNIGHT BRUCE said he thought the signature of the notary public sufficient.

The Lord Justice Lord CRANWORTH said he concurred, as he thought that it was the intention of the Act for the notary, by his attestation, to shew that the magistrate was what he purported to be, and that it was not necessary that the notary should be present when the affidavit was sworn before the magistrate.

ROLLS COURT.

Reported by J. MACAULAY, Esq. of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law.

Nov. 10 and 15.

LLEWELLIN v. PACE.

Practice—Evidence—Effect of nonsuit—Discrediting witness.

If it is sought to discredit the testimony of a witness, it must be done by bringing evidence to prove that he is a person not deserving of credit, not that the evidence he has given is false.

A nonsuit at law has the same effect as to proceedings in this Court as a verdict in the same case would have; and where the merits have been gone into at law, and the plaintiff, after hearing the defendant's case, selects to be nonsuited, the result is the same as if the case had been allowed to proceed, and a verdict had been taken.

The plaintiff and S. Partridge, one of the defendants, entered into partnership in the year 1849; but differences having arisen, the partnership was dissolved a few months after its commencement. Notwithstanding the dissolution, however, Partridge still continued to accept bills in the name of the firm, and, as alleged by the plaintiff, with a view to annoy him, because of the dissolution. In this course Partridge was assisted, as alleged, by the other defendants. There were several bills drawn by Partridge, but that which formed the subject of the present suit was dated the 16th of September, 1849, and was drawn by a person named Smith, and accepted by Partridge, in the name of the firm, for 200*l.* Smith then endorsed the bill to another person, named Wray, and Wray endorsed it to the defendant, Henry Pace. Wray was not a dealer in iron; but the contract in consideration of which the bill was given, was a contract for the sale of twenty-five tons of pig iron, which Smith alleged or pretended he had in his possession. The bill having become due, the plaintiff refused to pay it, and the result was an action in the Court of C. P. by Henry Pace, the holder of the bill. The plaintiff in equity pleaded at law the want of consideration for the bill, and went into evidence in support of his case, and examined witnesses, and amongst others Wray, who stated the circumstances under which the bill was drawn. The defendant at law (plaintiff in equity) having concluded his evidence, Pace (the plaintiff at law) elected to be nonsuited, and no verdict was taken. The proceedings, however, did not there terminate, but other actions being threatened, the plaintiff filed his bill against Partridge, Henry Pace, and his brother John Pace, who claimed an interest in the bill, to have it declared fraudulent and void as against him, and that it might be delivered up to be cancelled.

Roupel and Southgate, for the plaintiff, contended that the evidence in the cause was sufficient to shew that the transaction was without consideration and fraudulent, and that the defendants were estopped by the nonsuit in the same manner as if a verdict had been given. They cited Allen v. Davis, 20 L. J. (N.S.) Ch. 44.

Craig and Lovell, for the defendant, Henry Pace, contended that no fraud could be made out except from the evidence of Wray, who, they said, was not a credible witness. They had exhibited articles to impeach his testimony, and they tendered the evidence which had been taken in pursuance thereof for the purpose of contradicting him in points not strictly at issue in the present suit. They also put in copies of the evidence taken at the trial in contradiction of Wray. They also argued, that if the bill was to be delivered up, it would prevent them taking their remedy against the previous indorser, Wray, now a bankrupt, against whose estate it was intended to prove. They cited Herdfall v. Lant, 7 Sim. 627.

The MASTER of the ROLLS was of opinion that the same rule prevailed in equity as at law. If a party sought to discredit the testimony of a witness, he could only do so by bringing evidence to prove the witness to be a person not deserving of credit, but not that the evidence he has given is false. The only effect of the evidence adduced at the trial was to shew how far the merits had or had not been gone into at law, but it could not be read as evidence in the present suit. If the defendants sought to disprove anything stated by Wray, they ought to have cross-examined him in this suit. He, the Master of the Rolls, was of opinion, on the evidence before him, without taking into consideration that taken at law, that the bill was accepted fraudulently and without valuable consideration. Besides, there had been a trial at law in which the whole of the merits had been gone into, and the plaintiff at law, after hearing the defendant's case, had elected to be nonsuited. This his Honour thought was equivalent to a verdict. The bill, therefore, must be declared fraudulent and void against the plaintiff, and an injunction must be granted to restrain the defendant from proceeding at law against the plaintiff. The bill may be required by the defendants in any proceedings he may take against Wray, and must, therefore be impounded, with liberty to apply.

DUNCAN v. ROSS.

In this case, reported suprà, p. 74, there is an error. It ought to have been stated, that the decree was against, and not in favour of, the executor having priority over other legatees.

MACLAREN v. STAINTON.

Jurisdiction—Scotch courts—Injunction.

An injunction having been obtained by the creditors, in a creditors' suit in this country, to restrain a Scotch incorporate body, whose chief office and works were in Scotland, but who had offices and works in England, from proceeding in the Scotch courts to prosecute their claims against the estate of one of their agents in this country, for the balance due on his accounts with them, they moved to dissolve it, on the ground of want of jurisdiction, and that notice was not duly served, being served on the London agent:

Held, that the Court could exercise the jurisdiction by injunction, and that the notice was sufficient.

This was a motion to dissolve an injunction which had been obtained on the 15th of November last, by the plaintiffs in this suit, restraining the Carron Iron Company from prosecuting an action which they had commenced in the Scotch courts against the plaintiffs and against the defendant, Henry Tibbats Stainton (the representative of Henry Stainton, deceased, late the agent of the company in London) to recover the balance due on the accounts between the company and Henry Stainton, amounting to a very large sum. The company was established by virtue of certain deeds of partnership of the 19th of January and 9th of February, 1760, and of the 6th of May, 1771, and it was incorporated by a royal charter, granted in 1773. The chief office of the company, and their principal works, were and are still situated at Carron, near Falkirk, in the county of Stirling, the business being conducted by a resident manager at the works, and by agents in various parts of England and Scotland, and, among others, by an agent in Thames-street, London; the business of the agents being to sell the goods manufactured at Carron. Henry Stainton had been for a considerable time the agent of the company in London, and he resided at the place of business. Previously to 1825, the remuneration for his services was paid in the form of a commission on the sales effected; but in that year a resolution of the company was passed, allowing him a fixed salary of 2,000*l.* a year, together with the house, &c. This arrangement purported to be only for a year, but it in fact continued till Mr. Stainton's death. On the 12th October, 1846, Mr. Stainton made his will, and thereby gave his whole property, both heritable and movable, to six trustees, of whom only three, viz. the plaintiffs, James Maclaren, Henry Dawson, and his son, Henry Tibbats Stainton, accepted the trusts. The testator appointed the same persons his executors; and he died in December 1851. The plaintiffs and H. T. Stainton proved the testator's will in England, and became his legal personal representatives, according to the forms prescribed by the law of Scotland. The testator had some English property, and was lately possessed of considerable real property in Scotland, and also of personal property, the greater part of which consisted of shares in the Carron Company. The Scotch property was valued at about 80,000*l.* At the testator's decease, his accounts with the company, as their agent, had not been settled for several years, and the claims of the company against his estate, on the balance of account, now amounted to nearly 70,000*l.* together with nearly 40,000*l.* for interest, in all, over 100,000*l.* This suit was accordingly instituted for the administration of the testator's estate, the bill being filed by the executors against the parties interested under the will. On the 8th of May, 1852, a decree was made, whereby the usual accounts were directed, and it was ordered that the debts should be paid in a due course of administration. Part of the testator's personalty consisting of shares of the company, they claimed a preferable lien or right of security over these under the provisions of their articles of partnership, whereby it was provided that they should have this preferable lien over the shares of a partner to secure the payment of any debt due from him to the company. On the 29th October last, the company commenced proceedings in the Scotch courts to enforce their claim against the testator's estate in Scotland. Previously to this, however, there had been some negociations between the partners with a view to the settlement of the disputed accounts by reference to judicial arbitration in Scotland, and it was alleged that the plaintiffs had acquiesced in the proceedings in the Scotch courts. In evidence of this a letter was put in on the present occasion, though it had not been used on the original motion for the injunction, which was written to the solicitor for the company by the plaintiff's solicitor. It was, as to part, in these words:—"It appears to us that as there is a suit for the administration of Mr. Stainton's estate, in which a decree has been pronounced, that the executors would not be justified in entering into any arrangement for referring to arbitration without the express sanction of the Master in Chancery; therefore, as regards this country, the question must rest till the Master again sits. But this need not delay any steps which you may think necessary in Scotland." The notice of motion for the injunction was served at the company's office, Thames-street, on the defendant, H. T. Stainton, who had succeeded his father as the London agent of the company, and the injunction itself was served on him and on the plaintiff, Henry Dawson, who was the company's agent at Liverpool, and also upon the manager at the chief office, at Carron. The company now moved to dissolve the injunction.

Willcock and Cotton, for the motion, insisted that the jurisdiction of the Court did not extend to this company, which was a corporate body, confined in its locality to Scotland, and having never submitted to the jurisdiction of this Court. The company were not defendants to this suit, but creditors seeking to enforce their rights under their own courts of judicature, which they preferred, and had a perfect right to do so. The inconvenience, too, of continuing the injunction would be very great: for other creditors, whose property as well as their persons was out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and, therefore, beyond its reach, would be able to proceed with their action, and give priority in respect of the assets in Scotland. The service of the notice of motion for the injunction on the agent in London was not sufficient, and the service of the injunction itself on the agent at Carron was nugatory, for before the stat. 2 & 3 Wm. 4, c. 33, extended by the 4 & 5 Wm. 4, c. 82, process could not issue against a defendant domiciled out of the jurisdiction, and that Act only authorised service of a subpœna, and not of this sort of process. Anderson, R. Palmer, and Lewin, for the plaintiffs, contended that the company was not a company exclusively confined to Scotland, inasmuch as it had agents and places of business in England; they cited Stein's case, 1 Rose, 462; Allen v. Cannon, 4 B. & Ald. 418; Beauchamp v. Huntley, Jac. 546; Whitmore v. Ryan, 4 Hare, 612; Bushby v. Munday, 5 Madd. 297; Harrison v. Gurney, 2 Jac. & W. 563; Lewis v. Baldwin, 11 Beav. 153; Bunbury v. Bunbury, 5 Beav. 318; Davidson v. The Marchioness of Hastings, 2 Keen, 509.

Roupell, Giffard, K. Parker, and Appack, for other parties.

Willcock, in reply, cited Lord Portarlington v. Damer, 2 Phil. 262; Alexander v. Vaughan, 1 Cowp. 398.

The Master of the Rolls.—Three questions have been raised in the present case; first, whether the Court has jurisdiction to grant an injunction against the company; secondly, if it has such jurisdiction, whether it is proper to exercise it under the circumstances of this case, and under what conditions; and, thirdly, whether, if the parties when they applied for the injunction, had stated all the facts, the Court would have granted it, and therefore, whether, considering the manner in which they obtained it, they are entitled to retain it. As to the first question, which is one of great importance, I am of opinion, and have had no doubt from the commencement of the discussion, that the Court has jurisdiction. There has been a decree for the administration of the estate, and that is equivalent to a judgment for the benefit of all the creditors. It could not be disputed that, after such a decree, a creditor residing in this country would be restrained from bringing an action in a foreign court to recover against the assets under the foreign jurisdiction; but it was contended that this is not a similar case, and that to maintain the present injunction would be to direct an order against persons who lived out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and who had never submitted to its authority. On this point, however, I give no opinion, for I think that the creditor in this case resides within the jurisdiction of the Court. The case of Davidson v. The Marchioness of Hastings is a case very much in point, for I consider that there is a perfect analogy between those cases where the Court acts upon service of subpœna and that where the process is commenced by service of notice of motion. That case is an authority to this extent, that the fact of a person having a residence in this country is sufficient to support the jurisdiction of the Court. In this case the company has a Scotch charter, and has its head office in Scotland, but it has also offices in this country, and agents to conduct its business, and it is resident in all the offices where it carries on its business, and hence there is jurisdiction in this Court over the corporation itself. It is acknowledged that the company had notice of the decree, and it is proved that notice of the injunction was given to the company at their chief office at Carron. Now, it is not necessary to consider how the jurisdiction of the Court arose, but it is well established that it is not necessary for a creditor to be a party to the suit, in order to be bound by an injunction; and I am of opinion that the authority of the Court in this case is clear. As to the second point, viz. whether it is fit and proper to continue this injunction, I have read the affidavits as to the course of proceeding in Scotland, and it is clear that the effect of them would be that if the company were allowed to proceed, the other creditors also must either take proceedings in the Scotch courts, or else lose the benefit of the Scotch assets. If they were to take such proceedings, the consequence would be that administration would be going on between the same parties and respecting the same estates in two different and independent Courts; and this the Court would endeavour to prevent. It has been suggested that questions of Scotch law may arise which would render it desirable to bring the case before a Scotch tribunal, but such questions of fact in an English court, and besides the same difficulty would occur if the matter was left to a Scotch court. Another objection, and one of a more important nature, is that other Scotch creditors may institute proceedings in Scotland if they have no property in this country, and may set this court at defiance, and obtain priority in the Scotch courts over the company. Supposing this to happen, this Court would give the parties liberty to apply in order to prevent any mischief from arising; but that need not interfere with the present order. With respect to the third question, whether the plaintiffs had lost their right to the injunction by suppressing the fact of their having acquiesced in the proceedings in Scotland, it must be remembered that though the Court is very strict in granting ex parte injunctions as to requiring all the facts to be fairly laid before it, it is not so strict in cases where the order is made on notice. No doubt, if fraud were practised on the Court, the parties guilty of it would not be allowed to have the benefit of the order; but there is no imputation of anything of the sort in this case. On the best consideration I can give the subject, I do not think there has been any acquiescence on the part of the plaintiff in the proceedings in Scotland, or that the omission to mention the letter of the 12th October is any reason for refusing to continue the injunction.

Attorney-General v. The Drapers' Company.

Practice under the New Chancery Acts—Purchase of charity property—Valuation—Appointment of surveyor by the Court—Pretium fractionis—Market value.

This was an application to the Court to approve of a purchase made by the Drapers' Company of some charity property, which they required for their hall and premises. The property is situated in Throgmorton-street, adjoining the hall. The company had built upon part of the property, and under their Act required the whole for their use. Valuations had been made by surveyors of eminence on both sides, and as usual in such cases, the estimates and the evidence generally were rather conflicting. Some of the valuations put the price as high as 2,700*l.* to an ordinary purchaser, but as the property was of more value to the Drapers' Company than to any other party, they put the price to them at 3,000*l.* Under these circumstances, Roupell, for the Company, asked the Court to appoint an independent surveyor under the provisions of the New Chancery Acts, to assist the Court in coming to a conclusion as to the proper value.

James, for the Attorney-General, asked the Court to direct the surveyor to take into consideration the circumstance that the property was worth more to the company than any one else, and to allow for that in the estimate. He also asked that Mr. Fuller, a surveyor, who had given evidence in the case, should be appointed surveyor by the Court.

The Master of the Rolls would not appoint any gentleman who had given evidence in the case before, but would appoint an independent surveyor. Nor would he look at what the property was worth to the company, but only to the market value. He would not put pretium fractionis on it.

Saunders v. Walter.

Master in Chancery Abolition Act—15 & 16 Vict. c. 80—Inquiries at chambers.

With a view to examine the evidence, and the Master's report, and therein to have the assistance of the chief clerk, the Court will in a proper case adjourn the proceedings to chambers, though the case has not to be gone into before the chief clerk as judge.

This case came before the Court on an objection to the Master's report, on the ground of its being inaccurate in stating that certain specified sums formed part of the testator's estate. The case was set down for hearing before the last long vacation. The defendants now wished the errors in the report to be set right.

The Vice-Chancellor.—Adjourn the case to chambers, in order to ascertain whether the sums mentioned in the Master's report properly constitute the residue of the testator's real and personal estate, and to ascertain how much is principal and how much is interest. The registrar will enter a note of it in his book. If we were to go into the matter now I should, no doubt, be able to see what further affidavits I should require, but this evidence can be better gained at chambers, and the public time be saved.

Dickinson.—If what your Honour directs be done, it may lead to this difficulty, that the other side may say that we are not authorised ex parte to take the accounts before the chief clerk.

The Vice-Chancellor.—I do not intend that it shall be heard before my chief clerk. It is a thing I shall consider myself in chambers, with the assistance of my chief clerk. Let the registrar address a note to the chief clerk, requesting him to ascertain whether the residue of the testator's estate consists of the particulars stated in the Master's report. Let the case stand over for a week, and I will then state to the parties what further evidence, if any, I shall require. The case is now simply adjourned to chambers at the time I have said.

WINDSOR v. CROSS.

Alteration of an order made by the Court and acted on, without the necessity of a supplemental order, will be made.

A testator bequeathed certain funds for the benefit of his children, and appointed his wife guardian of them, three in number, and also appointed her, in conjunction with two other persons, trustees and executors and executrix. The fund was paid into court, and an order was made that a certain part of it (the whole fund standing to the credit of the cause generally) should be applied for the maintenance of the infants, so much of the allowance as related to the two younger infants to be paid to the mother alone; but so much as was for the maintenance of the elder, who was apprenticed to a trade, to be paid to the two executors and the executrix jointly. One of the two executors removed out of the jurisdiction of the Court, and there was difficulty made in the office to payment of the allowance to the other executor and the executrix of the maintenance of the apprenticed child.

Whately moved that the order, which had been acted on for upwards of two years, might be amended, and as amended acted on, by directing the future payment of the child's allowance to be made to any two of the executors and executrix. He stated that their alteration would be very desirable, as saving the expense of obtaining a supplemental order.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR.—I doubt whether, as the reason for this application is attributable to circumstances which have arisen since the order was made—I doubt whether any alteration can properly be made without a supplemental order. The registrar, however, appears to think that the alteration may be made, and therefore I will venture to do it.

COOK v. HALL.

Examination of witnesses de bene esse under the Chancery Practice Amendment Act.

Unless, under special circumstances which render such a course improper, witnesses to be examined de bene esse are to be examined vivâ voce under the 28th section of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86.

A question having been raised in the above case, whether an examination de bene esse of witnesses was within the Chancery Practice Amendment Act; and, secondly, if it were, whether, as the 31st section directed evidence to be taken in the presence of the opposite party, there must not necessarily be an immediate publication, as the opposite party would know the bearing and particulars of such evidence.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR (after the interval of a few days) said—Having consulted with the other judges, I can now state, that we think an examination de bene esse is within the recent Act of Parliament. The 28th section declares that the mode then in force, and all the then practice of the Court in relation to the examination of witnesses, so far as the same is inconsistent with the mode and practice thereinafter described, shall be abolished, and then it is in the discretion of the Court whether the examination shall be taken vivâ voce or on written interrogatories. We think, however, that notwithstanding the evidence on an examination de bene esse is not published at the time and will still continue not to be published, yet still the object of every examination being to elicit the truth, and the Legislature having adopted the vivâ voce method prescribed in ss. 31, 32, as the best adapted to that object, the Court is bound to act upon that view as much as possible. Then it was suggested that there should be two examinations, one on each side; but we think that one examination is the best, and will best carry out the spirit of the Act. If the parties cannot agree upon an examination your proposals had better be carried in to me at chambers. The Act having laid down that the examination of witnesses is to be vivâ voce, we think that that is not to be dispensed with on light grounds. Although the 31st section directs the evidence to be taken in the presence of the other parties, and that therefore it must necessarily be known, and in a degree published immediately at the time, it will not be published in the technical sense of the word. You will know it—the parties will know it, of course—but it will not be published to the world, nor used in the cause.

ALCOCK v. ALCOCK.

Evidence—Husband and wife*—14 & 15 Vict. c. 99.

A wife who was the plaintiff in a suit against her husband, tendered her evidence in support of her claim:

Held, that her evidence was not admissible.

In the course of the hearing of this suit, which was instituted by a married woman by her next friend against her husband and others, the evidence of the wife in support of her case was tendered. The reception of this evidence was objected to, and the case stood over for consideration on this point.

Russell and Cole appeared for the plaintiff.

Bacon, Anderson, G. W. Collins, and Smythe for the defendants.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said that in this case it was alleged that the husband was liable for property which belonged to the wife under her settlement, and the evidence of the wife was tendered in support of the claim. Before the late Acts there would have been two objections to the admissibility of her evidence, one that she was a party to the issue to be tried; the other that she being a feme covert was tendering her own evidence against her husband. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, provided that a person offered as a witness should no longer be excluded from giving evidence by reason of any incapacity arising from having an interest in the matter in dispute; but that statute also provided that the Act should not render competent as a witness any party named upon the record, or the husband or wife of any such party. The objections, then, to the wife's evidence remained unaffected by the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85. Then came the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, the first section of which repealed so much of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, as provided that no party individually named in the record should be rendered competent as a witness, but it said nothing of the incapacity of the husband or wife of such party. The second section provided that upon the trial of any issue the parties thereto and the persons in whose behalf any such suit, action, or proceeding might be brought or defended, should be competent to give evidence on behalf of either or any of the parties to the suit, action, or proceeding. The question then arose, whether this Act of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, making a party competent as a witness, included or excluded the husband or wife of such party. It had been decided by a very high authority at common law, that the incapacity arising from the circumstance that the witness was a husband or wife of the party for or against whom the witness was tendered, remained, notwithstanding the Act. It did not, however, appear that there was any case which exactly decided the point where the witness herself was a party, and was examined in that character. The case referred to was, where the witness was not a party, but was being examined on behalf of a party. It appeared to his Honour, that Mrs. Alcock was not a competent witness in this case: so far as she was a party she was competent, but so far as she was sought to be made a witness against her husband, her incapacity remained. The construction to be put upon the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, was that it only removed the objections to the evidence arising from the witness being a party, but left every other objection that might have existed to the witness, untouched. It was material to consider one or two cases in which the questions might arise. Take the case of a solicitor, who being instructed for a client, had a privilege. The client had a right to say that his solicitor should not be examined as a witness against him in respect of matters which were to be treated as confidential communications. It might happen that the solicitor was suing his client, and tendered himself as a witness. But the Act, although removing the objection to his competency as a party, did not say that the objection to his evidence on the ground of his being the solicitor, was one which could not be taken by the defendant, his client. Again, the Act said that parties should be compellable to give evidence: suppose a party were to be examined upon a matter which might expose him to penalties or lead him to criminate himself, the objection would be still open to the witness, notwithstanding the Act. This was not, however, the objection taken: it was another, and remained untouched. But the same principle applied to the evidence of the wife. The 4th section of the Act had not been referred to in the argument. It provided that "nothing therein contained should apply to any action, suit, proceeding, or bill in any Court of Common Law, or in any Ecclesiastical Court, or in either House of Parliament, instituted in consequence of adultery, or to any action for breach of promise of marriage." It might be said that this section contemplated a particular class of matrimonial suits, and that excluding the husband or wife in such cases might afford ground for arguing that no more extended exclusion of the wife's evidence could have been intended by the Legislature than that provided by the 4th section. But that section was not confined to matrimonial disputes. The section was open to the same observation as had been made on the 3rd section, which provided that a husband and wife should not be competent or compellable to give evidence against each other in criminal proceedings. A learned judge had considered that this section was to receive a more extensive construction, and that it was only in criminal proceedings that these persons were not to give evidence; but the Court of Q. B. took a different view of the statute, and thought that the 3rd section was not necessary, but had been introduced from overabundant caution, and must be considered as part of and subject to the same observation as the 4th. Upon the whole, therefore, it appeared to his Honour that there was nothing in the statutes to remove the incapacity of Mrs. Alcock as a witness against her husband, and her evidence must therefore be rejected.

WHITE v. BARKER.

Practice—Exceptions for insufficiency.

A defendant was required by the bill to set forth an account of certain business transactions from 1822 to 1843. In his answer he stated that the accounts could only be made out with great labour, but offered to produce the books from which the accounts would appear, and stated that he had no other means of information. To this answer the plaintiff excepted for insufficiency, but the exception was overruled.

To the defendant's answer in this suit, the plaintiff excepted for insufficiency, and the exceptions now came on to be heard. By the bill, the defendant was charged with having carried on a certain business from the year 1822 until 1843, with the moneys of White, deceased, through whom the plaintiff claimed, and one object of the suit was to have the profits of this business brought into the estate of White, deceased. By the bill, the defendant was interrogated as to entries made in books of account, and as to sums received by him in 1822, and thence down to 1843, and the application of the same. By his answer, the defendant offered to produce all the books connected with the business for the period inquired after, and to give the plaintiff all the information he could with reference thereto, but stated that he could not, without great labour, answer the interrogatory in the terms thereof, and that the whole account inquired after would, so far as the defendant was aware, appear by the books. To this the plaintiff excepted.

Russell and Giffard appeared in support of the exceptions.

Malins and Jessel, for the defendant, cited White v. Williams, 8 Ves. 193.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he did not mean to decide that this answer was technically sufficient, but he thought that the Court had, in these matters, a certain discretion, and was bound to use it. In this case, the plaintiff required the defendant to set forth certain accounts in detail, which the defendant, upon his oath, stated that he could not do without great labour, but that the plaintiff might himself obtain the information required, for the defendant offered to produce for his inspection all the books from which the information was to be obtained, and it was not alleged that the books were fraudulent, or that there was any omission in them. His Honour therefore did not consider that any object would be gained by compelling the defendant to set out those accounts in detail; and the exception must be overruled.

LOVEGROVE v. COOPER.

Contribution for payment of debts.

A. being entitled, as residuary legatee under a will, to one-fifteenth of a sum of stock, and of the proceeds of some real estate, assigned all his share and interest in the stock to B. and covenanted that the fund assigned was free from incumbrances. A portion of the stock was sold to pay the testator's debts: and it was Held, that B. was not entitled to have one-fifteenth of the amount of debts paid out of the proceeds of the real estate, in exoneration of the assigned share of stock.

Under the will of William May, deceased, Cooper, as one of the residuary legatees, became entitled to one-fifteenth part of a sum of stock, and of the proceeds of some real estate. In July 1844, Cooper executed a deed, whereby, after reciting the will of May, Cooper assigned all his share and interest (without specifying that it was one-fifteenth part) in the stock to the petitioner, and covenanted that the fund assigned was free from incumbrances. In a suit (May v. Grave) instituted for the administration of May's estate, considerable portions of the stock were directed to be sold, for the payment of the testator's debts.

The present petition was presented for the transfer of 864*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* Consols, being the clear one-fifteenth part of the stock, and the question raised was, whether or not the petitioner was entitled to this, and to throw the proportion of the testator's debts on the proceeds of the real estate.

Malins and Mackeson, for the petitioner, cited Averall v. Wade, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 252; and Hughes v. Williams, 16 Jur. 416.

Walker and Busk, K. Parker and Haynes, and Shee, appeared for other parties.

THE VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that if the assignment had been of one-fifteenth part of the stock, the principle contended for by the petitioner would have applied, and the debts of the testator might have been thrown upon the property not included in the assignment. Here, however, according to the true construction of the deed, the assignment was only of what might turn out to be Cooper's share and interest in the stock, after working out the rights of all parties in the suit of May v. Grane. The petitioner, therefore, could take only so much of the stock as remained after payment of the proportion of the debts of May.

LANGHORNE v. LANGHORNE.

Trustee Act, 1850—Vesting order.

A vesting order of real estate should only be made where there would be some inconvenience in obtaining a conveyance of the property.

This was a petition under the Trustee Act, 1850, and it was proposed to take a vesting order of real estate, which was the subject of the trusts.

W. D. Lewis for the petitioner.

Toller, Spring Rice, Snape, and J. S. Cumming for other parties.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that as a general rule, in these cases, it was for the purposes of the title, much better that there should be a conveyance, and not a vesting order. The statements and prayer in a petition ought to be framed with as much care as the recitals and operative part of a conveyance; but petitions were seldom prepared so carefully as deeds, and were often drawn by persons not possessing competent skill, or who could not give the requisite time and attention to them. The rule his Honour wished to adopt was, not to make vesting orders, except in cases where there would be some inconvenience in obtaining a conveyance.

W. D. Lewis suggested that in the present case there would be an increase of expense by having a conveyance, but

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said, that he did not consider that this would bring the case within the exception.

HALL v. NALDER.

Will - Construction - Issue.

A testator gave to trustees certain leasehold property in trust to apply the rents for the maintenance of F. until he attained twenty-one, and then to permit F. to receive the rents for his life, and after his death in trust to permit the issue of the body of F. if any such there should then be, to receive the rents for the remainder of the term; but if F. should die before attaining twenty-one, or afterwards without issue, the testator gave the same to J.

Held, that F. had a life interest in the leaseholds, with remainder to such of his issue, not meaning children, as should be living at his death.

James Hall, the elder, late of Alverscott, in the county of Oxford, yeoman, deceased, by his will, dated the 9th day of May, 1758, made the following bequest:—"Item, I give and devise to my sons, Robert Hall and Richard Hall, their executors, administrators, and assigns, all my leasehold estate situate, lying, and being in Brize Norton, in the said county of Oxford, in trust to receive the rents and profits thereof, and pay and apply the same in such manner as they shall think proper, for and towards the maintenance, education, and benefit of Francis, the natural son of my said son Francis Hall, begotten on the body of Ann Long, until he shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years, and then in trust to permit and suffer the said Francis, son of my said son Francis, to receive the rents and profits thereof during his natural life, and after his decease then in trust to permit and suffer the issue of the body of said Francis, son of my said son Francis, lawfully begotten, if any such there shall then be, to receive the rents and profits of said premises for the remainder of the term I have to come therein, but in case the said son of my said son Francis shall die before he attain the said age of twenty-one years, or if he shall die afterwards without issue, then I give and devise the same to my said son James, his executors, administrators, and assigns." The testator appointed his son James Hall his executor, and died in the year 1761, and James Hall proved the said will. Francis Hall, the tenant for life, died in 1836, leaving nine children, thirty-one grandchildren, and twelve great grandchildren living at his decease. This was a claim by the grandchildren and great grandchildren of Francis to have their shares in the leasehold estate.

Shapter for the plaintiffs.

Bayshaw for the defendants, the children of Francis Hall.

Pitman for the representatives of the testator.

Lethbridge v. Tracy, 3 Atk. 785; Eno v. Eno, 6 Hare, 171, and other cases were cited.

Friday, July 30.—The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had looked through the will, and he thought the view taken by the plaintiffs was correct, namely, that the bequest was, after a life estate given to Francis, to such of his issue, not meaning children, as should be living at his death, they taking as joint tenants.

MACINTOSH v. THE GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Evidence—Examination de bene esse.

A witness had been examined de bene esse on the part of the plaintiff. The witness being too old and infirm to be examined again in chief, the plaintiff moved that the depositions might be published when publication should pass in the cause, but the Court directed the motion to stand over; giving, however, the defendants leave to exhibit cross interrogatories to the witness.

This was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff that the depositions of William Henderson (a witness who had been examined de bene esse on the part of the plaintiff under a common order), which depositions had been returned to the clerk of records and writs, in whose division the cause was before replication was filed, might, when or after publication should have passed in the cause, be published, and might be read and used upon the hearing of the cause, and in all subsequent proceedings therein, in like manner and to the same extent as if these depositions had been taken in this cause after the filing of the replication. It appeared that Henderson was seventy-eight years of age, and it was stated that the mental excitement of being again examined would probably prove fatal to him, and that on several occasions during the previous examination it was necessary to call in a medical man, who limited the time during which the examination was from day to day to be taken.

Russell and Bacalgette, in support of the motion, cited Gason v. Wordsworth, 2 Ves. 366; Brown v. Greenley, 2 Dick. 501; and Andrew v. Farmer, 1 Ves. & Bea. 21.

Bacon and T. Stevens for the defendants, objected that if this motion were granted, they should have no opportunity of cross-examining the witness. They referred to Forsyth v. Ellice, 2 Mac. & Gord. 209.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that this witness was seventy-eight years of age and afflicted with disease, so that he could not now be examined as a witness without serious danger to himself. In answer to the motion, it was said that the application was premature, and that observation might be well founded. But his Honour thought that the object proposed might be obtained by an order in the following form:—It appearing to the Court that Wm. Henderson, a witness, who has been examined de bene esse, is now by reason of his age and infirmities, incapable of being examined in this cause as a witness on the part of the plaintiff, let this motion stand over, with liberty to apply, and let the defendants be at liberty to exhibit cross interrogatories for the examination of the witness, and let a commission be issued for that purpose without prejudice to any question. That would put the present application upon record. The defendants by such cross-examination were not to be deprived of the right to object to the evidence on any ground they thought proper.

Re CLARKE'S TRUST.

1 & 2 Vict. c. 110—Mortgage.

In a power of sale in a mortgage the trusts of the surplus proceeds were for the mortgagor, his executors, administrators, and assigns. After the mortgagor's death the mortgagee sold and paid the surplus into court under the Trustees Relief Act. A. B. a creditor of the mortgagor, recovered judgment against his administratrix, and obtained a charging order, upon which he petitioned the Court for payment of his claim out of the surplus before mentioned:

Held, that the fund was real assets, and not available for the satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the administratrix.

This was a petition by a judgment creditor of the administratrix of Mr. Clarke, presented under the following circumstances. Mr. Clarke mortgaged certain real estate to Dawson in fee, with a power of sale; and the mortgage was afterwards transferred to Severs with a like power. The trusts of the purchase-money in case of a sale, were declared by the deed to be, first, to pay the costs of the sale; afterwards the mortgage debt and interest; and to pay the surplus, if any, to Clarke, his executors, administrators, and assigns. Clarke, by his will, gave all his real and personal estate to his wife and children in certain proportions, but appointed no executor. Upon Clarke's death, his widow took out letters of administration to his estate, with the will annexed. The petitioner, a creditor of Clarke's, sued Mrs. Clarke as his administratrix, and recovered judgment against her. In February 1851 Severs sold the mortgaged estate under his power of sale, and after providing for the costs, debt, and interest, paid the surplus into Court under the Trustees Relief Act. The petitioner obtained a charging order from Mr. Justice Coleridge, and nearly a year having expired since the date of the charging order, he sought by this petition to have the fund which had been paid by Severs applied in discharge of his judgment debt.

Prendergast appeared in support of the petition, and referred to 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 13, 14, and 15.

The other parties, although served, did not appear.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR declined making any order upon the petition, as he considered that the money was real assets, and not personalty in the hands of the administratrix, and could not therefore be made available for the satisfaction of a judgment recovered against her as administratrix.

LORD TORRINGTON v. BOWMAN.

Will—Construction—"Effects either real or personal."

A testator, after giving certain legacies, gave "all the residue of his effects, either real or personal," to his daughters, A. and B.: he then, after providing an annuity for his daughter C. gave "all his lands in K. and elsewhere, with all his personal estate, to E. F. and G. their heirs and assigns, in trust for the purposes above mentioned:"

Held, that A. and B. took an equitable fee in the lands in K. subject to the legal estate in E. F and G.

Richard Sex, by his will, dated the 7th of July, 1795, after giving pecuniary legacies, proceeded as follows:—"All the residue of my effects, either real or personal, I give to my daughters Elizabeth and Catherine;" and then, after giving an annuity for the support of another daughter, the testator proceeded:—"I give all my lands in the county of Kent and elsewhere, with all my personal estate, to J. Bannister, J. Seabrook, and C. Funnell, their heirs and assigns, in trust for the purposes above mentioned; and I do constitute them executors of this my will." The testator died in 1795, leaving three children, the daughters named in the will. The lands in Kent having been contracted to be sold, the title was objected to on the ground that the lands were not vested in Elizabeth and Catherine in fee. This special case was, therefore, filed to take the opinion of the Court upon the question whether, under the will of Richard Sex, his daughters, Elizabeth and Catherine, took the fee-simple, either at law or in equity, in the testator's lands in Kent, or, if not, to whom did the equitable fee in the lands pass.

Bacon and Pownall, for the plaintiff, the vendor, cited Challenger v. Shepperd, 8 Term Rep. 527; Knight v. Selby, 3 Scott N.R. 409; Moore v. Cleghorn, 12 Jur. 591; and Hogan v. Jackson, Cowp. 299; 3 Bro. P.C. 389.

Malins and W. D. Lewis, for the purchaser, cited Doe dem. Hicks v. Dring, 2 Man. & Sel. 448; and Doe v. Earles, 15 Mee. & Wels. 450.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he considered the real estate passed to the daughters named. Hogan v. Jackson decided that real effects meant real property. Here there was a devise of lands in Kent, and a bequest of personal estate, to trustees for certain purposes, viz. to pay the legacies and charges mentioned in the earlier part of the testator's will. What, then, was to be done with the residue, the residue of the real as of the personal estate? The testator had given it to his two daughters, who therefore took an equitable estate in fee, subject to the legal estate in the trustees.

HEWETSON v. TODHUNTER.

Will—Construction.

A testator by his will gave a legacy of 5,000l. to A. B. and declared that, in case A. B. should die in his lifetime, the legacy should not lapse, but should go to or devolve upon his personal representatives. A. B. died in the testator's lifetime, having by his will given all his property to his widow, and appointed her and C. D. his executors. A. B.'s widow survived the testator and afterwards died:

Held, that the legacy belonged to A. B.'s widow, who was the executrix, and the only person beneficially interested under A. B.'s will.

John Todhunter, by his will, directed his real and personal estate to be sold and converted into money, and he afterwards proceeded as follows:—"And as to the surplus of all my ready moneys, the said moneys to arise from the sale of my real estates, and from the sale, collection, and getting in of my personal estate as hereinbefore mentioned, upon trust to pay or remit to my brother-in-law, Joseph Sill, of Philadelphia, in the United States, the sum of 5,000*l.* and also to pay or remit to my brother, William Todhunter, of Philadelphia aforesaid, the sum of 5,000*l.*; and I declare that, in case either of them, the said Joseph Sill or William Todhunter, shall depart this life in my lifetime, the share of him so dying shall not lapse, but shall go to or devolve upon his personal representatives." William Todhunter, the testator's brother, died in December 1848, at Philadelphia, in the lifetime of the testator, having by his will bequeathed all his property to his widow, and appointed her and William Thomas his executors. Mrs. Todhunter and William Thomas proved William Todhunter's will in the United States, but not in England. John Todhunter died in 1849, leaving the widow of William him surviving. The widow of William Todhunter afterwards, in 1849, made a settlement of all her interest under her husband's will in favour of herself for life, and, after her death, for her three children by William Todhunter. Mrs. Todhunter afterwards died. The question upon this petition was as to the title to the 5,000*l.* in the events which had happened.

Bacon and C. T. Simpson, for the children of William Todhunter, contended that the next of kin were intended by the words "personal representatives;" and that the settlement made by the widow did not include this 5,000*l.* They cited Bridge v. Abbot, 3 Bro. Ch. Ca. 224; Holloway v. Holloway, 5 Ves. 399; Palin v. Hill, 1 Myl. & Keen, 470; and Kilner v. Leech, 10 Bea. 362.

Russell for the representatives of Mrs. Todhunter.

Elmsley for the trustees of the settlement.

Wigram, for William Thomas, the surviving executor of William Todhunter, mentioned that a difficulty arose from the will of W. Todhunter not having been proved in England.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 44, had given large powers to the Court in such cases, and he would exercise the power in this case by appointing W. Thomas to represent the estate of W. Todhunter.

Wigram then contended that W. Thomas was entitled to the 5,000*l.* either beneficially or as part of the assets of W. Todhunter. He cited Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 15 Jur. 1091; Price v. Strange, 6 Madd. 159; Sanders v. Franks, 2 Madd. 147; and Wallis v. Taylor, 8 Sim. 421.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that the point of contention here was embarrassed with numerous decisions on each side, but it was his duty to do that which it had always been held to be the duty of the Court to do, namely, to ascertain from the context and the words used, what was the intention of the testator. The words in the present case were not identical with, although they nearly approached the words which occurred in cases which had been decided. There was manifestly a very clear intention that if either of the legatees died in the testator's lifetime, his share should go to those who would have become entitled to it if he had lived. It had been contended that this legacy of 5,000*l.* should go to the legal personal representatives of William Todhunter, either beneficially or to be dealt with as part of his assets. The former contention was not pressed and could not be sustained; neither did the latter appear to be the just view. It would indeed be strange to hold that this legacy should be treated as assets of William Todhunter, because it had never become his property. Upon the death of John Todhunter the Court must look for the person entitled to the 5,000*l.* Mrs. Todhunter was then living, and was both the legal personal representative of her husband and also the person beneficially entitled under his will, and she was therefore entitled to this legacy.

By arrangement between the parties it was afterwards agreed that the money should be paid to the trustees of the settlement made by Mrs. Todhunter.

BRYSON v. THE WARWICK AND BIRMINGHAM CANAL COMPANY.

Practice—Lost document.

Where an agreement had been executed in two parts, one of which was lost, the Court at the instance of the plaintiff to whom the lost part had belonged, ordered the defendant to produce the part in his possession for the purpose of having the same stamped, the plaintiff paying the stamp duty, penalty, and costs.

This was a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to compel the production by the Warwick and Birmingham Canal Company of the part of an agreement in their possession, for the purpose of having the same stamped. The suit was instituted by a subscriber to a projected railway company, called the London and Birmingham Extension Railway Company, to obtain the repayment of a sum of 10,000*l.* part of the funds of the company alleged to have been improperly paid by the directors to the Warwick and Birmingham Canal Company in respect of an agreement to purchase their canal. When the money was paid an agreement was executed in two parts by the directors and the canal company. That part of the agreement which was held by the directors had been lost, and in consequence of that circumstance the present motion was made. The part of the agreement in the possession of the canal company had by an order in this suit been directed, together with other documents, to be produced before the examiner, and the plaintiff was desirous of proving the due execution of the same, and for that purpose to have it duly stamped.

De Gex, in support of the motion, cited Neale v. Swind, 2 Cro. & Jerv. 278; and Twentyman v. Barnes, 2 De G. & Sm. 225.

Malins, for the defendants, opposed the application.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR considered that upon the authority of the cases which had been cited the order should be made upon the plaintiff's paying the duty and penalty, and the costs of the application.

LEA v. SMITH.

Practice—Service of copy of bill under the 23rd Order of 26th August, 1841.

Bird, on behalf of the plaintiff, and thirteen of the defendants in this suit, these defendants being all in the same interest, applied for the leave of the Court to serve but one copy of the bill under the 23rd Order of the 26th of August, 1841, upon one of these defendants. The application was made for the purpose of avoiding the expense of service upon all these defendants.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR gave leave to effect the service as asked.

Re MOLE.

Practice—6 & 7 Vict. c. 73.

A trustee should not be served with a petition by a cestui que trust under the above Act, for the delivery and taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs.

This was a petition by a cestui que trust for the delivery and taxation of certain bills of costs which had been paid by the trustee.

Speed, for the petitioner.

Shapter, for the solicitor.

Freeling, for the trustee, objected to his having been served with the petition, as he was an unnecessary party.

Speed referred to the 39th section of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73).

The VICE-CHANCELLOR (after consulting with the Registrar) said that it was not the practice to bring the trustee before the Court upon such a petition, and he should, therefore, dismiss the petition as against the trustee with costs.

MCNEILLIE v. ACTON.

Practice—Appointment of examiner.

Application for the appointment of an examiner by or before whom the witnesses are to be examined under the 31st section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, should be made to the Court, and not at chambers.

Osborne moved for the appointment of a person named in the notice of motion, as an examiner of witnesses in this cause. The 31st section of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, provided that "All witnesses to be examined orally under the provisions of this Act shall be so examined by or before one of the examiners of the Court, or by or before an examiner to be specially appointed by the Court," &c.

Follett objected that this was a motion of course, and should not have been brought before the Court, but applied for at chambers.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that as the Act mentioned "an examiner to be specially appointed by the Court," he thought that the application was properly made here. His Honour made the order.

SMITH v. SWANSEA DOCK COMPANY.

Practice—Evidence—Affidavit.

In this case there was a motion to commit for breach of injunction, and a counter motion to dissolve injunction. After motion had been opened, plaintiff filed an affidavit in reply to defendant's answer.

Russell, amicus curiæ, referred to a case before Lord Truro, in which this had been refused.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR declined to admit it. It could only be done after motion had been opened. Where the Court itself required information as to particular facts, the practice ought to be strict in such cases, or proceedings on a motion might become interminable.

Plaintiff's counsel then insisted upon calling plaintiff himself (who was in court) and examining him orally under sec. 40 of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, the latter part of which clause gave the Court a wide discretion.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR refused this. The clause, although it applied to proceedings on motion, required that the witness should be summoned before the examiner by subpœna duces tecum in the ordinary way, and that must be done under an application made before the motion was brought on. If the plaintiff chose to begin without being ready with his evidence, the Court would not stop proceedings in order to enable him to complete it. The same reason which applied to the non-admission of the affidavit would also apply here.

SHARPE v. BLONDEAU.

New practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 3.

A printed indorsement on a bill or claim, where the defendant is residing out of the jurisdiction, may be altered in writing by inserting fourteen instead of eight days.

Prendergast had, on a former day, mentioned the circumstances of this case to the Court. It was one in which the printed indorsement on a bill had been served on a defendant residing in France, to appear thereto in eight days, the usual time. The defendant residing in France, it was impossible for him to enter an appearance within that time.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said the point had been mentioned by him to the other Vice-Chancellors, and they agreed with him in opinion that the printed indorsement upon a bill served upon a defendant who was in France, might be altered from eight days to fourteen days, or more. The defendant being in France had been served with a copy of the printed bill, and the printed indorsement requiring him to appear in eight days, which was an impossibility. He thought that it was not necessary that in every case the indorsement should be printed. It might be a matter of discretion in certain cases.

ROBINSON v. HEWITSON.

New practice—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 53.

A petition is within the 53rd section. Where a female petitioner had married after the filing and stamping of the petition, and it thereby became necessary to amend the petition by making it the petition of husband and wife, such amended petition must be restamped.

Metcalfe, for the petitioner, asked the opinion of the Court whether a petition, as stated by the Vice-Chancellor in his judgment, should or not be restamped.

The VICE-CHANCELLOR said that he had consulted with the other judges upon the questions raised under the 53rd section of the above Act. The facts were these:—A petition had been presented by a female legatee for the payment of the amount of her legacy out of court. Subsequently to the filing and stamping of the petition the lady had married. The questions were, whether the 53rd section applied to a petition, and whether the petition ought to be restamped. The judges were all of opinion that a new stamp was necessary, and that a petition was within the meaning of the 53rd section.

EDWARDS v. LOWNDES.

Health of Towns Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63—Clerk to Board of Health—Provisional order—Appropriation of funds to found right of action—Notice of action.

By a local Market Act, the money received under its provisions, after payment of the costs of the Act, were directed to be applied at the discretion of the trustees in payment of the rents and fines due and to become due to the lord of the manor, in respect of the market-house, &c. and in the purchase of such messuages, &c. as should be necessary for the purpose of the Act, and in keeping the market-house, &c. in repair, and in paying the salary to the organist of the church, and in reducing and paying-off mortgage debts, annuities, &c.; and in the next place towards such general improvements as the trustees should think proper. By a confirmed order of the Board of Health, under the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, the local Act was repealed, and the property transferred to the local Board. The order directed that all contracts, debts, &c. made, &c. by the trustees of the local Act should be paid and satisfied by and recovered from the local Board, as the same might have been recovered from the trustees.

The plaintiff was appointed organist of the church by the officiating clergyman, and received his salary from the trustees of the local Act, and after its repeal he received about a quarter's salary from the Local Board of Health. On subsequently applying for a year's salary, he was informed by letter that the Board had determined to resist the demand. In an action on the case, brought to recover the amount, alleging a year's salary to be due, and that the trustees had funds in hand applicable and sufficient for the payment thereof, and that it was the duty of the Board to pay the said salary, and that they refused to pay it, contrary to their duty, the plaintiff proved that by the published statement of the Board there was, at the time of the refusal, a balance of exceeding 200l. in the hands of the trustees, but in this account a sum of upwards of 7,000l. due on mortgage of the market estates, was not included:

Held, that the action was not maintainable against the clerk to the local Board, there not having been any appropriation of the funds by the Board to the payment of the organist's salary.

Case against the clerk of the Burslem Local Board of Health, to recover 30*l.* one year's salary, alleged to be due to the plaintiff as organist of Burslem church.

The declaration alleged that the plaintiff, after the passing of the Act 6 Geo. 4, c. 131, for regulating the markets in the town of Burslem, &c. and before the passing of the Public Health Act, 1848, to wit, on the 1st January, A.D. 1845, was, and still is, organist of the parish church of the parish of Burslem, in that behalf duly appointed, at and for a certain yearly salary, to wit, the yearly salary of 30*l.* payable to the plaintiff on the 29th day of September in each and every year, and which salary was duly paid to the plaintiff by the trustees for the time being of and for the town-hall and market-place of the town of Burslem, in the county of Stafford, &c. in the first Act mentioned, &c.; as and after the same salary became due and payable to the plaintiff before and up to the 29th day of September, A.D. 1849, pursuant to the last-mentioned Act; and that the said salary which became due and payable to the plaintiff for the year ending on the 29th day of September, A.D. 1850, was paid to the plaintiff by the said Local Board of Health.

The declaration then proceeded to set out the provisional order of the General Board of Health, by which Burslem was duly brought within the operation of the Health of Towns Act, and providing for the repeal of the above-mentioned local Act, except certain clauses thereof, and directing (Order 13) that after the confirmation of the order, all bonds, mortgages, contracts, debts, moneys, and securities for money, made, given, &c. by the trustees or commissioners respectively, should be paid and satisfied by the local Board out of such parts of the said transferred property and estate as would or ought to have been charged or chargeable in respect of the same if that order had not been made, and should, as near as circumstances would permit, have the same priority, and be paid and satisfied within the same time, and be recovered from the said local Board, as the same might have been recovered from such trustee or commissioner respectively; and that if such property and estate should be insufficient for that purpose, the deficiency should be charged upon, and paid, and satisfied by the said Local Board of Health out of the general district rates levied under the said Public Health Act, in the parts and places which would or ought to have been chargeable with such deficiency if that order had not been made, &c.; and also providing (Order 17) that the order and the repeal of the parts of the local Act should not annul, defeat, lessen, or otherwise prejudicially affect any rate, assessment, imposition, composition, charge, purchase, sale, conveyance, grant, demise, lease, mortgage, annuity, assignment, bond, contract, covenant, agreement, security, matter, or thing whatsoever, before the passing of any Act of Parliament confirming that order, made, entered into, or done, under, or by virtue, or in pursuance of the said local Act with reference to the purposes of the same respectively; but notwithstanding that order, all such acts, deeds, matters, and things should be as good, valid, and effectual to all intents and purposes whatsoever, for, against, and with reference to the said Local Board of Health, as if the same had been made, entered into, or done by, to, or with reference to that Board, instead of the trustees or commissioners of that Act respectively, and might be proceeded on and enforced in the same manner in all respects as if that Board, instead of such trustees or commissioners, had been party or privy to the same, and been named or referred to therein; and further (Order 18), that that order and the repeal of the parts of the said local Act mentioned in the schedule thereto, should be subject and without prejudice to any penalties incurred under that Act, and to all estates, rights, interests, claims, and demands whatsoever, at the time of the passing of any Act of Parliament confirming that order, created, confirmed, subsisting, and capable of being recovered, enforced, and enjoyed under and by virtue or in pursuance of the said local Act, but all such penalties might be enforced and recovered by the said Local Board of Health, according to the provisions of that order; and all such estates, rights, interests, claims, and demands might be had, exercised, and enjoyed as if that order had not been made.

The declaration then averred, that after making and publishing of the said order, and after the passing of the Public Health Act, 1850, No. 3, the Local Board of Health was duly elected; and the plaintiff further saith, that at the said first election of the said Local Board of Health for the said parish of Burslem (except as aforesaid), and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on the 29th day of September, A.D. 1851, a large sum, to wit, 30*l.* for one year of the said salary became due and payable to the plaintiff as such organist as aforesaid; and that on that day, and from thence until the commencement of this suit, there were and still are in the hands of the said Local Board of Health for the said parish of Burslem, funds and moneys applicable to and sufficient for the payment to the plaintiff of the said sum of 30*l.* so due and payable to him for his said salary on the said 29th day of September, A.D. 1851, as aforesaid, out of the moneys raised and received by the said Local Board of Health, by virtue of the said order and the statutes in that behalf made and provided, by and out of which said funds and moneys it was then the duty of the said Local Board of Health to pay to the plaintiff the amount of his said salary so due and in arrear to him as aforesaid, of all which premises the said Board of Health, and the members thereof respectively, after the said sum of 30*l.* so became due and payable to the plaintiff, and before the commencement of this suit, to wit, on, &c. had notice, and were then requested by the plaintiff to pay him the same; yet the said Board of Health and the members thereof, not regarding their duty in that behalf, but intending to injure and defraud the plaintiff in this behalf, did not nor would, when they were so requested, or at any time before or afterwards, pay to the plaintiff the same sum of money, or any part thereof, but have hitherto wholly neglected and refused so to do, contrary to their duty in that behalf, and contrary to the statutes in that behalf made and provided, to the damage of the plaintiff, &c.

To this declaration the defendant pleaded:—

First, Not guilty.

Secondly. A traverse of the allegation that the plaintiff was organist of and in the parish church of Burslem, at the salary mentioned, payable on the said 29th of September in each and every year.

Thirdly. That the provisional order did not recite or direct in manner and form as in the declaration alleged.

Fourthly. That there were not on the day when the said sum of 30*l.* so became due and payable to the plaintiff for his said salary as alleged, or at any time afterwards before the commencement in this suit in the hands of the said Local Board of Health, funds or moneys applicable to or sufficient for the payment to the plaintiff of the said sum of 30*l.* or any part thereof, out of the moneys raised or received by the said Local Board of Health by virtue of the said order, under the statutes in that behalf made and provided in manner and form, &c.

Fifthly. That the said Local Board of Health never did determine to pay to the plaintiff the money for the non-payment whereof the plaintiff has above complained, or any part thereof, and that before the commencement of this suit, and at a reasonable time in that behalf, to wit, on the 29th day of September, A.D. 1851, the said Local Board of Health did, at a meeting of the said local Board then duly holden, in the reasonable exercise of their discretion in that behalf, reasonably determine not to pay the said money, or any part thereof, to the plaintiff, and to apply the whole of the said funds and moneys in the declaration mentioned to be in their hands to the other purposes to which in and by the said local Act the said trustees were empowered at their discretion to apply the same; and the defendant further says, the said other purposes at the time of the said determination reasonably required the whole of the said funds and moneys to be applied for the last-mentioned purposes, concluding with a verification.

The plaintiff joined issue on the four first pleas, and replied de injuria to the last.

The case was tried at the last Stafford Summer Assizes, before Cresswell, J. when the plaintiff sought to establish his claim in the following manner:—by the Act 6 Geo. 4, c. 131 (local and personal), "An Act for Regulating the Markets in the Town of Burslem, in the County of Stafford, and for Lighting, Regulating the Police, and Watching the said Town of Burslem," &c. it was enacted (sec. 91), "That out of the first moneys which shall be raised or received by virtue of this Act, the said trustees shall in the first place pay and discharge all the costs, charges, and expenses relative to the procuring and passing of this Act, or so much and such part and parts thereof as the said trustees shall conclusive on all direct, with legal interest for such part sion of the 52nd shall have been advanced for that purpose," that the part- remainder thereof shall be applied, at the discre shall on of the said trustees, in payment of the rents and fine examine due and to become due to the lord of the manor for to rest the time being in respect of the said market-house ove and the waste lands in the possession of the said trustees, and in the purchase of such messuages, lands, tenements, or hereditaments as shall be necessary for the purposes aforesaid, and in keeping the said town-hall and market-house in repair, and in providing the necessary conveniences for the said market, and otherwise executing the several purposes of this Act as to the said market, and in paying the salary to the organist of Burslem Church, and in reducing, paying off, and discharging the principal sums of money and interest which now are owing, or which shall be borrowed upon any mortgage or mortgages, and in redeeming any annuities to be granted by virtue of this Act, and the same shall in the next place be applied for or towards such general improvements in the said parish of Burslem, or for establishing, promoting, or assisting any public works, institutions, or establishments there, as the said trustees assembled at any meeting to be held in pursuance of and according to the directions of this Act shall think proper. And if any surplus shall then remain, such surplus shall be applied in aid and diminution of the police-rates hereinafter directed to be raised."

A copy of the provisional order of the General Board of Health, by which Burslem was brought within the operation of the Health of Towns Act, and providing for the repeal of the above-mentioned Local Act, except certain clauses, was put in evidence. This order having been subsequently confirmed by the Public Health Act, 1850, No. 3, obtained the force of an Act of Parliament under the provisions of the statute.

The provisional order contained the clauses as set out in the declaration, transferring the liabilities and duties of the trustees under the local Act to the Local Board of Health.

By the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63 (The Public Health Act, 1848), the clerk of the local Board was empowered to sue and be sued on behalf of the Board.

The plaintiff was examined on his own behalf. He stated that he was appointed organist of the parish church of Burslem in 1849, by the officiating clergyman. His salary was at first 20*l.* a year, but was subsequently increased on account of extra services to the sum of 30*l.* in the whole. He received this salary from the market trustees down to the year 1850. He subsequently received about a quarter's salary from the Local Board of Health. On afterwards applying by letter to the Board for the balance due, he received the following answer:—

"Burslem, Oct. 22, 1851.

"Re Organist's Salary.

"Sir,—I am directed by the Burslem Local Board of Health to inform you that a special meeting has been this day held for the purpose of considering your application for the payment of 30*l.* for a year's salary as organist of the parish church, when it was determined to resist the demand.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"To Mr. R. J. Edwards." "J. Lowndes."

The defendant was also called as a witness on behalf of the plaintiff, to produce the published statement of the receipts and expenditure of the Board, drawn up by the defendant, as secretary, and duly audited. This statement shewed a balance in hand on the market trust account of upwards of 200*l.* On cross-examination, it appeared that a large sum had been borrowed on mortgage of the market estates, and that the principal sum of 7,140*l.* was still due, which was not entered in the account.

Evidence was also given shewing the payment of the organist's salary by the treasurer under the original Market Act down to the establishment of the Board of Health.

At the close of the plaintiff's case, it was submitted, for the defendant, that the action would not lie on various grounds (see 20 Law T. Rep. 43); and leave being reserved to the defendant to move accordingly, the verdict was, by direction of the learned judge, entered for the plaintiff on the second, third, and fourth pleas, and for the defendant on the first and fifth.

Whately having obtained a rule nisi to set aside the verdict for the defendant on the first and fifth pleas, and to enter it thereon for the plaintiff,

Gray obtained a rule nisi to arrest the judgment on the ground that the declaration disclosed no cause of action.

Monday, Nov. 15.—Gray and M'Mahon shewed cause against the plaintiff's rule.—1. By the local Act the trustees stand in no other situation than trustees; in fact, they are barely trustees; and it is submitted that, in a case where trustees have come to a determination not to pay a sum of money, or to go further, unless they have come to the determination to pay the particular sum of money, an action

The two bodies were entirely different, ...ed required distinct qualifications, and the distinc- ...tion is kept up throughout the Act All the property connected with the market was vested in the trustees It is admitted that there was a sum of 210*l* in the hands of the trustees, which they might have appropriated to the payment of the plaintiff's salary. This does not give the plaintiff an absolute right to the payment of his salary out of that sum. The trustees might want it for other purposes within the scope of the Act. Unless they have appropriated it to the payment of the plaintiff's salary, this action does not lie. (Roper v. Holland, 3 A & E 99, Bartlett v Dimond, 14 M & W 49; Pardoe v. Price, 16 M & W. 451.) The present case is not distinguishable from Pardoe v. Price, and the judgment in that case shows that the present action will not lie at all Even in equity the trustees are not liable to the plaintiff, for they have a discretion as to which of the objects of the Act they will satisfy first and they may satisfy every other one before they choose to pay the plaintiff's salary. At what moment does the money in the defendant's hands cease to be their money as trustees?—it can only be when they appro- priate it to the payment of specific objects It fol- lows that this action is in reality one to compel the trustees to perform their trust (Cane v Chapman 5 A. & E 647) By the local Act, a particular fund ...ed by sec 91, made liable to the payment of this salary, but not the property vested in the trustees, which comprises, amongst other things, the market buildings, &c If, then, execution was to go against the trustees in this action, what is there to prevent the lease of the market being seized? This is a similar case to Addison v The Mayor of Preston, 21 L. J. 146, C P. in which an action was held not to lie It was then contended that there was evi- dence to support the fifth plea

Whately and Whitmore in support of the rule — The argument for the trustees goes to the length of contending that they may act capriciously and refuse to pay the plaintiff's salary But a duty arises on sec. 91 of the Act, by which the trustees are bound to pay the plaintiff, and such duty is enforceable in a court of law Every breach of a public duty work- ing wrong and loss to another, is an injury, and actionable. (Sutton v Johnstone 1 T R 509) This is not simply a trust, the trustees are rather in the light of debtors All the cases cited by the other side were actions for money had and received with the exception of Cane v Chapman That was cited in the argument of Pardoe v Price, but was not noticed in the judgment An action of tort for breach of duty was held to lie in Cane v Chapman There was no evidence of any other debts due from the trustees besides the plaintiff's salary and it is admitted that they had sufficient to pay it, if there upon became their duty to pay it, and an action lies for the breach of such duty in not paying it It was not shown that the defendants resisted paying the plaintiff on the ground of their liabilities to other creditors. It was then contended that there was no evidence to support the fifth plea

JUDGMENT

Thursday, Nov 20 — Lord CAMPBELL C J (after stating the facts)—The question under these circumstances is, whether an action on the case for a breach of duty in not paying the salary will lie This question must be determined by the applica- tion of general principles Many cases have settled that where there is a trustee and cestui que trust, an action at law cannot be maintained by the latter against the former, though the latter may have in his hands money, which, under the terms of the trust deed, he ought to pay, but which he holds in the character of trustee (Pardoe v Price, 16 M & W. 451) If he directs the appropriation of any part of the fund to the purpose of such payment, then his character is changed, and then not as a trustee but as a receiver of money to the use of the other, an action will lie against him, upon the ground of the appropriation and the consequent liability In the present case the Board of Health was in the situation of a trustee for the persons who had an interest in the distribution of the funds which were received by the board under the Act, and the board and the plaintiff stood to each other in the relation of trustee and cestui que trust. On the principle already stated, he cannot maintain an action against the board It is said that the money was paid to him once, and that this implies recognition of a contract, which would make the money legally due to him afterwards, but we think that the payment was made in execution of the trust, and not in consequence of any contract It therefore appears that money had and received, or money due for work and labour, will not lie in this case. An action on the case was therefore brought for a breach of duty, and the question is whether the action in that form is maintainable Case v Chapman, 5 A & E. was relied on by the plaintiff. There the action was held to lie, because the commissioners, though not personally liable, had a plain distinct public duty to perform That appears to be the first and only case in which it has been decided that such an action could be main- tained under such circumstances It is not alleged here that there are no other amounts payable out of their funds, or that, after discharging ordinary claims, the fund in hand was sufficient and applicable to this purpose It is not easy to reconcile the case of Cane v Chapman with the principle of law that governs remedies against trustees, and we are not disposed to consider it to be an authority in any case in which the circumstances are not precisely similar Here the money is to be applicable accord- ing to the discretion of the trustees There was money due from them to a greater amount for other purposes, and to the payment of which these funds were just as applicable as to the payment of this salary That circumstance distinguishes this case from Cane v Chapman, and on general principles we think that an action on the case is not maintain- able by a cestui que trust against trustees where the only breach is non payment of money held by them as such trustees Judgment for the defendants

INSOLVENCY COURT.

(Before Mr Commissioner PHILLIPS)

Re GEORGE VINTER HOLMES

Conflicting jurisdiction—Double proceedings under the Protection Acts and the 1 & 2 Vict c 110

Quære, may an insolvent get rid of proceedings against him by his creditors to enforce payment of instalments agreed upon under a protection petition, by a petition under the 1 & 2 Vict c 110?

Held, that the debts in the protection schedule must be inserted in the schedules under the 1 & 2 Vict c 110 and that the latter proceeding may be maintained, and supersede the protection petition

This insolvent came up for his hearing under the 1 & 2 Vict c 110 supported by Cooke There was no opposing counsel but a question arose as to whether his petition could be sustained under the following circumstances He was a clerk in the Post office and in 1848 he had petitioned under the Protection Acts and obtained protection he agree- ing to set aside 110*l* a year for his creditors his then salary being, 250*l* with a deduction of 20*l* to the superannuation fund in the Post office and his income tax He made one payment subsequently lost his situation and was arrested for a new debt by a new creditor The detaining creditor under the present petition 1 & 2 Vict c 110) was not a creditor at the date of the proceedings under the Protection Acts and was consequently not inserted in that schedule filed in 1848 He had obtained leave to file the present petition and the question of jurisdiction now arose for the hearing to-day

In support of the petition Cole referred to Re Child before the Chief Commissioner Nov 29 1851 (reported in the Times Nov 2 1851) which in its circumstances was precisely similar to the present His learned friend Murrae for Messrs Dean, Lecks and Redpath solicitors and creditors of the insolvent objected to the jurisdiction of the Court on this ground, and Reed supported the in- solvent The Chief Commissioner sustained the petition, and discharged the prisoner, after a remand for a vexatious defence of an action

Reed (amicus curiæ) briefly stated the facts of that case, and the commissioner examined the report of the case in the Times

Macrae (amicus curiæ), in reply to the Court, stated that he had relied upon Re Henry Smith, before Mr Commissioner Law 18 Law J Rep 80, and 18 Law T Rep 80 The learned Commissioner looked at the case

Mr Commissioner PHILLIPS said, he was rather inclined to adopt the Chief Commissioner's course, because it is impossible the insolvent can swear that all his debts are included and before his discharge he must swear to that fact The question is whether he is not standing on his rights now The Chief Commissioner has given a decision that this man is standing upon his strict rights, and the present insolvent is just doing what Child sought to do I think the insolvent will commit perjury if he omits inserting the debts in the protection schedule in his present schedule, under the 1 & 2 Vict c 110 It is clear that they must be taken notice of by analogy in cases in which these debts come to be considered in reference to the 300*l* clause He thought he should adopt the decision of the Chief Commissioner

The Registrar (Mr Ingpen).—There has been a dividend received upon the first estate under the pro- tection petition, and these creditors, if inserted in this schedule (1 & 2 Vict c 110), will have double advantages, having a double dividend.

Cooke —They cannot receive more than 20*s.* in the pound

Mr Commissioner PHILLIPS said that the Chief Commissioner seemed to have acted upon the same idea that was in his own mind. How could the insolvent swear that he had inserted all his debts if he omitted these debts in the protection schedule, which were still unpaid. He could not see his way to an adjudication adverse to that of the Chief Com- missioner He could not see how a man could disregard debts he was actually in process of paying He should therefore allow them to be inserted in this schedule, but he begged it to be understood that the ground upon which the insolvent is discharged is, that if his old debts are struck out, he cannot swear conscientiously that he does not owe these debts, and test it this way—if he came up under the Protection Acts and was a trader, he could not, by the decisions of the Court and by the law, in his opinion, have protection, if the new debts, with the debts in the protection schedule, were above 300*l*.

Petition sustained. Prisoner discharged.

Non payment of instalments after discharge under 1 & 2 Vict c 110, pursuant to rule of Court. Motion for committal

Cooke moved for a rule nisi to commit the insol- vent for contempt for disobedience of a rule of this Court bearing date 12th day of November, 1852. Counsel made the application on behalf of Mr. Sa- muel Sturges, provisional assignee The insolvent was discharged on the 21st March, 1850, on his filing in this court certain undertakings, as follow — In the Court for Relief of Insolvent Debtors (No 61 370 1),—In the matter of the petition of Richard Elmore,—I, the undersigned Richard El- more, the above-named insolvent do hereby under- take to set aside for the benefit of the creditors men- tioned in the schedule, the sum of 40*l* per annum, to be paid to the provisional assignee by equal quarterly instalments the first instalment to be paid on the 10th day of July next out of my salary of 140*l* per annum, and I consent that this be made a rule of this honourable Court, to enforce the said payments during the time I continue to receive the said salary Dated this 12th day of March, 1850 —Richard El- more Witness, Reuben Simpson And I further consent in the event of my obtaining any more lucrative office than that which I now hold, or in the event of my present salary being enlarged, it shall be competent for this honourable Court to make such further addition to the said allowance as to the said Court may seem fit Dated this 21st day of March 1850 —Richard Elmore Reuben Simp- son witness This undertaking was made a rule of Court on the 12th of November 1852 and the rule was served on the insolvent personally on the 22nd of November last, and when application was then made for the arrears due, amounting to 60*l* the insolvent said he could not pay There had been four several sums of 10*l* each paid into Court, on the 3rd December, 1852 the last application was made for payment

Mr Commissioner PHILLIPS I think that on the first default an application ought to have been made to the Court

Cooke These applications are expensive

Mr Commissioner PHILLIPS If they had been strict they would have got the money, but from 10*l*. they let it run on to 60*l*

ELECTION PETITIONS.

Reported by WILLIAM P HAIR, Esq of the Middle Temple, Barrister at Law

Monday Dec 6

(Before G K RICKARDS, Esq Examiner of Recog- nisances to the House of Commons under the "Election Petitions Act" (11 & 12 Vict. c. 98).

Re THE CARLISLE ELECTION PETITION.

Practice Form of recognisance—Alteration therein

By the 3rd sec of the "Election Petitions Act" (11 & 12 Vict c 98) it is enacted, "that before the presentation of any election petition to the House, a recognisance shall be entered into by two, three, or four persons, as sureties for the person subscribing such petition, in certain sums for the payment of all costs and expenses which, under the provisions hereinafter contained, shall become payable by the person subscribing the petition to any witness summoned in his behalf, or to the sitting member or other the party complained in such petition, or to any party who may be admitted to defend such peti- tion as hereinafter provided," and by the 5th section, "such recognisance may be in the form or to the effect set forth in the schedule to this Act, with such alteration as may be necessary to adapt such form to the circumstances of each case." The form of recognizance is set forth in the schedule, and the condition is stated to be the payment of "all costs and expenses in respect of the petition, which may become payable by the said petitioner (or petitioners) to any witness summoned on his (or their) behalf, or to the sitting member or other party complained of in the said petition, or any party who may be admitted to defend the same as provided by the said Act." In this case the petition being against two members, Sir J. G. and Mr. F., the agent altered the word "member" to "members," and the agent for the sitting member objected under the provisions of the 13th section of the Act to this alteration, as rendering the recognizance invalid, inasmuch as the term did not secure the payment of such costs as might be adjudged as several and separate costs to each member.

Cooper was heard in support of the objection, and cited Kipling v. Turner, 3 B. & Ald. 263; Chapman v. Beckington, 3 K. B. 708; Lord Arlington v. Meyrick, Saund. 414, a; Dance v. Girdler, 1 N. R. 34.

Tomlinson, in support of the recognizances, quoted Vesey v. Mantell, 9 M. & W. 328.

The EXAMINER.—The ground on which I decide in favour of the objection and against the sufficiency of the altered form of recognizance, is that the form of the bond as it stands does not give a valid security for costs to each member severally. I cannot depart from the dictum of Abbot, C. J., in Dance v. Girdler, where he says, "The liability of persons on a bond is not to be extended by implication," which would be the case were I to admit the proposed alteration, for this recognizance is an obligation on sureties of a penal nature, and is not to be extended by such implication. It has indeed been argued that all the words beginning with "to any witness," down to the end of the recognizance, might be struck out as surplusage, and that this alteration is therefore immaterial. The words may or may not be surplusage; but if you use the words which you contend you might strike out, you must be bound by the form which you use, and cannot turn round when you have inserted such words, and call them of no use for all practical purposes. With respect to the interpretation clause, which it is argued will remedy any supposed defect caused by the alteration, by making words used in the plural to import the singular, I do not think the interpretation clause applies to the form of the schedule if altered. The Act ties a person down to this form strictly if used at all: it says, You may use another form altogether if you choose; but it will not come in to help any erroneous or defective alteration introduced into this form. This view is strengthened by observing the alterations which are permitted in the form are all specified therein in brackets. Should it turn out that one sitting member may be decided to be entitled to costs from the petitioners, and the other liable for costs to the petitioners, I do not think that such separate liabilities, directly opposite as they would be, could be sued on under this recognizance.

Recognizances objectionable.

Dec. 7.

(Before the EXAMINER of RECOGNIZANCES.)

In re THE MAYO ELECTION PETITION.

The petition being, as in the Carlisle case, against two members, the agent in drawing the recognizance thereto had strictly followed the form given in the schedule to the Election Petitions Act, preserving the term "sitting member;" and it was now argued that a condition in such terms did not secure joint costs to the two members.

Kingslake, Serjt., in support of the objection, cited Arlington v. Meyrick, 3 Saund. 414, a.; Dance v. Girdler, 1 N. R. 34; Wright v. Russell, 3 Wils. 538; Corporation of London Assurance Company v. Bold, 6 K. B. R. 514.

W. Bovill in support of the recognizance.—Barnes v. White, 1 C. B. 208; Rex v. Jeffreys, 4 T. R. 768; Re Boothroyd, 15 M. & W. 10, 11; Reg. v. Johnson, 8 Q. B. 102; Shepherd's Touchstone, 88; Ransom v. Dundas, 8 B. N. C. 128.

The EXAMINER (on December 10.)—The question is whether a recognizance to a petition against the return of two members, which follows the form contained in the schedule to the Election Petitions Act, is valid. The object of a statutory form being given was to relieve parties from the difficulty which they experienced in drawing forms which should be free from risk of being set aside on technical grounds; the earlier Acts make the use of such forms imperative, the later Acts allow certain modifications in them according to the circumstances of the case. Under these acts the parties may use the forms provided, or forms to that effect: that is, the form is sufficient, if legally sufficient to keep those who use it within the warranty of safety from technical objections given by the statute. The "such alterations," mentioned in the 5th section of the Act, I consider to apply to alterations which might by circumstances become necessary, as, for example, a change in the name of the Sovereign, as in the case of Reg. v. Salomons. The whole effect of the recognizance is to be gathered from the words of the 3rd section, taken with those of the 5th section; the phrase there, "to the sitting members," includes by the interpretation clause "several sitting members." This form of recognizance strictly follows the words of the clause, and secures the exact objects contemplated by the 3rd section. I think the interpretation clause will assist the words as they stand in this recognizance, inasmuch as that clause may be held to govern the form given in the schedule, when strictly followed, as being part of "this Act." And from the case of Parker v. Gill, D. & L., I am confirmed in the opinion of an interpretation clause having power to aid all forms ordered by an Act, but not applying to forms drawn up by parties at their own discretion, as in the Carlisle case. If, as has been argued, the term "sitting member" is only to be used in cases of petitions against a single member, we have the strange anomaly of a form being given in the schedule to an Act, which is applicable only in a small minority of the cases for which that act is intended to provide. From Dwarris on Statutes, 510; Reg. v. Baines, 12 A. & E.; and Ransom v. Dundas, I see the legal authorities have always been ready to strain a point to make a statutory form given by an Act agree with the practical working of that Act, unless the language of the one be clearly repugnant from that of the other. In this case the 5th section gives the words; the recognizance agrees with the enacting part of the statute; and no point need be strained to ensure their agreement. I hold, therefore, the recognizance to be unobjectionable.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Friday, Dec. 3.

NORTH BRITISH BANK v. COLLINS.

Joint-stock bank — Deed of copartnery — Estoppel — Fraudulent abstracts of directors not binding — Balancing the books — What are losses of the company.

By the deed of copartnery of a joint-stock bank, the directors were to submit yearly abstracts of the company's affairs, showing a balance, which abstracts should be binding on the partners, who were to have no right to examine the company's books; but it was to be competent to a majority of partners at a general meeting to appoint two of themselves to examine and report on the company's affairs in general. It was also provided that, if at any time it should be found on balancing the books that the losses amounted to a certain sum, the company was to be ipso facto dissolved. A., a partner, filed his bill, alleging that the yearly abstracts were false and fraudulent; that the losses already equalled the specified amount; that the directors had misapplied the funds, and by undue influence procured a majority of partners to back them; and that the company was insolvent:

Held, that the plaintiff's allegations were sufficient to warrant a reference to an accountant to inspect the company's books, and report whether the abstracts were false, and whether the losses equalled the specified amount:

Held, further, that A. was not estopped by the deed from seeking redress in a court of equity; for the deed contemplated a case where the abstracts were bond fide, and not fraudulent:

Held, further, that the expression, "if on balancing the books a certain loss be found," being general, the court is justified in taking its own way of ascertaining the fact of the loss, though the deed may contain provisions as to a particular mode of ascertaining it:

Held, further, that "the losses of the company" include such losses as may arise through the fraud of the directors, and for which the directors may be personally liable.

This was an appeal from the Court of Session in Scotland. The respondent was a shareholder in a joint-stock company in Glasgow, called the North British Bank, and he had instituted an action of declarator, that is, filed a bill in the Court of Session, praying the court to put an end to the company on certain grounds therein stated. The bill set forth the following facts:—In 1845 the North British Bank was formed as a joint-stock company, and in the articles of copartnership it was provided, that the business of the bank should consist in banking, exchange, money-dealing or agency in all their branches, issuing and reissuing notes for money, &c.; that the capital should consist of 1,000,000*l.*, divided into 100,000 shares of 10*l.* each; that seven ordinary directors should be elected in a manner specified to conduct the business of the company; that in case of nonpayment of calls, the directors should have power either to sue, or to sell the shares on which default had been made by auction; that the directors were to set apart a portion of profits to form a reserved surplus fund, to meet contingencies, before declaring a dividend. Then the 39th article provided: "At the general meeting, to be held on the second Wednesday of February, 1847, and at every annual general meeting, the ordinary directors for the time being shall exhibit a statement or abstract of the preceding yearly balance-sheet, and such further statement or report of the affairs of the company as they may deem it expedient or proper for the interests of the company to be made public, and shall then declare the annual dividend of profits; and every such statement or abstract and report shall be binding and conclusive on all the partners, subject to the provision of the 52nd article." The 52nd article provided, "that the partners, other than the ordinary directors, shall on no account or pretence have right to see or examine the books of the company, but shall be bound to rest satisfied with the yearly statements or abstracts above provided for." It further declared, that it should be competent to a majority of the partners, at a general meeting, "to appoint, if they see cause, two partners, qualified to be directors, as auditors, to examine and report upon the said statements or abstracts, and also upon the state of the accounts and affairs of the company generally, which auditors, after binding themselves to secrecy, shall have full and free access to all the books, vouchers, writings, and other documents connected with the affairs of the company," &c. The 54th article, after providing that it should be in the power of any of the partners holding not less than three-fourths of the stock, by agreement in writing, at any general meeting to dissolve the company, proceeded thus: "It is hereby expressly provided and declared, that if it shall be found at any time, on balancing the company's books, that losses have been sustained equal to the whole of the reserved surplus fund, and also to 25*l.* per cent. on the advanced capital stock of the company, such loss shall, ipso facto, and without the necessity of any further procedure, dissolve and put an end to the company;" and the dissolution in either of the events above mentioned was to be advertised in The Gazette, &c. The plaintiff then stated that, in consequence of the favourable report submitted by the directors to the first general meeting, he had become a shareholder; that, at the second general meeting, some of the shareholders expressed their dissatisfaction with the annual statement, and alleged it was false, which the directors denied; that, at the third general meeting in 1849, the shareholders again remonstrated with the directors, alleging that their abstract was false, and that the event contemplated in the 54th article had arrived, viz., that the losses of the company already exceeded the specified amount, on reaching which the company was ipso facto to be dissolved; that the directors disregarded all these allegations, and having procured a number of shareholders to back them, persisted in carrying on the business of the company. The bill then alleged that the plaintiff was ready to prove from the books of the company that the losses had reached the specified amount in the 54th article; moreover, that the directors had misappropriated the funds of the company by applying them to reckless speculations, apart from their proper business as a company; that, in particular, they were guilty of malversation and fraud, with a view to their own profit, inasmuch as they had appropriated to themselves 2,100 shares of stock, at a time when they were selling at a premium, without paying any price whatever for them; and that thereafter, when these shares, on which 10*l.* had been paid up, had fallen to 40*s.* they fraudulently procured the said shares to be forfeited, on the ground that they had not signed the contract. The bill concluded with alleging that the company was now unable to meet its engagements, and ought to be dissolved. The defendants (now appellants) in their answer insisted: 1. That the plaintiff was estopped by the deed of copartnery from instituting this suit; 2. That there were no sufficient grounds for putting an end to the company.

The Court of Session, in the first instance, before disposing of the merits of the case, directed a reference to an accountant, to examine the books of the company, and to report: 1. Whether the annual reports of the directors were true and correct, or, if not, in what respect erroneous; 2. Whether it appeared from the books that, at the date mentioned, the losses sustained by the company were equal to the whole of the reserved surplus fund, and also to 25*l.* per cent. on the advanced capital stock. Against this order the defendants now appealed.

Bethell and Anderson, for appellants, cited the following cases:—Palmer v. Mare, 2 Dick. 489; East India Company v. Hinchman, 1 Ves. Jun. 287; Waters v. Taylor, 15 Ves. 10; Foss v. Harbottle, 2 Hare, 461; North of England Banking Company ex parte Holme, 16 Jur. 803.

The Lord Advocate (Inglis) and Rolt, for respondent, cited Colman v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 Beav. 1.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I think there is here a sufficient primâ facie case. You must assume the facts here alleged, for the purpose of entertaining this reference. Remember that this reference decides nothing but to ascertain the fact, and the right upon the allegation is to have the fact determined. When you have the fact determined, the merits are at an end. Is it the allegation of a primâ facie case? What is the statement? The provision of the deed is, that if at at any time there shall be a given amount of loss of trading capital and the reserve fund, ipso facto there shall be an end of the partnership. The parties determine not to go on to ruin, but that, if there should be so heavy a loss as is there pointed out, then, without any declaration whatever, or interference of any one, there should at once be an end of the partnership. Now, the respondent proceeds upon a ground altogether consistent with that provision. He says that there has been fraudulent management, and that not only has there been reckless trading, and not only have the directors diverted the assets of this copartnership from the proper purposes, and carried on business as general merchants, as speculators, and every other description of business, making charges against them in that respect, but that, by this reckless trading and by these improper speculations, a loss has accrued, which renders it impossible for the business to be carried on. If the business has so been mismanaged—if, instead of carrying on the banking concern, they have been carrying on every other concern but banking—if they have ceased, as they admit by their answer they have, to be a bank of issue,—that of itself shows a state of insolvency. They might have been very glad to have had shares in speculation in their own paper, but they have ceased to issue paper. That would be a sufficient ground of itself, and consequently there is quite allegation enough to maintain a suit of this sort, supposing that the party is not estopped by the particular deed of partnership from resorting to a court of justice. Now, there is a very singular argument advanced, which is, that if this loss has arisen from the misconduct of the directors, the appellants' counsel say that the directors are personally responsible for it, and that it is not a loss which can by any means enable a court of justice to put an end to the partnership. That does not at all follow. There may be personal relief to be had against the directors; but, the directors being the chosen body by whom all the affairs of the copartnership are to be managed, if they, by reckless conduct—if they, by improper speculation, do in point of fact reduce the capital below the amount with which it is possible to carry on the trading, why should not it be a case in which relief should be given to stop impending ruin? What matters it how it has arisen, if it has in point of fact arisen in the course of carrying on the trade? It cannot be in character to say, "Go on with this loss—with this bad bank: you are in a state of ruin—you have no capital—the capital is all absorbed; but go on and render yourselves personally liable;" because the directors have themselves brought it to that point by improperly conducting the business, or rather by conducting business not authorised by the copartnership, instead of carrying on the proper business, and that which was solely entrusted to them. It is almost ludicrous to see what the effect of that would be. My lords, if the capital be gone, and the partnership cannot be carried on, the directors, if they have misconducted themselves—of course I am not saying that they have in any measure. I have no materials before me for coming to such a conclusion—but if they have misconducted themselves to such a conclusion—but if they have misconducted themselves, they may have made themselves personally liable, and yet it may be that the consequences of their conduct have of themselves worked a dissolution of this partnership, and if not, that a court of justice would dissolve the partnership. My lords, if there be, as I apprehend there is, quite a sufficient case for the court to proceed upon, then the question is, is the right of the respondent barred by the articles of copartnership? Now those articles are very stringent, and it is fit that they should be as regards a bank of this nature, a joint-stock bank; for unless very great care is taken every shareholder, being a partner, may claim a right to look at all the accounts—and, therefore, it is very proper that they should restrain the shareholders from a general inspection of the books or the accounts, and that there should be secrecy observed. All that is very right, and all these things are provided for—they are things to be done at a regular general meeting. There may be a meeting as a general meeting, or by three-fourths of the shareholders. It is only necessary to look at the state of this company, there being a million of capital divided in the 100,000 shares—those shares going down as low as 10*l.*—to see how very difficult it is to get persons representing three-fourths of that capital to agree to a measure for the purpose of dissolving this partnership; and what is alleged upon the face of these pleadings (it may or may not be true) is this, that the greater portion of those persons are under a liability to the bank, that is, they have had accommodation from the bank, as shareholders are very apt to have, and buy shares for that very purpose, and they are consequently under the dominion of the directors, who can sue them for the liability, and therefore you cannot get those persons to come forward with this object. That may or may not be so, but that is the allegation which is here made. But there is a provision which states that the partnership may have an end put to it by the parties, and I wish carefully to guard myself in anything which falls from me on this occasion, not to have it understood, that a partner in a partnership, like this particularly, can come upon general allegations and desire to break up that company suddenly, not resorting as he ought to do to the provisions of the deed. If this case can be maintained by the respondent, it must be upon its own grounds, and not upon any supposed right of a particular shareholder to come against the sense of the majority and endeavour to break up the concern. Now the section of the deed of copartnership upon which certainly a great deal turns is the 54th. It is insisted that that means simply a balancing under the former provision, which states that the partners holding three-fourths of the stock may, at a general meeting, by a written agreement dissolve the company; and it is not necessary to decide that it does not mean that. It may mean that, but it may mean something beyond it. It is impossible to say in a court of justice if it be true that false accounts have been made up by these directors in order to cover their own course of action, that you are to be bound by that balance, and that you are to act contrary to the fact upon the assumption that there is capital sufficient to carry on the business which already, in point of fact, has ceased for want of capital. There is nothing in this partnership deed either to point to that or to lead to the consideration in point of law. It is a case not within the partnership deed, and the deed is only referred to for this purpose (independently of another question whether it is confined or not to the preceding losses), to show that if that be the case there ought to be ipso facto a dissolution of the partnership. Now are the words to be so confined? They state that if on balancing the books you shall find that there has been that loss, ipso facto the partnership is not to stand any longer. It is alleged that on balancing the books it will be found, and this respondent takes upon himself to maintain that he can prove from those books, that there was the actual loss here pointed out, so that the partnership has in point of fact, and therefore in point of law, come to a termination. Can parties in their own wrong set up fraudulent and improper balances, and then say that you are to be bound by them under a deed which assumes that all goes on correctly? It is a certain mode of taking the account agreed upon by the parties and acted upon by the copartnership. It is not a question of going contrary to the deed, but you are going with the intention of the deed, and you are giving effect to that intention. The intention of the deed was that, if it appeared on balancing the books that there was that loss actually incurred, the copartnership should be at an end. But it is asserted that the fact does exist, and that it would have appeared upon the balances of the directors themselves, if they had truly made up the accounts. Now, it is impossible to say that a party can screen himself from an investigation in a court of law by anything which is found in this instrument; and therefore I apprehend that it is quite clear that the allegation of the respondent does make out a case for relief, notwithstanding the particular provisions of this instrument; and I think that, as the words are general as to balancing the accounts, a court of justice is justified in looking at those words in a general sense, and that if upon a balancing of the accounts, however it chooses to direct that balance to be made, the fact is ascertained, the court is justified in considering it to be an ascertainment of the fact. I think that, independently of balancing the accounts at all, if it appears that this company is incapable of carrying on its trade, and the very case has arisen which the parties have provided should be of itself a dissolution of the partnership, that is a sufficient case for dissolving this copartnership. Now certain results were pointed out, which it was alleged would flow from this view of the subject. It was said, for example, if you are to give this general sense to the provision of the deed, then at any single moment at which you establish, after a distance of time, that there has been that loss which is pointed out here, although it might not appear by the balancing of the accounts, but would appear on looking at them, there is an end of the partnership. I do not see that any such consequence follows; for, assuming that there was that supposed loss at a given moment which was not ascertained at the time, and there was no necessity for ascertaining it, but that that loss had not affected the prosperity of the company, and that they recovered the loss by going on, there need not be any inquiry into any supposed loss of that description. But if a just balance was taken of the accounts, and it did appear that upon a balancing of the accounts there was a loss, then every single shareholder in this company could set that up. It need not be done by every member of this company, but it might be done by one single shareholder, and they could not defeat its being set up as against that single shareholder. Now, my lords, I am naturally anxious, in a case of this sort (we are obliged at present, to a certain degree, to assume the merits and the demerits also), to see what the answer of the defenders is. Would they like to rely upon the accounts which they have set forth in these papers, with the view of showing what the state of a great banking concern is? They are precisely balanced here to shillings and pence, and the items are without the slightest explanation. Can it be said that, in a concern of this nature, such a document as that would give the information of the real state of this bank? If they had assets in their hands, they knew that, in point of fact, the case had not arisen which was provided for by the deed, and they might have thrown the onus on the respondent of establishing a primâ facie case. They do not either show the nature of their liabilities and the actual state of their assets, or produce any account which in any manner affords the slightest explanation. Then what is to prevent such an account being taken? What is it they ask? Do they ask examination into the charges against them before that account is taken? They ask no such thing. They say it is not a proper case to direct an account; but they do not come forward and say,—"We have plenty of assets to carry on the bank; you are interfering with it; you are destroying this company; you ought not to be permitted to do so." They do not tell you what step you are to take; they desire your lordships to stop this proceeding; but they suggest no other. Their short object is to get rid of that investigation which is directed. Upon these grounds, my lords, I am clearly of opinion the court below was right. At the same time I am anxious, as I said before, to guard myself and the house against its being supposed that the decision of this house would in any manner allow any partner, contrary to the articles of the copartnership deed, to come without any cause, and endeavour to break up the concern. Order confirmed, with costs.

Equity Courts.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Reported by C. H. Kerr, Esq. of Lincoln's-Inn, Barrister-at-Law.

Monday, Nov. 15, 1852.

(Before Lord St. Leonards, L. C.)

Seagrave v. Pope.

Building society—Statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32—Security—Mortgage—Redemption—Rehearing—Practice.

The owner of shares in a building society executed a mortgage of leasehold property for securing 544*l.*, advanced by the society on his shares—a sum considerably less than the full amount of the shares to which he would have been entitled at a future period. A monthly subscription of 8*s.* 6*d. and of* 8*s.* 6*d.*, also redemption money on account of his having received money by anticipation, was payable on each share. The shareholders were at liberty to redeem on notice and compliance with certain requisitions. The subscriptions had been duly paid. On a bill filed by such a shareholder against the society, alleging that the sum so received by him was advanced as a loan, which he had the liberty of repaying at his option, and praying a declaration that on the repayment thereof, subject to the deduction of his subscriptions and to an allowance of profits, he might be entitled to redeem the mortgaged premises, and to be exempted from all future payments:

Held (reversing the decision of the court below), that the member was not entitled to redeem; that, although there was much ambiguity upon the terms of the Benefit Building Societies Act, the rules of the society, and the mortgage deed in question, the mortgage was to be considered a security, not for the repayment of the advance and interest, but for the due payment of all future monthly payments, subscriptions and fines, according to the rules of the society.

The stat. 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, contemplates no loan or advance to a member in any other sense than an advance by way of anticipatory payment of the share to which he would be entitled after having made the stipulated payments.

The putting a party in possession presently of that to which he would become entitled at a future time upon the performance of certain conditions or payments, furnishes no reason why he should not perform those conditions or payments.

On the above bill being dismissed, an application for a rehearing was granted by a subsequent Lord Chancellor, on the alleged ground that such dismissal was a slip, and contrary to the practice of the court in suits for redemption:

Held, on the rehearing, that such dismissal was not a slip in the decree, and did not justify a rehearing.

This was an appeal from a decision of the late Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce.

In this case, the details of which will be found in 14 Law T. R. 524, the plaintiff Fleming became entitled to certain shares, of 100*l.* each, in the Camberwell Building and Investment Society. In respect of those shares he received a sum of money from the society considerably less than the full amount to which he would have been entitled at a future period, and at the same time he executed a mortgage to the society in respect of the money so received. In respect of each of the shares he had paid a monthly subscription of 8*s.* 6*d.*, and a further sum of 8*s.* 6*d.* a month, called interest or redemption money, on account of having so received money by anticipation, instead of receiving nothing until the full shares of 100*l.* each became due; and the question was, whether the sum so received by him was to be deemed to have been advanced as a loan, which he had the liberty of repaying at his option, and by the repayment of which, subject to the deduction of the subscriptions he had paid and to an allowance of profits, he was entitled to redeem the premises mortgaged, and to be exempted from all future payments; or whether the sum so received by him was to be deemed to have been advanced by way of anticipatory payment, or in substitution of or equivalent for the full 100*l.* shares which he would be entitled to receive at a future time; and that the mortgage was to be deemed to have been only given to secure the due payment of the subscriptions of 8*s.* 6*d.* and the additional payment of 3s. 6d. a month. The plaintiff Fleming and the plaintiff Seagrave, who was a purchaser from him, insisting on the first of these constructions, filed a bill against the trustees of the society, praying a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to redeem the mortgaged premises upon the terms of repaying the amounts advanced by the society, less the amount of subscriptions which the plaintiff Fleming had paid, and the proportion of profits in the society to which Fleming was entitled in respect of such shares.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

Sir J. L. Knight Bruce, V.C., made a decree containing a declaration in conformity with the prayer of the bill.

From that decree the defendants, insisting on the second of the two constructions, appealed, on the ground that the plaintiffs ought not to have been allowed to redeem, except on the terms of paying all subscriptions and redemption moneys and other payments due or thereafter to become due in respect of the shares during the probable duration of the society, to be estimated by the Master.

Lord TRURO (L.C.) before whom this appeal was first heard, on the conclusion of the arguments of counsel, stated his opinion on the merits of the case: (vide 19 Law T. Rep. 173.)

After resigning the great seal, his lordship delivered judgment.

The LORD CHANCELLOR. — This society was framed under the authority, and to effect the objects, of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32; the rules are framed in reference to that act, and also the mortgage; and to arrive at the true construction, as well of the rules as of the mortgage, the statute, the rules, and the mortgage must be considered. Unfortunately, each of them is very inaccurately framed; the same words are not always used in the same sense, nor are the applicability and correctness of the expressions in reference to the subject-matter to which they refer considered. The general purpose of the Act is stated to be to raise by subscription a fund to assist the members in obtaining small freehold and leasehold property. The first remark that arises on the language of the 1st section is, that the company is stated to be for the purpose of enabling the members to receive the amount or value of their shares to purchase real or leasehold estate, to be secured by way of mortgage to the society until the amount or value of the shares shall be repaid to it, with interest, fines, &c. The immediate antecedent to the words "to be secured" is the purchasing real or leasehold estate; but I think that those words do not refer to the real or leasehold estate, but to the amount or value of the shares of the members, and the 2nd section, read in connection with it, tends to give that meaning. Now, the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd clauses, taken together, seem to import that the mortgage referred to in the 1st section is intended to secure the amount or value of the share which the society, by the 2nd section, is contemplated to advance to members, prior to the member receiving the advance having made the payments which he was bound to make before he was entitled to the share. The statute contemplates no loan or advance to the member in any other sense or view than an advance by way of anticipatory payment of the share to which he would be entitled after having made the stipulated payments; and the mortgage is described as intended to secure, not a sum in gross, by way of general loan, but the amount or value of the shares contemplated to be paid by anticipation. The expression used, "to be secured until the amount or value of the share shall have been fully repaid," does not seem very accurately to express the real intent. The member is to pay by subscriptions an amount equal, with the profit or interest which it may be anticipated would result from the use of his subscription, to 100*l.* or 150*l.*, or whatever may be the amount of the share. It then contemplates the member, after he has paid up the amount of his share by anticipation, continuing to pay his subscriptions until they shall amount to the sum which entitled him to the share; and these subsequent subscriptions are described in the statute as repaying to the society the amount or value of the shares. The 1st, 2nd, and 3rd sections having relation to the mortgage, it will be observed that the 5th section also refers to the same mortgage, and there speaks of it as a mortgage for moneys advanced by the society to a member, and speaks of the person entitled to the equity of redemption. The subscriptions were to be paid monthly, until the objects of the society were fully accomplished. The shares were 100*l.* each, and when there was sufficient to pay each share of 100*l.*, then all arrears of subscriptions, fines, &c., were to be payable immediately, and the payment enforced; and when the sum of 100*l.* for each share was fully paid, the accounts were to be audited, the securities returned to their owners, and the society dissolved, a receipt being indorsed on the mortgage securities, according to the stat. 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 5. When the 100*l.* per share was raised by the subscriptions, fines, &c., all the mortgages were to be receipted as satisfied, and to be given up; but there was no provision for any repayment of money previously advanced in respect of such mortgage. How far this consideration tends to the conclusion that the mortgage was a security only for the payment of the subscriptions, and not for the repayment of the money advanced except in the shape of subscriptions, I will hereafter consider. The seventh article is framed to raise the fund contemplated by the Act of Parliament under the 1st section. The ninth, eleventh, and twelfth articles seem to be divided, to effect the objects of the 2nd and 3rd sections of the statute; that is, the enabling members to receive their shares in advance prior to the same being realised, upon paying a bonus, or rather allowing a discount and interest, with the mortgage necessary to carry the purposes of the society into execution. Now, it is to be considered whether, when the articles use the expression "sale of shares," anything more is meant than that which is enacted in the 2nd section, that it shall be lawful for members to receive their shares by anticipation, and to pay a bonus or interest for such privilege. The title of the 9th article is, "Mode of advancing money by sale of shares"—a form of expression not very accurate, although by the context sufficiently intelligible; for 100*l.* was payable when the subscriptions, fines, &c. would enable that sum to be paid upon every share; and, in effect, the company propose to sell the right of presently receiving the share, upon being allowed a certain deduction from the amount, which has inaccurately been denominated a bonus, and is called a payment, it being in fact a deduction made at the time, and which only becomes a payment by the continuance of the subscriptions until the requisite amount should be raised to pay each undiscounted share in full; and the title shows that by "advance" was meant a payment of a share in advance, and not in advance in any other sense: and a sale of a share, or payment of a share by anticipation, does not seem to be consistent with a repayment of the advance, although it may be consistent with the purchaser making the payments necessary to entitle him to a share at all. The putting a party in possession presently of that to which he would become entitled at a future time, upon the performance of certain conditions or payments, furnishes no reason why he should not perform those conditions. The title to the article being what I have stated, it remains to be seen whether the substance of the article corresponds with the title, and refers to a transaction intended only to put the buyer in possession of the share to which, upon the performance of certain conditions, he would be entitled at a future period, or whether it referred to a loan of the amount advanced in any sense. The 9th article provides that, as often as the fund shall amount to the sum of 100*l.*, the same shall be awarded to the highest bidder by premium for the preference; and the 11th, evidently relating to the transaction contemplated by that article, provides, in substance, that any member having received cash for his share shall, as and towards the redemption thereof pay, in addition to the monthly subscription, 3*s.* 6*d.* during the continuance of the society, upon every monthly subscription-day. The words "as and towards the redemption thereof" must have a meaning consistent with a member having purchased a share, and received cash for such share; and the stipulation, that 3*s.* 6*d.* per month is to continue to be paid during the continuance of the society, is consistent with these words, meaning that the party is to pay 3*s.* 6*d.* per month in addition to the ordinary subscription, as a consideration, not for a loan or advance of money to be returned, but for a payment made earlier than the party would of right be entitled to receive it. The same uncertainty or inaccuracy of expression occurs in this article as in the Act of Parliament, when it speaks of security offered for the share awarded, as the security relating to a share awarded—that is, sold—and is to be given after the share has been received. The seller wants no security for the thing he sells, nor the buyer for what he receives; but the seller may require a security for the price, and the price for a share sold is the contract to pay the subscriptions until a fund shall be raised competent to pay every member his share of 100*l.*; and it is security for the performance of that contract that seems to be described here as security for the shares. The second paragraph of the 12th article authorises the trustees, not to lend, but to pay to the member the sum of money which he shall be entitled to receive, on his executing a mortgage as security for so much money as shall therein be expressed to be secured. The language of this part of the article receives some light upon the commencement of the next paragraph of the article, which speaks of the member "so entitled" to his share, which would seem to refer to members to whom a share had been awarded under the 9th article, none of the articles entitling a member to a share in any other manner until the society should terminate. The parts of the article to which I have hitherto referred seem to refer unequivocally to the transaction of a member receiving his share by anticipation, and not to a loan. There is, however, in one of the paragraphs the expression that no second mortgage shall be deemed a sufficient security for any moneys to be advanced by the society—an expression certainly not applicable to the character which the defendants ascribe to the transaction. But, considering the Act of Parliament and the articles in connection, and that there is an entire absence of any provision for advance except in the way of the payment of a share by anticipation, however inapt the expression may be, it is difficult to suppose that it refers to any other transaction than one to which the general substance of the clause is directed—that is, an advance in the sense of payment by anticipation; and that by a security for the advance was intended a security for the performance of the contract in relation to which the payment by advance was made—that is, the contract to pay the future subscriptions. The same 12th article then specifies what the mortgage deed shall contain; and, construing that part of the article in connection with the transaction to which it refers, it would be difficult to point out any part which points to a repayment of the sum paid in advance of the share bought. His Lordship, after referring to page 15 of the articles, proceeded:—The only sums which the society are authorised to retain out of the rents or proceeds of the sale are subscriptions and payments due and payable by virtue of the rules and the mortgage deed. Now, by the rules, no payments whatever are required but payments by way of subscription and fine. There is no provision whatever which points to a repayment of the mortgage paid to a member in anticipation of a share purchased by him. It is difficult to discover sufficient ground for the argument that the mortgage was to be a security for the repayment of the advance of the share. The clauses upon which the plaintiff relies in support of his claim to redeem on payment of the sum so advanced, are the 14th and 16th. By the latter a person who has not had any advance made to him may withdraw from the society, and receive back his subscriptions, subject to a certain forfeiture. But this does not afford any good reason for contending that a person who has had an advance may withdraw on repayment of such advance. The party to whom a liberty of withdrawal is given by that article has not received anything from the society, but the society have had the use of his subscriptions. But the member who, by the advance made to him, has had his share discounted, as it were, is under an obligation to pay and make the monthly payment for which that share was awarded him. The first part of the 14th article, which gives a power to sell at first sight might seem to show that the mortgage was intended to secure the repayment of the sum advanced by the society; but the words "secured the repayment thereof" mean, not only the payment of the value or price in the shape of the monthly payments, which, indeed, virtually amounts to a securing the repayment of the sum advanced, but something more, inasmuch as the monthly payments will be sure to cover and exceed the amount advanced. As to the words in the 14th article, "the full amount expressed to be secured in and by the mortgage," the meaning of these words must of course be ascertained by a reference to the mortgage. Now that deed expressly recites, that "for the security of all payments to become due in respect of the shares," he has agreed to execute the assurance thereby made; and the habendum is "upon trust from time to time, so long as Fleming should make the payments, and observe and perform the regulations and articles relating to the said shares, and perform the covenants therein, to permit him to hold the premises and receive the rents." But if he should fail "to perform the covenants, or for the space of six months to pay the subscriptions, payments, or redemption money, then upon trust to appoint a person to receive the rents. But if the rents should be insufficient to satisfy the property as aforesaid, then upon trust to sell, and out of the moneys to retain the costs, and all such principal money, subscriptions, and other payments as shall have been advanced to, or shall be due by, the the said T. B. Fleming, his executors, &c., in respect of the said shares." There is no covenant to pay the sum advanced. The mortgage deed contains no condition or stipulation that the money advanced shall ever be repaid; and although there is a power to retain it in case of default in observing the covenants and regulations, or making the payments required, that, as we have already seen, is not authorised by the 12th article, which specifies what the mortgage deed shall contain. But admitting that power to be only reasonable and necessary for the protection of the society, and supposing it to be valid, though not authorised by the articles, yet the mere fact that the society is entitled to recover the money advanced, where, owing to the default of the member, it cannot get the future monthly payments, is no reason why the member should be allowed to redeem on payment of the money advanced to him. On the whole, I have no doubt that the construction for which the defendants contend is a right one; and although the case of Mosley v. Baker, 6 Hare, 87, in which the decision of Sir J. Wigram, V.C. was affirmed by Lord Cottenham (13 Jur. 817), is certainly distinguishable in some respects from the present, and was clearly in favour of the society, yet I still think that case furnishes an authority, in a great degree, in support of the construction maintained by the defendants. The documents in the present case are very similar to those in that case, so far as relates to the point in dispute; and they seem to me to require the same construction. The decision of the Vice-Chancellor must therefore be reversed; and I think that the bill ought to be dismissed.

Subsequently an application was made to the Lord Chancellor (Lord St. Leonard's) have this case reheard, upon the ground that therewas a slip in the decree, by reason of the bill, which was a redemption bill, having been dismissed; and upon this representation leave was given to have the case reheard.

Monday, Nov. 15.—Upon this case coming on to be reheard, and being about to be opened upon the merits by

Bacon and Hardy, for the plaintiff,

James Russell (Rolt and T. H. Terrell with him) objected, the only rehearing that had been granted was for the purpose of correcting an alleged slip in the decree pronounced by Lord Chancellor Truro: (Hickling v. Boyer, 20 Law T. Rep. 58.)

The Lord Chancellor.—That is so; you are not entitled to a rehearing upon the point decided by the late Lord Chancellor.

Bacon.—Lord Truro, at Mr. Russell's request, ordered the bill to be dismissed: we submit that that was an undoubted slip, and contrary to the practice of this court in suits for redemption. There is no other mode than by the means of a redemption suit whereby the plaintiff can get back his property that is in mortgage. The appeal of the society from the decision of the Vice-Chancellor was, not upon the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to redeem at all, but upon the ground that he was not entitled to redeem in the mode allowed by the Vice-Chancellor.

The Lord Chancellor.—There is no slip whatever here. Lord Truro took this view of the case—that a member who anticipated his shares was not a mortgagor, with all the rights of an ordinary mortgagor, but is bound to continue his subscriptions up to the time of distribution among the shareholders. That is the decision: it may be right or it may be wrong, but there is no slip. Dismissing the bill was the necessary result of the decision—he repelled the right to redeem. Application refused, with costs.

Saturday, Dec 18.

Before Lord St. Leonards, L. C., the Lord Justice Knight Bruce, and Lord Justice Lord Cranworth.

Kerr v. The Middlesex Hospital.

Distinction between bequests of perpetual and life annuities—"British Funds" investment in—The case of Heron v. Stokes considered.

L. by his will, after leaving all his property to his executors upon trust, and after leaving to his daughter-in-law 3,000*l. sterling, to hold the same independent of her husband, &c. and after leaving to two other parties the sum of* 100*l. each, "desired that his executors should purchase for each of his two sisters E.B. and E.F.* 100*l. a year each, the said annuities to be purchased in the British Funds;" and, after leaving various other annuities and legacies, "directed his landed property at Otham to be sold by auction, and the produce to go to the carrying out of the aforesaid annuities and legacies; and should the produce of the said sale not be found sufficient for that purpose, he desired that the remainder should be made up from his personal property;" and after directing his personal property in the funds of, &c. to be sold after the above annuities and all legacies had been paid and effected, he desired "the remainder of his personal property should be laid out in the purchase of an annual income in the Three per cent. Consols, for the benefit of a cancer ward in the Middlesex Hospital of London." By a codicil he left his estate and landed property at Otham to R. L. and left one other annuity, and increased an annuity which he had left by his will:*

Held, reversing the decision of the court below, that the annuity to E. B. was perpetual.

The gift of the produce of a fund which is itself producing a perpetual income is a perpetual annuity.

The gift of an annuity to be secured upon a permanent fund is for life only; so also where an annuity is bequeathed without words of limitation, and unaccompanied by a reference to some fund for its payment.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Master of the Rolls by one of several annuitants. The point involved arose under the will of the late Sir Joseph Laffan, Bart.

The will, so far as is material, was as follows:

"I, Joseph de Courcy Laffan, Bart., of &c., leave all my property, of whatever kind it may be, in England or elsewhere, of which I shall die possessed, to Thos. Knox, Earl of Ranfurly, &c., Chas. Kerr, and Henry Houndle, Esqrs., to have and to hold the same in trust for the following purposes: I leave to my well-beloved daughter-in-law, Frances Lazier, the sum of 3,000*l.* sterling, to hold the same independent of her husband, and to be disposed of by her will, properly signed and executed. I leave to her sister, Jane Symes, and the Rev. Mr. Lazier, the sum of 1,000*l.* each. I desire that my executors shall purchase for each of my two sisters, viz. Mrs. Eliza Burns and Mrs. Ellen Fitzpatrick, 100*l.* a-year each, the said annuities to be purchased in the British Funds. I leave 50*l.* a-year to my niece, Mrs. Catherine Quialan, to hold the same independent of her husband. I leave 25*l.* a-year to each of my nieces, &c. and my nephew, the children of, &c. I leave to Charlotte, Marchioness of Anglesea, 1,000*l.* I leave to Isabella Sheldon, of, &c. 100*l.* as a mark of my affectionate esteem. I leave to Dr. Verity, physician to, &c. 100*l.* as a mark of my friendship. I direct my landed property at Otham to be sold by auction, and the produce to go to the carrying out of the aforesaid annuities and legacies; and should the produce of said sale not be found sufficient for that purpose, I desire that the remainder shall be made up from my personal property. I direct my personal property in the funds of the East India Company, the Bank of England, the Dutch Funds, the Neapolitan Funds, the French Funds, the French Lyons shares, &c. to be sold. After the above annuities and all legacies have been paid and effected, I desire the remainder of my personal property shall be laid out in the purchase of an annual income in the Three per cent. Consols. for the benefit of a cancer ward in the Middlesex Hospital of London. I leave and bequeath 300*l.* to each of my executors, and I constitute, &c. to be my executors."

The testator made a codicil to his will, which, so far as is material, was as follows:—"I leave to Captain Robert Laffan my estate and landed property at Otham. I leave and bequeath 50*l.* a year to Mrs. Catherine Quinlan. I leave and bequeath to Joseph Laffan 50*l.* a year, over and above what I left him in my will."

The testator died in 1848, and in 1849 two of his executors instituted a suit for the administration of his estate, against the President and Governor of the Middlesex Hospital, Eliza Byrne (in the will called Burns), and the other annuitants, as defendants.

By the Master's report, it appeared that all the legacies had been paid; that the annuity given to Mrs. Byrne had been paid up to the 7th of January, 1852, and those of the other annuitants up to a recent date.

The question arose whether the annuities given by the will to Mrs. Byrne and Mrs. Fitzpatrick, and to the several other parties, and by the codicil to Catherine Quinlan and Joseph Laffan, were only life or perpetual annuities.
